Rutt Jacobsen and William Teller receive a patent by way of confirmation of the transport made to them, July 16, 1668, by Goose Gifford, from the ships in the East River, striking along by Jan Daniel's land, 16 rods, 2 ft; by Strandside, 16 rods, 3 feet; along Adam Roelants, 8 rods, 7 ft; and on the side of Mariej (Marym) Adriesson, 10 rods. Teller is really confirmed in this document, for one-half the land.—Liber Patents, II: 78.

The city was "at a very great Charge in Renewing & Repairinge" the bridge (see plate description, I: 244). Under the Dutch government, Stuyvesant and the council had provided by ordinance that all ships landing or transporting any goods to or from the city, were to pay a tax toward "the upholding & Repairing of the Bridge." The mayor's court now reestablishes this tax, requiring masters of ships to pay a landing fee of five st. in beaver per last, and the merchants certain specie fees for transporting wine, tobacco, peltries, etc. The collection of this tax is entrusted to Thomas Carvet, to be by him turned over to the secretary of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 81. See also March 5, 1672.

As a result of previous negotiations (see June 18), the city agrees with Johannes Vervecken upon terms for the lease of the first public ferry at Harlem. He is to "have the ferry for five years Provided he keep a Convenient house and Lodging, for passengers at Harlem." He is to "have a small piece of Land oo Bronskide, about an acre and a place to build a house on," which he is obliged to "Clear to and Spoyle the meadows," which is to "bee layd out to a Manor," to "build a house," and "on no more under a penalty of 15 st., for the first, double as much for the second, and deprivation of license for the third offence."—Ibid., VI: 76.

Clasa van Elandt, Jr., who has been "town sergeant" to the mayor's court since the introduction of the English form of municipal government in 1665 (see June 16), is dismissed for absenting himself from court. His dismissal was by special order of Gov. Nicolls, who, on this day names Henry Newton (Henry Nutton) to the vacancy, and Newto was "Sworne as Marshall of this Court."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 84-85.

Johannes van Broug receives a patent by way of confirmation of a transport to him dated May 5, 1661, by the trustees of the orphan's estates, of a lot formerly belonging to Hendrick Peters van Hassel, lying without the land port of the city, and east of the highway (Broadway), having on the north the land of Gerrit Jans Roos; on the east the land at one time belonging to Adriaan Cuville, deceased; on the south, that of Jacques Prym; and on the west the before-named highway; containing in breadth on the street, on the west side, 60 ft., 10 in.; wood measure; east side, 62 ft.; in length on the north side, 11 rods, 8 st.; and on the south side, 11 rods, 8 ft.—Liber Patents, II: 71.

An Amsterdams said salary was paid for a patrolman by way of confirmation of a transport to him by Direck Janssen Vandeveer, as attorney for Mary Peck, of Albany, dated June 27, 1667, for a lot without the water port on the south side of Smith's Valley, having to the east the house where the "wildow Tithaco lives" and to the south, the Strand; west and north, the house and lot of Cornelius Jans Clopper; containing in breadth on the south side, 3 rods, 4 ft.; north side, the same; east and west sides, 10 rods, 8 ft.—Liber Patents, II: 78 (Albany).

At some time between this date and the last meeting of the mayor's court, on July 16, Gov. Nicolls must have appointed a new magistrate, although no official record of such appointments has been found. At the time of the new court toward the end of this date, Capt. Willett appears again as mayor; only one new name is seen on the bench, Isaac Bedloe, who succeeds Cornelien Steenwyck. Johannes de Peyster, who was "abstinent upon the Last Election day," is now sworn as alderman. Hendrick Oke, who was elected constable on June 17, 1665 (q.v.), is appointed in office for the coming year "Comming the 21st of the Instant Month." Capt. John Manning displaces Allard Anthony as sheriff.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 88.

Teunis Cray is appointed by the mayor's court as public measurer of all the apples and onions that are "brought in all Barns, Stacks or other Kessels," to the port of New York.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 90. Cray had held a similar office under the Dutch régime.

1667 (see Sept. 14, 1667). He was also appointed to the same office by the New Orange magistracy on Oct. 3, 1673 (g.v.).

Aug. The city court, from a list of nominations that had been handed in by the court of Harlem, chooses Daniel Termeur, sheriff; Johannes Verveuje, constable; and Isaac Verveuje, Joost Olinbun, Johannes Verveuje, and David van Buren (Records, Rec. Am. II: 10). This is an order of the mayor's court, recorded under July 30 that providing that the constable and two of the overseers of Harlem be sent for.—Ibid., VI: 90. It is probable that the court desired to get from them the list of nominees above mentioned.

"Allard Anthony, Cornelis van Royven, and Paulus Leendertz, vander G rift each had one of "the City's ladders" for "tromb in use"
"his farm. The mayor's court now orders them to return these ladders within ten days, or, falling therein, each of them will be "condemned to have a new ladder made for behalf of the City."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 92.

William Beckman receives a patent by way of confirmation of a transport by Agent van Curler to him, made June 9, 1667, for Curler's Hook, bounded by land of Cornelius Aartsen and Wolpbert Webber on the west side, by the East River on the south and east sides, and on the north by the highway stretching along by the land of Leenders the Boore; containing 326 acres or 38 morgens and 496 roods. The original deed was sold by Henkel, Beckman also receives a patent for a piece of meadow ground or valley lying north of Curler's Hook beyond a small creek, having on the west side land of Leenders the Boore; on the east side, the river containing a meadow called "fresh meadow" there where the said hook goeth out to the Bowery" belonging to Cornelius Steenwyck and Mr. Oloff Stevens van Cortlandt, being about 4 acres or 2 morgens and 432 roods, which said land and premises having been purchased in the year 1652 by Agent van Curler, was transported (to Beckman).—Liber Patents, II: 90. The Van Cortlandt deed was sold by Henkel, October 22, 1919.

David Jochems receives a patent, upon a transport made to him March 6, 1668, by Pieter van Couwenhoven, for a lot lying without the land port to the west of the highway (Broadway), having to the south the garden of Jan Joris Verbrugh, to the west the Strand of the North River; to the north, Thomas Lamberts; to the east, the highway containing in breadth before to the highway and behind, 65 ft.; in length, north and south, 36 rods.—Liber Patents, III: 50.

Thomas Hall, Jan Vigne, Egbert Wouters, and Jacob Leenderts receive a patent for upward of 500 acres, lying to the northward of

Pieter Stoutenburgh receives a patent for a lot without the land port to the south-east of the gardens of Johannes van Brugh and Gerrit Jans Roos; to the north-east of the city wall containing in breadth on north and south sides 12 ½ rods; on the west side, 32 rods, and on the east side, 31 rods.—Liber Patents, II: 107.

Abraham Isaacksen Planck receives a patent by way of confirmation for a plot for which he received a transport from Cornelius van Brugh, Jan Joris van Brugh, and Leonard Requa.—Ibid.
It is in the Smith's Valley, without the water port, containing "on the south side, before towards the Strand, 7 rods, 7 feet, 6 inches; behind on the north side, 8 rods, 3 feet; in length on the east side, 17 rods, 6 inches; on the west side, 16 rods 19 (½) feet, towards the lot of Dirck Wolkhertsen."—Liber Patents, II: 107 (Albany).

John Manning, sheriff of New York, is ordered to notify certain persons to surrender their powers of attorney for the management of property confiscated during the time of the late war against the Dutch (see April 26).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 2. See April 9.

Nicolls confirms Jan Jansen Damen's patent to lands on both sides of Broadway north of the fort. This confirmation is recited to deeds of lands along the north side of Wall St. conveyed to Gov.
Dongan in 1685, recorded in Liber XII: 113–24, register's office.
See Dec. 14, 1685. For the original grant to Damen, see April 25, 1644. For Ramaker patent, see Addenda.

A patent, by way of confirmation, is granted to Pieter Stouten-burgh, on a transport from Jan Vigne, Ver Planke, and Frederck Phillips, dated Nov. 2, 1664, for property described as follows:
Without the land port, having to the north the land of Adriana cuvial, deceased; to the east, that of Pieter Stoutenburgh; to the south, that of Gerrit Jans Roos; and to west, the highway; containing in breadth towards the street on the west side, 40 ft.; behind, on the east side, 59 ft. 3 in. and in length, both on the south and north sides, 139 ft.—Liber Patents, II: 116 (Albany); see also Cal.
Hist. MSS., Eng., 235. This was the plot, known as Pieter Stoutenburgh's garden; on it the First Presbyterian Church, on Wall St., was afterwards erected (See landmark map of Key, II: 271, 14). The creditors and heirs of Cornelis van Tienhove receive a confirmation of the ground-brief by Kieft to Van Tienhoven, dated June 14, 1644 (g.v.), excepting that part generally bounded by Broadway, Beckman St., Ann St. and Nassau St., later known as "the Village."—Liber Patents, III: 115 (Albany).

Gov. Nicolls grants a new patent to the freeholders of Harlem in response to their petition of March 15 (g.v.). Because several inhabitants have improved a "considerable proportion" of land and also "settled a competent number of families thereupon, capable to make a Township," Nicolls grants to Thomas Delval, John Verseulen, Daniel Tourneur, Joost Olinbun, andResolved Waldron, as pateenote, for them and associates, their heirs, etc., the tract of land within definite bounds as set forth in the patent.
The town is to be known as New Harlem, in contradistinction to the first patent (1666, g.v.), where Lancaster is given as its changed name. The conditions of the earlier charter with regard to the establishment of a ferry, payment of tribute, and restriction of building within two miles of the town bounds, are reiterated.—
Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 271–73.

A deed of transfer of this date indicates the location of a horse-mill belonging to Jacques Coorsau on Slock Street or Dirt Lane, afterwards known as Mill Street Lane. The site is now represented by 32 and 34 South William St.—See Castello Plan, II: 295; Abstracts of Willa, II: 462. On Nov. 8, 1919, in excavating for a new building on the site of the present No. 46 Beaver St. and Nos. 14 and 16 So. William St., two old mill-stones were uncovered near the rear party line. Five months later, two more slabs were subsequently found and were later examined besen by the author. They were about 3 ft. 6 in. in diameter, and the small stones of which they were composed were held together by heavy iron rings. There is no record of a mill on any of these lots.

By way of confirmation of ground-briefs given to them by Director Stuyvesant in 1659–60, certain free negroes receive patents as follows:
Christoffel Santone (Liber Patents, II: 122, Albany). This grant was designated No. 1, and extended (on the map of the modern city) along the west side of the Bowery, beginning at the south side of Houston St., and running thereon 200 ft. north.
Manuel de Ros (Liber Patents, II: 122, Albany). It was designated No. 2, and lay on the west side of the Bowery, north of the grant to Santone. Blecker St. now bisects this tract.
Pieter Tamber (Liber Patents, II: 121, Albany). It was designated No. 4, and was situated at the north-west corner of the old Sand Hill Road (the Cross-way), now the corner of 8th St. and Fourth Ave.

Francisco Cartagena (Liber Patents, II: 121, Albany). It was designated No. 6. This land lay on the west side of the present Cooper Square, between 5th and 6th Sts.

Antonie (Liber Patents, II: 110, Albany). It was designated
No. 7. This land lay along the west side of the present Fourth Ave., north of the grant to Francisco Cartagena.

Domingo Angola (Liber Patents, II: 120, Albany). It was designated No. 8. This land lay along the west side of Fourth Ave., and north of the land granted to Antonie.

Ches de Neger (Liber Patents, II: 120, Albany). It was designated
No. 9.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

By another order in council, 1667, New York City was established at the southern tip of Manhattan Island. The Dutch East India Company, which had been granted a monopoly of trade with the Orient, decided to colonize the island. The company sent a expedition under the command of Peter Stuyvesant, who had previously been Governor of New Amsterdam.

Stuyvesant's expedition consisted of approximately 200 men, including soldiers, farmers, and sailors. The expedition landed on Manhattan Island on June 17, 1660, and founded a settlement that would eventually become New York City.

The settlement was named New Amsterdam, and it quickly grew in size and importance. The Dutch East India Company invested a large amount of money in the settlement, and it soon became a major trading center.

In 1664, the Dutch East India Company was declared bankrupt, and the English government took control of the settlement. The English renamed the settlement New York, and it became the capital of the Province of New York.

In 1665, the English government passed the New York Act, which provided for the establishment of a new form of government in the province. The act provided for the election of a council and a governor, and it also granted the province a measure of autonomy.

The new government was relatively successful, and it quickly became one of the most important centers of commerce in the colonies. The city continued to grow in size and importance, and it eventually became the capital of the state of New York.

The city's growth was fueled by a combination of factors, including its strategic location, its proximity to the Atlantic Ocean, and its access to the interior of the country through the Hudson River. The city quickly became a major center of trade, and it was home to many of the country's most important businesses and industries.

Today, New York City remains one of the most important cities in the world, and it is home to millions of people. It is a city of diversity and opportunity, and it continues to be a hub of commerce, culture, and innovation.

19. “Harriet Ackleton & Elizabeth Jewell” are summoned before the mayor’s court to tell why “they without Licence of the Govern-& this Court, Contrary to the Laws of this Government [such a law was enacted as early as Apr. 13, 1642—Laws & Ord. of N. Neth., 12] are come to dwell within this Towne.” Hanna Ackleton replies, that when she first came, she had obtained a license from Thomas Delavall, former mayor, but could show no proof thereof; whilst Elizabeth Jewell states, “she did not know of any such order.” The court then orders these women to leave the city within eight days’ time, “upon penalty of 5 s. Sterling & Corporal punishment” for dere-liction.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 101. Elizabeth Jewell had not left the city by Jan. 25, 1668, when the court summoned her again and demanded to know why she had not departed, to which she answered she could not on account of her accouchement, “but promised to depart in ye 6th month of March.”—Ibid., VII: 114.
26. Paules Lennestratten vander Gritt asks the mayor’s court to pay him for caring for the soldiers for 40 weeks, and for 1,000 fl. he loaned the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 103. No action is recorded thereon.

1. Gov. Nicolis confirms to Burger Joris his title to a lot, house, brew-house, and garden. The original confirmation is in the New York Hist. Soc., Box 1 of N. York MSS. It is printed in that society’s Collection (1915), 80–81. For location and description, see By referring to No. 8, Block M, and No. 11, Block Q, of the Map of Dutch Grants (C. P. 87), and to the Map of Manhattan Island in 1698, Pl. I, Vol. II, it will be seen that the New York Cotton Exchange is built upon Burger Joris’s land. See also Innes, N. Am. and its People, 253.
3. Capt. John Manning, the city’s sheriff, having been sent by the mayor’s court to ask Gov. Nicolis about the payment of the weekly assessment for the care of the soldiers (see July 16, 1665), brings back word that the governor wished the city to pay its arrears and one month longer, and warning “to all citizens” to do so.
—Rec. N. Am., VI: 105. On the 17th, the court published a general order to all persons in arrears to pay or suffer the penalty of the law.—Ibid., VI: 106. For further action, see Jan. 14, 1668.
17. The cartmen of the city having petitioned the mayor’s court for permission “to Ride in their Karts in the streets, promising that if any accident should happen, they would suffer any punishment” that Gov. Nicolis and the city bench should think fit, the governor and the bench now grant their request, with this proviso, that they “shall not ride hard along the Streets,” and, in case they injure anybody, they shall forfeit half and half; and, if anyone is killed by their fast riding, the life of the cartman shall “be unif the lapse of the Lawe.” Moreover, the cartmen are “bound to Keep in Repaire the streets & highways” in the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 105.
24. Otto Grom receives a patent by way of confirmation for a grant to him by Director Stuyvesant, May 15, 1664.—Hoffman, Estate and Rights of the Corporation, II: 196. The land was on the west side of the Bowery north of the grant to Solomon Pieters (see Oct. 16).
It is now bisected by E. 4th St.

4. Continued dereliction of some of the inhabitants of the city in regard to the payment of the weekly assessment for the support of the soldiers (see Dec. 13, 1667) causes the mayor’s court to order the constable and the marshal to seize by execution any goods “that are in the possession of such persons as are necessary to cover the

1. Jan Jansen van Breestede and Jutien. Jansen van Arveryck are asked to come to court where the necessity of the appointment of some persons to inspect and count pipe-staves and to inspect the packing of meat and pork is explained to them. When asked if they will accept such a duty, they consent and take the necessary oath.
—Rec. N. Am., VI: 112. Among the Duke’s Laws, provision was made for viewers of pipe-staves, who were to decide whether they were “Merchantable both in respect of worm holes” and required dimensions. The packer of meat and pork was to see that the “whole halfe or Quarter” was packed, “that the best be left be front, and for fish that they be packed all of one kind.” Each cask was required to be sound and well seasoned and packed full.—N. Y.

Abram de La Noy, having petitioned the mayor’s court to “ad-im him as Schoolmaster” in the city, “and to grant certificate of privilege therefor,” was granted his request, “on condition, that he submit himself to the orders of this Court, already enacted or to be enacted thereon.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 115, where the month “January” is an error. De La Noy probably succeeded Everts Pietersen, in 1668, as schoolmaster of the city school (see Dec. 5, 1671).
The mayor’s court orders that hereafter no burgler of the city “shall be arrested by any Person or persons Whatever,” but that all actions against burglers shall “be brought to Court by summons,” and when does not appeal upon summons shall not in the first Court day.” it shall “be lawful to arrest any such Burger by Writ;” also when it is evident that a burgler intends to depart with his goods from the city’s jurisdiction, such arrest without summons is permissible.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 116, where the month “January” is an error.
Issac Bedlow receives a patent for land lying on the Island Manhattan, the westernmost boundaries beginning where the easternmost boundaries of the land lately granted to Thomas Hall & Co. end; so stretching eastward upon the same line 300 English rods along Hudson River, in breadth into the woods, 225 rods.—Liber Patents, brother of Col. Lovelace has “Landed in Maryland but is now at Delaware upon his Journey to this place [see March 20, to whom R H’th gave power to succeed me in this Government.” He expresses satisfaction in being able to “returne by the first ship into England.” He states further that permission has been given that “3 Dutch ships yearly may trade hithe and returne directly for Holland, the Act of Navigation being for a long Time suspended in favour of this place alone” (see Oct. 25, 1668).—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 17.

Nicolaes Bayard, the city’s secretary, complains to the mayor’s court that the fee of five per cent. which was allowed him for selling goods at public outcry, does not cover the loss he sustained “by Receiving & selling out of the Wampum,” and for this reason he asks for an increased fee. The court orders, therefore, that he “be allowed therefor out of all goods, howsoever, Vessells, or Merchandizes sold at public outcry within the city or its suburbs, as follows:
eight per cent. on a house, vessel, or goods and merchandise, if sold in one lot and for not above 500 fl.; but only five per cent. on items that sold for more than 500 fl.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 119.

20 Frederick Philips receives a patent by way of confirmation, in which is recited a transport to Philips by Augustine Hermans, on Oct. 12, 1666, of two certain "lots of land and a house Lott together with a fourth part of two houses belonging unto him and Ye Heirs of Adriana Court, deceased, the said housing and lots lying and being without the Land Port, the Great House being in the Tenency or Possession of Cornelis Aarzen and ye small one of Pieter Stotenbergh, one of ye lotts markt No. 1 being to ye southeast of ye Gardens of Johannes van Brugis and Gerrit Jans Roos, and to ye consideration of 200 beavers and other considerations.—Liber Patents, III: 40 (Albany)." He is confirmed in what remains.—Liber Patents, III: 40 (Albany). The "Great House" mentioned is the old Damen farm-house; the small house to the south was occupied by Pieter Stoutenbergh.—See Castello Plan, and C. Pl. 81, 82e, and p. 352, Vol. II.

20 Johannes Verveelen, the ferry-man (see July 3, 1667), and the inhabitants of New Haerlem, set forth in a petition to the mayor of New York, "that the road by Spytenduyvel is being "used by travelers, whereby the fences there are "thrown down and broken to the great injury of the Commonalty in general, whilst their cattle very often leap over them, but more especially to the prejudice of the Ferryman." They seek redress. The city bench, after consulting with Gov. Nicolls, issues the following order: "Whereas information is received by the W: Court, that among others also one John Barcker has passed with a great number of cattle and horse over the Spytenduyvel, therefore the W: Court order that 8c Barcker shall pay the ferry-money of all horses and cattle conveyed by him over Spytenduyvel, whilst the Ferry has been at Har-lem; or, if he does not pay, employ for the repairs of the fences on Spytenduyvel aforesaid; And the Ferryman is in like manner expressly ordered and charged to finish the house and corral according to his engagement at the earliest opportunity, on such penalty, as the Court shall find proper."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 13. Cfr. Peter Pietersen, cited in Vol. II: 147-48. For a change in location of ferry, see March 2, 1669.

20 Thomas Delaval reports to the mayor's court that there has been some dispute between him and the labourers at the weigh-scales in regard to their wages for "carrying grain and piling deals" (i.e., plank); and, because he would "not accede to their wishes," he told them "he would refer the matter to the court, they had gone on a strike against his orders. These porters come into court and deny that they had refused his service. The dispute is settled by the court's order and the establishment of a stipulated schedule of fees for various kinds of work done by the porters.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 132. Roger Purchase, William Bullert, Edward Hudson, and Anthony Snooko are appointed as carriers of all the corn, salt, planks (or "deelles") imported or exported in or out of the city, for the inhabitants, at a salary to be allowed them by the mayor's court. They were sworn in on the 20th. This order did not prevent the inhabi-tants from carrying their own corn, etc., or having it carried by their own servants.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 134, 138.

20 Several city traders inform the members of the bench, that they have information "that the Inhabitants of Albany Would Solicite to the Govern[ment] that none but the Inhabitants of that place should trade to the Country; and the Provisions hereafter enjoyed by the Inhabitants of this Place," and request the court to advise Gov. Nicolls about it. The bench adjures the prohibition "prejudicial to the Inhabitants of this Country in general" and rules that "the privilege of a free Trade at Albany ought not to be prohibited," since the provisions Albany enjoyed the same privileges of trading in New York City and elsewhere as any other inhabitants of the province.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 138-39.

20 The mayor's court resolves "to farm out the Burgher excise of wine and beer and the butchering" within the city, and orders the secretary of the city "to announce the same by notices."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 141. On Aug. 17, the court ordered Hendrick Obe, "farmer of the Burger Excys," to "give in Security for the Excys, according to the Tenet of the Conditions, upon which the Excys was Let out unto him."—Ibid., VI: 144.

20 August Hermans receives a patent by way of confirmation, which recites a grant and delivery to Domingo Antonio, a negro, dated July 13, 1653. The description follows: "A certain piece of land upon this island Manhattan lying and being behinde ye bouvery No. 5, stretching from ye Wagon way west and-by-north to ye Fresh Water or Swamp near to ye land of Thomas Sanders north it runs 20 yards; then to ye 60 rods; then to ye 8th land of said Thomas Sanders to ye 8th Wagon 20 rods; containing in all about 12 Acres or 5 Moegen and 505 rods." It also recites that Domingo Antonio is deceased and that the right title and interest in the land was purchased by Augustine Hermans from Jan de Fryes, who had power to convey the land.—Rec. N. Am., III: 75 (Albany).

It must be acknowledged "that of manifold impieties have beene the sole cause of it not only by of great ingratitude for former blessings receiv'd but by an obstinate and rebellious frame of wickedness more particularly in that inordinate & intemperate way of drinking & all manner of Impieties that attend it in those most frequent oaths, execrations & cursings to which some are led."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 191-92. As to his disease, see Sept. 7.

Paulus Leendertsen, Gerit, Johannes van Brugh, and Johannes de Peyster are elected by the mayor's court as overseers of orphans or "weemasters" for one year.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 144. For the earliest "Guardians of Orphans," see Oct. 18, 1657.

Rev. Samuel Megapolensis writes to a friend asking aid in securing a letter of his work and treating of the Colony of New Plymouth," expressing "acknowledgements of thankfulness and an assurance of the continuance of my respects to you, in a remoter place when you please to command them." He speaks of Lovelace, his successor, as one who will "supply my defects," and "whom you will find always ready to serve you as a good Neighbour."—Tromball MSS., 61 E: 35, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

A new court of mayor and aldermen holds its first session.

The new mayor is Cornelis Steenwyck; Isaac Bedloe is the only member left of the old board, the new members being Capt. Matthias Nicolls, Ralph Whitfield, François Boom, and Christoffel Hooghlandt. Capt. Manus is continued as sheriff. Enter Leendertsen's terms as mayor, see M.C.C., VIII: 149. For brief sketch of his life, see Man. Coun. Coun. (1653), 381; ibid. (1684), 649, with portrait; Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 50.

The mayor's court resolves "that the Towne men of New York should be listed & Deall'd to two bands Military, and to appear in Armes upon the Departure of the Right Honorable Govern: Richard Nicolls," and the court, with the advice of the governor, chooses the following officers for the two companies, viz., Marten Creiger and Johannes van Brugh, captains; Govor Loockermans and Jacob Kip, lieutenants; Stephen van Cortlandt and David de Hondecourt, ensigns.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 144. See Aug. 25.

Col. Nicolls's departure being imminant, Mr. Maverick writes for him the following testimonial in a letter to Lord Arlington, principal secretary of state: "After his abode here foure years (where hee hath lived with great reputation and honour) hee is now returning home. I must needs accompany him with this character; that hee hath done his Ma10 in & his Royall Highnes very considerable service in these parts having by his prudent management of affairs kept persons of different judgments and of diverse nations in peace and quietness, during a time when a great part of the world was in wars. And as to the several Nations of the Enclands, they were never brought into such a peaceable posture & faire correspondence, as by his means they now are."—N. T. Col. Doc., III: 174.

Gov. Francis Lovelace writes to Arlington as follows: "I have since happily accomplisht my voyage and am now invested in the charge of his excellency's territories, being the middle position between the two most distinct factions, the Papist and Puritan. I should esteem it as most singular favour, if your L. would vouchsafe to send mee some instructions how I might steere my course, as would most advance the interest of His Ma10 and service of His Royall Highnes my most gracious master. Preparatory to which, I have receaved from my worthy predecessor Colonnell Nicholls [sic] the character that was fixt betwixt you, and if you please but to command one of your L.5 Secretaries to correspond with mee, I shall not fail to give your L. an exact accont [so farre as I can reach] of these parts of the world."—N. T. Col. Doc., III: 174-75.

The first council under Govt. Lovelace is held.—Ex. Coun. Min., Sept. 1: 21. Record of his presence in New York as early as March 20 (p. 30) is found in the Winthrop Papers. In a letter to his friend Lord Arlington, dated Aug. 28 (q.v.), he wrote that he was then "invested in the charge of his Highness territories," although no definite date for the change in control from that of Nicolls to Lovelace is given.—N. T. Col. Doc., III: 174-75. See also Col. Coun. Min., 6.

The mayor's court receives from the new governor, "a Warrant . . . for the Publishing of a day of humiliation to be held in this City on Tuesday next ensuing the 8th of this Instant month of Septb, and was Published and fixed up at the Usual place of the Town, viz. . . ." So also Ex. Coun. Min., Sept. 11.

The warrant recites that a great and unusual sickness prevails, not only throughout the land in general but in New York in particular, whereby "Some are daily swept away & many more lying on their languishing beds, expecting each hour their dissolution."

8. Daniel Touroeur requests that the inhabitants of New Harlem shall allow him, as a recompense for his services to the town, “Fifty Morgens of land lying upon Hook’s Horn [see March 15], or to confirm the bargain which is made by the purchaser and the possession of the same.” Eight of the inhabitants express their willingness to pay their proportion of it and six refuse.—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 108.

21. It is ordered by the governor that some persons be appointed to see about the “Passage at Spiting Devill for 6th convenience of Travellers, & preserving of Cattle upon the Island, when the beefery at Harlem is to be removed.”—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 26. See March 2, 1669.

22. The constable and overseers of New Harlem are ordered by the council to release their attachment of John Arcbe’s cattle.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 26, 305-6.

Dec. 3. Thomas Hall and Hendrick Willemsen, fire-waardens, present to the mayor’s court a bill of 250 fl. seaweed, being "the expence incurred by them in having fire ladders made, etc. [see April 9, 1669]." They are ordered paid "without postponement or delay."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 138.

About this time, while in England (see Aug. 25, 1668), answering queries regarding the planters in the Duke of York’s territories in America, ex-Gov. Nicolls states, among other things, that: "The Governor and Counsell with the High Sheriff and the Justices of the Peace in the Court of the General assize have the Supreme Power of making, altering, and abolishing any Laws in this Colony. The said Court sits by the Judges of the Bench, particular Towns by a Constable and Eight Overseers. The City Court of N. Yorke by a Mayor and Aldermen. . . Liberty of Conscience is granted and assured. . . All Causes are tried by Justices, no Laws contrary to the Laws of England."—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (qto ed.), I: 59, citing "Land Doc., II.

Commissions are granted to Isaac Bedloe to be captain of a foot company; to Christopher Hoogeland to be lieutenant; and to Nicholas Bayard to be Ensign.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 804-5.

In this year, Nathaniel Morton’s New Englandsmorial was published at Cambridge. Based largely on Bradford’s history, it was the first strictly historical work issued by the New England press.—Church Catalogue, No. 606.

Jan. The ordinance relating to the city’s bakers is renewed by the mayor’s court, but the former penalty of 12 pounds sterling is reduced to 50 fl. in wampum.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 161.

The mayor’s court makes publication by ordinance against the erecting of privies and hogs-pens on the street side or as an offence to neighbours.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 161.

26. The mayor’s court orders "that all Persons that are Plantators to any Causes depending in this Court shall be Bound to take out at 1st of the following year of What is Ordered on past in Court, each Court day, or by neglect thereof, that they shall Pay the Secy for the Copy although none be taken out."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 164.

Feb. Evert Pietersen, "Schoolmaster and Precentor," comes again (see April 25, 1668) before the mayor’s court and delivers an account of his unpaid salary, which he claims from the city and for which he seeks payment; also a "further allowance for his future services." He says he will leave if these concessions are not granted.

Loveleaze confirms Nicolls’s act of Dec. 16, 1666 (q. v.), giving freedom of worship to the Lutherans. In this he says that the Lutheran congregation has been at great trouble and expense to prepare a minister, "and having at length attained to their desires there now being arrived into these parts Mr. Jacobus Fabritius to be their Pastor," he not only permits Fabritius to exercise divine worship among the congregation, on their taking the oath "to be true subjects to his Majesty," but allows them to do so unmolested. The permit is signed by both Francis Lovelace and Matthias Nicolls, secretary.—From Loveleaze document in archives of St. Matthews Lutheran Church, New York. This document, dated Feb. 20, 1668, is properly 1669.—See Kretzmann, Oldest Lutheran Church in Am., 15. In about a year and a half, troubles in New York City were brought to a head by a petition presented to Gov. Loveleaze, June 29, 1671 (q. v.), by "diverse of ye Lutheran or Augustane Congreagation," charging him with "several Matts unbecoming one of his Profession."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 536.

Gov. Loveleaze, with some of his council and others of the bench at New York, held a court at Harlem Feb. 27, 1669, and issued the following orders, the following: "It is this day Ordered, that a Convenient Wagggo-Way be made between the City of New-Yorke & this place; to wth & foure Commrs shall be appointed (viz two on each part) who are to View & consider of ye most convenient Passage to be made." The New York overseers for the current year, Thomas Hall and George Cople, two of the commissioners, with Daniel Turner and Resolved Waldron, of Harlem.

It was arranged that if Thomas Hall could not be present at the meetings of the commissioners he might send John Vigne as a "fitt Person in his Place." Both the patent of 1666 and that of Oct. 11, 1667, granted to Harlem, contain provisions for building a road between the two places, but it is evident that action was delayed. The commissioners were ordered to "view the said Way" on Feb. 25, and, having decided upon the location, to "immediately fall upon laying out the Way." The "Boores" of the Bowery and parts adjacent were to "clear the way to bee fit for the passage of Wagons from New York to the Saw-Kill, & 8th Towne of Harlem, from thence to their Towne." It was expected that this "Way" would be laid out and cleared by the first of May ensuing.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 26-28. On Feb. 24, Gov. Loveleaze issued a warrant to the commissioners for the execution of this task, which he says "bath heretofore beene Ordered & appointed never as yet was prosecuted to effect."—Ibid., I: 250-1. This road to Harlem was the beginning of the Eastern Post Road, and in part of the Kingsbridge Road.

At a meeting of the governor’s council at New Harlem, it is ordered that all horses and cattle belonging to New York and New Harlem which "shall bee turned into ye Woods upon this Island shall have a marke of Distinction upon them." All those belonging to New York, the Bowery, and parts adjacent, are to have the New York brand and those from New Harlem a New Harlem brand. A person from each place is to be appointed and sworn to mark the stock which belong to the inhabitants, and "none other."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 18.

A committee is appointed to "view ye Lands, & to examine into, & hear, & to determine the several Matts & Cases in Difference between the Towne of West Chester, & Mr. Wm. Willett about Cornells Neck [Black Rock, also called Cornhill’s Neck], and also between them & Thomas Hunt about his Commanage & Wating Place upon Throgmorton’s Neck & what else there may bee about the Patent granted to Hugh Oneale & Mary his Wife for the Land commonly called the Jounkers Land." A footnote explains that about 1664 Abraham van der Donck bought from the Indians, under a grant from Director-General Kieft, their unextinguished titles to the lands "as far as Papiramin, called by our people [Spydt van Duyvll], in Spite of the Devil."

The tract was soon named "vanden Donck," or "Donck’s Colony," and was referred to by the Dutch as "de de Joukrechts Land," an English corruption of which is perpetuated in the Yonkers of to-day. Vander Donck’s widow later married Hugh Oneale.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 29-30.

1669 ex. comm. min., i: 222, and gov. lovelace having referred the same to the mayor's court for advice, that court now replies, as follows: that "the ferry at harlem" was farmed out to verveelen "for the term of five years, and now removed to the wedding place, and it was, in accordance with that hire and assignment, that verveelen had it "at considerable charge in settling the 6th ferry; therefore, the city bench recommends "that the said ferry at the wedding place should be granted to verveelen "for the remainder" of the "three years," on condition of his removing "his habitation" there, or settling a "sufficient person in his room to attend the said ferry," and also "keep and deliver up annually an account of the incomes of the 6th ferry." re. n. am., vi: 170. see june 3.

2 the curators of the estate of rachel van tienhoven, isack de forest, and others having property on the strand near the grift (now pearl, below broad street) complain, in a petition to the mayor's court, that they have suffered "great damage," and dread yet more, because "the corner wall alongside hans dreper's house" has not been "built up," and request that it be built by the city. the court promises to see that "the demanded corner wall is built up by the first opportunity." — re. n. am., vi: 170.

3 an order from the mayor's court is sent to the deaconry of the city to deliver to the court an account "of the receipt and expenditures of the salary of the preacher of this city received by them for some years hence." — re. n. am., vi: 174.

4 subscriptions to be taken for a crown in silver or the value in good wheat; the list of subscribers to be sent to capt. salisbury. gov. nicholls had appointed a race the year before; not so much, as he said, for the diversion of youth as to encourage the bettering of the breed of horses, which through great neglect was impaired.—underdown, queen's co. in old times, 6, citing orders, i: n. y. cal. docs, xiv: 620.

5 a petition is read and considered in the mayor's court from "the householders and some of the inhabitants of the city," in which they complain, "in idio., vi: 188; catharine ruvvin, paulus lendertse, vander griff, and allan andry were "very busy to the prejudice of the commonly in general, in fencing in a parcel of land lying between the boweries" of vander griff and anthony "and the great kill [see explanation below, whereby the pasture of the cattle] was being much abridged." the petitioners had requested from gov. lovelace (who referred them to turn in the mayor's court), an estoppel on the act complained of; and the city bench now orders van ruvvin, vander griff, and anthony to make answer at the next court day.—re. n. am., vi: 176. they made their answer on the 27th, and a copy thereof was furnished to the informant, which the said passenger, dunbar, and all comp., & others that have obtained patents for lands about the great kill, since the reducing of this place unto his mayors obedience, shal enjoy & lose in so much of their lands, as they shall be able to manure, besides a reasonable proportion of land, to be allowed them, for a p'ticular pasture, provided that they do not cast of the passages out of the woods to the water-side, but to leave openings at every one or 200 rods distance, for common roads to the water-side; and concerning the 'other particular pastures whereof comp. of the court adjudged they were 'granted, possessed & fenced in, in 20 & others 10 years since,' therefore in tenure by prescription; the final disposition was left to the governor's consideration.—ibid., vi: 185. the great kill ran along the present gansevoort st., which was at one time called the 'great kill road.' the farms mentioned in the complaint lay west of broadway and between christopher and 23rd st. see a. 3.

6 jacob barentsen kool is admitted as a porter of the weigh-house, in the place of jacob daniels, who is about to depart from the city.—re. n. am., vi: 177. on aug. 3, albert leendertse was likewise admitted as a porter, and, on that day, both of them took the oath of fidelity "at the hands of the mayor . . . as wine and vinegar." — re. n. am., vi: 183.

7 the mayor's court, with the advice of gov. lovelace, orders, "that for the future all those that shall call a special court shall pay for the same forty shillings in zilver or the value thereof in wampum." — re. n. am., vi: 178. see july 15.

8 the mayor's court orders "that from henceforth all persons who shall have any actions depending in court, to be tried and determined by a jury, shall be granted a declaration in writing in the office, 8 days before the day of trial upon penalty of a non suite." — re. n. am., vi: 179.

9 a certificate of this date is issued by gov. lovelace to john archer in the following form: "these are to certify all whom it may concern that i have given leave to john archer to settle six-teene families upon the maine near the wading place according to directions formerly given and that what agreem' th hence shall make with ye inhabitants as to their proprors of improvable land and hamlets, i shall be ready to confirm, but due respect the setting out the utmost bounds for their range, until i shall once more upon ye place alter with i shall grant a patent for their further assurance." — n. y. cal. docs, xiii: 424.

10 on complaint of nicolaen bayard, the treasurer of the city, the mayor's court orders hendricks ohe, the "late collector," to settle his accounts with the treasurer within eight days.—re. n. am., vi: 181. see june 3.

11 in accordance with the recommendation of the mayor's court, march 2 (27.), gov. lovelace issues the following order: "whereas it hath beene resolved and concluded upon that the ferry at new harlem shal be removed to a nearer and more convenient place and from this island and the maine, which is found to be at a place called spitting davyll and johnannes verveelen who hether hath kept the ferry at new harlem aforesaid being found the fittest person to bee employed therein, that will undertake it in regard of the charge hee hath b Doe already it [al] and his experience that way. these are to authorize and empower him the said johnannes verveelen to repair to the said place at spitting davyll and to cause a fence to bee made for keeping all manner of carriages from going or coming to or fro the said passage without leave or paying therefore and at his best convenience to lay out a place upon that piece of land called papiriooin on the mane side near the habitation for his habitation and accommodations of Travellers for the which hee shall have a patent and articles of coo- rmacoan." — ex. comm. min., i: 212. see sept., 1669; 1685; and aug. 10, 1685.

12 the ferry from new york to communipaw is leased by gov. carteret, of n. j., to pieter hefedecco for three years, he be "the only and constant ferryman," with the privilege of renewal at the expiration of the lease unless the inhabitants of the "townes aforesaid have any just exceptions against him." all persons are prohibited from usurping hefedecco's right under penalty of a fine of ten shillings and the additional ferriage which they may have collected. if two fines are to be paid at the regular ferryman. any person may, however, keep his own boat or canoe for the use of himself or his family and their own goods. the ferry-man must maintain one good and "sufficient" boat or more and, while expected to provide transportation at any time is particularly enjoined to arrange with the inhabitants of communipaw for a day's wages for the work of carts when at appointed times he will be at their service. it is arranged that the governor and family are to have free transportation as are also public messengers from the governor or those authorized by him. the ferry rates are as follows: there shall be paid to the ferryman six shillings a head wampum for every passenger.

13 for his freight extraordinary at all other times iff but one man 4 guilders in wampum, but iff by night and unreasonable weather as the parties can agree.

15 for ever 3 guilders, for an ox 4 guilders in wampum.

16 for a hog or sow 15 stivers for all other goods & liege& in cash proportionable.

20 the ferry-man must also ferry over any person for four guilders in wampum, except what is before excepted." — winfield, hist. of hud. son co., n. j., 234-36, citing e. j. rec., iii: 27. see dec. 22, 1661. the duke of york grants by letters patent a property in a stone st. to gov. nicolls, as follows: see a. july 5.

Samuel Maverick writes to Col. Richard Nicolls at Whitehall (in England), thus: "Now give mee leave to acquaint you a little how things goe heere at Yorks. Tryalls have been made several times this spring for cod fish, with very good success; a small ketch sent out by ye Governour hath found several good fishing banks; amongst ye rest one not above 2 or 3 leagues from Sandy Hook on which in a few hours 4 men took 11 to 12 hundred excellent good Codly the last time they were out; and most of ye rest ye nothing to and from Virginia take good quantities. That vessell is to goe to from Newfound Land to gett fishermen riches bootes and other necessaries for fishing: I doubt not but this Coast will afford fish in abundance.

On the End of Long Island there were 12 or 13 whales taken before ye end of March, and what since wee heare not; here are daily some seen in the very harbour, sometimes within Nott [now Governors] Island [see Pl. 19, Vol. I, where a spouting whale is pictured]. Out of the Pinnacle the other week they struck two, but lost both, the iron broke in one, the other broke the warpe. The Governour hath encouraged some to follow this designe. Two shallops made for it, but as yet wee doe not hear of any they have gotten.

"The Governour with some Partners is building a ship of 120 tuns, by Thomas Hall's house [at Turtle Bay]; she is well onward and may be finished in August; another of 60 or 70 tuns is building at Gravesend.

"Nutt Island, by ye making of a garden and planting of several walkes of fruitie trees on it, is made a very pleasant place.

"The Old House is pulling downe, wth provies soe exceedingly defective above what could be imagined, that I think it must [be taken] down to the bottom, and will prove a tedious and chargeable piece of worke. [Cf. "Old Hospital," Oct. 16, 1685.]

"There is good correspondence kept between the English and Dutch, and to keep it the closer, sixteen (ten Dutch and 6 English) have had a constant meeting at each others houses in turnes, twice every week at the article, and now in summer twice a night and part about eight or nine." —N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 182-83.

On Oct. 15, Maverick again wrote to Nicolls:

"The ship was launched 14 days since and is a very strong and handsome vessell, but costly; she is named the Good Fame, of New York. The house is come to covening, it is a handsome fabricke and well contrived, but mens wages soe high as that it cannot be expected it should come of cheape. The flux, agues, and fevers, have much raised, both in cittie and country, & many dead, but not yett soe many as last yeares." —Ibid., III: 185.

6. Nicolaes Jansen, Jan Jansen van Breestede, and Hendrick Bosch are elected by the mayor's court as firewardens of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 184. For the first incumbents following the English occupation, see Oct. 3, 1665; see also Dec. 1, 1668.

7. The overseers of highways (see April 16, 1666), whose term of office expired, are elected mayor, "may be convened until further order," as the court expects to appoint "some new Overseers... for the branding of horses and cattle."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 185. The new appointments were made Jan. 25, 1670 (p.v).

8. The mayor's court orders that the city marshall's fee "out of the moneny paid for a Speciall Court" (see April 10), shall be four guineas.

9. In regard to a land dispute between John Archer and William Betts, George Lippert, etc., the governor's council orders:

"That Jacques Courteyly [the surveyor] bee sent to view & lay out Archers thirty Acres, & yr Remain'd to bee to them [see July 7, 1666] & if they have catt & carried away any Hay belonging to Archers, they are to returne soe much, hee paying them for their paines.

"That some Proportion be laid out for the ferryman Mr. Verleen. July 7. That Archers bee good Substantiall Meadow, & Bett's &c to have the rest." —Ex. Coun. Min., I: 33-34.

Perewyn, the sachem of the Hackinack, Toppan, and Staten Island Indians, appears before the governor's council, desiring that the "frienship" between the Dutch and the Maquesses be continued be under the present governor. He is assured it will be continued as long as they carry themselves well. Gov. Lovelace is requested to hold a band of seawant as a pledge that the Maquesses have made a peace with the nations of the sachem. The governor is to give them an assurance to have been demanded of Christians fishing upon the Hudson River, it has been done without the order of "y" Cheife persons amongst them." —Ex. Coun. Min., I: 35-36.

Jean (Johannese) de la Montague receives from the Indians a confinatory deed for the "Point named Rechawam," bounded between a stream which runs to Montague's Flat; with the meadows from the bend of the Hellegat to Komandie Kongs."—Harlem Reci. (MS. translation), II: 80, in possession of N. Y. Public Library; Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 206, 257-88. The projection long known as Montague's Point, later called Benson's Point, lay between the present 98th and 107th Sts., approximately, and extended from about the line of Fifth Ave., to the Harlem River. —See The Manatus Maps, II: 193-94; C. Pls. 41, 42, 424, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 986; Pl. 178, Vol. III.

Dame Dillon, a lad about 17 years or age, attempts to set on fire the house of William Paterson, about eight o'clock at night, "by putting a brand of fire under the door" of the house. The lad was found guilty by the mayor's court, on Sept. 5, and condemned to be taken to "the Ordinary Execution place" and given "twelve Slashes," to be held in prison at the pleasure of the court, and then "to be banished out of this City and the Suburbs thereof during his life."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 194. This house was on the corner of Cocottes Alley and Pearl St., on the opposite corner from the city hall, and was included in the original grant of Thomas Willet, of 1645.

"May ye Gov. Lovelace having recommended to the mayor's court to consider who are persons qualified to have the Benefit of Comonage on this Island Manhattan & Y New village called Fordham" are agreed upon between Gov. Love lase and the ferryman, Verleen, instead of between the mayor and Verleven as was the case in leaving the Harlem ferry (see July 7, 1667). The terms provide that Verleen "shall Erect & Provide a good & sufficient Dwelling house, upon y" Island or Neck of Land knowne by ye name of Papirinim, where he shall be furnisht with three or lower good Bells, for ye Entertainment of Strangers, as also wth Provisions at all Seasons, for them their horses & cattle togeth wth Stabling & Stalling. He must have a 'sufficient & Able boat for ye Transportation of Passengers Horses & Cattle upon all Occasions. The "Passe upon ye said Island near unto Spiting Devil" must be fenced and have a gate and lock so that no one can enter or leave without the ferry-man's permission. He must bear one third of the costs of building a bridge over the main ground to the town of Fordham, "who are to be at yr Remain'd of ye Charge themselves." Either the ferry-man or his deputy is required to be ready to provide transportation at all seasonal hours, and in case of emergency where "ye Publicke Affairs are concerned" he is to be ready whenever called upon. A fine is to be imposed for neglect of duty. In return for these services, Verleen, or his successor, will have Papirinim (see June 2, also Papirinim in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 967) and the meadow ground adjoining, whatever building he shall erect thereon, and the profits of the ferry for a period of 11 years. At the end of this time he or his heirs are to have precedence in looking for any other ferry-man to receive a lease to other parties, such satisfaction for buildings, boats, etc., as two disinterested persons agree upon, is to be granted him. LETTER FROM GOV. LOVELACE TO GOV. WINTHROP REGARDING THE POST BETWEEN NEW YORK AND NEW ENGLAND, DEC. 27, 1672. SEE P. 286.
From double nominations made on the preceding day by the mayor’s court, for a new bench for the ensuing year, Gov. Lovelace appoints and commissions Cornelis Steenwyck, mayor; Thomas Delavall, Matthijs Nicols, Cornelis van Ruyven, John Laurence, and Nicholas de Meyer, aldermen; and Capt. John Manning, sheriff. Their commissions ran from this date forward. — Rec. N. Am., VI: 200-1. In a letter to the mayor’s court, dated Oct. 6, Gov. Lovelace promised that if they would “consider of Somme Methode for the better regulation of YT Corporation and present it to me, What I find reasonable and practicable, I shall Willingly allow of.”— Ibid., VII: 198-99. The return to the Dutch custom of double nominations for court officials would seem to be an attempt towards such “better regulation.”

Gov. Francis Lovelace states that he has received letters from the Duke of York in approbation of “yet Tolleration given to ye Lutheran Church” in New York, and that the Lutherans are not to be molested in their worship.— N. Y. Col. Docs, XIV: 616, copied from MS, Records of Court of Assises, II: 424.

It is ordered that tobacco exported for Europe shall pay two guilders wampum per hogshead; that sugar exported “from these parts thither” shall “pay 52 per Cent, in Beavers;” that beavers to be exported to Europe shall pay but 74 per cent. instead of 10 per cent. and that all other goods exported as before shall pay 13 per cent.— Ex. Coun. Min., I: 19-40. See Nov. 18, 1668.

Several petitions from towns on Long Island are received by Gov. Lovelace. The prices of provisions which they sought relief were especially noted in the petition from Hempstead, which was considered by the court of assizes. Among the things sought were a regulation of the prices of what they bought as well as what they produced; wampum to pass “for current pay at 64 a penny or else not to be made uso of.”— A “better attendance at ye Ferry at New York that men may not be so long detained to their great damage;” that “all harbors, creeks & coves” in the province be made available “for any shipping or Vessells to come into & trade free;” the establishment of weights and measures according to the English standard only, and a provisioning that such cattle as they should purchase and bring to the city, or should buy in the city, should be free of custom duties. These requests were rejected in most cases. The publication of ferry regulations was promised speedily.— N. Y. Col. Docs, XIV: 613-31.

Warnier Wessells is chosen by the mayor’s court as constable of the city during the majorality of Cornelis Steenwyck. He took the oath of office on Dec. 7.— Rec. N. Am., VI: 205, 268.

The Harlem court orders that no animals except cattle shall be pastured in the common “calve pasture” lying “North of the Village.” Penalties are fixed for disregarding such order and for leaving the gate ajar. When the last of March the common pasture is to make his share of the bridges in the two meadows.— Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 149-50. In a court case of April 23, 1672, mention was made of the community “making tigh the fence of the call pasture.”— Ibid., I: 186-87.

The following new court of New Haarlem (see June 12, 1666) is elected by the mayor’s court; viz: Jacques Crooson, constable; Reserve Waldron, Kier Woltersen, Claude La Metre, and Johannes Verdeling, overseas. Weltersen left soon after the election; hence, on Jan. 25, 1670, Joost Obinsus was elected to the vacancy.— Rec. N. Am., VII: 207, 213.

The first printed description of New York in the English language, written by Daniel Denton, was published in London in this year. The scope of the work is indicated by the title page, which reads: A Brief Description of New York in the Northern Netherlands. With the Places thereto Adjaying, Together with the Manner of its Situation, Fertility of the Soyle, Healthfulness of the Climate, and the Commodities thence produced. Also Some Directions and Advice to such as shall go thither. An Account of what Commodities they shall take with them. The Profit and Pleasure that may attend to them thereby, Likewise A Brief Relation of the Customs of the Indians there. Parts of his vivid and laudatory descriptories follow: “And first to begin with the Manahattan Island, so called by the Indians, it lieth within land butt the degrees of 41. and 42. of North-latitude, and is about 14 miles long, and being so broad. It is divided with Long-Island and other lands betwixt by the river South-Island on the West, on the North with the main Land: And with Connecticut Colony on the East-side of it; only a part of the Main Land belong-

New-York is settled upon the West-end of the aforesaid Island, having that small arm of the Sea, which divides it from Long-Island on the South-side of it, which runs away Eastward to New-England, and is a large and thorough dangerous, and as a hazy passage, through which the Thunderer may pass, unless the people of New-York have an open air of navigable, to the spectators. CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664–1763

Gov. Lovelace issues a proclamation for "ye keeping a Punctual tyme for meeting at ye Exchange." Whereas "amongst ye several Employ./ inhabitants of this City are Conventick in that of ye merchants appears ye cheerfullest & most important," it is proposed creating a "fitt tyme & place" for "such" business, which is "to be held" in the "Place where all merchants shall meet to an Exchange to conferre about their several affaires ... & that dayly notice thereof be given by ye ringing of a bell when they should come on, & when they should goe & that care be taken by ye Mayor of this City that no interruption or disturbance be given to any one that shall frequent that Exchange & likewise that Mrs. Maydf cause a solemn publication to be made of this Ord' at ye Towne house of this City."—Court of Assizes, III: 478 (N. Y. S. L.). From a typewritten copy, in the N. Y. Pub. Library, of the original, which was destroyed in the Capitol fire at Albany in 1911. "Thus the first merchants' exchange of New York was returned to existence, holding its meetings in the open air near the site of the great Stock Exchange building of to-day and [al]most on the very spot, the junction of Broad Street and Exchange Place, where the older market in making a new constitution called the 'curf market' now [1909] likewise does its business out-of-doors."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 70.

The original Charlestown, S. C., is founded, on the western bank of the Ashley River.—Winson, op. cit., p. 307. For its removal to the present site, see A. 3.

Johannes de Peyster, IsaacGrevereart, Concasten Eyck, and Hendrick Willemens are appointed overseers "for the Laying out and Paving of the Streets." The instructions given to them by the mayor's court required them "to order that the Streets wch are to be paved be laid out as level and even as possible" and "according to the Convenience of the Streets" that "the passage be raised about one foot higher then the middle of the Streets to the end the water may take its Course from the passages towards the Middle of the Streets aforesaid;" and provision that, "in Case the Neighbour's" were "inclined towards the paving of the Whole Streets," they had "Liberty too to doo, provided that all the Neighbours agreed in union to do so. Every person concerned was "required & Strictly Charged to obey the orders" of the overseers in conformity with the ordinance.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 223–29. On May 18, the mayor appointed Abram Jansen, master carpenter of the city, "to perform the overseers work of the Streets, the Widows, the proper laying out and opening of streets;" because the overseers had requested the appointment of one of the carpenters who understood the work.—Ibid., VII: 235. This board was entirely distinct from the overseers of roads and fences (see March 1). In N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municiplity, 78, the two are apparently confused. The final deed of conveyance of the Island from the Dutch to the English (1763) read: all the present inhabitants, "on ye behalf of themselves as the True Sachems Owners & lawful Indian Proprietors of Staten Island & all other Indians any way concerned therewith," to Gov. Lovelace, is signed. On April 15, in the presence of the governor and Capt. Manning, the secretary, the deed "delivered & acknowledged," before "the young Indians not being present at the Ensealug & delive[r]" of the deed on April 13. The "young Indians" were boys and girls from six to twenty years of age.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 338–43 (where the first and last pages are reproduced).

This final deed was the result of a series of parleys with the Indians regarding a deed of July 10, 1657, which appeared in the "Old Dutch Records" together with the "Consideration Agreed upon" and all the "Indians Names & Marks who sold it." When the Indians who appeared before the governor are asked why they will again sell the land, since it was sold, they tell them that it appears upon Record that all was sold; they being told that since those now would sell the Land again after it had been sold 40 years ago, their Childern 40 years hence may doe ye like. They say still that then only part of it was sold, so they continued on it, but now they have sold it. They say "there was an Agreement yet nothing of it was paid, for they did not goe off the Island." (It is stated in N. Y. Col. MSS, XII: 61, 69, that the date of the deed was 1657, but that the purchase was..."

annulled Dec. 22 of that year.) The English added: "if they will gae all off, That Agreement shall bee made good to them."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 43-45. At a second meeting, two of the Indian signers of the deed of 1657 were present, and the matter of the early agreement being again discussed, the Indians refused to accept the court's order. Ibid., I: 45-47. After further barter, terms satisfactory to both parties were agreed upon, which included payment to the Indians of 400 "Fathom of Wampom," 30 "Match Coates," 8 "Eight Coats of Doecens made up," 30 shirts, 30 kettles, 20 guns, 1 bacon of powder, 60 bars of lead, 30 axes, 50 hoes, and 50 knives. Another provision was that "Queensway who was employed to bring the Indians togethe to bee a Blankcett, & a Ratham of Dunell." The Indians agreed to leave the island upon receiving their pay. "The Persons pest & concerned strooke hands upon the Bargaine." A memorandum in connection with the deed states "That Two or Three of ye said Sachems their heires or successors or so many Persons Employed by them shall once every year (vizt) upon ye first Day of May yearly after their surrender repair to this fort to acknowledge their Sale of the said Staten Island to ye Gouvernor or his Successors to continue a mutual friendship betweene them."—Ibid., I: 345. See May 2. This indenture deed was burned in the Capitol fire at Albany, in March, 1911. There is, however, a duplicate copy, with the addition of Lovelace's signature, in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

The court at New Harlem appoints a "Tavern-keeper Cornells" and "tavern-keeper Hendrickson," and "the man that make puerto of coming men" (travellers), and that they take oath not to sell any liquor to Indians. The appointee accepts.—Harlem Rec. (MS. translation), I: 144.

A letter of this date indicates that the Dutch church was still "instituted of praying" and the administering of the sacraments (see Jan. 29). Prayers were offered each Sunday morning and afternoon and the "Word of God and a sermon were read by the chorister Evert Pieters." Every two weeks Dominie Polhemus, who was over 70, preached a sermon on a week day, and administered the sacrament of baptism to children. The letter adds: "We hope by that your speedy help, this anxious congregation may be supplied with a suitable minister." An act obtained from the governor (see June 28), which designated the compensation for a minister as 1,000 guilders, free house rent, and firewood, was enclosed with the letter.—Ecclus. Res., I: 610-11. See March 16 and 28, 1671.

Resolved Waldron, Lubbert Gerritsen, Dirck Sieck, and Joen Cornelissen, acting as "agents of the housekeepers and farmers dwelling" on Manhattan Island (see Jan. 15), petition the mayor's court "regardings the marks of all the horses and cattle." Decision is reserved until the 21st. The ordinance provides for branding all horses and cattle above one year old, which the petitioners say is not feasible, and seek to have the age fixed at three years; moreover they request a release from the branding fees, and instead offer "to observe the marks and brands by villages, without receiving any fees therefor." The court conceded the request on condition that the petitioners pay a tax of one shilling a year for every horse or cow. Their petitioners would have the placard relating to the marking of horses and cattle be duly executed and that the petitioners provide and find a fit person, by whom the register is properly kept, and finally to pay the expenses incurred in the manufacture of the branding iron.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 237-238, 239-40.

"Upon complaint of the common council that the stapleright of Manhattan was constantly ignored by vessels not belonging to New Haven, etc., as they were bound for water, in [see March 9, 1669], no goods should be carried up the river unless their owners possessed burgher-right in the city and, unloading their cargoes, paid recognitions there."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 607; Ex. Coun. Min., II: 532-23. The order was revised March 9, 1669.—Ibid., II: 537.

The elders and deacons of the Dutch church having petitioned the mayor's court for "an able Opposition Minister," of whom they are now "Wholly destitute," the court laid the case before Gov. Lovelace, who now gives his official assent to bringing over a minister from Holland; also to a guaranty that he "receive a Competent Salary or Allowance for his Exercising the Ministerial function," amounting to 10,000 guilders, Holland money, per annum, as well as "the accommodation of a Convoyrent dwelling house, Rent free, Together with his Provision of fire Wood Gratis." These perquisites, of course, were to be met by an annual levy upon the inhabitants.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 246-247. In July 11, 1678.

A long standing dispute between John Archer and Betts, Tippett, and Heddy (see Nov. 6, 1668), regarding a 50-acre meadow claimed by Archer out of land sold by Elias Doughty, is settled by the governor's council. Archer is to have the meadow as formerly set off by "Conce [Conce] [Colouyl] 6th Surveyor," and since surveyed by Robert Rider.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 52, 215.

The Treaty of Madrid, between England and Spain, settles the boundaries of their respective possessions in America on possession.

Petra Stuyvesant complains to the mayor's court that he is being "abridged in the execution of some of his lands from the public fence."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 245. See Feb. 28, 1671.

In the mayor's court, "The Overseers of Roads and Fences" complain that Bastian Ellien, Jan Kyczuyt, Gerrit Hendricksen, and others have "completely taken away and maintain their quota of the Common Strand fence" (along the Hudson River), which neglect results in "great damage . . . done daily to the grain." The defendants reply that the fence is "down," and the cattle swarm "around the fence at high water." The court refers the matter to Jan Cornelissen and Arent Leendertse, to hear the case debated and render a report.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 245.

A license is granted to Jacob Meurs, of Amsterdam, to publish De Nieuwe en Onbekende Werelds of Beschrijving van America, by Arnoldus Montana; its title-page bears the date 1671 (see I: 142). This book contains the well-known Montana View of New York State (see ibid., I: 305, Vol. II), the first map in which the Manhattan island stands New Amsterdam, five miles from the Ocean; Ships run up to the harbour there from the sea with one tide. The city hath an eardien fort. Within the fort, and on the outermost bastion towards the river, stand a wind mill, and a very high staff, on which a flag is hoisted whenever any vessels are seen in the Dutchy. The church rises with a double roof between which a square tower looms aloft. On one side is the prison, on the other side of the church the governer's house. Without the walls are the houses mostly built by Amsterdammers. On the river side stand the gallows and whipping post. A handsome public tavern adorns the farthest point. Between the fort and this tavern is a row of suitable dwelling houses: among which stand out the ware houses of the West India Company." This translation is from Desc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), IV: 75. This book was issued also in an English and a German edition. The English edition, America, contains a somewhat different description, being thus: "After His Majesties Restoration, His Majesty being truly informed of his just Pretences to all that Unprofitable Territory called New Netherland, (the same having been formerly part of New England) and of how great prejudice to the Act of Navigation, and how dangerous it was to the Dutchmen and generally the Princes Dominions, what mischief might ensue to all our English Plantations in time of War, if the Dutch were permitted to strengthen themselves in the very heart of His Majesties Dominions, being Masters of one of the most commodious Ports and Rivers in the World, and standing on the same, as his un- doubted Right, and in May 1664, having design'd four Commis- sioners to the perfecting of Affairs in New England, Collon

Richard Nichols, Sir Robert Carr, George Cartwright, and Samuel Mawrck [Maverick] Esquires, with three ships of War to convey them to Boston: The matter was so order'd that the same Ships serv'd for the relieving of the Town and Fort of New Amsterdam, upon conditions, advantageous to His Majesty, and ease to the Dutch.

The town "was plac'd upon the neck of the Island Manhattan, looking towards the Sea; encompass'd with Hudson's River, which is six Miles broad; the Town is compact and oval, with very fair Streets and several good Houses; the rest are built much after the manner of Amsterdam, and the liberties of which, and the nature of streets are held considerable: Upon one side of the Town is James-Fort capable to lodge three hundred Souliers and Officers; it hath four Bastions, forty Pieces of Cannon mounted; the Walls of Stone, lin'd with a thick Rampart of Earth; well accomodated with a Spring of fresh Water, always furnish'd with Arms and Ammunition, against Accidents: Distant from the Sea seven Leagues, it affords a safe Entrance, even to unskilful Pilots; Under the town side, Ships of any Burthen may Ride secure against any Storms, the Current of the river being broken by the intersection of a small Island, which lies a Mile distant from the Town.

"About ten Miles from New York is a Place call'd Hell-Gate, which being a narrow Passage, there runneth a violent Stream both upon Flood and Ebb; and in the middle lie some Rocky Islands, which the Currents of the Empire State only supply with Shore-tide; and upon the Flood is a large Whirlwind, which continually sends forth a hideous roaring, enough to affright any Stranger from passing farther, and to wait for some Charon to conduct him through; yet to those that are well acquainted, little or no danger. It is a place of great Dutch, and some French, and Enemy coming in that way, which a small Fortification would absolutely prevent, and necessitate them to come in at the West end of Long Island by Sandy Hook, where Nuten Island forces them within the Command of the Fort at New York, which is one of the best Pieces of Defence in the North parts of America. It is built most of Brick and Stone, and cover'd with red and black Tile, and the Land being high, it gives at a distance a pleasing prospect to the Spectators. The Inhabitants consist most of English and Dutch, and have a considerable Trade with Indians for Beaver, Otter, and Racoon-Skins, with other Furs, as also for Bear, Deer and Elk-Skins; and are supply'd with Venison and Fowl in the Winter, and Fish in the Summer by the Indians, which they buy at an easy Rate; and having the Country round about them, they are continually furnish'd with all such Provisions as is needful for the Life of Man, not only by the English and Dutch within their own, but likewise by the Dutch on the Island opposite. This is an almost identical copy of Dayton's description, published in 1670 (p.v.). Denton correctly uses the word "whirlpool," while Ogilvy has used erroneously the word "whirlwind" in describing Hell Gate.

Gov. Lovelace issues the following order in behalf of Isaac Bellow: "Whereas Mr Isaac Bellow hath made very good Improv'd upon a Certaine Little Island in ye Bay near a City commonly called Oyster Island for ye wch he hath a Patent granted by Col. Richard Nicolls, & at his request I have given it a New Name that is to say ye wch name of Love Island." Therefore he grants "that ye said Island now called Love Island shall be a Priviledged place Where no warrant of Attaquim or arrest shall be of force or be served unless upon ye motion of two Justices present. Dated, XIV: 619. This was Bedloe's Island.---See April 20, 1666.

An inventory of the estate of Jacob Wolpertsen van Courwenhoven, deceased, is delivered to the mayor's court by the curators thereof, together with a petition from the curators in which they requested "further and more special information of the real estate and personal property and how to proceed further for the advantage of the estate." The curators are given power "to proceed with the sale of the goods, real and personal, on condition that the fence of the lot of the Great House on the Heere Graff . . . be drawn back and set on the common line of the adjoining Graham. This property on the East Graff was at the north-east corner of Broad and Stone Sts., and ran back to the present South William St.---See Castello Plan, II: 704-5.

Whereas the Governor has received several requests from the inhabitants of Westchester, urging the removal from their jurisdiction of Katherina Harrison, because of an "apprehension they have of her grounded upon some troubles she hath layne un'd at Wethersfield upon suspicion of Witchcraft," he now decides that the matter shall go over to the next general court of assizes, and that the Widow Harrison and her children shall be allowed to remain "without disturbance or molestation." Reasons for the accusations against her do not "so clearly appear unto me, Yeet not this tediousness of judges to give as much satisfaction as may be to ye Compis" who p'tend these charges, and I have not thought fit absolutely to determine ye matter at Prsent.---Ex. Coun. Min., I: 392-93. See March 23, 1675.

"All these proceedings [regarding witchcraft] were taken at common law, or under the English Statute of James I. No law against witchcraft has been found on the statute-book of New York. At the same time, there is no room for doubt that the principal clergymen then in the colony were firm believers in witchcraft, and it may fairly be presumed that far the greater portion of the community shared in their faith." Cotton Mather says that the opinions of Dutch and French ministers in New York, "while the storm of delusion on the subject was raging in Massachusetts, contributed to destroy the authority of the 'spectral testimony,' then too much in credit there. Several victims of persecution in Massachusetts found refuge in New York, a fact "which constitutes a part of the history which she may wth profit consult in her excellent work. (see Mag. (2d ser.), VI: 215, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1869), 274-76.

William Beckman purchases from Anna Hall, widow of Thomas Hall, a piece of land with a dwelling-house, brewery, brew-house, brewing implements, mule-house, horse-mill, and other buildings thereon, together with one quarter's interest in a mill at the east end of Smith's Valley and on the north side of the King's wagon-road.—Book of Mortgages (1665-1675) in the Hall of Records, 81-85. This property was on both sides of the present Beckman St.—Innes, New Amsterdam and Its People, 328.

The sheriff complains to the mayor's court that "divers persons" have suffered "great damage" because Jan Hendrickson (Steelman, alias) Coop, and Thomas Wandell have up till "the present time failed to construct their wall on the waterside [East River, now Pearl St.], according to previous order." The court gives the two delinquents six weeks time in which to build up "their walls" or suffer a fine.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 259. The order did not meet with compliance. Steelman died soon afterward (see Castello Plan, II: 322). Complaint against Wandell was made again on May 16, 1761 (p.v.). For similar case of Jacob Fodder, see May 19, 1665.

Upon complaint of the overseers of the public roads on both sides of the mayor's court orders that the carters of this City, who use the Roads over the Fresh Water, whether in drawing firewood from the public woods or otherwise, shall be bound to aid in repairing said roads, as well as the country people.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 259.

Schabach and the city tailor, is given 50 guilders advance in his salary per annum.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 260. See Oct. 24, 1671.

Harry Nuton (Newton), one of the sergeants of the mayor's court (see July 9, 1665), is accorded a raise in salary of five pounds per annum for hearing the mace.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 260, 348.

From nominations made on the 10th by the mayor's court, Gov. Lovelace now appoints Capt. Thomas Delavall mayor for another year; Capt. Matthias Nicolls, John Laurence, Olof Stevensen van Cortlandt, Johannes van Breugh, and Isaac Bellow, aldermen; and Allard Anthony, sheriff.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 260-61.

The city has been "at excessive Charges towards the repairing & repairing of the Great Streets. (see Rec. of Great Streets, pp. 12, 244) and the mayor's court adjudges that all those who use the bridge shall contribute towards its upkeep. A revenue tax is imposed, therefore, "upon all Horses, Mares or Guiltens" that are to be Shipped & Exported" from the city to Virginia, Maryland, or any other outward Plantations, and Philip John, at sale of which the mayor is empowered by the court as haven-master to "Collect & receive the said Imposition to the Use of the City."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 262-63.

Louvres vander Spiegel is chosen constable of the city by the mayor's court and takes the oath of fidelity.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 265. The sheriff on Mayor's court order that vander Spiegel "desist his sickness," and the court commends him to the deacons of the Dutch church of the city "to allow the Petif some support, and to enquire Concern'd the deace and Condition of the Petit, and the place of his late residence, and to make return thereof at the next Court day."—Rec. N. Am., VI. 266. See Oct. 24, 1671.

Complainants to the mayor's court about infractions of the ordinances concerning the baking of bread in the city (see Aug. 9, 1666) cause the court to appoint Christoffel Hoogland and Timotheus Gabry as "Cencurers of all the Bread . . . Baked, And put to Sale by any Public Baker" of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII. 266.

22. An order, not preserved in the records, is issued regarding bread:—Ex. Coun. Min., 45-58. The court of assizes of 1669 ordered that a person should be appointed for this purpose and to prevent abuses. On Sept. 20, 1671, Ralph Warner was appointed "to take Cognizance of all Horses or Mares that shall come to ye ferry or parts adjacent to be Transported out of the Government," and that you Record the Attestations from whence they come, together with their Markes & Colours, and receive ye 6d. Sallery allowed for ye same."—Ibid., I: 57, footnote, citing Gen. Entitl. IV: 32.

23. "The having a Watch kept to prevent Disorder by night to bee left to further Consideration; but for the present, that the Sherriff of ye City doe take an Exact List of ye Inhabitants & Burgurers in each Street of the Towne, & make Returne thereof to the Governor's Rec."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 58. A footnote adds, "This is an interesting fact in the history of the census of New York City, although the list seems not to be in existence." See Jan. 22/Feb. 17, 1674, for a later list.

24. "Heedrick Jansen Vandersvin is accepted as Vouloer and Schoolmaster [at New Harlem] for three years for 400 florins yearly in Seward, or in grain at the price in Seawant." Sixty loads of wood are promised the "vouloer" by seven of the inhabitants.—Harlem Rec. (MS. translation), I: 159. The records contain a list of 16 inhabitants assessed to raise the above 400 fl.—Ibid., I: 178.

25. Gov. Lovelace publishes an order that any persons who shall henceforth "steale or take away any Canoe or boate [see Feb. 13, 1674], . . . or shall Curt any Painter or Cordage belonging to any boat or Vessell in this harbour or elsewhere with ye 6d. Governm' . . . shall be lyable to a Severe fyne Imprisonm' without bate or Mainprise or Corporall punishm' according to ye Demeritts of ye Fst."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 397.

26. Paulus Leendertsen van Grift, one of the "Wee masters" (orphan-masters—see Sept. 4, 1668), having left the province, Cornelis Steenwyck and Johannes van Brugh are now appointed by the city bench as orphan-masters for the ensuing year.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 272.

27. The public carmen or caretters having petitioned Gov. Lovelace that their number be fixed and limited, as was done in the case of the public carmen, he ordered the governor and council having referred the matter to the mayor's court, this court now grants the request upon condition that the caretters be diligent in serving the public and give their assistance in filling up "the breaches in the high ways, in and about ye City," also, "that they by turns weekly on every Saturday in the afternoon" shall "Cart the dirt from all the Paved Streets and Convey it to some Convenient place," appointed for that purpose, and that "the dirt be throwne & Loaden upon the Cart by the owners or tenennets of the howses in the st's. The caretters' fees for a load of goods transported within the city's gates is fixed at ten st. in seawant.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 272-73. See April 16, 1667, and Feb. 13, 1672.

28. Public officials of the city are not required to pay the burgurers' excise on consumption of drink in their own households, as is shown by an order of the mayor's court, on behalf of the city's constables.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 171-75.

29. "The House in Parel-Street being forfeited in the last Dutch Warre, is Ordered to be sold."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 63. This is undoubtedly the tobacco warehouse, managed by Augustine Hermann for Peter Gabry and Sons, of Amsterdam, which adjoined the "pack-buys" of the West India Co. Both houses were consecrated in 1664, at the time of the surrender of Amsterdam. Later the tobacco warehouse was occupied by Capt. William Dyer, collector of the port.—Innes, New. Am. and Its People, 52-55.

30. Mr. Sharp excuses himself for not conforming to the conditions of the sale to him at auction of Dominie's Hook (see Feb. 10) by confessing that he "was in Drink, & without Reason & severall Incombrances upon the Estate." The governor's council orders that he pay back to the auctioneer all the "Pluck-Money" paid out at the sale, the charges then expended in the house, and 100 guilders damage to the persons who exposed the place for sale, who may then dispose of it as they desire.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 64-65.

The description of the funeral solemnities of William Lovelace, nephew of Gov. Lovelace, is of interest as presenting an early and unusual picture of the social customs in the colony during the early days of English administration. The original document was found among a number of miscellaneous papers known as the Ash-modean manuscripts, in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, Vol. 84, folio 54, number XI. It is written on both sides of a quarto sheet of seventeenth century paper in the hand of the period, and appears to be a memorandum of the occurrence, probably written in New York and sent or taken to England later. It was printed in the Am. Hist. Rev. (1907-8) thus:

"The funeral Solemnities at the Intern[1]t of M W' Lovelace at New Yorke in America 1671:  "The manner of Exposing the Corps in the Roome before the Burial."  "The Roome was very spacious and hung all about with Mourning and Escutcheons therupon of his Paternal Coate to the number of 36.  "Round the said Roome were placed Turkey workes chyares richly wrought.  "In the Midst of the Roome stood the Hearse with Sheete and Pall encompassed with 8. of his Paternal Escutcheons.  "At the head a Pall of deaths heads and bones richly embroidered hung over as a Canopy.  "Over the middle of the Harse a rich Garland hung adorned with black and white Satten ribbands and an house Glasse impending.  "At the feete a shield 4 foot square cotes of Armes quarterd and gloriously gilt which together with the Garland remains as a monument in the Church to this day. [Apparently an indication that the description was not strictly contemporary.]  "Round the hearse stood A black stand with Silver Candlestick wax Tap's & p'Fumes burning night and day to the view of all people. 8. A Rich Cupboard of Plate worth 200 l. 9. 4: Attendants night and day. 10. The Forfall or entry to the Roome was curiously adorned with pictures Statues and other fascies in carved wooke.  "The funerall Procession.  11. The Capt: of the dead. 12. The Minister. 13. An Escutcheon mourning carrying the Shield. 4. The 2: Preaching Ministers 5. Two Maidens clothed in white silke carrying the Garland with Cyprus Scarves and Gloves tied with a whole piece with black and white Satten Ribbands. 6. The Corps carried by 6. Gentlemen Butchers all in Mourning, with Scarves and Gloves. 7. The Pall held up by 6. virgins all in white Silke with Cyprus Scarves and gloves. 8. Tho: Lovelace Esq: father to the deceased and his Lady in close Mourning. 9. 4 Halbertes with velvet Coates and Badges therom bordiured with his Crest of 40 l a Coate. 10. Colli: Henry Lovelace p'sent Governo of New Yorke and uncle to the deceased in close Mourning single. 11. Capt: Dudley Lovelace uncle also to the deceased in like mourning single. 12. The Counsell all in Mourning. 13. The Mace with Maior and Aldermen in their black Gownes. 14. The Principal Burgess of the City 2: and 2. 15. All the English and Dutch Women 21 and 2. 16. The cheife English and Dutch Men 2 and 2. 17. All Masters of Ships and Vessells. 18. All the other English and Dutch men. 2 and 2. to the number of 200, the greatest p't of them in black. 19. Wine sweet meats and Bisketts and such Services till ro. at night. 20.  "
At the entrance of the fort stood his Royall bignesse's Company of Guards with Colors fer'd Drums beating a funereal March and afterwards Several great Guns fired thence.

5 The mayor's court considers it necessary to appoint a public executioner in criminal cases, and chooses Benjamin Johnson, "who accepted to serve the Court therein" at 600 guilders in sea-

7 want per annum, in quarterly payments, each quarter in advance.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 279-80.

9 The governor's council decides against John de Decker, one of the town clerk's assistants, as requested in his request for remunera-

11 tion for ten negroes and salary due him from the West India Co. He is, however, granted 120 acres of land on Staten Island in con-

13 sideration of his trouble in coming from Europe to settle his affairs.

17 Evert Pietersen complains to the mayor's court that he cannot collect 150 fl.

19 due to him from Stoffel Van Laer upon an assign-

21 ment of the late M' Mayor." The court orders Van Laer to pay him "within the space of eight days" (see Dec. 5). Prof. Kil-

23 patrick believes that this "assignment" was a debt due the city from 25 Van Laer and that it was made payable to Pietersen as part of a long promised compensation (see Feb. 16, 1666) for trading services.—Kilpatrick, The Dutch Schools of New Netherland, 115.

Feb.

21 The mayor's court names the following officers for the town of 25 Haerlem: Pieter Rodofsen, constable; Daniel Terneur, Resolved Waldron, David de Marest and Johannes Vernelje, overseers.—Rec.

27 N. Am., VI: 282. See June 12, 1666.

29 It is resolved that henceforth the haven-master, instead of the 31 sheriff, shall have authority "to Arrest or Attach any Person, Goods, or Vessels upon the River, or in this Harbour."—Ex. Coun.

33 t. Min., II: 75-76.

The residents in the Smith's Valley request the mayor's court that the "Highway about the Water-gate" may be repaired. For location of the Smith's Valley and Water-gate, see Pl. 8, Vol. I. The court appoints two of the aldermen to "take a View and Inspection of the said highway, and to propose how the same best may be repaired, as also to take a View of the Corner Wall Which the Towne is to make before the house of Long Mary, and to cause too much wood to be Cut and brought down to the place wherewith the said Wall may be finished."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 285-86. O'Callagh-

35 han's note says: "This was the beginning of the construction of the present Coenteus Slip (see Pl. 50, Vol. I), Long Mary's house or tavern (being on the N. side of Pearl Street)."—Oliphants head of the Slip, where a wharf was now built." See, further, Sept. 19.

The overseers of highways and fences answer Stuyvesant's com-

39 plaint (see July 12, 1670) and request the court "to appoint some persons to inspect the matter and to give their decision on the fences that grow quare upon the street, and order what Mr. Stu-

41 tenburgh, John Vigne, and Jan Kip "to inspect the matter, to hear parties arguments and to decide thereon and hand the same in on the next Court day in case of non-agreement."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 285.

Mar.

Philip Johns is appointed haven-master to board vessels on their 46 arrival and record whence each ship comes and whither bound and the kind of lading; he must notify the master to make due entry of ships and goods and not allow a vessel to leave port without a certificate ofclearing.—Ex. Coun. Min., III: 513-14.

A minister for the Dutch church in New York is finally chosen, in the person of Rev. William Smith, of Amsterdam. Rev. Saloms, whose appointment was desired by the church (see Jan. 29, 1669), was not willing to return, and all the other candidates in Amsterdam who were summoned to hear the governor's proposals as to salary "Expressed their opinions thereon, but none of them would listen to the proposal for such a service."—Eccles. Rec., II: 64-17. The new incumbent is satisfactorily installed, as indicated in a letter from New York in 1672: (Domine Nieuwenhuyzen arrived last July). "His person is very agreeable to us, and his gifts fully satisfy the Congregation. He labours daily and diligently in edifying our people, either by preaching God's Word, or by catechizing the young ones."—Ex. Coun. Min., III: 624-25.

The windows of the city hall having been set on fire "about two a Clock in the Night," and Hans Dyckman having been imprisoned on suspicion of being an accessory in the incendiarism, the mayor's court now tries him, and finds the evidence inconclusive. The court holds, however, that circumstantial evidence points to his participation, and lays him under "great Suspicion," and therefore orders him to be confined within the province within eight days, or to suffer "the penalty of death," if "found hereafter" in the province.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 287.

Two of the emancipated negroes, Domingo and Manuell Angola, are summoned before the mayor's court and "informed, that divers complaints were made to the court, that the free negroes [whose farm lot lay on the present Lafayette Street and Bowery, in the neighborhood of the late Astor Library site] were from time to time entertaining sundry of the servants and negroes belonging to the burghers and inhabitants of the city," to the great damage of their owners. They are charged by the court henceforth "not to entertain ... any servants or helps, whether Christians or negroes on pain of forfeiting their freedom in case it were again found, that they have harboured any servants or helps of others longer than 24 hours," and "they were likewise ordered to communicate" this edict "to the other remaining free negroes."—Rec.

N. Am., VI: 286.

The balers of the city, summoned before the mayor's court, are asked "whether they thought it Convenient that the Corne might be Transported" from the city "to forrage parts as heretofore hath been practicable." They reply that if exportation were allowed it would be for (the) trade for (the) following summer, and request an estoppel on exportation, "except it was made to flower or Bread by w^h Coopers and other Mechanics and other Laborers" could "in som[e] part get their Livelihood." The court then thinks "itt to Communicate" with Govt. Lovelace in the premises.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 287. On the 9th, the governor ordered that to "wherte in Grane" be exported for a year.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 279-20.

Evert Pietersen and Hillegent Joris, his wife, request the mayor's court to appoint "some persons to compose if possible the differences arising between" her and her children "by a former marriage relative to their father's property." The court appoints Cornelis van Ruyven and Johannes de Peyster to try to reconcile parties or report their proceedings and award bail to the court.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 286.

Dominie Bouwer is conveyed to Col. Francis Lovelace, governour of New York (Liber Deeds, B: 184, New York), from whom the title passed to the Duke of York, and then to the crown. It became part of the land which was successively known as the Duke's Farm, King's Farm, and Queen's Farm.—Bogardus vs. Trinity, Sandford's Chanc. Rep., IV: 725-26. See March 27, 1667, and Aug. 6, 1674.

On account of the weakness and decline of Rev. Samuel Driasus, the Rev. Egidius Layck has "several tymes" officiated in his place, "with good satisfaction" to the city fathers and the people. He is now thanked by the mayor's court, which requests him to continue his services "until further order." He accepts their offer, and the court then agrees "other persons in Salith bayes ye Word of god shall be taught in the forenoon by Driasus and in the afternoon by Layck.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 292.

The city's porters (or public labourers) of corn, planks, etc., having petitioned the mayor's court "that no Corne, Salt or planks" may be carried, save by themselves (since "many of the inhabi-7ants employ other labourers"), the court gives them a restraining order, which, however, permits an owner "himself or by Servants or Negroes of his own" to handle his corn, planks, or salt.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 292.

With the appointment of new overseers of roads, another at-8 tempt is made to reduce passage rates between New York and Harlem (see Feb. 22, 1666). The magistrates of New Harlem and the overseers of highways beyond "Fresh Water" are ordered by the mayor's court to "lay out together the most suitable road and that then, on the first day of the next coming month of May, the said road shall be made fit for use by the inhabitants of the Village of Haerlem and the house holders both on this and the other side of the Fresh Water, each for his limits; and that on such penalty as shall be fixed by said Magistrates and overseers."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 296.

The mayor's court orders that for the future no wine shall be "delivered by any Merch't out of his house or Cellar, upon any Tappors or buggers bill, without a sworn porter be present."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 297.

Several inhabitants of the city, who have been at expense in 1671. “Making a Stone Wall before their lotts alongst y^t Waterside,” May have been daily damaged in their rights “by reason y^t Walls w^h Gelyne Verplanck & Thomas Wandel” were to make, were “not made up” (see Sept. 13, 1676). The mayor’s court now orders these persons to make up their whelk w^h a further fine, $5. —Rec. N. Am., VI: 301. See July 16.

17. Capt. Marten Cregier asks the mayor’s court to devise a plan for choosing a lieutenant for his militia company, in place of Govert Loockermans, who has died; and that an order be promulgated for finding members of the militia who failed to appear at the place of rendezvous “on proper summons or beat of the drum.” The court decides that the office of lieutenant shall be filled by the remaining officers of the burgher corps sending in a double nomination to the mayor, who will “effect the election from said nomination by the Governor.” Unwilling or negligent members of the burgher corps are to be mulcted in a fine of fifty guilders “seem to be applied,” as the officers deem proper. —Rec. N. Am., VI: 299-300.

6. Rev. Samuel Driius, in a petition on his own behalf, as well as for the widow of Rev. Johannes Megapolensis, deceased, has informed the mayor’s court that divers “persons” are yet “in arrears to the previous allowance of the Preachers” of the city, notwithstanding the court’s order of Feb. 14, 1669, requiring those in arrears to pay up within two weeks’ time, “on pain of execution.” The court now orders “the Beadle of the Church, Willem Ver- scheuren,” to “speak to all persons who by the list delivered in are to pay to the officers of the church, the arrears due to each in particular in the margin of the list and deliver it to Court on the Next Court day.” —Rec. N. Am., VI: 300.

19. The appearance of “great Quantities of unmarked horses and Cattle . . . found in the Common Woodlands” on Staten Island, in violation of the express orders of the mayor’s court (for such an order emanating from the governor’s council (see Feb. 22, 1669), causes the court to declare that the official branders shall give notice that all horses and cattle must be branded within six weeks’ time with the marks of either the city of New York or the town of Haerlem, otherwise to be deprived of grazing “in the Common Woods” of the island; that if after that time they remain unmarked and unredemed by owners, they shall be sold at public auction after due notice three times by outcry. —Rec. N. Am., VI: 331-52. See Dec. 5.

21. At a meeting of the council for plantations, Col. Cartwright, one of the commissioners, reports that “a return of the inhabitants to their numbers that were here able to bear Arms” that there are 2,500 men in “New Yorke Long Island and New Jersey.” —Journ. Coun. for Plantations, I: 45-46.

29. Gov. Lovelace takes action regarding certain matters in connection with the Lutheran Church: 1. In response to a petition from Christian Peters, who had bound himself to Aszer Levy (mortgage of Cornelis Jansen Pluvier) for a “certaine Sume of Money due for a House” which was bought for y^t use & Benefit of y^t Congregation in Gen” (see Castello Plan, II: 224-25), he orders that all “persons of that profession who have consented or subscribed to y^t payment for the Church-House, that they pay their proportions according to Agreem^t, and likewise that they pay or cause to be paid unto y^t said Magister their Pasto^t their proportions of his Salary, until y^t time of their late paublicke Disagreeem^t.” —See Oct. 17, 1673, for order to demolish church.

4. In lieu of the church which came to William y^t Old Ferry-Man of Gomuni- pau” (now Jersey City), who was troubled with “a sore Legg,” for which she had been a long time under treatment. —General Entries, IV: 46 (N. Y. State Library, manuscript volume destroyed in capitol fire in March, 1914).

5. At the decision of the mayor’s court to transfer the village court of Fordham to Harlem is recorded thus: “All small Differences, w^h for the future shall happen to fall out at fortbom . . . shall be Decided at Haerlem by y^t Magistrates of fordham W^h y^t

Cornelis Jansen Pluvier (Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 929). —Liber Deeds, A: 115 (New York). With other structures standing too close to the city fortifications, the Lutheran Church was ordered demolished by Gov. Colvile on Oct. 7, 1677 (p. 4). For the new site the “Lutheral Court House of y^t expedition” of 1675 is neglected. —Rec. N. Am., VI: 351.

July 14. “y^t Lane Called the Maegdeparcie” (Maiden Lane) is mentioned in a conveyance recorded in Orig. Book of N. Y. Deeds, temporarily deposited by the city in N. Y. Hist. Soc. and pub. in Collections (1917), 9.

By a bill of sale of this date (recited in Liber Deeds, I: 126, Albany), John Smedes becomes possessed of a farm or sawbury heretofore belonging to “Cornelys van Ysnewe” deceased, whose heirs and representatives, Peter Stoutenburgh, Lucyas van Tien- hoven, and John Vigne, transport the same to him. For ground- broad, see June 14, 1664; see also March 20, 1665.

Because some members of the Lutheran congregation desire not only to have “nothing more to doe with their said Pasto^t, nor that hec may more molest them”; but also that some person may be appointed to supervise their accounts and collect the subscription money (see June 29), Gov. Lovelace appoints John Laurence to receive all subscriptions, and to make an inventory of “all such Vessells as doe belong to y^t Church.” —Ex. Coun. Min., II: 588. This case had been brought up on June 29, Ibid., 94-95.

Gov. Lovelace having recommended by letter that the mayor’s court, together with some of the officers of the church, should take into Consideration “to give Salary for y^t Expentiture from Europe” (see March 16) may be Raised,” the court now appoints “a private Court to be held on fryday Next being y^t 14^th of this Instant in y^t afternoon at — a Clock,” and requests that the “Late Aldermen together w^h y^t present and y^t Late Church Officers” “should give their attendance . . . to consult with them Concerning y^t premises.” —Rec. N. Am., VI: 508-9. “In Obedi- ence, To his Honof y^t Govern^t Letter and in pursuance of this Courts Order thereupon,” this “private Court” met on the 14th. After the presentation of various proposals and debate thereon, “It was Mutuallly” on Staten Island, “Decided that the price of y^t Salary for y^t Expentiture from Europe should be” —this in view of the “great discontent amongst the people, to be both taxed & to pay Excise;” and, therefore, it was proposed, that y^t Grand Excise should be something Raised, & that an imposition should be Lid upon Rom going for Albany & Esquos and that y^t selling of Lic^t to the Indians should be permitted” as “it was ‘throughout all the go vern^nt and some Excise or Imposition should be Raised thereupon, or Otherwise that all the Excises should be totally abolished; and a Gennale taxe for all towne Charges be made” —Ibid., VI: 310-11.

Benjamin Johnson, the city’s executioner of criminals, presents to the mayor’s court his account of his services for making a stone well in the yard of the city hall (see June 19) amounting to 81.410: in seawant. The court approves the account and directs its payment by the secretary. —Rec. N. Am., VI: 308.

The court puts Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt in charge of “the Care and Charge of the Half Moon & All the Waterside before Gelyo Verplanckx house as far the Townes part doth reach” to “be finished and Made up; And Mt Johannet Van Brugh to have the Management in Repairing of the Half Moon before the State house.” —Rec. N. Am., VI: 516. This “Half Moon” (battery) would be, in modern plans, on the south side of Pearl St, east of Cornies Alley. —See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

Gov. Lovelace grants the petition of the Lutheran minister (see June 29), Jacobus Fabricius, “to give his Congregat^on a Valedictory Sermon, and to install the new-Come Minis^tis! [Barbaardus Aren- tulius, according to y^t Custome used by those of their Religion.” —Ex. Coun. Min., II: 588-89.

30. Gov. Lovelace orders “all Persons of this City [New York] who Profess y^t Art of Chyrurgy & Physick or any others who have Skill & Judgms therein” to hold a consultation in Pearl St, over the latter part of the house of “William y^t Old Berrry-Man of Gomum- pau” (now Jersey City), who was troubled with “a sore Legg,” for which she had been a long time under treatment. —General Entries, IV: 46 (N. Y. State Library, manuscript volume destroyed in capitol fire in March, 1914).

8. The decision of the mayor’s court to transfer the village court of Fordham to Harlem is recorded thus: “All small Differences, w^h for the future shall happen to fall out at fortbom . . . shall be Decided at Haerlem by y^t Magistrates of fordham W^h y^t

CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD

1671. Assistance of two of ye Magistrates of Harlem. "A case may be Sept.
tried at Fordham only when "those of Fordham will be at ye 8 Charge to Satisfy ye Magistrates of Harlem for Complying up to their Towne of Fordham." This charge was made because of a petition from the inhabitants of Fordham against John Archer who ruled and governed over them "by Rigur and force," or against any one else who "should disturb ye peace" of the settlement. On this very day, Archer had been before the city court charged with mowing and removing grass from another man's claim; pulling down fences whereby damage resulted to the enclosed corn; and throwing the furniture out of doors whereby the plaintiff suffered much "loss and damage." Archer is ordered to "behave himself for ye future Civilly and quietly 45 ye inhabitants of ye 5 towne."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 324-30. See Feb. 13, 1672.

19. Gov. Lovelace, in a letter, recommends to the mayor's court, that "ye former Ordf Concerning ye paving of Streets might be put in due Execution against those that are defective therein and that some Order might be made that ye warres on ye Waterside might be finished 37 and ye morte or hoores-Craft might be made up in such a forme" as Johannes de Peyster had already begun before his house. The court, therefore, appoints Allard Anthony, the sheriff, Nicolas de Meyer, and Frederick Philipse (Filipe) "to take a view of ye 9 streets, and to Cause those that are Defective therein to finish ye same and further to take a view of ye 9 warres and hoores-Craft, according to ye ordinance of ye 10 house of State and to give their advice thereupon att ye 9 Next Court day."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 319-30. See Jan. 23, 1672.

The mayor's court orders two of the aldermen to see to it that "the Corners of the Streets and other defective places, wth must be made or repaired at the Towne's Charge, . . . be finished and Compleated."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 329.

The mayor's court orders "that no Tapper or Inkeeper shall "sell any Drink to Saylors or Mariners except the Mast or Merech" has "part their word for the paiement thereof."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 330. This order has become necessary, apparently, because of a statute of the Duke of York's laws preventing tappers or innkeepers from recovering for debt from "Saylers in Pay." The purpose of the original statute was "To prevent many miscarriages which are frequently commited by Saylors, by their immoderate Drinking and other vaine expenses in Ordinaries, whereby the Master and Owners of the vessels to which they belong may be prejudiced, by Arresting and detaining such Saylers for Debts when their Ship are ready to set Sayle."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 62.

The mayor's court allows the public carter eight st. per load "for the Work done for the Towne in filling up the Warfe before Long Marke."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 329. See Feb. 28, and Sept. 17, 1672.

26. The governor grants the request of the Dutch Church that they be empowered to levy a tax "amongst ye Inhabitants, and those that shall frequent ye Church . . . for ye Maintenance of their Minister's Clerk, or other Officers of ye Church, & poor As also for ye repairation of ye Church As Occasion shall re- quire." The present elders and deacons are given power to levy such a tax.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 617-18. See March 21, 1672. Prof. Kilpatrick sees in this event a transition "from city support of the school during the Dutch regime to church support of the English period." He bases his conclusion on the understanding that "ye Clarke" must be Evert Pietersen (see Feb. 16, 1666), "the voorlezer."—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 146. It may be added that the governor's action, cited above, had been preceded by action of the city bench on at least two different occasions (see April 25, 1666, and Feb. 16, 1669), in submitting to him the question of the school-master's compensation. For a comparison of the interest in education on the part of Dutch and English rulers, see Grifis, The Story of New Netherland, chap. XVII.

1763. Oct. 13. From double nominations made by the mayor's court on the preceding day, Gov. Lovelace names the following city bench: Oct. Capt. Matthias Nicolls, who succeeds Capt. Delavall as mayor; 13 John Laurence, Thomas Lovelace, Cornelis van Ruyven, Johannes van Brugh, and Isaac Bedloe, aldermen, and Allard Anthony, sheriff, to serve for one year.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 332-34. Lovelace and Van Ruyven are the new members (see Oct. 11, 1679). For Nicoll's terms as mayor, see M. C. G., VIII: 149; for brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 383; Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 60.

The ship "Expectation," commanded by Isaac Melva, is boarded by George Spurze, Humphrey Davenport, and accomplices, under pretense of seizing the ship for the king. At this was a breach of the peace and in direct disobedience to the governor's order, a commission was appointed, on Oct. 25, to "hear and Determine" the matter.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 122-3. See Jan. 18, 1672.

Peter Schadeeck, keeper of the city jail, is advanced in salary by the mayor's court from 150 to 200 guilders per annum, beginning with Oct. 13, and the secretary is instructed to advance him enough money for "a new Coate."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 340-42. For previous increase, see Oct. 10, 1670.

"John Folsbauce" (Fossace) asks the mayor's court again for "some support & Relief in his Sickness," and the court recommends him "to the Denizons of this City to inquire and examine into the truth of his case and to make a Returne thereof to the court, meanwhile allowing him "some support in his Sickness."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 340. See Dec. 5, 1672.

Proclamation is made by Gov. Lovelace requiring "all Persons that have for ye space of six Monts been Inhabitants, either House keepers or Lodgers in this City [New York] or any part of his R. Highness Dominions, who have Intent to Transport themselves in any Ship or Vessell out of this Governour" to register their names at the office of the secretary and obtain a passport. This is done because some inhabitants want to board ship for the Carolinas.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 638-39.

On Dec. 5, 1672. Several commissioners are appointed to "view & state all Accot" either of the West India Company or the Towne, as to their Debt & Credit, & make Report thereof how they shall find the same to the Governour." This is necessary so that the governor may act with justice in the case of Coenraat ten Eyck and Boel Kvellos, trustees for an orphan's estate, part of which has been lent to the burgomasters for the use of the town. On account of the change of government, these funds have become unavailable, and the trustees are compelled to pay from their own pockets apprentice fees for the orphan, "with proves a great pjudice & Detriment unto them."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 117-18.

The governor's council orders that all persons bring in their claims to unfenced or deserted lots or ground before the first or second of March, that orders may be issued regarding fencing, improvements, or buildings.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 116; II: 612-3. A proclamation to this effect was issued by the governor on Jan. 25, 1672.—Fadd., III: 612-3. No additional record appears. In a list of "the best and most affluent inhabitants of this city," published in 1674 (N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 699-700), Pietersen's name, assessed at 2,000 guilders, is found. It seems probable, therefore, that he was duly compensated for the "Effets of the Sheriff himself."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 347.

The governor's council decides to organize a third militia company in New York.—Col. Coun. Min., 15. The court of mayor and aldermen, at the request of the governor, nominated officers for this new company on Jan. 23, 1672 (p. 7). For the formation of the other two companies, see Aug. 17, 1668.

Evert Pietersen complains to the mayor's court that Steffel van Laer has not yet complied with the court order of Jan. 17 (q.v.). Failure on the part of the sheriff to secure satisfaction from Van Laer will result, the court declares, in an execution being "Issued out ag't the Effets of the Sheriff himself."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 347. No additional record appears. In a list of "the best and most affluent inhabitants of this city," published in 1674 (N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 699-700), Pietersen's name, assessed at 2,000 guilders, is found. It seems probable, therefore, that he was duly compensated for the "Effets of the Sheriff himself."—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 147.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1671 The governor's council approves the proposal of the French minister, Rev. Jacques Roullard, who is going to Europe and plans to bring back with him some "families of French Protestant." The council decides to give him all encouragement.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 116; II: 631.

1672 "It is ordered by the mayor's court that no persons be beared per too on all logwood or "Braziletto" shipped from this city to Europe.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 348.

1672 John Fossacre, who lived on Long Island, in Westchester, and at "Oonckeway" (Fairfield, Conn.) for about 18 years, and has come to New York City "since he Luteran minister preached there," and is "a Member of their Church," being in digent; and the deacons of the Dutch Church of the city having recommended him, being a Lutheran, Fossacre ought to be maintained by that denomination, the court orders the deacons of the Lutherans to appear on the next court day.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 348. See also his Present State of His Majesty's Isl...—(1687).

The work contains three maps; "Map of the Island of Jamaica," "General Map of Carolina," and "A draft of the sea-coast and rivers of Virginia, Maryland, and New-England." The last named map shows Long-Island and Manhatto Island; the mainland is marked "New York."—Blome, Description of the Island of Jamaica, 1687.

William Edmunds writes in his Journal of a meeting of Friends held in New York, probably the first Friends meeting held under a roof in the city: "When I was clear there [Maryland], I took Passage by Sea, and about Ten Days after, landed safe at New York, where no Friends lived. John Evans of Jamaica, being in my Company at that time, we lodged at a Dutch Womans House, who kept an Inn, and I was moved of the Lord to get a Meeting in that Town; for there had not been one there before; so I spoke to the Woman of the House to let us have a Meeting, who was very willing, and let us have a large room in her house. We gave notice thereof, and had a brave large Meeting, some of the Chief Officers, Magistrates, and leading Men of the Town were at it, very attentive they were, the Lord's Power being over them all, several of them appear'd very lively during the Meeting, the Woman Daughters of the Womans, being at it, and when we went away.—Edmundson, A Journal, etc., (London, 1713), 63-64. For regular meetings of Friends, see Oct. 12, 1681.

Martin Hoffman (or Hooffman), having been chosen by the Lutherans of New York City to go to the Lutherans on the Delawar for the purpose of seeking contributors there for the erection of a "House for their Church to meet in," in New York City, is granted passports and authority to do so by Lovelace. In this order Lovelace refers to the request he had received from the "Minist & Office" of the Lutheran congregation for his "Licence to build & Erect a House for their Church to meet in."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 589-590; N. Y. Col. Doc., XII: 494. The original order, signed and sealed by Lovelace at Fort James, is now preserved among the Lovelace documents in the custody of St. Matthew's Lutheran Church. Beginning, "To all whom this may concern," it recites: "Whereas ye Ministers and Officers of ye Church of ye Auguarall Confession or Lutheran Congregation in this City under ye protection of his Royal Highness ye Duke of York have requested my license to build and erect a house for their Church to meet in, towards ye which they to All or ye most of their profession will in some measure contribute, ..."—Lovelace gives notice to Hooffman that he has the decision of the Lutherans and of Capt. Martin Creughe, bound for South River, Delaware, for the purpose above stated, provided: "it doth no way tend to make Division or Disturbance amongst ye people, ..." See Oct. 7/17, 1673.

Gov. Lovelace notifies the collector of customs to give the ship "Expectation" (see Oct. 21, 1671) her discharge as she has been declared a free ship by a special court of oyer and terminer.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 612.

The sheriff is ordered by the mayor's court to "make a strict enquire after all Strange persons who have come to "live within the city ... Contrary to Order," and that they be summoned before the court.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 356. See Sept. 11 and Dec. 12. This is, perhaps, the earliest suggestion leading to the later ordinance concerning "Strangers" (see March 15, 1754).

The sheriff is instructed by the mayor's court to search out such persons as tap without a license, to be fined.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 356. One of the regulations regarding innkeepers and "ordinaryes" contained in the Duke's Laws required that each "Common Victualler" or "publicke Seller of wine Barre, Ale or strong waters by retail" should have a certificate of good behaviour from the constable of the town before two overseers of his parish and a license first obtained from two justices of the peace in the sessions.—Col. Laws N. T., I: 19.

The mayor's court orders the sheriff to give notice to all persons in default of making or pawning their proportions of the Streets [see Sept. 19, 1671], that they Cause their said Streets with all

Gov. Lovelace recommends that the soldiers of the town be divided into three equal groups as regards quality and numbers; after which, Capt. Martin Cregier is to draw lots for his company, then Capt. Johannes van Brugh, and lastly Capt. Isaac Bedloe. This method is selected forming the new company of foot soldiers (see Jan. 23).—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 614.

Because it has been charged that "some of the Officers" of the city government exact larger fees than the law allows, the mayor's court decrees that henceforth no fees shall be "be levied by execution, except be stated or signed" by the mayor or his deputy.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 365–66.

Continuing its action of Feb. 13 (p. v.), on the recommendation of Gov. Lovelace, the mayor's court agrees that retailers of liquors and other drink shall in future take out their licenses annually, on March 25; that orders concerning the use of English weights and measures, being derived from the court of assizes, would more properly be promulgated by renewal by Gov. Lovelace, since their application is for the whole province; that the mayor has undertaken to draft an order in regard to slaughtering; and that the mayor's court shall meet at the state house or city hall on every Monday and Friday afternoon at about four o'clock, "to make a draught for a Charter" for the use of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 366.

By order of the mayor's court, of July 2, 1667 (p. v.), provision has been made for the upkeep and repair of "the Great Bridge" between the city and that county, the city to be allowed a monopoly and a tax on and import on exports. The court now appoints Ephraim Herrman, a son of Augustine Herrman, who is the city clerk, to be also the collector of the revenues, for which he is to be accountable to the city treasurer. Herrman is allowed ten per cent. of the revenue, which is set at his fees.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 366–67.

Rev. Agelius Luyck (see March 28, 1671) is allowed by the mayor's court a gratuity of 400 guilders seawant, "for Preaching before Domn Newenhuysen's Arrival."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 367. Rev. Wilhelmus Nieuwenhuysen was minister of the Reformed Church in New York from 1661 to 1665.—Curvis, Manual, 837.

A letter of this date from Charles II is addressed to the Colony of "Massachusetts in New England To be Communicated to the Rest of our Colonies there." In this letter the king says: "Having taken into our Consideration the III that have times herebefore befalne the Shippes of our good Subjects in their returns from our Plantations in the West Indies chiefly through their comings from the Said Plantations Scatterede, and at uncertain times whereby they have come upon the Coasts of England, or Ireland, at Seasons when they have found some of our Shippes of Warr there, whereas if there were certain Priviledges and Observed for their returns, care might be taken that the Coasts at the Same time were made safe by Some Shippes Extraordinary to be employed for this Purpose, Wee have therefore thought fitt out of the Princely Care of the good of our People to appoint certain Seasons in the yeare, at which only Shippes will be permitted to Returne from Boston and other Ports, to the English or Irish Subjects. Such Shippes shall be Valued and their Officers and Crewes kept in our England Service, Either as men of Warr or for carryinge Packets or the like Extraordinary Occasions, which Seasons Wee have thought fitt to be the 24th of March, the 24th of June and 24th of September, and Our Will and Pleasure is that you take Care that all such as Shall be Redy to Sayle at any of the said times, doe enter Bond before you to use their Vnost Endevours to keepe Company, and defend each other dueinge their Voyage hometowards, and for the better doinge thereof you are to appoint one of the Comandours of the Said Shippes to be Admiral of the fleete, whomse the others are to Observe and follow, that Soe in case they be attempted in their Voyage they may be in a due forwardness to defend themselves, And if any Shall be disobedient to these our Comandours, You are to Compell them to the Observance thereof, and punish them in such manner as may deter others by their Example, you are further to direct them when they shall be near the Shippes of Warre in the Soundings, that they Shall have understood the Estate of affairs with our Neighbours, and be from thence incouraged to proceed to their Respective Ports, that they indevour to touch at the first Port of England, there to Receive further Information for their guidance. Each Governor is therefore more warred to make timely provision for the safety and defence of his respective ports, and for the protection of the shipping that may be within his harbours.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 643–46. See May 24.

1727 England declares war on Holland.—Broodhead, Hist. State of the May 27

A petition of the church-wardens of the Dutch Church within the May 21
the mayor’s court by their representatives, and they represent the necessity of having the roof of the church in the fort renewed, and seek the aid of the court “for this work by furnishing as much money from the church’s revenue” as possible and also by asking Gov. Lovelace for a contribution “from the public fund of the Province” on the same footing, having consulted the matter, and with previous knowledge of the governor, allows, “from the City chest,” 500 guilders seawaard.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 567—68. In reply to Lewin’s report on the government of New York, Anders says: May 27
“the taking the Tyles off the great house and shingling it, was in imitation of what was done to the Church by the inhabitants in my Predecessor’s time to prevent Leakage by reason the Tyles were usually broken when the Guns were fired.”—N. T. Col. Doc., III:
311. A glance at this church, as it appears in the Visscher View of May 27
1661-5 (Pl. 8-2, Vol. 1), and the Restitutio View of 1671 (Pl. 8-3, Vol. 1), will show that the roof had been very considerably altered between those years. Furthermore, Montans, writing probably in 1670, refers to the church as rising “with a double roof between which a square tower looms aloft.” Therefore, it seems very safe to conclude that the change from a single to a double peaked roof, as well as the shingling, followed this appropriation by the city.—See also G. K. Hall, Jr., “Brown’s Place,” N. Y. Hist. Soc., 1951 May 27.

The governor issues orders for raising a troop of horse. Capt. Steenwyck is named captain, to take the “Subscriptions of all such Persons as shall voluntarily enlist themselves within this City and Precincts, as also at ye Bowery, New Harlem and Rodfianst.”—Cortlandt, Hist. State of the N. T., II: 145.

The sheriff has lodged a complaint in the mayor’s court against several persons who were delinquent in paving their streets as required by ordinance (see Jan. 23), and also making their sheet piling (see Sept. 25, 1669) on the Strand. Gelyn Verplanck claims that Oloff Steenweno van Cortlandt is “obliged to pave before his own house;” the widow of Burger Jorissen promises “to make her share of the street and sheet piling;” Nicolaes Backer promises to pave his street as soon as his neighbours pave theirs; Gelyn Verplanck and James Matthews ask to be excused from “levelling their street and their cellar” and John Rider and Thomas Berryman are “ordered to pave their portion of the Windclerk [Market] Street;” Sibout Claessens is “willing to make his sheeting provided the Governel” will “restore to him the stone, which he brought for that purpose to the place” and had been “carried away upward by Sybrant Janse.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: May 24.

The court orders to appear on the next day to hear the case. The documents include references to the paving of streets, the payment of debts, and the construction of buildings. For example, the court orders that “the Tyles shall be taken & besides the stock a Battery in ye most convenient Place of the City shall be made, to secure all Ships in the Road;” and, finally, that at the end of the war, the burgomaster “shall put himself into a posture of defence, for which the governor will “please to propose a model.”—Rec. N. Am., I: 128—29. Cf. Col. Coun. Min., 16. For orders to shipsmasters, see June 27.

Gov. Lovelace reviews the three militia companies of the city for the fort at Windmill Hill, which was the place of general rendezvous.—O’Callaghan, “Notes on Windmills” (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. For Windmill Hill, see “Catiehunks Hill,” Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965.

The governor’s council decides that the “Garrisons in Pay” be continued until further orders.—Rec. N. Am., I: 133—34.

Jonas Bartelow, the weighmaster, informs the mayor’s court that 31
several of the weights that belong to the weigh-house are worn out, and so under weight. He asks that censurers of the weights be appointed by the court “to bring them to the exact Weight of the Standard.” The court appoints Juriaen Blongker and Albert Bosch, a cutler, to censure not only the weights at the weigh-house but all of the weights owned by any of the merchants and inhabitants of the city. This order, so far as it applied to the weights owned by the inhabitants, was immediately recalled; but, on July 2, Bartelow again asked that the order for perfecting the weights in the weigh-house “be put in due Execution,” which the court now ordered to be done “forthwith” by Blongker and Bosch.—Rec. N. Am., II: 174—75.

Jan Cornelissen d’ Ryck, Serryn Lourens, Jacob Leenders, and Gerrit Henrickson are appointed by the mayor’s court as overseers of houses and highways, “as well on this as on the other side of the fresh Water;” for the ends to have “to continue the next year and two new be elected in the places of those retiring.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 374—75. The new feature of retaining always two men of experience on the board is worthy of note, as is also the increase of one member (see April 18, 1674).

Because persons daily bring suit in the mayor’s court, yet at the time of a hearing fail to appear in person or by an attorney to prosecute, the court orders that if the plaintiff hereafter fails to “appear to prosecute his Action at the first Court day after he Enter’d Action,” he shall be nonsuited and pay the costs.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 376. See Oct. 12.

Gov. Lovelace has “several times” recommended to the mayor’s court “the Making up of ye Note or Grant of the city,” and the court now declares that this work shall be performed by the owners of the houses and lots lying about or along the more, or else by their tenants, as follows, “from ye Waterlde upravards to the bridge over against ye Stone Street [i.e., as much as ran east of the present Broad St.; a bridge crossed the Gracht or Canal to Brewers St. or Stone St., west of Broad; Jochem Beeckman had his lot on the S. E. corner of Broad and Beaver] to be Repaired and made up in ye same breafth & form as heretofore it was made. And from the Bridge upwars to ye Sylvan Janse [as much as ran west of the present Broad St.], & ye Bridge that shall be made & finished in ye same forme & manner as Mr. Johannis de Peyster has already begun it, to be made & finished the owners of ye houses & Lots or ye Tenants for ye Owners accounts wth in ye space of two months next ensuing ye date hereof.” Also “from ye E Corner of Jochem Beeckman upravards to ye E Corner of ye Lane by Mr Jacob Kip [this line is now Exchange Pl. and this order shows that the Gracht or Canal extended then up Broad St. as far as this point in ye same forme & manner as before is it Expept to be made & finished wth in the space of Three Months next ensuing the date thereof ungon. Penalty of—to be forfeited & paid by all those that shall be found defective in the finishing of their several proportions of ye note.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 377—78.

After approving the report of the commission appointed April 30 (9 v.), the court orders “that the Street called the Skyck Stregh or Barry lane, be further paved as before Adm. present, and shall be Hendrick van Duesbury, and from the small house of David Jochem to the Lott of Jacob van Couwenhoven decreased,” shall be “paved with Stones before the latter end of September Next ensuing;” also, within the same time, that “the Street Called the Prince Street [that part of Beaver St. between Broad and William Sts.] from the house & lot of Capt. Adriaen Nicolaes [towards the house & lot of Mr Bedlow & the Wildow of Ryer Stoffels]” (see Sept. 2), shall be paved likewise; also, “a Stroeke or foot path” is “to be paved before the front of the houses,” extending “from the house of Mr Bedlow at the Water-side to the house of Cornelis van Borsum, and from thence to the house
The governor's council decides that a new order shall be made regarding the transportation of corn, to be founded upon the order of the court of assizes.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 137. See Oct., 1672.

The governor orders that thanks be given to the inhabitants of Hempstead for their contribution towards repairing the fort, which is "very well approved of," and for their good will. Example of good overtime work, July 29, when the next report of the contribution from the inhabitants of the east end of Long Island was received, the governor noted that in his reply he would "take notice of the meaness of their contribution & the seeming condition of it."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 139-40.

Gov. Lovelace, writing to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, says: "By letters I receaund from hollond I am assured of the searue of all our vessels that ware unfortuante in thier Ports being 4 in number viz My Ship the Fame, Mr Delavals the Margriff Mr. Stenewick the James and Frederick Fillipica, the Frederick, they are as yet bur under way & not been heard from as to a Confesation, we hope the 32 article of Agreement at Breda [see July 31, 1667, for signing of treaty], will secure us there being a particular provision made against the inconvenience of a Sud- daine rapture by allowing all Subjects 6 months Lybery to withdrau their estates, after A Stroke is strke, however, we must attend with Patience."—Winthrop Papers, XIV: 1695. N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 669.

Lovelace writes to Gov. Winthrop concerning Isaac Ratt, his cook, who has run away, and ads Winthrop to send him back if he lands in a canoe in Connecticut. He describes how he use but one foot of one leg, the 8th leg being split in two, he is of a light brown Hayre, & in gray clothes."—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 669.

Acting in conformity with orders from the king (see May 24), Gov. Lovelace issues notice to all masters of vessels that March 24, July 29, and September 1, shall be the last day for exportation to the colonies homeward bound to England, so that conveyances may be awaiting them. For still greater protection, vessels are to endeavour to keep "Company and Conscours together" with such others as belong to England or her allies.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 698-99.

The milking facilities of New York are so inadequate that the city bakers complain of their inability to have enough grain round to supply their frequent want for ye Shipping outward bound & such like Occasions." They therefore ask for the privilege of sending their grain to Milford, Connecticut, or to other outside places. Permission is given, with the understanding, however, that they are to bring back in flour or meal the whole produce of the grain carried away, which is to be inspected by the haver-master.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 142. At this time there were only two mills in operation,—the Garrison mill in the Commons, and the water-mill erected, in 1665, in Newtown, the outlet of the Collect.-See Left Tenon's Cont. Ref. Key, III: 961-62.

A lease of the ferry from Long Island is granted by the provincial government to Ariantie Belecke, the widow of Joannes Nevis, who was the former incumbent. She is to be allowed "to dispose of her time in the said ferry" to any fit capable person if the wishes.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 6. See also, April 12, 1674. Carter Belecke, a citizen of the city of New York, was authorized to make a contract in the name of the said company for the carrying of goods up and down the ferry from the provincial to the municipal government, see Nov. 9, 1673.

Gov. Lovelace, in "an order about ye 8th Sick Man of Flatt-Bush," refers to "ye most able & skillfull Dr. Dock & Chyrgurians."—General Entries, IV: 155. N. Y. State Library (manuscript volume destroyed in Capitol fire in March, 1911). This is a very early use of "doctor" in New York. Dr. F. H. Bosworth, in his monograph on "The Doctor in Old New York," in Historic New York, II: 294, states that "the designation of doctor did not come "into use in America until about 1760."

A war warns from the mother country causes Gov. Lovelace to send an appeal to the mayor's court for aid in putting New York in a posture of defence. His especial plea is for voluntary contributions towards repairing the fort. Similar solicitations to Long Island and Fondam have met with most pleasing compliance. He promises the city officials that if in return he can gratify them "in anything that may be advantageous to ye Corporation," he will gladly "embrace ye Occasion." Thomas Lovelace, Capt. Richard Morris, Capt. Manning, Allard Anthony, Thomas Gybbs, and Francis Rombout are appointed commissioners to receive subscription money and use it according to instructions from the governor. The contributors are listed in Ex. Coun. Min., their offerings including beavers, beer, bread, work, corn, wheat, half a mutton, lime, yew, peas, rackets, wampum, and seaweed.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 699-700. A later appeal for aid was sent to Albany.—Ibid., II: 711. See July 11 for instructions to the commissioners, and Aug. 8 for contribution of the mayor's court.

The mayor's court orders that the "Buckets & Other Instruments for fire boxes, &c. shall be stored in ye Mayor's house within 14 days."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 383. See Jan. 30, 1674. After the reading of a letter announcing the declaration of war with Holland, it is declared that a proclamation of the war shall be issued the following Tuesday about ten or eleven o'clock in the morning at the fort gate and the state house (see July 9). Consideration is to be given to the order for setting ships, goods, and estates belonging to the states-general; and matters of fortification and protection are to be vigorously prosecuted. Suggestion is made that the council be enlarged, but a footnote states this was not accomplished.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 144-45.

Upon receipt of the declaration of war against the "States General of the United Provinces, dated at Whitehall the 4th of April 1675," the mayor's court executes the order of Gov. Lovelace to proclaim the same at the state house (see July 6).—Rec. N. Am., VII: 382; Cal. Coun. Min., I: 17.

The governor issues instructions to the commissioners who have in charge the repair of Fort James (see July 3 and Oct. 2-7). Their officers are to consist of a "Chayre-man," to preside as president of the commissioners and to affix signature to letters, warrants, etc., a young man for "Clerke to Record fairly what shall bee discripted by you," as well as a "notonary" to be "in charge" of all ye goods that are contributed, & to issue out Payment when Occasion shall serve, to whom a moderate Allowance may be made for his Care & Trouble." Goods are to be called for; accounts are to be kept of the workmen and their wages and also of the defaulters, "that no idle Person may be obreed on you," and all bills are to be examined by at least two commissioners. It is ordered that the general oversight of all things "may best tend to ye carrying on of the Workes."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 709-10.

Liberty is granted to Dr. Henry Taylore "to transporte a pairle of Wheat to Boston to make payment for a Chest of Medicines,"—General Entries, IV: 1676. N. Y. State Library (manuscript volume destroyed in Capitol fire in March, 1911).

Voluntary contributions for the repair of Fort James, "the Chief place of defence" in this Governori, have been agreed upon by "the several Ridings upper Long Island," and "divers good Citizens granted given to the same" by the city of New York (see July 3). The mayor's court now orders "that Notice bee given to the inhabitants of haerlem, that as Members of the same boddy" (as the corporation of New York City) they shall "summon their inhabitants together & take an account of their Voluntary Subscriptions for the" purposes of this General work, and that the whole work shall be completed as soon as conveniently may be to the mayor, or one of the aldermen of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 385. See Oct. 8.

Gov. Lovelace replies to the requests from the governor and Aug. council of Massachusetts that "wee as ye Neighbors & Subjects of the Gracious Sovereign may have free Egress, & Regress upon Hudsons River for Transporame People and Goods," and that some place, acceptable to both colonies, to ye Northward of his Highness the Duke of Yorkes Territories beyound New York, or on that side of our Colony Aus Hudsons River" may be decided upon, suitable for a Massachusetts settlement. Lovelace writes that he has referred the two matters to the Duke of York.

9 The mayor's court declares that "the way or highway on the Waterside between the heirs & Tryntie Cloke (i.e., Pearl St. from Coenties Alley to William St.—see April 30) is "soo washed away that the passengers" are "in danger of some Mischief," and that it is "necessary that the sd highway be forthwith repaired and made Level." But the court adjudges that it is too large a job to be completed before the winter, and ordains that the owners of the 5d houses abutting upon the sd highway or the tenants for the owners accounts shall "cause a footpath of six foot or breadth to be made each before their houses & Lots within the space of fourteen Weeks after due warning." has been given to them & for the filling up of the Rest the court shall "take some course that the owners... bee assisted by the Towne."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 388.

10 Jan van Gelder, a street-payer, complains to the mayor's court that Geertie Stoffela refuses to pay him what he has earned "in making the street before her lot in the West Side," being the sum of fl. 719, and he demands a judgment against her, as he has made the street "by order of the Mayor." The court orders her to pay him forthwith, or suffer an execution.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 388.

11 An order is issued by the court of assize that 1st Prohibition for 5th Transportation of Corne [see June 24] for this yeare bee repealed; & it shall be lawful for any Man to transport Corne to Boston, or any place out of the Governor, as long as the price of Merchantable Winter Wheat shall be 4s 6d & Summer Wheat 4s. in Silver or above. And what Strangers shall come to purchase corn here, they shall not buy it under 4s & 3s 6d in Silver, or Goods Equivalent.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 157, footnote. See April 29, 1673.

12 An order is issued at the general court of assizes which increases the severity of the punishment for stealing hogs or caozes (see Feb. 15). For the first offence, beside the fine to be imposed by the court, the offender is to have one of his ears cut off, as "an Example to all others;" and for the second, he is to receive still more severe punishment, such as the court shall direct.—Col. Laws N. T., I: 95.

13 By reason of the extraordinary "Occasion of Restoration of the forre in the City of New York [see July 3].... every Towne and corporation within this Province, as also particular persons have by their free Cossents and Subscriptions contributed towards the same," and because of the disproportionate cost of collecting some of these subscriptions, it is ordered that the Collector take the sum of money of each contribution "in the City or the ferry [i.e.] shall be borne by each respective Towne or distinct Person who hath subscribed the same," and that the payment he made before the feast of Christmas next.—Col. Laws N. T., I: 96.

15 The members of the mayor's court resolve "to Contribute towards the repairation of the fort" (see July 1), 1000 guilders se vant, "to be p'd equally betwixt them and Ordered the Secretary to give an acc[e] thereof" to Gov. Lovelace.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 392.

16 Jan Jansen van Bredele, Evert Duyckingh, and John Cooley are appointed by the mayor's court as fire-wardens of the city for one year, to view the chimneys in the city and its suburbs, fine owners whose chimneys are defective or unclean, and look after the care of the books and ladders; assembling them in "some convenient place," as they judge proper.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 395. See Dec. 26, Jan. 5, 1674.

17 Complaint is made to the mayor's court that the farmers of the small or burgere's excise are still negligent in paying and satisfying their arrears, which prevents the city treasurer from paying the city's workmen for their wages as shown by vouchers. The court orders the farmers to pay within eight days, or, if delinquent, the sheriff shall levy by execution against them.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 395.

18 The court further resolves that when defendants hereafter fail to appear either in person or by their attorneys at the first ensuing court day, or any other such day, they shall be found by verdict or arrest as shown by vouchers. The court orders the farmers to pay within eight days, or, if delinquent, the sheriff shall levy by execution against them.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 395.

19 The records of New York deeds begin. See Addenda.

20 At a special court of oyer and terminer, Benjamin Johnson, Thomas Fauls, and Roger Essex are tried, for various thefts, including that of a canoe. Johnson is condemned to receive 39 lashes, standing with a balter about his neck, to have one of his ears cut off, and to be banished; Fauls is to have 25 stripes and be banished, with the threat of whipping in case he should ever return; "ye Boy Essex" is let off with ten stripes, but warned that a repeti-

22 Gov. Lovelace issues various instructions for the guidance of the officers of the Cape (see Dec. 9, 1673): "In the first place you are to take ye' Oath of fidelity wch the Secretary shall administer to you, your Duty as to the General is included in that Oath.

Next, you are to comport yo' selfe with all Sobriety & Civility to those that shall instruct you, & not exact on them for the prices both of Letters and Pacquetts.

"You are principally to apply yo' selfe to the Governor's especially Governor Winthrop, from whom you shall receive the best Direction how to form ye' best Post-Road.

"You are likewise to advise where the most commodious place will bee to leave all the by-Letters out of ye' Road, wch when having it once well fixt, you are not only to leave the Letters there, but at your returne to call for Answers, & leave a Publication of your Resolutions, the wch you must cause to bee dispersed to all parts, that see all may know when & where to leave their Letters.

"You are to give me an Acco' of Negotiation at this time to the end I may bee satisfied of all your proceedings, & bee able to assist you if Occasion shall require.

"Where you think it requisite you are to mark some Trees that shall direct Passengers the best way, & to fix certaine Houses for your several Stages both to bait & lodge at.

"When any persons are desirous to travel wth you, you are to treat them civilly, & to afford them yo' best help & assistance, that I may heare noe Complaint of you.

"You shall doe well to provide yo' selfe of a Spare Horse, Hornes, good Post-Mantes, that see neither Letters nor Pacquetts receive any Damage under yo' hand.

"There are some other Consideracons wch I shall forbear to mention till yo' returne, & I receive a further Acco'nt of you, and see God bless all yo' honest Vertakings.

"Tiarn: Lovelace.

"You are also to detect & cause to bee apprehended all fugitive Souldyers & Servants runn away from these parts.

The postmaster's "oath of fidelity" follows: "You doe Swear by the Everlasting God, that you will truly & faithfully discharge the trust reposed in you as a Post Master, and that you will neither directly nor indirectly detract, conceal, or open any Letters, Pacquetts, or other Goods committed to your Charge, but carefully, & honestly deliver or cause to be delivered all such Letters Pacquetts or other Goods to the Persons they properly belong unto, & that you will make all the Expedition in passing and repassing the several Stages with all speed, & to make noe more stay than necessarily belongs to the refreshing your selfe and Horse, & in all things truly & soberly to comport yo'selfe, so as belongeth to the trust reposed in you, and as a Post Master ought to doe."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 795-96.

27 "There being a Place of some Importance in the State, for it is known that the Lords of the Council have been in the State House. In response to a petition of the prisoners for release, the governor's council paroles Johnson on condition that he shall not come nearer the city than his own home and that he again surrender himself to the sheriff, March 1. Fault is to be banished at the first convenience and to remain in custody meanwhile.—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 163-64.

The governor's council recommends to the mayor's court to find some expedient for clearing the town of hogs, "that they bee noe longer a Nuisance to the Neighbourhood."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 164. See Aug. 18-28.

11 Eliott, the cooper, is appointed. He is to receive sixpence per barrel for packing beef and pork and threepence for viewing it as cure-master (see Oct. 7, 1673); while Christopher Hoogeland, as corn master (see Dec. 10, 1673), is to receive thirty pence for viewing and branding calves of these articles with the "Cities Brand-marke," and one shilling per hoghead or pancheon, with proportionate pay for larger or smaller casks, for "Gaging of Liquids or Dry Goods."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 790-92.

The governor's council enacts that he may license any civil or military officer in England, Wales, Berwick, Jersey, or Guernsey, shall be required to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy; shall publicly receive the sacrament of the Lord's Supper according to the usage of the Church of England; and shall declare disbelief in the Romish doctrine of "Transubstantiation." The Duke of York, having secretly been a Catholic for some time, now openly declares his faith and "in a flood of tears" gives up the offices he holds, including that of lord high admiral of England. This examination does not include his jurisdiction and they are not included in the act.—Broadhed, Hist. State of N.Y., II: 201-2. In 1691, under William and Mary, the act was applied to New York.—Ibid., II: 276-83. See Slaughter's instructions, Jan. 31, 1690.

It having been found that the price of corn does not amount to the value proposed in the act of Oct. 1672 (p. 9), and that on account of the hard winter much grain has been consumed, the permission to export wheat is suspended and the embargo of 1671 (p. 2, March 7) is confirmed.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 176. See June 24.

Gov. Winthrop's letter concerning the continuation of the post to Milford is read in council. It is ordered: "That bee [the post-ride] bee employed to goe to Milford, but not to bee put in practice till a Returne from Boston" (see Dec. 10, 1672).—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 178.

5 The Toleration Act was repealed by May 7, 1688.

The government's council agrees with a proposition of Dominie Nieuwenhuyzen in proclaiming a fast for this city and island on "Wednesday fortnight next."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 182.

The government's council issues a proclamation increasing the value of wampum, in the hope of increasing the amount in circulation. Instead of eight white and four black beads, six white and three black shall pass for the value of a st. or penny, and three times "soe much yth Value of Silver." Proclamations to this effect were sent to Long Island, Albany, Esopus, and Delaware.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 183-85; Cf. Beauchamp, Wampum and Shell Articles used by the New York Indians (Albany, 1901), 351-56.

The governor's council issues an order whereby merchants sending off casks of bread or flour on their own account may mark them with a "known Mark" of their own but such merchandise of the weighable value shall be marked and the strangers shall be branded with the public mark. The cure-master is to be retained in his office unless he willingly commits fraud.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 186.

Prohibition against grain exportation (see April 29) is to continue until the next council (see Ex. Coun. Min., I: 186). See A. 29

July

11 John Allyn, secretary of Connecticut, in a letter to his friend Fitz-John Winthrop, thus describes the visit to Hartford of Gov. Lovelace of New York: "The Governour, Col. Lovelace, & Capt. Nicolls, with three servants, came to Hartford on Fryday eve. & stayed till Tuesdays morning. They were entertained at the Govern-our's house, I believe to good content. At their departure our town, Capt. Clarke with his horse, & most of the gent' here waited upon them to Mattabesett River & then gave him of Farrell. Mr Willys, with Capt TREAT & two men, waited upon them to New Haven."—Winthrop Papers, 6th ser., III: 435, in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections. It was during Lovelace's visit to Connecticut that New York was captured by the Dutch (see July 30, Aug. 9, 1673).

New York is recaptured by a Dutch fleet under Evertsen and Benkeüs. The fort was soon after named "Willem Hendrick," and the city "New Orange" (see Aug. 7-17).—Harington Hist. (Mts.), III: 90. in N. Y. Pub. Libr., Library of the town in the official minute of the capture in the records of English New York (see Oct. 12, 1672). The story of the surrender, however, is obtainable from several sources, the two most detailed of which are "An Exact Acco' of all the Proceedings, of the Military Officers of F Fort James from 8th 28th 29th 1673 & 5th of July, 1673," signed by Capt. Manning and Thomas and July Dudley Lovelace, which is printed in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), 30th III: 59-62, and the account of John Sharp, in Winthrop Papers, Aug. 6th ser., III: 416-44, in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections. The double date (or fraction) marks the reappearance of the Dutch calendar. To avoid confusion both the Old Style (numerator) and New Style (denominator) dates are given during the New-Orange period.

The news of the arrival of the Dutch fleet off Sandy Hook, Monday, July 28, was brought to the fort from various sources. Gov. Lovelace's brother Thomas came from Staten Island in a camel that had been sent on horseback; another man came a message from Gravesend reporting ten sail; about eleven at night, another boat from Staten Island brought word of 19 ships in the bay, while two hours later the reported number was increased to 21 by a messenger from "Newviceselck, New Jersey, 30 miles away.

In the absence of Gov. Lovelace, who was on a visit to Connecticut (see July 29), Capt. Manning took charge. An express was immediately started to inform the governor; warrants were sent to Long Island requiring the militia companies there to repair to the fort; the bees were fired; a scout was sent out to gather further detail as to the fleet; and an attempt was made to put the canoes and ammunition in order.

On Tuesday morning, "provision, beer, beef, bread, liquors & such like necessary" were brought into the fort and an order was given to the sheriff to bring in the ladders, "with he alse neglected & kept them for ye Enemy." About eight o'clock, Tuesday night, it being said there were upon the men's being said that they beel there beel!.. we saw them at length very faraday sayle in, one after an another, till wee told 21 sayle," which anchored near Staten Island for the night.—Winthrop Papers, op. cit., III: 416-39.

Upon the eve of attack by such a force, the garrison is described as having but "4 Spungers Rames for all the Guns of the flotte the parlormes and carriges was alwe Badd either the Carriage Broake or they could not bring them to pass againe their was neither Redd Spade Hanspike or other material to help to defend us [There were] 4 Battions to Gunns upon every Battion 4 Curtaine each Curtaine near 80 paces long and we had but between 70 and 80 men to help to maintain ye whole ground."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 62.

Next morning, Wednesday, "wee very cherely made our selves as ready for a brush as wee were able; but God knowes all was in aaine tho our hearts were good; for in all this tyume we had not a man from Long Island, tio they were expected, nor more than a doaten men from ye Towne,—ye Dutch standing neuter,—a high shame for English men, who have allwayes wore ye garland as to poynt of honoe & valour, that in such an eminence occasion the Crown now saw their necks out of ye collar to save a few dirty goods, ... when it stood them in hande, unless they were voyde of all loyalty, to buckly on their armoure in defence of their King & Country, as well as to preserve their owne rights & immunities."

About ten o'clock, a boat, flying a flag of truce and containing Capt. Carr, Mr. Lovelace, and Mr. Sharp, set out for the Dutch fleet to demand a reason for their presence and to "treat with them amicably and friendly." About half way out they met a small Dutch boat bearing a flag of truce bound for the fort and carrying the following message: "My Lord,—The forces of war now lying in ye'sight are sent out by ye High & Mighty States General of ye United Provinces and his Serene Highnes ye Prince of Orange for to destroy their enemies. Wherefore we have sent you this summons, to ye end you doe surrender unto Vs ye Fort called Jamesburgh good quarter; upon default where of we shall be forced both by sea & land to prosecute our order in such manner as wee shall see to be most advantageous for ye States General and his Serene Highnes ye Prince of Orange. Dated on board ye ship Swansbergh, riding betwixt Staten Island and Long Island, this 5th of August, 1673.

[signed] "Cornelis Eversenede Jonge & Jacob Benesce." Capt. Manning, feeling that his only hope lay in delay, "kept ye trumpeter there two or 3 hours, treating him with meete, drink, wine, & such accommodations, thinking that they would not walk so ferefull on foot till they were. They rest in the fort till ye after, notwithstanding they did, both winde and tyde being fayre for them."—Winthrop Papers, III: 139-41. The Dutch realized the danger of delay, for "When their fleets was cometh in Sandiecook several of ye Dutch went on Board them from Vtrecht and Flatbush upon Long Island and Informe them of the absence of our Governor and weakness of our Garrison and ye number of our men."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 62. This served to confirm the testimony obtained in a slop of Virginia as to which the Dutch had taken eight English merchants and sunk five. The captain of the slop tried to mislead the Dutch by representing an able defence for the city, "with made them resolve to steere another course, & not goe to Newyeck;" but one of the prisoners vowing seain "I'm NOyeck was in no condition to defend itself agt the Dutch, that they had few canons mounted and those that were upon such rotten carriages that one discharge would shake them to peeces & dismount the Canon; that there were but few men in armes in the fort, that any considerable number could not be easily drawn togethe together, that the Governor was absent, being gone to Cenidicott to visitor Governor Winthrop all with encouraged the Dutch to visit that place."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 213. For a statement of the general instructions under which the Dutch fleet was operating, see Aug. 14-24.

When the fleet was near Nuddy Island, almost within sight of the fort, Manning sent back their trumpet with the following answer: "My Lords,—I have receiv'd by ye trumpet a summons with declares you are sent from ye High & Mighty States General of ye United Provinces and his Serene Highnes ye Prince of Orange, to demand a surrender of this till Majestyes garrisons, but whereas we are not gentemen from whom who are treating with you, I give you this answer, ye returne of those gentlemen I shall send you a positive answer, either of ye surrendering, or non-surrendering of his Majestyes garrison. Dated at Fort James in N: York,—this 50th of July, 1673. [Note difference in dates of the Dutch and English epichrope.]

Upon receipt of this note, the Dutch sent the Englishmen back to the fort saying they would grant half an hour for their reply. They "turn'd ye glass and kept on saying, telling our men at their departure that when ye half hour was expire they would fyr a gun as a warning pece to misde of our answers." True to their promise, the gun was fired and, as they were about to anchor before the fort, Mr. Sharp, in hope of further respite, was dispatched with the following: "My Lords,—For the perseration of ye burgurers of this city, whom we have promised to protect, we desire you to forbear all acts of hostility till ye morrow morning at 10 ye clock, at which tyne wee shall send you our articles and our resolution thereupon. Dated at Fort James in N: York, July 30th 1673. One of ye clock in ye afternoon."—[signed] J. Manning.

The enemy, however, would put off no longer, and, with the grant of another half hour, again turned up the glass. This time having expired, and they seeing "no returne from us, but all our colours on ye contrary flourishing upon every bastion of ye Fort, they fyr'd two guns to leeward as warning peices to get their men on shore, the with those upon ye works easily perceiv'd." The firing between fleet and fort lasted for about an hour, when a flag of truce was put upon the walls, and later the "Bagg" was struck and three men were sent out to meet the enemy, who were "marching down ye broad way towards ye Fort."

After some parley, the following articles of surrender were guarantied by the Dutch:

1. That all ye offi's & souldi's in ye Fort shall march out with colours flying & drums beating.
2. That ye Fort, with all ye artillery armes & ammunition, shall be delivered unto ye Dutch Gen'l or Comander, or to them who shall be thereunto appointed.
3. That ye English offi's, souldi's, & others belonging either to ye Fort or Towne, shall march away where they please, with their goods, bagg & baggage, without hindrance or molestation.—Winthrop Papers, III: 442-45.

Contrary to their promise, however, they put a "Guard upon and made us prisoners in ye Church and fell plunders of all the Bagg and Baggage and ye next Morning put us on Board searel of their Ships of Warre and soe carried us some to Newfoundland and ye Partiaquill Islands where they inhunently left us and some to the Isles w'h we have not heard from as yet."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 62.

Casting and Decisive voice with full power and Authority to keep Courts. Administret Justice as a Court of Sessions. And Rule and Govern all the Inhabitants
Despite the 600 or 700 shots received, but one man at the fort was killed. The damage to the Dutch could not be definitely ascertained, although one or two of their "cheefe shippes" had to be mended, and it was reputed that 18 men were killed or wounded.—

Still another account of the episode appears in a letter of Capt. Robert Treat, written at Milford, Connecticut, Aug. 2, to Gov. Winthrop. Treat had met a soldier from the fort at Eastchester, who had entered the fleet of 20 Dutch vessels on what he described as "one of the last days of a storm, when huts were being built [hauled] up on hutsow's River as close under the fort as ever they Could like a halfe monse And demanded the surrendering of the place to Them." Capt. Manning and Capt. Carr desired "24 hours time" to answer, but "the Dutch would give but one hour and when that hour & a little more was expired they entered ingagence" and poured out such violent showers and thundering balls from their roaring canons that came so thick and so hot yt it did almost beat them off[!] from their works and under their canons safely landed 800 soldiers ready to storme from yd lao also... with when they saw their attempts they took down their Jack & desired a parde... they Marcht out with drum & colours flying into yd high Street and there laid down their arms... all is done & overt in one hours time with the loss of one man on each side and very little hurt done to fort or towns yd most is said to be in yd end of the war."

New Amsterdam, as it appeared at the time of its recapture by the Dutch, or very shortly thereafter, is shown in an inext view accompanying a map of New Netherland issued at about this time. The view is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 8-9, and the map in Vol. I, Pl. 16.

Aug. 31st. Gov. Lovelace, writing to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut concerning the Dutch attacks, calls "yt Dutch approach" particularly "unwelcome" because he happened to be away (see July 29). He says: "They appeared at first with 10 tayle after 17: yesterday about 5 0r 6 of yt clock they stormed it, a hot dispute (it seems it was) how yt success was yt they swept all their fleet appraizing, but they I understand have breakfasted on all my sheep and Cattle at Staten Island." He further states that he is "hastening now over to Long Island to rayse yt Militia there."—Winthrop Papers, XIV: 170.

Aug. 31st and Sept. 2nd. John Winthrop, Jr., writes to his son, Fitz-John Winthrop, regarding Gov. Lovelace as follows: "I received yesterday by a post express, a letter frd Govt. Lovelace, who was in his retourne towards N. Yorke [see July 31/Aug. 10] as far as Mr Richells (when he wrote yt letter) about 40 miles frd N: Yorke. He went hence oc Tuesd. last and was at N: Haven yt night, and next morning had the first intimation of the fleet appraizing, but they I understand who they were. I send you the full extract of that letter, & know nothing more what is therein contained, only by a letter frd Mrd Gold of Fairfield, of the same day, am informed yt he had a report that the Dutch had landed 5000 men upon Manhatas Island, but heard not the certainty... we hear also that a slop of the Dutch fleet have been at Isoh and Bostover, all news we that such a Dutch fleet have beene at Virginia and there burnt six and taken six of the English merchant ships."—Winthrop Papers in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections, VIII, 5th ser., pt. 4, 140. The original is in the Winthrop Papers in Mass. Hist. Soc., Vol. V.

Aug. Capt. Anthony Colye is commissioned by Commanders Benches and Evertson "as Governor-General to hold the supreme command over this conquist of New Netherland."—New Y. Col. Doc., II: 609-10. The Dutch council of war, consisting of the three men named above, appoints Cornelis Steenwyck as councillor in New Netherland. Benches Evertson "to superintend the quarriers and ammunition of war, and to take good care of the laborers." The various commissions and appointments were recorded Sept. 19.—Ibid., II: 610-11.

The members of the city court and principal burgurers, having understanding of the coming of the above commission in and council of war, "at the City Hall of the City of New Orange" (formerly New York), are "abode... from their oath previously taken to the English Government" and are ordered to "do their duty, so that no disorder shall be committed, "until the government and Magistrates" of the city are "restored by the Ad- minister General of Council."—Rec. N. Am., X: 391; N. Y. Col. Doc., II: 572.

Aug. 5-15 Israel Chauncy, writing to Gov. Winthrop (the letter is dated Stratford, Aug. 5, 1673), says: The taking of N-yorke, with the effusion of so little blood is a matter much wondered at: it is very strange that they should be in no better preparation to encounter with an enemy, they had very few Guns that were upon field Carriages, and those after they were once shot off (as it is termed) unfit for further service the carriages breaking."—Winthrop Papers, XII: 131.

A letter from Hartford is sent to New York expostulating against the Dutch demand for submission on the part of the towns on the eastern end of Long Island, and the seizure of a vessel belonging to the Colony of New Amsterdam. The letter further tells that messengers are being sent "to know your further intentions" and "must let you know, that wee & Col. Godfrey the united coloyners of New Englant, are by & of Royall sorcerayne Charles the second male keeper of his subjects liberty in these partes & doe hope to acquity our selves in that trust through the Assistance of all mighty God, for the Preservation of his Majestys Colonies in New England."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 584-85. See Aug. 14, 142; and Addenda.

The transition of the form of government of the city, now called New Orange, by which a bench of schout, burgomasters, and schepens supersede the English system of sheriff, mayor, and aldermen, which had been in operation since June, 1665, was brought about as follows: On August 15, Commanders Evertson and Bevokes instructed Cornelis Steenwyck to have orders issued for calling the burgurers of the city together so that "four or six" of them might be chosen as a delegation to confer with them and a council of war on the following morning. The council accordingly "cookeled at the City Hall" and chose six deputies. On the 14th, the deputies met the commandants and council of war at Fort Willem Hendrickx, and were there requested "to convocate the Commonalty" again, without delay, at the City Hall, for the purpose of nominating "six persons for Burgomasters and fifteen for Schepens," who were to be drawn "from the wealthiest inhabitants and those only" who conformed to the "Reformed Christian Religion." From these nominees, whose names were submitted by the city's deputies on the 16th, and all of whom as candidates first took oath to the Dutch, the Dutch commandants and council of war chose, on the 17th, the following persons as the first city bench under the new order, viz. Anthony de Milt, schout; Johannes van Brugh; Johannes de Peyster, and Adigius Luyck, three burgomasters; and Willem Beeckman, Jeromimus Eibbing; Jacob Kip, Lovenus vander Spiegel, and Gelys Verplanck, five schepens. Proclamation of these appointments was made on the 18th. The members of the bench took the oath of office, agreeing to "administer good law and justice between parties in cases brought before them;" to "promote the welfare of the commonwealth and its inhabitants;" it was also agreed that the Christian Religion agreeably to the Word of God and the order of the Synod of Dortrecht taught in the Netherland Church; and in "all circumstances obey, maintain and help to maintain the Supreme government" in authority, "and prevent," as far as they were able, "everything" in conflict with it.—N. Y. Col. Docs., 1717-57, 526; Rec. N. Am., pt. 2, 168-9.

The Benches and Evertson Charter (so-called) of New Orange closes with the words "Done fortress Willem Hendrickx, this 17th August A.D. 1673." This is an early, if not the earliest, reference to the fort by this name. It was Fort James under Nicolls's rule, and Fort Amsterdam prior to that. The reference is to be found in the translation from the New Orange Records in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (8vo. ed.), i: 604-5. See Sept. 8, 1664; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 944-8.

The Dutch council of war, by proclamation of this date, series "all the houses, goods and effects with the outstanding debts to this company remaining, and all the books, records, and papers of the Kings of England, France and their subjects." On Sept. 10, 10 (9), 10, was affirmed, and the new condition added, "together with the houses, lands, goods and effects belonging to the Duke of York, his late Governor, and Auditor-General, and all other his military officers in this province and country was said High Mightinesses and his Serene Highnesses [Prince of Orange], excepting alone the goods and effects belonging to the actual inhabitants of the neighboring Colonies of New England, Virginia and Maryland who for sufficient reasons are as yet excepted from this Confession."—N. Y. Col. Docs., 1717-57, 526; Rec. N. Am., pt. 2, 168-9.

The newly organized board of burgomasters and schepens send Schout de Milt and Burgomaster Luyck to the Dutch naval commandants "to confer with them on some necessary matters." Having fulfilled their errand, they returned and reported that 1673 “they were expressly charged by the Honble Commanders, that Aug. 8-10 the Magistrates should take care, that the Burgers . . . . be sworn forsworn; likewise that the Mag. Generals and City Seal of the late Mayor RLO Lawrence be brought in together with the Constables' staves and the colours and handed over” to the command- ers. Lawrence was sent for and informed of the order, with which he agreed to comply. The commandors, moreover, em- powered the magistrates to become the new captains in the three burgerr companies of the city and authorized them, with the scheeps, to elect their lieutenants and ensigns. A beginning was made “to swear in the Burgers and inhabitants.” Lawrence reappeared in court and delivered up “his gown and cloak with the City Seal and Mask and the remainder of the gowns and Constables staves” in like manner brought and fetched into the fort by the express order of the Commanders, except the two burgerr flags,” which were allowed, with the consent of the commandors, to remain at the house of Burgomaster Van Brugh.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 399.

It is resolved by the city court “to cause the collection of the great and small excise and to change the fines to double the amount,” the fine to go one-third to the informer, one-third to the schout, and one-third to the city; also, that nobody shall “presume to tap without license under a penalty of 25 gilders,” exclusion being granted only to “the crew of the national vessels, the supreme and subaltern government and hospitals.” Small beer is to be taxed at half the excise rate.

Balthazar Bayard was offered the collectorship of the tapsters and burgerr excise, which he accepted on the 28th, to continue until May 1, 1674. His perquisites were five per cent. of the collection “of the proceeds of the permits.” The court promulgated ordinances in regard to the excise fees to be operative within the jurisdiction of “the City of New Orange,” which ex- tended “unto the Sawkill” (Sawmill Creek) from mid-river to 24th St. The tapsters were required to secure their licenses from the mayor’s office who kept books there to pay “half tapster excise.” Regulations against smuggling, etc., were included, and the rating of the burgerr excise was laid down with precision. The office hours of the collector were fixed upon for both summer and winter seasons.

On Sept. 5 the court made additional provisions, that tapsters outside of the city proper could “lay in a barrel of strong beer at Burgers excise at harvest or the Merry Making and at burials both within and without this City;” that “all officers belonging to Fort Willem Hendrick must pay the full excuse as well as the tapsters themselves,” if they laid in and consumed wines or beer in the tapsters’ houses; and that the payment of the excuse should be made forthwith, if possible, or at least within 14 days.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 401-2, 497-8, 499.

Cornelis Barotsen, who has been measured of grain and salt in the city “for about fifteen years,” requests the new city court to consider him in office. The request is granted.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 399-400.

The city council appointed Capt. Marten Cregier as superintendent in association with the engineer, while the engineer, with the consent of the commandors, is commissioned by the Dutch council of war “as Secretary and Register of the Province of New Netherlands.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 612-14.

An order is issued by the burgomasters and scheeps to the inhabitants of New Harlem to assemble on the morrow to nomi- nate eight magistrates, all to be of the Reformed Christian religion. From this number the court will choose four (see Aug. 23).—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), III: 92-93, to N. Y. Pub. Library. In Rec. N. Am., VI: 400, the 21st is given as the date of this order. This may be explained as the date when the magistrates instructed Secretary Bayard to issue the order.

The inhabitants of the village of New Harlem having presented a double set of nominations for magistrates (see Aug. 12), the city court from these nominations chose the aforesaid as scheeps of the village, viz:Resolved Waldron, David de Marest, Joost Gouven, and Arendt Harmensen. Hendrick Jansen vander Vin is chosen as village secretary. Waldron is also selected by the city’s schout to be under schout at New Harlem.—Harlem Recs., 92, cit.; III: 93; Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 357; Rec. N. Am., VI: 400. In the Ret. N. Am., last quoted, the clerk of New Orange appears to have erroneously included this and other items immediately following (in all about two printed pages) under Aug. 18. See, further, Aug. 14/15.

The inhabitants dwelling on Manhattan Island, between the city and the village of New Harlem, having nominated magistrates, the city bench elects from their number Jan Langstraat as under schout; Dirck Jansen, Jacob Beurdevend and Jan Pietersen, scheeps; and John van Couvenhoven, secretary. They take the oath and are required to take a census of the residents in their district and tender to each the oath of allegiance.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 400-1. Date not in original, but confirmed by Harlem Recs.

Hendrick Oele is chosen by the city court “as City-Drummer for 8 years,” he is to “serve that Burgers Companies according to his ability.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 402.

The city court “resolved to offer at public sale the produce of the Weigh Scales according to previous conditions.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 401. See Aug. 20/30.

Two letters from “The Intendant & Counsell of War” at New Orange are sent to Hartford, in reply to the one of Aug. 7/17 (q. e.), in which the commandors say: We . . . are sent forth . . . to doe all manner of dammage vnto the enemies of the said high and mighty lords, both by water and by land; from which cause we be- ing come more into Hudson’s River have brought the land and force in the same under obedience; and in regard the villages lying to the eastward of Oyster Bay did belong to this Governour so it is to prevent all inconveniences we have cired the same to give the oath of Edelity; to which if they remayne defective, we are resolved to force them with the armes likewise; allose we shall not be afraid to goe against those that shall seek to make them their iijuris. Concerning the vessell that is taken by vs close to ye9 havens, there is noe other consideration but that it was taken from enemies, whereof it appeares very strange before vs that we should bee objected against concerning it.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 58-59, 60, 89.

The new magistrates at New Harlem (see Aug. 13/17) summon 15/25 the other inhabitants of the village and administer to 32 of them the oath of allegiance. In the classification given, three only are listed as Englishmen, eight are called “Yogmanns” (i.e., unmarried), and five are over 60 years of age.—Harlem Recs., op. cit., III: 94-95;

The Dutch naval commandors and the council of war recom- mend to the city fathers “that the fortification of this City should be proceeded with, according as the engineer should order and stake it out, so that no broken works should be erected.” The city court apponts Capt. Marten Cregier as superintendent, in association with the engineer of the work.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 406-7.

A committee from the court of burgomasters and scheeps, after a conference with the naval commandors of the Dutch fleet and the council of war, reports as follows: “That the old stones of the Quay, wall, house and cell and appurtenances thereof, belonging to an Englishman in other countries and now confiscated, shall be again given to the City works in compensation for the stone here- before taken, by the English government from the City’s works.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 406.

The city court finds that the existing Sunday ordinances have been flagrantly violated by “many of the inhabitants,” who almost make “a custom” of frequently “the taverns more” on Sundays “than on other days,” and take “their delight in illegal exercises.” The court now renews the former ordinances and, from sunrise to sundown on Sundays, “interdicts all sorts of handicraft, trade and traffick, gaming, boat-racing, or running with carts or wagons, fishing, fowling, running and picking oaks, strawberries, etc., all riotous racing, calling and shouting of children in the streets, together with all unlawful exercises and games, drunkenness, fre- quenting taverns or inns, playing cards, playing, rolling nine pins or bowls, etc., which are more in vogue this than any other day.” Heavy fines are prescribed for violations. If officers of the law catch children in disobedience of the law, they may “take their hair or upper garments,” which is “not to be restored to the parents” until they have “paid a fine of two guilders.” The in- tuition of the law is not to prevent “a stranger or citizen from buy- ing “a drink of wine or beer” for quenching his thirst, “but only to prevent the sitting of clubs on the Sabbath,” which has hindered many from “resorting to Divine Worship.” —Rec. N. Am., VI: 405.

The city of New Orange was now being strengthened in its de- fenses in “this just juncture of war” with New Amsterdam. The process hogs roamed in “great quantities” about the roads and streets to the damage of the city’s works. The city council, therefore, requires all the owners of hogs within the city, and as far as the Fresh Water, to confine them within two days from date and no longer suffer them to roam about, under a penalty of confiscation.—Rec.
The city bench orders that all fit persons who are "not yet on the watch" shall be "divided among the companies." Former labourers and porters of the weigh-house are continued in their places.—Rec. N. Am., VI. 492.

The city council unanimously agrees to let out the farming of the weigh-house (see Aug. 15/25), and fixes upon $3,000 fl. as the lowest figure.—Rec. N. Am., VI. 497. On the next day, the court asked Baltazar Bayard if he would "also collect the Weigh-Money; but as he did not believe he had the business of collecting the tapsters and Burgher excise," Jonas Bartelsen was then sent for and asked if he would either "rent it or collect the money." He offered to serve, at a salary of 600 fl., until May 1, 1674; but he absolutely refused to take it on a percentage basis. The court could not come to an agreement with him and, on Sept. 4, after some deliberation and debate, the city authorities appointed Timotheus Gaby as "Collector of the Weighhouse" of the city, until May 1, 1674, at an honorarium of eight per cent of the collections, the profits from receipts to accrue to the city.—Ibid., 498-9.

St. 27

The city court, in a petition to Commanders Everett and Sept. Benckes and the council of war, estimates the Dutch inhabitants of the province of New Netherland, including women and children, "to amount to six thousand souls," and orders that the Dutch ships are all to depart and fear for their safety and that of the province in general, since they are surrounded by French and English, with whom the Dutch are technically at war. They say: "These enemies, albeit they now keep themselves somewhat quiet, will not cease endeavoring all possible means to reduce those under English to so soon as they hear that we are again left to ourselves; our weakness and condition being as well known to them as to ourselves since they have had now 9 years' command over us." The city fathers plead with the commanders "to take to heart the welfare of so many innocent souls . . . and not leave them a prey to be destroyed or to be sold as slaves to the English plantations;" and ask them "to allow under the command and prudent conduct of at least one of the superior officers, two ships of war to winter here." The commanders give good heed, and agree, beside the garrison in the fort, to leave under Capt. Anthony Colve's command "one of our ships of War carrying forty guns, and a small frigate named the Zeekunt," until other succor is sent from Fatherland.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 598-600; see also 612, where the ship of war is mentioned as the "Seranam."

St. 28

The schout, burgomasters, and schepens of New Orange Sept. (fourth schout of Amsterdam and New York), in a letter to the states-general, write: "It hath pleased the All-governing God so to bless your High Mightinesses and his Serene Highness' Arms under the command of Commanders Jacob Benckes and Cornelis Evertse, Jun., that this entire Province of New Netherland, consisting of three and thirty towns, with all their inhabitants, on the 9th August last, reduced again under the obedience of your High Mightinesses and his Serene Highness, their lawful and native Sovereigns, from whose protection they were cut off about nine years ago in time of peace." The rest of the letter relates to the profitability of the province to the Fatherland and invokes the aid of the states-general in preserving it. It says: "the good Dutch inhabitants . . . with women and children" are "estimated to amount here to about six to seven thousand souls," but scattered, "in consequence of the vastness of the country."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 526-27; cf. also 578-79.

"to put across any strangers from this Island, unless they first exhibit a pass to that effect."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 609.

Sept. 1

Gov. Lettert of Massachusetts writes to Sec. Arlington regarding the capture of New York, and adds: "I have certain intelligence that a ship is arrived at Harlem and Spuyten Duyvel are forbidden to put across any strangers from this Island, unless they first exhibit a pass to that effect."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 609.

Gov. Lovelace of New York is arrested for debts and it is said the Dutch intend him for Holland.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 203. See Aug. 25/Sept. 2.

Former Gov. Lovelace is granted permission by the Dutch council of war to order Commander Benckes's ship to Holland.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 609.

"The Dutch commanders issue a proclamation in which they order "all strangers" in the city of New Orange who have "not taken the oath of allegiance" or "obtained a license" from them to depart within one day after publication of the proclamation, or be "considered enemies of our State," and be "treated as spies and disturbers of its public peace." The inhabitants are forbidden to "Judge or give beds to any strangers or outside people of what Nation soever" before furnishing the names and "places of their abode, to the Schout . . . before the going down of the sun." Violation subjects the guilty to a fine of 600 guilders, in beaver, for each person so harboured unlawfully. The names are to be delivered "every evening before drum-beat" to the "Officer in the Factory."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 608. The order of allegiance to the Dutch authority, as taken by the inhabitants of the city, and also as specifically subscribed by the English residents, is recorded in the minutes of the city court. The English residents who subscribed to the oath are not obliged to take up arms against the British crown in the war now in action between the states-general of the Netherlands and Great Britain.—Rec. N. Am., VIII. 2. See Aug. 15/25 for oath of allegiance in New Harlem.

"The Sachems and Chiefs of the Hackensack Indians, accompanied by about 20 of their people," request an audience with the Dutch commanders and council of war in Fort Willem Hendrick. They are admitted, and say they are sent "by the rest of their Indians, to request" a continued state of peace with the Dutch. They bring "about 20 deer skins, 5 @ 3 lbers of Beaver, and 1 string of Wampum." Their presents and proposals are accepted, and "in consideration thereof" they are presented with: "some calendred linen, woolen hose, and some cartridges of powder."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 606.

Nicolas Bayard is commissioned by the Dutch council of war as "Book-keeper and Receiver-General of the Public Revenue and payments of this newly conquered Province of New Netherland." His duties are "to collect and receive all public revenue and income, to give acquittances for its receipt if needs be, also to keep account and entry in form with all officers and servants, colonists and merchants, whenever demanded, of all public payments."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 613-14.

An order is issued to the major of the garrison in Fort Willem Hendrick. It contains the following regulations:

1. A corporal's guard from each company shall be put on duty each day, "when the arms shall be inspected by the sergeants and corporals of the guard."

2. The guard shall be relieved "at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and at 11 o'clock on Sunday," and the officer in command "during the watch shall wear his sabre and be continually in the fort, in order thus to be able to give an account of the watch, and in the morning to . . . report . . . what has occurred."

3. The revell shall be beaten at daybreak, the gate opened as soon as it is light and shut before dark. When the drum beats the tattoo at nine, "all soldiers and matrosses shall quietly repair to their quarters without making the least noise."

4. The corporals shall take good care . . . that not more than three or four [of their men] at the same time have leave to go out and eat, pay particular attention that no strong drink be brought, much less drank, in the guard-house; constantly teach the men the use of arms and punctually observe all orders . . . and, above all things, pay attention that no Dutchman nor Englishman (the city Magistrates excepted) come here into the fort without permission, without the same terms and conditions which prevail with the New Yorkers."

5. The Grand Rounds shall go before midnight and receive the word," but both before and after this, a cadet "shall continue to go the rounds as well also on Sunday during Divine service."

6. The soldiers shall "weekly clean out their barracks and quarters." The corporals shall take care "that the officer of the guard be loaded with a loose ball, and whenever it is necessary to discharge the muskets, in order to clean them, that shall be done on the Battery after drawing the ball; and . . . each corporal on his watch shall . . .
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

Sept. 28th—The governor and council draw up the following ordinance:

The governor and council draw up the following ordinance:

Whereas Fort Wilhem Hendrick and the city of New Orange situate on Manhattan Island is seriously encumbered and weakened by the houses, gardens and orchards, which lie so close under its walls and bulwarks that it is impossible to defend it properly when occasion requires against its enemies. It is therefore considered necessary by the Governor-General, by and with the advice of his Council, to demolish pull down and remove the undermined houses and gardens, and the owners thereof are hereby most strictly ordered and commanded instantly to commence demolishing and pulling down their houses, gardens and orchards. The owners are to deliver them to the governor and council, and in the first instance among the houses and gardens of Jacobus Jansen, Peter van Brugh, and Sara van Borsim.

The expense incurred by the removal of the houses, as well as the value of the lots, is to be estimated by "impartial persons" and other lots of like value are to be given to each owner in lieu of the lots surrendered to the government, on which to replace their houses. Mayor of the city and council are to take care that all losses sustained is to be made from "the extra duty" which is hereafter to be collected upon certain exports and imports, according to percentages set forth in the ordinance.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 631-35.

The ordinance was published on Oct. 7/17.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 12.

A second guard-house is noted in a court case of this date, in which recovery of payment is sought on a mortgage to Arrent Jansen Moeseen from Martin Hoffman, who had sold the property to Colve. The property is described as situated in Broadway next the guard-house.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 131-32. See also ibid., VIII: 196; VII: 18. For earlier owners of this property, see Castello Plan, II: 229, which locates it at Broadway and the present Wall St. This guard-house, then, was near the land gate. The earlier one was near the water gate.—See June 22, 1653, in Castello Plan, II: 326.

the Lutherans congregation should receive the "lot in Company's garden No. 7" (see May 16/16, 1676), valued at 425 fl., and a balance of 125 fl., making a total of 850 fl. to cover the assessed value of the Lutherans' lot, together with the cost of removing the house.

Abell Hardenberch is charged by Schout De Milt before the city court with delinquency and absenteeism; further, "being in the estate of Home Schout at the City Hall & at no time earlier of a man possessed and mad, notwithstanding the efforts of Burgomester Van Brugh, running up to the Court-room, and going out next morning, as if he had not been imprisoned." He was fined, reprimanded to prison, obliged to apologize to the court, and condemned in the costs incurred.—Rec. N. Am., VIII: 9-10.

Allard Anthony asks the city court to exempt him from the excise, because he takes boarders who are "officers of the fort and therefore exempt from excise." The court consents.—Rec. N. Am., had, together, burnt in the River of Virginia five English ships laden with tobacco, and captured six others, without having been able to effect anything further there, they had sailed for New Netherland and became masters of the physician's fort at the Island Manhattan, on the 9th of August ultimater that also, before his departure, and also "minor inentendistas" when, he was dispatched with letters hither, he had heard that they had reduced another

The city court gives instructions to the under schout and scheepen of the suburbs lying between the Fresh Water and New Harlem, consisting of fourteen articles. They provide for the conduct of a subaltern court in civil cases not exceeding 100 fl., sealing cases, and cases such asforfing and sticking and such like, in the same sum. Appeal lies to the city bench, which is to have the ordinances of the city court executed properly within its jurisdiction; to condue the payment of awards for wolves lost on the island within its district, and to levy a tax on those dwellers therein; to provide for the purchase of pound for stray animals; to see that the roads are kept passable from fallen trees; to provide for the choice of its successors in office; and to rely upon the city court for further instructions.—Rec. N. Am.,

The under schout and scheepen whose jurisdiction lies between the Fresh Water and New Harlem have, "according to their instruction, caused a suitable pound to be erected." Anybody who finds stray animals "in his tillage or pasture" may immediately drive them to the pound and deliver them to the Pound Keeper to lock them up until they are not to be released except upon payment of prescribed fines and for the damage they have caused.
Inference with the arrest of animals is punishable by fines. If an animal is left longer than three days in the pound, the cost of fodder rests upon the owner or lessee, and if not "claimed within three months," the animal is to be "sold at the highest bidder for payment of damages and fine, and the surplus" to be "applied according to law." Animals that are "wont to leap over proper fences" must be "tied up, or removed elsewhere." When the under Instructions for the overseers of fences and highways between New Harlem and the Fresh Water have been drawn up are now confirmed by the city court. They are required on the "first opportunity in a body" to "inspect all fences and roads between the Fresh Water and N. Harlem," and to direct the owners to repair such as need it. Neglect by owners of the demands of the overseers, leads to fines of 2 fl. for the first, 50 fl. for the second, and 100 fl. for the third dereliction, “together with all damage done to the grain or crops.” The overseers can summon persons to appear personally or by a proper substitute at any particular place “to aid in restoring the fences or to make them repairable” and all who fail therein are subject to a fine of six guilders for every day’s remissness. If one neighbour maintains that another neighbour’s fences are not “good or sufficient,” and dreads “damage thereby,” he is “first to request his neighbour in love and friendship to repair his fence,” and, failing to receive an answer, to make his complaint to the overseers, who then are obligated to make inspection as soon as possible. If the overseer finds the complaint to be just, “the person complained of” is to pay them ten guilders “for the journey and inspection,” and to make the repairs on their order; but if the complaint is unwarranted, the complainant is to pay the six guilders to the overseers for their trouble. As “divers lands lie within one fence,” the overseers are required to mark out each party’s share, to be kept in order. No one is to “pasture cattle on the lands and valleys lying in common except by common consent, when all the crops shall have been removed;” if anyone wishes to use a part for pasture, he can fence in so much at his own expense. Provisions are made for collecting fines, for notifying interested parties about the rules, and for regulating the office and duties of the overseers.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 20-22.

The Earl of Arlington informs the council for trade and plantations in Virginia that they were sending Six men of Warre, to reinforce Everetson but hee could not Lay any great Stresses upon this Information. The council orders that the secretary draw up an address containing suggestions for the campaign against New York to present to the king—four. (6) Laws for Plantations (MS.), op. cit., I: 54-55. For details of this plan, see Nov. 15-25.

In compliance with the order of the council for trade and plantations issued on Nov. 8/18 (g.v.), the secretary presents to the Earl of Arlington a communication for the king, in which is emphasized the importance of New York, and in which is contained a detailed plan for such accomplishment. The danger arising to the colonies adjoining New York, New England on the one side and Maryland and Virginia on the other, from the occupancy of New York by a hostile nation is pointed out. This is the only fortified harbour along the coast, and offers a retreat for ships from which they may do in calculable damage to the Virginia trade, resulting in loss of customs duties alone of from $120,000 to $140,000, while the plantations, by loss of export and import facilities, may well be ruined. Trade with, indeed the existence of, the Caribbean Islands is also threatened. New England is more populous and better able to defend itself against the enemy, but the danger there lies in the fact that “since ye Inhabitants of New England, being more intent, upon ye advance of their own private trade, then ye publique Intereste of ye Mariner’s Crowne and Government,” may if ye Dutch continue a quiet possession there, enter into commerce with them, whereby it is to be feared, they will at present divert a great part of ye Trade of England into those Countries, and lay a prejudicial foundation for a union between them and Holland.

It is probable that the English inhabitants of the eastern part of Long Island have not surrendered to the Dutch. The English have a superiority of numbers over the Dutch inhabitants, and if a force be sent from England speedily they will be in a good position to aid in retaking New York. The council therefore offers the following suggestions:

1. “One ye old rate, One ye nth rate, two ye nth rates, with 3 hired Merchant ships each whereof should carry upwards of 40 Guns, 3 Fire ships, & 600 Fooe Souldiers are absolutely necessary.” The three hired merchant-ships should have their “complement made up in good part of Landmen, that so as few Scamenes as possible may be taken from ye Mariner’s service in other places.”

2. “The country should be discerned and such Merchant Ships as are going to Virginia, to some of wch it may bee conveniente that ye Mariner’s should lend some great guns.”

3. An embargo should be laid “upon all ships preparing for Virginia, Mary Land, & ye rest of ye Northern Plantations. That none that has he receiv’d Intelligence out of Holland, or any strong and serviceable vessels, & that all such Merchant ships as goe with this convoy be oblig’d to follow your Mariner’s ships & to receive orders from them.” Passengers and servants going to Virginia on the merchant ships are to be trained by the officers of the expedition.

4. Enough powder and other ammunition are to be carried to supply New York and Albany, when taken, for their defence.

5. All parties are to make every possible effort to bring men-of-war going out of the Thames with the merchantmen as may serve as a convoy, the others and the 600 foot soldiers joining them at Plymouth or some other convenient port. At that time the commander-in-chief is to open his commission and instructions, and not before.

6. Preparations should be made with all haste for the voyage to New York and, when within convenient distance from the coast, one small ship shall be dispatched to Rhode Island and one to the eastern end of Long Island with orders to raise forces in New England and Long Island to aid in this design.

7. If the expedition prove successful, the Dutch which remain in the colony should be “removed farther up into ye Country from ye Seaside, at least as far as Albyane, their inhabiting ye towne of New-Yorke being a great cause of ye loss of both Towne & Castle now.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 211-13. New York was, however, recaptured by England by treaty (see Feb. 4, 1674).

The city court publishes the proclamation of Gov. Colve for a day of general fasting, thanksgiving, and prayer, to be observed in the city and province “on the first Wednesday of each month.” The next day, the court sent a copy of this proclamation to the districts beyond the Fearsh Water, as “the Dutch shipps at N. York must be observed, only as many men-of-war as shall be necessary.”

Capt. Evertson, commander of the ship “Surinam,” having sailed away from a city court order, is ordered to appear before three burgomasters to Gov. Colve “to ascertain the reasons,” as it was “contrary to the tenour of the apostille granted” in response “to their petition presented to the Honble Commanders and the Council of War,” Sept. 6, preceding. Colve informs them he cannot and will not “explain to any person his resolution and intention,” but answers “the whole Burghery in their name that with or without that ship” he will not “undertake nor execute any thing except what he shall “consider serviceable and expedient for the fort, the City and the Burghery.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 30-31.

Francis Beado, a native of London, is sentenced by the Dutch provincial council at Fort William Henry for having come to New Netherland “without consent” in order “to disturb the good people thereof.” Beado has claimed to have a “commission” empowering him “by fire and sword to attack, rob, burn and destroy” the inhabitants, “which he also threatened to put in execution in the village of Fishkill,” which “would have doubtless carried out and he not been prevented by arrest.” He is sentenced “to be brought to the place where justice is usually executed and there placed at the stake to be firmly bound and to be branded on the back with a red hot iron,” and than banished. This sentence was executed on the 20th of the month.—N. Y. Col. Doc., II: 665-66.

Gov. Colve has found that, contrary to orders and proclamations hitherto issued, “many strangers, ye enemies of this state,” have attempted to come to New Netherland without a passport, and some “even presumed to show themselves within this city N. Orange.” The inhabitants, too, “forgetting their oath of allegiance,” have kept up a daily correspondence “with the neighboring Colonies of New England and other enemies of this state.” Former edicts are now renewed, and all persons who have not yet bound themselves “by an oath of allegiance to the Dutch sovereignty are given 24 hours’ time to leave New Netherland. Strangers without passport are to be “duly treated” as if they were in a foreign country. The inhabitants are not to lodge strangers over night, or to hold any intercourse with New England, or “afford them supplies of any description.” All persons “are expressly forbidden to take charge of, much less deliver, any letters coming from the enemy’s places or places thereof,” and none of the council’s office to be examined.—N. Y. Col. Doc., II: 666-67, See also Dec. 12, 1673.

1673 Of De Ruyter's fleet, is "appointed and commissioned" governor Dec. of New Netherland as successor to Anthony Colvile, to "be Chief 5*15 and Supreme Ruler, both in civil and military affairs," subject to orders from the board of admiralty of Amsterdam. — N. Y. Col. Decs., II: 510-11, 513.

Capt. Willem Kuyff, commanding a company of Dutch infantry in Fort Willem Hendrik, is commissioned by Gov. Colvile as prov- incial " Fiscal and Public Prosecutor of the Province of New Netherland." His duties are to promote its increase, population, peace, trade, and to take care that the jurisdiction and domain are "maintained without suffering anything to be done directly or indirectly attempted to the prejudice or injury thereof; also to apprehend and prosecute all malefactors, whether criminal, political, or military," in provincial matters, and to "pay particular attention that all scandals, irregularities and ungodliness be driven from this Province," also "to execute all placards and ordinances" as well as "all sentences and judgements of the supreme magis- tracy." — N. Y. Col. Decs., II: 668-69.

9*19 Gov. Colvile issues an order as follows: "Whereas, divers out- side people have requested, for the better security of their families and goods against any attack of the enemy, that they may be per- mission to remove them hither within this city, and that some houses may be appropriated for that purpose; also, that for the present some orders may be issued respecting the Long Island Ferry, to the end that their property be sent across, may be conveyed over with their goods as well as their "flock ... jetty." To this end he requires Commissioners Cancellor Steenwyck, Cornelis van Ruyven, and Burgomaster Van Brugh "to inspect all houses and dwellings within this city, to ascertain what rooms therein can be hereafter conveniently vacated, and to billet therein such outside people as apply to them; likewise, to issue such orders respecting the Ferry as they shall deem necessary for the better accommodation of housekeepers." — N. Y. Col. Decs., II: 669-70.

11*21 Allard Anthony is "admitted a public notary and attorney in private suits pending before the superior and inferior courts" of New Netherland. He was sworn in on January 11, 1674. — N. Y. Col. Decs., II: 671, 677.

On or about this date, the militia officers are summoned by Gov. Colvile to the fort and thanked "for the great zeal they exhibited in fortifying" the city. He urges them "to persevere therein until the work be completed." — N. Y. Col. Decs., II: 670.

13*22 Cornelis Steenwyck, formerly captain of horse, is commissioned captain of a new company of militia of the city. — N. Y. Col. Decs., II: 671.

13*23 Gov. Colvile and council prohibit "the exportation from this city from this day forth of all provisions and other articles except to such of the Dutch inhabitants residing in the flat land, shall have need of for their families and no more." The inhabitants of the city are also commanded "to begin to lay in a supply of necessary provisions for six or eight consecutive months commencing next April." — N. Y. Col. Decs., II: 671. This order is issued by the mayor's court Dec. 15*27—Rec. N. Am., VII: 35.

16*26 Gov. Colvile, in view of the expected arrival of an English fleet, orders the militia companies of the Dutch towns on Long Island to appear "fully armed ... the 19th instant, in the forenoon, in the city of New Orange, in front of Fort Willem Hendrik." One- third of each company shall then be furloughed for the present, to remain in their respective towns until relieved by another corpo- ral's guard. The officers and magistrates may give such orders respecting "thieving and pillaging the cattle" as best suits their district. Both day and night guard must be kept, so that they may not be "surprised by the enemy or cut off from u. m." — N. Y. Col. Decs., II: 73.

17*27 Gov. Colvile, realizing the need of vigilance, recommends to the schout, magistrate, and inhabitants of New Harlem and Fordham, that they "keep a watchful eye on all designs which may be con- ceived to be against this place or yourselves in particular, and always be ready to transport your families and movables either on certain information of the [English] enemy's approach, or on special command from me." For this purpose he names Resolved Waldrum as "chief officer of the militia of the towns of Harlem and Ford- ham," and "orders the towns" required to choose a Sergeant." — N. Y. Col. Decs., II: 671-74.

The fortifications of the city being now "mostly completed," Gov. Colvile issues orders "for the preservation of the same and better security of this City," as follows: That henceforth "the Burgher watch" of the city shall "be set and commence at drumbeat about half an hour before sun down, when the train bands of the city "then on guard" shall "parade before the City Hall," that the "City gate" shall be "closed at sun down by the Mayor of this City and his attendant trainbands and in like manner opened at sun rise;" that nobody, save "the watch alone," shall "attempt coming from sunset to sun rise on the bulwarks, bastions or batteries" of the city "on pain of bodily correction;" that anybody, without excep- tion, who presumes "to land within" the city, "or quit the same in any other manner, way or means then through the ordinary City gate," shall be subject to the death penalty; and that bogs in the city be kept off "the bulwarks, bastions, gardes or batteries," subject to confiscation and fine upon the owners.— Rec. N. Am., VII: 35-36; N. Y. Col. Decs., II: 674.

1674 The colony of Manhattan is "bless'd with the richest soil in all New-England, I have heard it reported from men of Judgement and Integrity, that one Bushel of European-Wheat hath yielded a hundred in one year. Their other Commodities are Furs, and the like. New-York is situated at the mouth of the great River Moho- gano, and is built with Dutch Brick alla-moderna, the meanest house therein be being valued at One hundred pounds, to the Landward it is compassed with a Wall of good thickness; at the entrance of the River is an Island with a Harbour of such a nature that it shall attempt to pass without their leave." — Josendy, An Account of Two Voyages to New-England (1674), 153-54.

A court case in Harlem, April 5, 1677, brought out testimony that "the Day of the French congregation, in the time of Gov. Francis Lovelace, having received a preacher, the aforesaid governor had said that the French of the Town of New Harlem should be free as to contributing to the Dutch vorreeler." — Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 375-76.

Rev. Pierre Daillé is said to have been the first "pastor" of the French Church in New York. But according to the reference in the text, a "preacher" had preceded him by ten years or more, whose name, however, is unknown to us. The statement is of interest as showing that the refugees at N. Y. and H. joined to introduce and sustain the French service as early as 1674."— Ibid., footnote.

In this year, Samuel Sewall, of Boston, began his interesting diary, which he continued until 1719.—Winitz, op. cit., V: 167.

Jacques vande Water is commissioned as town major and "audi- tor of the court martial" (see Oct. 15*25) of the city of New Orange. — Rec. N. Am., II: 674-75. See also ibid., II: 677.

The Dutch magistrate residing in New Orange is ordered that it is neces- sary to retain the former custom of having fire-wardens. Four men are appointed, two of whom have been fire-wardens under the English régime (see Oct. 8, 1672). They are "requested and au- thorized to execute and fill the aforesaid office ... in such manner as the same has been heretofore executed and filled."— Rec. N. Am., VII: 35. See Jan. 20*30.

Gov. Colvile presents in the city court "a provisional instruction for the Schout, Burgomasters and Scheepers," consisting of fifteen articles. Among the directions are these—to "take care that the Reformed Christian Religion, conformable to the Synod of Dord-recht," is "maintained, without suffering any other sects attempt- ing any thing contrary thereto;" that the schout shall "be present at all meetings and preside over them unless" Gov. Colvile "or some person appointed by him" be present, who shall then preside, and the schout shall "take rank" on such occasions "below the youngest acting Burgomaster;" that the schout is not to sit on the bench when acting as prosecutor before the court; that "all matters appertaining to the police, security and peace of the inhabitants," as well as "justice between man and man," is to be "enforced;" in all cases in excess, an appeal may be made to the supreme bench of governor-general and council; that "all criminal of- fences" in the city's jurisdiction are to be "be amenable to the judi- cature" of the city court, which shall have power to judge and sentence the same even under the "Death," yet "that no sentence of death shall be executed unless the approval of the Governor" has been "first sought and obtained;" that the presiding burgomaster shall convolve the court and, on "the night before, make the same known to Capt. Willem Kuyff" (the prosent to Colve by the three burgomasters and Schepen Willem Beeckman; but Colve persisted and sent back his agents, Steenwyck and Bayvay, to demand the compliance of the bench, which again despatched its committee to the governour, with the following answer: that they persisted in their judgment as previously sent; yet, not wishing "to directly contravene the governour's "command and injuction," they concluded, whilst still insisting on the right and privileges of their bench, and "in order to prevent future mischiefs and difficulties," to grant the governour's wish "provisionally for this time," and permit Capt. Knyff to preside over their bench.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 49-53. On the following day (Jan. 17), the minutes of the city court show Capt. Willem Knyff on bench as the "history and chair," but that the city council did not attend. Knyff continued at the head of the court in his capacity as fiscal during the term, and, when in August a new bench was elected, Knyff continued as the president in the capacity of schout.—Ibid., VII: 43, 113.

The city court having found itself embarrassed by "the expenses successively incurred in fortifying this City of N. Orange," and troubled by the demands made upon the city "by its creditors for payment and earned wages" (whereas, "little or nothing" has been received from "the outside people"), the court, acting in unison, appealed to Gov. Colve for relief. He merely answers that he will not hold their propositions into "treaty," and appoint some persons to consult with them on ways and means, but prefers that the bench should find a way of furnishing the funds.

The court again sent its committee to remind the governour of "the verbal promise" he and the Dutch naval commanders had made, that, if the Hosp. General nominated a double number of the best qualified honorable and most wealthy persons and such only as are "of the Reformed Christian Religion, or at least well affected towards it, as Schout, Burgomasters and Schepens," hand the nominations, "folded and sealed, on the same day," to the governour-general, from which he shall make election of the new bench on August 17.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 36-39; N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 678-81. The burgomasters and schepens, having heard the instructions read, resolve "to adjourn the meeting until the next morning, to revise and consider the instructions granted." This fact is communicated by the presiding burgomaster, Johannes de Peyster, to Capt. Knyff, who immediately quits the meeting and separates from them.

The three burgomasters were then sent to see Gov. Colve at the fort. He asked them why they had adjourned so abruptly and "refused to allow Capt. Knyff to preside." They answered "that not the smallest disrespect was committed, but that they had adjourned the meeting to examine the newly granted instruction and that when Capt. Knyff was informed thereof he had left the meeting. After the case had been argued, pro and con, Colve ordered them to forthwith repair back to the City Hall, to give without delay consolently and in a regular manner the whole bench and appoint others in their places. Moreover, Colve despatched Cornels Steenwyck, of his council, and Nicolas Bayard, the provincial secretary, to the city court to receive their answer and exhibit their written discharge, in case of their refusal to allow Knyff to preside. The city bench, having "considered and weighed the situation, voted unanimously to reply that they appreciated the presence of the governour in their court as a "great concordance," on his part, that if he had "any doubt or misgiving" of their "judicial proceedings or behaviour," he should "inspect and examine the Minutes," which would show clearly what they had done; that they thought it proper to say, briefly, that what he desired conflicted "with the laws, statutes, and Ordinances" of the mother country, and through their council, bound them "to observe and obey;" that it was "manifestly prejudicial to the privileges of this Bench and Burghery," a depreciation of their character, and contrary to the practice of the cities of the Fatherland; furthermore, it could not be otherwise "than prejudicial to the honor and dignity of the Bench and Burghery," as already shown by the unjust accusation by Capt. Knyff, that they were "guilty," to find that all their "solicitude, trouble, care, and labour expended to this time for the good" of the city and its people "should be required by a dismissal for bad and illegal conduct," and "beehching" Colve "to arrange the matter in a more gentle manner" and not misunderstand their zeal for the welfare of the city. Their answer was...

February 9-19

The Treaty of Westminster is signed by Arlington and four other commissioners on the part of Great Britain, and by Prince Carl on the part of the United Netherlands. Its provisions are, in part, as follows:

1. The honour of the flag is yielded to England. In a letter from Gov. Leverett of Massachusetts to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, Leverett somewhat elaborated this article: "The state General to give due acknowledgement of the flagg whether single or in flets, ... to any ship or vessel, belonging to his majesty of Great Brittaine whether single or greater Number if they carry his majestyes flag or Jacke."—Winthrop Papers, Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections, 72 ser., XI: 106.

2. The Treaty of Breda is revived.

3. The rights of neutrals are guaranteed.

4. The commercial principles of the Triple Alliance are renewed.

By the sixth article, it is covenanted that "all lands, islands, cities, havens, castles and fortresses" taken by one party from the other before the time limited for the duration of hostilities shall be restored to the former owner. This article restored New Netherlands to Great Britain (see Oct. 31/Nov. 10). The Treaty of Breda had called to the king's 'counsel of state' the "petition of Westminster gave it back to him on the principle of "reciprocal restitution."—Brodbroth, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 251, and authorities there cited. The Leverett letter, op. cit., mentions a provision requiring the states-general of the Netherlands to pay "800,000 palancs—one fourth on the Ratification of the Treaty the rest in three successive years by equal portions."

News of the signing of the treaty, and the consequent cessation of hostilities, did not reach New York until July 11 (p. 9). The first printed reference to the final cession of New York to England is contained in (p. 7) in His Majesty's Gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, January 24, 1674–5. At also A Letter From the States-General of the United Provinces, to His Majesty the King of Great Britain, &c. January 24–25, 1674–5, together with certain proposals from the said States-General to His Majesty, concerning a Peace (London, 1673–4). See also A. Maurice Low 'The American People (1909), Chap. XXI (on "How the Dutch Came and Went").

The use of any other measures or weights than "the real Amsterdam measure and weight" is prohibited by a provincial edict. All merchants, shopkeepers, or others using measures or weights are ordered to have them stamped within two weeks "by the sworn Sealer."—N. Y. Col. Doc., II: 688.

Isaac Kip is granted the office of official stamper and brander by the city court; he was sworn in on the 27th.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 58, 65. See Feb. 24/ Mar. 6.

The city bench resolves "to give notice of the contracting next Thursday [224] for some handsome palisades for the fortification of the city, and chooses the schout and scheeps Jacob Kip and Gelyn Verplank to close a contract for the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 59.

Complaints being made daily "to the Burgomasters and Burgther Chief Officers" against "many of the inhabitants" of the city who, contrary to orders, fail to "appear at the appointed time in their respective companies to aid in advancing the public necessary work of fortifying the city, the city court renewes its order "that each and every one" shall "repair to his company and corporal's squad at the appointed day and place of work and there advance the public necessary work," on pain of a fine of six s. per day, or three s. per half-day, etc., for lost time, the fines to be "collected and gathered precisely every week by the Provost and the respective Corporals," who are "charged to Keep a correct Account and list of the absent persons."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 60-61.

Another interesting list of the inhabitants and their property at this time was compiled by Valentie, who explains that his estimate of the wealth of the several inhabitants is not based upon any one document, but is compiled from several sources and is designed to be only an approximate valuation. The inhabitants are grouped by streets and described in the list of the Owners Of houses and lots in the city, about the year 1674, at the final cession to the English; the property being classified according to its relative value, as first, second, third and fourth, with the national descent of the persons named—given to illustrate the condition of the population at that era—and their estimated wealth.—Valentine, Hist. City of N. T., 319 and footnote.

Pursuant to order and apostille, issued by Colve on Feb. 1, "on a Petition presented by this W. Court. Jany. 16th," (p. 9), the city bench "commissioned and qualified from their Court . . . the president Burgomaster Johannis de Peyster and Scheper Wm. Beeckman to help make out with the Commissioners on the part of the Supreme Government and Commonalty, a general assessment enacted by the Honble Governor and put the same into execution according to his Honble order." On the 10th, the city court, "being assembled Collegialiter," addressed a letter to the villages of Midwout, Breukelen, and Amersfort, in which they said they "doe assert this week" their "engagement and promise to furnish and collect" for the city "some monies," and requested them "particularly to assist" and "send the monies demanded by the earliest opportunity."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 51–52. See Feb. 14/24.

Feb. 9

The Lord Governor General and rigorous Council of War of N. of Netherland dispensing justice in the name and by authority of their High Mightinesses . . . have condemned and sentenced . . . Aml Cesar . . . that with the upper part of the body naked he shall run through the garrison of this fortress and be beaten with Switches for as long as the Council of War shall deem well and thereupon, with the ensign above the head, shall again be admitted among the company, in order to perform his duty as before." At the same time Jacob Farmont is sentenced to run the gauntlet in a similar manner, "his sword to be broken before [his] feet by the executioner," and he to be banished from the island for four years. Jacob Frick must "ride the wooden horse with 24 lb. weight on each leg, during the time that Jacob Farmont shall run the gauntlet."—Translated from the Dutch in N. Y. Col. MSS., XIX: 305–6.

Feb. 10

On this date, Colve finds that "the respective Commissioners appointed at two different times to view the property of the Burgthers" had "made a written report of their assessment," varying very much "in divers items," so he ordered that each set of commissioners should name three, "each in its Board," who were to meet at the city hall on the following Monday morning (19th) to consider anew and "revise the valuation" which had been made, determine the value, and then report the result in writing. Ibid., II: 68. See Feb. 9/19.

Feb. 14-24

A further list of the two days to view the property of the Burgthers had "made a written report of their assessment," varying very much "in divers items," so he ordered that each set of commissioners should name three, "each in its Board," who were to meet at the city hall on the following Monday morning (19th) to consider anew and "revise the valuation" which had been made, determine the value, and then report the result in writing. Ibid., II: 68. See Feb. 9/19.

On this date, pursuant to a second order of the governour general (Colve), the valuation is obtained, "in the city Hall of this City, by the Commissioners, from the second compiled valuation of the best and most affluent inhabitants of this City." The list of 62 names is recorded, with a total valuation of $20,000 fl. in Holland currency on 62 estates. Frederick Felipe was the highest assessed, with $8,000 fl.; Cornelis Steenwyck and Nikolaus de Meyer followed with $5,000 fl. each; Olden Stevensen of Cortlandt, with $4,500 fl.; Jeromius Ebbing, $5,000 fl.; Cornelis van Ruyven, $15,000 fl.; and Johannes de Peyster and Jacob Leisler, $15,000 fl. each.—Ibid., II, 699–700; Ecles. Rec., I: 64–73. For a later order, see March 7/17. Valentine, in Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 805–9, gives in three separate columns the first valuation, the second valuation, and the "extracted valuation.

Another interesting list of the inhabitants and their property at this time was compiled by Valentie, who explains that his estimate of the wealth of the several inhabitants is not based upon any one document, but is compiled from several sources and is designed to be only an approximate valuation. The inhabitants are grouped by streets and described in the list of the Owners Of houses and lots in the city, about the year 1674, at the final cession to the English; the property being classified according to its relative value, as first, second, third and fourth, with the national descent of the persons named—given to illustrate the condition of the population at that era—and their estimated wealth.—Valentine, Hist. this purpose on all imported and exported Indian goods and mer-chandises;" also that the governor thought some persons, such as the wealthiest or widows, should be excluded from the obligation; and that he "judged it most proper to make use of the said monies as well to strengthen the Fort and City and for this purpose to appoint two Commissioners to dispose of the receipt and disbursement, in consideration whereof the contributions to be collected for this purpose were to be called the "Waters," and that the wine at the house of the burgomaster and the wine at the house of the beadle himself."—Rec. 17-27
ings. They say that, on Jan. 5, they visited "the houses of all the inhabitants" of the city "and found divers fire places very much exposed to cause a conflagration," for which reason they "warned and notified" such persons "to remedy and improve the same, thus to prevent mischief." They also "caused the City Crier to make known, that if any one of the inhabitants had possession of "any City fire buckets," he "was to deliver them up without delay at the City Hall" or hand them to the fire-wardens; but they were not able to collect more than 59 fire-buckets, three of which were being repaired by Ab't Hardenbroeck. Moreover, they "also found that only one ladder and one old bucket was kept, which were "unfit for use in case of fire or other misfortune."

They now, therefore, request the court to continue them with "as many fire ladders and fire books" as the court thinks necessary. The court authorizes the fire-wardens "to have made such supplies of ladders, hooks and such like materials at the expense of the City" as they themselves consider to be necessary.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 66-67.

24 "The stamp master" (see Feb. 19/20) asks the city court whether he is "also to stamp the mill measures, as several persons" have been to him about it. The court decrees "that the mill-measurers shall also be stampled, and that the stamper shall receive 3 stiv. a piece for stamping."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 68-69.

"The city court resolves to send a petition to Gov. Colvre, requesting "that no vessels nor persons shall leave the city, as it is "now open water." On account of the shorteness of the time, they send the three burgomasters instead, "to confer with the Governor" in the matter.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 69. See Feb. 26/March 8.

26 The following order is issued by the governor's council:—
Mar. 8 "Whereas divers Skippers and Sloop captains have requested leave to sail to Esopus and Willemsstadt with their vessels, whereby this city may be much exposed and thereby stranded; and for a greatly weakened," the court of the city is ordered to summon the ships masters and instruct them, that for the better security of this city, "no more than two sloops" shall "go at once to Willemsstadt and Esopus and one to the South River, and that alternately," as shall "determine by lot;" also, that the sloops shall "not convey any passengers hence without passport."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 695. The city court meet the shipmasters March 10, and informed them of the order. After hearing it a majority of the skippers asked that the earnings be "put in a common fund" from which each of them should "then draw his share out according to the size of his sloop." The city court presented this conclusion of the skippers to Colvre, who, on the 15th, ordered "that said skippers and barquiers" should, "according to the majority of their opinions, sail in a common stock," etc., in line with their conclusion.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 70-71. See April 8/18.

27 King Charles I, by his nostrum, is quoted from "Our Court at Mar. Whitehall," for publishing the peace of Westminster (see Feb. 9/ 9) between England and The Netherlands.—From the original preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Mar. 3 Gov. Colvre, by proclamation to the five Dutch towns on Long Island, the towns of Harlem, Fordham, and Bergen, orders them "on the first notice" of the approach of the enemy to come to the defence of the city of New Orange, "provided with proper hand and side arms." Those who fail to comply are to be "declared traitors and perjurers, and consequently be proceeded against as enemies, or be punished with death and confiscation of all their goods, as an example to others."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: Mar. 696, 701.

"From the nomination made by the Under-Schout and Schepens beyond the Fresh Water," the city court elects and swears in Ariaen Cornelissen as commissary, "in place of Dirck Jansen Kuyper, who is now gone away from thence."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 72.

Fear of the approach of an English expedition decides Colvre to order that "all and other public works" be again "made new for the fortification of the City and fort." The city bench approves the governor's proposal.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 63.

6-16 "The fortifications already erected and still required to be constructed on this Island Manhattan, . . . should now be brought in a short time to a wished-for end, which it is not possible to effect in a proper manner unless some means to that end be devised and furnished, from which the expenses . . . may be defrayed and paid," the Council orders that the levy is now to be made "as a loan" by those whose capital on valuation by the commissaries is in excess of 4,000 guilders in wampum value. The loan demanded is "the hundredth penny of the capital" assessed. This loan is to be repaid "from the extraordinary duty imposed the 10th October of last year on exported heavers and peltries," and from certain imports. The duties are to remain in force until the loans for fortifications are all repaid.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 697. See March 14/15.

The governor appoints Jacobus Rande Water, the town major of New Orange, "Book-keeper and Receiver of the moneys which will be furnished and advanced pursuant to the Proclamation dated 17th instant [5], for completing the fortifications of this city." He is to pay out the money only on order of the governor.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 701. Such orders for large amounts were issued by Colvre on April 25 and May 18.—Ibid., II: 701, 714. As some persons were detract in the payment of their proportions, Colvre ordered the city court, on June 14, to begin "immediate execution" against them.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 719. See also May 2/12.

So that the inhabitants of the suburbs may come to the aid of the city in case any enemies arrive, Gov. Colvre commissions Cornelis Struyvcky and Cornelis Hardenbroek to these districts, and orders the "skippers and boatmen" of the city "promptly to obey whatever orders" are given to them in the premises.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 702.

Gov. Colvre issues the following order:—"Whereas the vessels lying in the harbor near the public Weigh-house of this city are considered to be seriously in the way should the enemy arrive, and it is therefore necessary that they be brought thence in season, inside the float (in 't ovaat), therefore all skippers, barge and boat-men of this city, are hereby ordered and instructed to bring their vessels from the said harbor inside the float, and to anchor before this city, and on the arrival of more than one ship at a time, to haul them behind the ship Surinam near the circular battery (rendel) in front of the widow Loockermans, on pain of having all vessels without discrimination burnt, which will then be found lying in the way.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 702. The fortification here referred to is in front of the house of the late burgomaster Hardenbroek, located as about in front or slightly eastward of the present No. 117 Pearl St., and is shown on PL 17, Vol. I.

By the sixth article of the treaty of Westminster (see Feb. 9/ 9) Charles II now addresses the states-general, thus:—"We desire that you would order the dispatch as early as possible of the necessary instructions to your Governor or Commandant of the place called New-York in the West Indies, to surrender it to Sieur Edmond Andros, or to such other person as we shall depute thereto, with all its dependencies, arms, artillery, ammunition and material of war, of what sort soever they may be, and in the same state as they were generally thereon, see April 6/16.

The states-general, having considered the letter of Charles II of Mar. 31/Apr. 26 (q. v.), resolves that the board of admiralty of the state of Zealand and also at Amsterdam shall be advised to give such orders that ... New Netherland, ... be vacated and restored" to the king of Great Britain. "And that to such end the officers and military, &c., who have reduced said place and still keep possession of it, be withdrawn with all their property, artillery, gunpowder, implements of war and everything they have had, taken and con quered there ... leaving the aforesaid place, also the canoon, gunpowder and all implements of war appertaining thereto, in such a state as they were at the time New Netherland was mastered." Orders shall also be given to the governor or commander there to give up New Netherland to Edmund Andros, or to such other person as his Majesty shall depute.

In a letter of the same date to King Charles, the states-general expresses the hope that the king will leave the inhabitants of New Netherland in "full and entire possession of the lands, property and rights of their ancestors."—N. T. Col. Docs., II: 545-46.

Because "great damage" has been "done to the fortifications" of the city "by cattle, and particularly hogs," which have been kept in herds along the public streets, and also have been the cause of "great stench and filth," by which the city became "infeceted," so that "without sickness" has resulted, Gov. Colvile now forbids "the running of hogs, be they big or little, within this city along the public streets," and requires that they be "confined in inclosed and fenced places." So, likewise, horses and cows are for bidden to roam within the city's walls "or to go along the public streets without a person to drive them to and from pasture."—N. T.

Col. Docs., II: 704-05.

On complaint of the magistrates of New Harlem, Gov. Colvile interdicts all persons from "going to shoot or catch hogs in the public woods" on Manhattan Island without an official permit, and orders "written notices" to be posted informing the inhabitants that cattle or hogs are not "to run and graze in the public woods" without official consent.—N. T. Col. Docs., II: 706.

Forty "barqueurs" subscribe their names to a petition to the city court. They state in this that they have entered into a "lottery" to "turns by to Fort Nassau and the Village of Swartenburgh. The entries to go to the amount of $160" (see Feb. 26/Mar. 8). They ask the court to be allowed to choose persons "to receive the earned freight money" and keep an account thereof, "until each sloop shall have made one trip," after which each skipper shall receive his share of the common funds, "according to the size of his sloop." Some skippers have not been favourable to the plan and therefore permission was not granted to allow them to go on an enabling order, and this is granted.—Rec. N. Am., VIII: 77-78.

Two of the skippers still remaining obdurate, the court, on the 24th, ordered the sheriff to inform them that they must obey the order.—Ibid., VII: 79; cf. also 83. See May 25/June 4.

Samuel Forman of Oyster Bay is sentenced by Gov. Colvile "to be severely whipped with rods" and then banished from the province, because he came to the city of New Orange without permission, making there a "great noise and uproar along the public streets," and even going "into the church" and presuming there, "he commits in the divine service," to a "great outcry ... abusing with great levity, the Word of God, and blasphemying His Holy Name."—N. T. Col. Docs., II: 705.

The ports of the weigh-house ask the city court to give them also the office of grain carriers in the city. They are referred to Gov. Colvile in the matter.—Ibid., VIII: 80.

At this point Charles II orders that his new ambassador to France, the Earl of Burlington, should proceed to the court for an informal audience.—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 198.

21* For baptizing a child of Reformed Church parents, on April 18, May 1 "when the father was from home," Jannette de Kleuse is brought before the city court by Schout De Milt and, although the pleas ignorance and asks forgiveness "if she did wrong," she is con demned to "be imprisoned and remain there until further order." May 1

22* The house of "the publick house in the prospect of the Holy Sacrament of Baptism."—Rec. N. Am., VIII: 82.

The govermour and council of war have found that it is impossible to repay the principal property owners of the city who have been assessed to loan money for fortifying the towns (see Jan.

17/Feb. 1). Moreover, an additional sum is now needed," for the further support" of the garrison at Fort Willem Hendrick and for "other public expenses." To raise this money, they now decree,

"in default of other ready effects" or equity, to hypothecate certain "pieces of metal cannon" in the fort which may be sent to

Holland if necessary to be sold there.—N. T. Col. Docs., II:

The Mohawks submit several proposals to Gov. Colvile together with gifts of wampum. They renew pledges of friendship and loyalty, saying that if the French should come against the Dutch they will "march out with the Dutch and live and die with them."

They express pleasure at the strength of the fort and hope that no other nation will become master of it. As they are going further to renew their covenants they desire permission to pass through New Netherland on their return, and as they "are old men" they request to be taken up the river in a yacht." The governor answers in courteous terms, thanking them for their offers of help, and promising to protect them against invasion by their enemies.

He hopes to provide transportation for them. On June 5, they are returned and wanted to be taken home, but requested that some trade regulations might be made so that they might once again buy a duffel coat for one beaver and other goods in proportion.

The governor explained that the high prices were due to the long European famine, that he would sell to them as cheap as possible.

Three of the prized duffel coats were given them, together with gunpowder, lead, socks, and a hat, and they were promised passage on the first yacht that went up the river.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 479-82; ibid., II: 712-13, 716-17.

Schout De Milt repeats a charge made (Rec. N. Am., VIII: 82) against Antony Jansen, an old resident of Manhattan, who had come from Salecm in Morocco. The charge is "that in the night between the 28th and 29th of April" Jansen "suffered an Englishman, named Edward Bambri [a Quaker], dwelling at Martzaera's Neck, to sleep" (at his house), which was "directly contrary to the Placard of the Hon'd Govr General enacted on that subject." De Milt asks that Jansen be fined, as required by law, 600 florins, with costs.

Jansen's wife testifies that "the Quaker was brought at Nine o'Clock in the evening to the house by Margriet Phillips' daughter who told her at the same time, that the Quaker was already notified of said Quaker being to town. Margriet Phillips and her daughter deny their complicity and the court adjourns the case until the next court day. It then condemned Jansen "for reasons" in a fine of only one beaver and costs.—Rec. N. Am., VII:

82, 84, 85, 90. On June 9, the schooner was empowered to levy by execution on Jansen's estate and the present city plan. See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl., 87, Vol. II, and II: 365.

See also Oct. 7/17, 1673; and of Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 29, and N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 636. Graebner, in his history of the Luthemans, says that the original of this grant is still preserved in the archives of the first Lutheran Church. He gives a translation in his work op. p. 66. May 12-26 By order of the governor's council, Jacques Cortelyou, the surveyor, is directed "to sett off," among others, the lot "for the Lutherans at the lot, South of the great garden" (see May 12/22), and the burgomasters are "required to depute some of themselves to point out said lots [meaning all of those listed], and assist in the survey."—N. T. Col. Docs., II: 216.

20-30 Matthias Nicolls, writing from Stratford to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, expresses the belief that the consequences of many of the Dutch "are accusing them not to have dealt our Countrymen with equal Civility as they rec'd from us during the English Government." He hopes "some more politic previson will be made hereafter to invite & encourage more English Inhabitants there [New York], whose fidelity to their Prince & Country will prove a stronger Bulwark of Defense then other Fortificous Garrison'd by Mercenaries hath done."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 147.

June

22-25 The burgomasters tell the skipper that Gov. Colv has by order June released the ships (see Feb. 26/Mar. 8), "so that each of them 2-12 have been made against some persons who neglected and refused to pay the Boak Keeper Jacobus van de Water the hundredth peiny, which pursuant to the assessment [see Feb. 14/14]... was ordered to be raised by form of loan for the payment of the incurred and still to be incurred expenses in the repairation of the fortifications on the Island Manhattann." Colv directs the city court "to proceed by immediate execution, without distinction of persons against the neglectful or contumacious."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 97.
On the 23d, the city bench voted to publish an order on the following day, from the city hall, that all persons in arrears must pay within three days' time or suffer levy by execution.—Ibid., VII:

16-26 Ten years have now gone by since the surrender to the English in 1664, under the terms of which, provision was made for the liquidation of the claims of the Dutch Company in New Netherland by a lien on its property in this province. For various reasons this property has decreased in value. The debts of the company have been assigned to the company's creditors. Colv now orders that all tangible property of the company in New Netherland shall, "with the approbation of the Lord Majors," in Holland, continue "to be and remain unalienably pledged" to the creditors until they are paid in full. Cornelis van Ruyven, as receiver of the West India Company, has the accounts. He is now required "to hand over the accounts: books and journals, and other proofs thereto belonging," to Councillor Steenwyck, Secretary Bayard, and Jacobus van de Water, who are to keep them safely until commissioners are chosen by the creditors for the settlement of the debts.

17-27 Matthias Nicolls, writing from Stratford to Gov. Winthrop, June of 1664, tells that under Colv's proclamation of Peace, & of ships bound from our native Country to this
New World, (which may quickly be expected) is very welcome:
I suppose the Dutch at length will give Credit to it, though contrary to their desires or Expectations, (I mean that New York is excluded in the Articles) since the arrivial of a great Ketch, which came into wharfe on Saturday last, from Great Britain & assurances both Dutch & English may have put them out of Doubt." It is rumoured, he says, that Andrew Newport (see July 22/Aug. 1) is to come as English governor.—Winthrop Papers, XV: 148.

22- Matthias Nicolls, writing from "Massethill Kills near New Aug. Towne upon Long Island" to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, says that the rumour about Andrew Newtport (see June 17/27) "is quite smother'd", and that "The Governor's name now allowed of, is one Mayor of Colli Edmund Andrews (see Aug. 3/14), as by directions of Letters to him from the Barbados, & divers other Circumstances doth appear." He tells further of the misfortune that has come to ex-Gov. Lovelace, while travelling in the Mediterranean region, being captured by Turks and taken to Algiers. "Here all his Jewells (to the value of several hundreds of pounds) & last Reserves of Treasure went most unfortunately all to Wreck." His ransom is expected, English merchants having offered 500 crowns. "He is a Patterne," he continues, "of a great alteration of Fortune, from a Governor amongst Christians in America, in so short a time to bee burr'ed away at so great distance to be a slave to the Turkes, but that is not our humane Nature subject to."—Winthrop Papers, 10-11 The time for nominating a new city bench having arrived, the court assembling at the city hall for that purpose. From the nominees, Gov. Colvile appoints, on the 13th, his fiscal, Capt. Willem Knyff, to be city sheriff, displacing Anthony de Milt; Johannes van Brugh and Willem Beeckman, as burgomasters; and Jacob Kip, Gelyn Verslack, Francois Bombocht, Christopher Hooglandt, and Stephanus van Cortlandt, as schepens.—Rec. N. Am., VII:

110-14.
3-13 Matthias Nicolls, writing from Flushing to Maj. John Winthrop, says of Andros (see July 22/Aug. 1): "He was in his youth a Page to the Queene of England, hath married Mr. John Neu cros's sister, and Cravens who bee brings over with him, Hee was to come out of Engl 3 about the beginning of June." He says further that he had a letter from Col. Manning (see Jan. 15, 1675) to the effect that he has "had the good luck to bee acquitted by the King & Council about his surrender of the Fort," and that he expects to come over to these parts again, but without Employ." He reports
"no News in Engl 3 of Colli Lovelace."—Winthrop Papers, XVIII: 141.
4-14 The gravestone of Thomas Willett, the first mayor of New Aug. York (see June 12, 1665), records this date as the day of his death.
He was buried at Swaney's burying ground on the shore of Long miles south of Providence, on Narragansett Bay.—Holmes, Annals (1829), I: 368. On Oct. 18, 1913, the City Club of New York unveiled a monument to his memory at that place (now called Riverside); and on Nov. 17, 1913, a tablet to his honour was placed 6-16 Andros is required by the Duke of York to put into execution, in the territories under his government, the laws granted to the duke by the king's "Letters Patent" (see March 1, 1665). These laws, "digested into one volume," are annexed to the duke's order to Andros. The order also directs Andros, with the advice and help of his council, "carefully to peruse and consider yr 5 same, and if you finde it necessary for ye ease and benefit of ye people and yr 5 good of my service to make any alterations, addicions or amendm^s

"The Duke of York issue a warrant to Gov. Andros, authorizing him to seize the estate of Francis Lovelace, late governor, to satisfy a debt of about £7,000.—N. Y. Col. Dict., III: 126. See Oct. 27/Nov. 6.
On Nov. 3 Andros, using instead of the sheriff to attach the lands, houses, and estate of the late govern-our. The sheriff's return, dated the following day, reported the seize of "ye great house near the Stadt house y't Mr Van Clyffe lives in and the garden house in the broadway," and "two parcelles of land . . . from Coll Francis Lovelace which formerly belonged to Capt Willter and the Domiche which lies betwixt Derick Sickars &
Mt Adrian Toy." Appraisers were appointed, and on March 27, 1675, Andros made an inventory of the places and lands to the amount of £31,421.314. This is entered in detail in N. Y. Col. MSS., XXVII: 14, 72, and is printed in the Third Annual Report of the State Historin (1897), 216-27, 289-381. In this way the land, which the heirs and widow of Dominique Bogardus had conveyed to Lovelace in 1671, became a part of the "Duke's farm." It later became the property of Trinity Church.—Brooad, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 271.
In the city court, Martin Hاردwen brings action against Frederick Philipsen and Thomas Lewis. He says they "bired him for a year as miller at their mill" (in Yorkers), and that they discharged him. He wishes "to know the reason." They reply that he "represented himself as a capable miller and that he nevertheless knew little or nothing of it."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 115. On Sept. 4, the court gave the matter over to arbitrators for a hearing, to reconcile the litigants or report an award.—Ibid., VII: 119.
On Oct. 2, Hardwen told the court that Philipsen had "engaged him as miller for his water mill for one year for the sum of £800. And after he . . . had been some days at the mill, he was discharged therefrom" by Philipsen "without any cause." He proved "by divers witnesses" that he had "manufactured good flour thereon," and demanded £802 "for damage suffered, for loss of time," and "the affection inflicted on him" by the defendants, with costs of the suit. The court condemned Philipsen to pay to Hardwen £200 bil, because "he was discharged . . . without any legiti-mate cause from his engagement, and for the afront, loss of time, etc. cause to the plaintiff." Philipsen was charged also with the costs for "the appearance of the Secretaries and Messengers," while the remaining costs were put upon Hardwen.—Ibid., VII: 124-25.

The city's creditors, among them "the labouring people and contractors," daily importune the burgomasters for payment.
This leads the burgomasters to present to Gov. Colvile an account of the expenses incurred by the city for fortifications and other purposes since the time of the recapture by the Dutch (which shows a debt in this regard of £6110:18, seavant), and to appeal to the governor for some media for securing the funds necessary for liquidating these obligations (see Feb. 14/24). On Sept. 7, Colvile granted them "the receipt of the product of the Scales [public weigh-house receipts] and Tapestries excite" of the city, from the preceding May 1 until the revenues reached the amount of arenars.
The public carters of the city have complained in a petition to the city court that "the ordnance...is made with material depl<Jyment (see Nov. 29, 1670), and have, moreover, on their departure, sold their carts, horses and places with privilege to cart; also, that there were certain boys, who in like manner rode in the cart above the number fixed," from which they demand redress.

The court decrees that the boys shall "not ride Cart any more," and shall also "leave off driving cart" within the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 122.
The city court "reciprocally" exacts the ordinance (see Aug. 22, 1666) relative to punctuality and attendance of its members at ses-

"an apostille granted him" by Gov. Colvile "on his petition," giving him "the office of Secretary" of the city, in place of Nicolaes Bayard, who resigned it a year ago to become the provincial secretary.
Herrman requests "a fair allowance for his last year's service as Secretary." On Oct. 5/15 (p. 87), he was granted 250 £.—Rec. N. Am.,

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1674. The people dwelling "beyond the Fresh Water" having made Sept. nominations for a new magistracy, the city court, with Gov. Colvle's approval, chooses the following persons for one year: viz: Jan Petersen Haaring and Adriaen Cornelissen, old schepen, and Jacob Pietersen de Groot and Wolffert Webber, as new schepen, "to govern the Outside People in their district according to the instruction granted them."—Rec. N. Am., VII, 127-35.

1675. Formerly a matter "aggravating and spoiling fence," have not been observed; on the contrary, 10 fences or gardens, "have not been observed; on the contrary, 8 many persons have been in the habit of "climbing over, breaking and trampling them under foot" while "hunting and shooting partridges and other birds." The city court, with Gov. Colvle's approval, renews the ordinances on this subject, and forbids "all persons, of what rank soever . . . to climb, break and spoil any fences of gardens, orchards or enclosed places," or to shoot "partridges or other birds" in the city "or in the public streets," on forfeiture of the firearms and payment of a fine. This law was "published from the City Hall" on the 9th.—Rec. N. Am., VII, 127-28.

Oct. 1675. The burgomasters and schepens meet at the city hall on the 15th of the month, and inform the mayor of the ships that he has "now received by the National Ship the Mayfl/Trupt parcels and absolute orders" from The Netherlands, "for the support of this Province of N. Netherland to his Majesty of Great Britain, pursuant to the Treaty of Peace," (see Feb. 9) and is required to "return home with the garrison as soon as possible."—Rec. N. Am., VII, 185; Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4to ed.), III, 35: Israel Chauncy, writing to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut (by letter dated May 19, 1675), says: "Procured two Dutch ships at N-Yorke upon the last sabbath was a fortnight, who have brought orders from the States for the surrendering of that place to the English, upon which we hear that Mounseur Colvle would have delivered the place into the Hands of the Burgers, but they refused to accept such a change. The same ships doe bring Intelligence of the English Govt very quickly after them: . . . Mr Abraham Pierson Junr. is at Milford, and hath bin in these parts near a fortnight; he is a great admirer of Mr Calfe [Colve] at Yorkes, and speakes much for his Justification in his former and more late proceedings; and when I spoke with him was in great hopes that the Dutch would still hold the rule there but I do not wonder at it, I do conceive that he be and others of them have bin whipt to this perswasion."—Winthrop Papers, XII, 133, in Mass. Hist. Soc. See Oct. 31; Nov. 10.

1675. Ephraim Herrman (see Sept. 24) is allowed £200, for his service as clerk of the city court last year.—Rec. N. Am., VII, 128.

15-25. At a joint meeting of the city court and the burgier court mar- tial (see March 22, 1675, Aldenda), Gov. Colvle states that "his departure" is "very near," and that he will "probably not be able to wait the arrival [see Oct. 25; Nov. 1] of the expected Governor from his posts: it is trespasser to appear to the Governor, to acquaint the Meeting thereof and at the same time to order, that the Burgomasters and Schepens together with the Burgier Court Martial "nominate a double number of ten persons," from whom he will elect five men, who, after his departure, are to "possess and exercise the executive authority until the arrival of the expected ships and the Governor of his Majesty of England," and who are "also authorized to surrender the country" to whomsoever exhibits "his Majesty's commission." This joint body takes an adjournment until the next afternoon. They then nominated ten men, eight of whom were from their own number.—Rec. N. Am., VII, 129-34.

1727. The city bench resolves to ask Gov. Colvle, among other things, in regard to "the extraordinary tax imposed for the payment of the monies loaned for the repairs of the fort's and City's fortifications," and recommends that those persons who were subjected to a loss of labor and removal of their houses be paid out of the above-mentioned tax already collected, according to the placard of the 17th March last and the orders to Book Keeper Jacobus van de Water, which so express and promises; also, that those persons who would have to "accept any houses and lots" within the city, in lieu of "comes and lots for another year," be "freed from" those persons who came later to "claim the same houses and lots."—Rec. N. Am., VII, 127-28.

The city still owes about 1,500 guilders, besides a year's salary due the city's secretary, while the city treasurer has "scarcely any provision of money thereof." The city court now asks Gov. Colvle to give them an order for the payment of the secretary's salary, Oct. 17-27, meaning, evidently, with assistance from the provincial exchequer.

Rec. N. Am., VII, 134-35. As "many of the inhabitants" are "greatly interested in the confiscated estate of the late Governor Lovelace [see Aug. 6] and several others" in the city, Gov. Colvle had appointed commissioners to settle the same. The city court now asks him so to dispose of the matter, that each party "may receive his estate from, as far as said estate may extend."—Rec. N. Am., VII, 135.

A commission, in Dutch, empowering Capt. Philip Carteret and Mathias Nicolls to receive from Gov. Colvle such stores as are to be delivered pursuant to the articles of peace, bears this date. A letter to Colvle is found in "Hist. N. Y., Eng., 441.

The new governor, Sir Edmund Andros, arrives unexpectedly. He brings, as first councilor, Anthony Brockholl, who has been appointed to succeed him in case he becomes incapacitated; William Dyre, collector of customs; a chaplain; and 10 soldiers, all in the pay of the Duke of York. The governor is authorized to form a council of not more than ten men.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III, 220-21; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II, 170-71.

Andros, from his ship, "The Diamond," which is at anchor near Staten Island, dispatches a letter to "the Hble The Governor Commander in Chief in The New Netherlands" (Colvle), requesting that a time be appointed to take possession of the government in behalf of "His Majesty of Great Britain Pursuant to the Late Articles of Peace," etc.—N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIII: 413 (Albany); Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4to ed.), III, 45. For a narrative of events from this time to the surrender by Colvle on Oct. 31 (Nov. 10, by Civil look), see Brooks, Hist. N. Y., VII: 270-77; Van Rensselaer, Hist. N. Y., II, 170-71.

Andros, still on shipboard, having been asked "Last Night" by Colvle to "come in a private capacity," writes in reply that he is surprised that so time has been set for him to take over the government, and that he has "no Orders to Land upon a private acket. The ships that accompany him, he states, are "all very expensive," and are intended for service elsewhere as soon as he is "possessed of this Place."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4to ed.), III, 46.

Gov. Colvle is present at the city hall, at a joint assembly of the burgiers and schepens with the burgier council of war, to recommend "most particularly to them" to "take good care for the prevention of all mischiefs by night or by day," and likely to be occasioned by the malice of any persons and the insolence of the regular soldiers; and "further enjoin on them that if any soldiers" are "found in the streets exhibiting insolence" they shall be secured and brought to him to be punished as they deserve. The joint assembly proceeds to draw up an order for regulating the city watch by the four train-bands or militia. The provost and sergeants of these bands have complained that the men do not "keep parade and watch as they ought," and are absent from duty "very frequently," so that they are "unable to place sentinels on their posts at night. He deems it necessary that all the resident men and women, upon his order, to appear to him in person, and give an account of his present and of their disposal, and of the manner in which they observe the laws and regulations of the place. For this reason, he has given an order to "receive all the articles of the said places, and that all the descriptions of them shall be made for this purpose. In the morning the next morning" on the breaking up of the watch, and, in cases of refusal of payment, shall proceed at once against all such persons without distinction, and "take as much goods out of their houses" as cover the amount of the fines.—Rec. N. Am., VII, 137.

Andros, being informed by Colvle that the latter would be ready "within the space of eight days," to order the fort and government, writes again to him from "The Diamond," asking that a certain time be fixed, sooner than the time mentioned, when he can take possession.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4to ed.), III, 46-47.

The burgomasters and schepens, with the council of war, assemble at the city hall, and, with Gov. Colvle's approval, choose Cornelis Brouws, Jacob van Breugel, and Willem Beekman "to repair on board his Majesty's frigate now anchored under Staten Island and there to welcome the Governor Maj't Andrews [Andros] and at the same time to request some privileges for the advantage of the Commonalty." This delegation carries out its mission and returns on the same day, and reports: "His Excellency has told them to "assure the inhabitants of the Dutch nation" that they shall "participate in the same privileges with those of the English nation," and that he will "promote their interest as much as possible." He refers further "to the instructions given him by his Royal Majesty and Highness of York."—Rec. N. Am., VII, 138.
Proposals are sent by Colve to Andros. These relate specifically to the settlement of the debts of the province; permitting all judgments to stand good; permitting the owners of real and personal property to retain the possession of their homes; proving the Dutch Nation, "to retain their customary Church privileges in Divine Service and Church discipline besides their Father's laws & customs in the division of their Inheritance;" excusing them from Impressmen; permitting each Congregation whether Lutheran or others to "support their own Poor;" permitting all public houses to continue "according to the Customs now existing;" paying the creditors of the West India Company, etc. Andros replied on Nov. 12, acquiescing in general terms to these proposals with one or two minor exceptions.— Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 49-51.

28. Andros writes Colve again, assuring him that he is "not only given me in writings, for damages sustained from those under your Comand, since the time limited for Peace in these Parts."

29. Nov. Andros issues a "proclamation" confirming "all former grants privileges or concessions heretofore granted and all estates legally possessed by any under his Royal Highness before the late Dutch government, As also all legal, judicail proceedings during that government." He also confirms the "known book of Laws formerly established and in force under his royal highness government, . . . the which are to be observed and practiced together with the manner and time of holding Courts therein meconzed as heretofore." All magistrates and civil officers "belonging there unto" are to be chosen and established accordingly.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 52-53; Col. Laws N. Y. (1894), I: 107-8; M. C. C., II: 52-53; and Vol. I, p. 169, of this work (where it is incorrectly cited "1675"). For an account of the judiciary of the Dutch period, up to 1674, see an article by Chief Justice Daly, in Stone's Hist. of N. Y. City, Appendix VII; and an article by Jameson in Mag. Am. Hist. (May, 1882), VIII: 315-29. Regarding the development of the judicial system during the English and American period, see Jameson's account in Mag. Am. Hist., VIII: 598-611.

The last two mayors under the former English régime, Matthias Nicolls and John Lawrence, are now appointed by Andros as mayor and deputy mayor, respectively. William Darvall, Frederick Philpott, John Winder and John Moore were also appointed, and Thomas Gibbs, sheriff.—M. C. C., VIII: 145: Brodhead, Ap. cit., II: 275-74, and documents there cited. These names (except John Winder) appear on the first page of Vol. II of the M. C. M. (MS.), under date of Nov. 13 (q.v.).

The Order of New York is renewed to seize public property in the possession of private persons. The return of the sheriff on this order reported the finding of mustard pickaxes, spades, and carbines.—N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIV: 11, 13 (Albany).

The first meeting of the newly appointed court of mayor and aldermen (see Nov. 10, 1664) occurs. The first page of the record, beautifully penned (see reproduction in Peterson & Edward, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, insert between pp. 20 & 21), reveals the appointment of John Sharpe as "Towne Clearke," and Thomas Moore, "Citty Cryer;" the names of ten "Wine and Cume Porters" and of 13 "Carmen" appear also.—M. C. M. (MS.), III: 1.

Property rights were duly respected when New Orange (Dutch) became New York (English). The first case recorded as coming before the newly constituted court of mayor and aldermen was that of William Darvall vs. Peter Aldrix. Darvall happened to be in Boston when the change to government took place. On his return he found Aldrix in possession of his sheep. Despite the fact that the latter "produced a bill of sale under the hand of Governo Colve, for his said Boate, and a Copy of the Instrument of Confection," the jury, composed largely of Englishmen, "brought in their Verdict, That they found for ye 50l, The Restoration of the Boate in Controversie, with her appurtenances and Cuts of Colve."—M. C. M. (MS.).

In another suit, Capt. Matthias Nicolls vs. Greteye Provoost, of the same date, the plaintiff, who had exited himself during the months of Dutch rule, foind on his return that certain buildings he had erected at an expense of a thousand guilders on land rented from deendant had been removed by the latter. The court ordered "that the deft forthwith deliver and make good the same within 14 days, and the plt to pay ye 50l to her root."—Ibid.

The mayor and aldermen meet with the governor in the fort, and it is decided that four and meats shall be examined and marked with the town brand before being shipped (see Nov. 10). Orders are promulgated concerning weights and measures, baker's bread, fortifications, and the gate at Smith's Valley.—Col. Coun. Min., 10.

The last two orders are expanded thus in Ex. Coun. Min., MS., III: (part 2), 4: "An Order to restrain ye cutting up & destroying ye Fortifications: ye 50l About ye Gate at Valley, As followeth: That a Little Gate be made for a foot plat[.]"

The court of mayor and aldermen, "finding great inconveniences attending them by the bringing in writings and papers written in the Dutch Language, doe therefore order that for the future, noe papers shall bee brought to this Court but in English. Excepting poor people who are not able to pay for translating."—M. C. M. (MS.), Nov. 17, 1674.

Capt. John Manning appears "before Court Satt," and acknowledges "what hee had reported relating to MF John Lawrence his Loosing the Mace and Gloves" (see Nov. 179), it was by misinformation, and he is very sorry for it." The Court orders that Capt. Manning's acknowledgment shall be recorded "to ye end the Callumnie Cast on the said MF John Lawrence, by the said Asperation, may bee taken off."—M. C. M. The mayor's court orders that "the Brewers that haue the wyne porters to carry out their Beere as formerly was accustomed, and for the Brewers not to bring or bring up or brought down in their houses or Garretts, by any other persons, then their owne Servants, or the Corne Porters." The porters had petitioned for this order because the brewers, bakers, and others had been "setting day Laborers, on worke to carry up their own goods and other things, of which right apperteynes to them."—M. C. M. (MS.), Dec. 1, 1764.

By order of the mayor's court, new officers are named for Harlem from a double set of nominees. A constable takes the place of the schout, and David de Maret is appointed to that office. Instead of the Dutch word waterhoof, our "magnates" are named, Cornelius Jansen, Joost van Oblihs, Adolph Meyer, and John Dyckman. The last three were on the Dutch board (see Sept. 22/10.):—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), IV: 26.

The regulation of the estate of the former governor, Francis Lovelace (see Oct. 25/Nov. 0, 1763), is responsible for two court cases, of this date: the sheriff against Dirck van Cliff, who has rented a house next the city hall which has been attached by the sheriff on order of the governor "for account of Lovelace;" and the sheriff against Pardoo, who is in a house on Broadway which has been similarly attached. It is decided that neither tenant shall pay any rent until so ordered by the governor.—M. C. M. (MS.), Dec. 22, 1764.

To illustrate the domestic style of life among the principal English merchants who established themselves in this city immediately after they had settled here; so that we may understand their houses, Valentine has printed a description of the house and furnishings of John Winder, who kept a general store similar to those of country merchants of to-day. "His house was a double-one story building, his dwelling being in the same tenement with his store-house, divided therefrom by a wide hall, which was the common living-room of the family. In this ball were four Spanish tables, twelve old Turkey chairs, an old leather chair, a "King's arm's, two crimson cloths or carpets of Turkey-work, two leather Brazil carpets or rugs, two small looking-glasses, a screen, and horizons, and an hour-glass, besides the pewter and table-ware of the family. The family chamber adorned this hall, in which were the bed and its furniture; five pieces of tapestry adorned the wall. . . . The room back of this was the spare bed-room . . . One other room, occupied by the servants, constituted the extent of his establishment." The silver-plated of Mr. Winder was 447 ounces in weight.—Merc. Cos. Civil and_ (1768), 3-11; 12. Abstracts of Wills in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1892) 27.

The business of Cornelis Stenwyck, one of the old Dutch merchants, was also carried on in the same building in which he resided. "This was a double stone house, on the present south-east corner of Water and Church and Dutch Streets, with a kitchen extension on the north fronting the latter. Its value was about two thousand dollars, and it was, at that period, one of the best houses in the town. The part of the building on the corner was the occupied as the store. The hall ran through the centre, on the east side of which was the dwelling part of the house. The front room was the parlor. It contained a marble table, a wooden table, eleven pictures, seven Russia leather 1675 Peyster, and others petitioned the mayor and aldermen to intercede with the governor to relieve them of the obligation of taking the oath of allegiance and bearing arms against the Dutch.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., Oct. 41, 1675, and the former was entered against Cornelis Steenwyck, Nicholas Bayard, Johannes van Brugh, Egidius Luycx, William Beeckman, Jacob Kipp, and Antonio de Milis, for refusing and opposing the taking of the oath. Their goods were forfeited to the king, and an order was issued for the imprisonment of said persons (ibid., 40). A peremptory order was issued on Oct. 10 requiring all who had not taken the oath to do so by Nov. 24.—M. C. G., I: 5. On Nov. 1, Nicholas Bayard, "a prisoner in the Hole," was "released for the night on giving security for good behavior; and on Nov. 3, Kip, Steenwyck, Van Brugh, Beeckman, and Luycx submitted to the court and permitted to be allowed to take the oath.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 41.

15 A number of Dutch inhabitants appear before the court of mayor and aldermen and request a continuance of "their former privileges granted To them by Governor Nicolls:—1. "To have the Liberty of the Church." 2. "That their people shall not be Prest." 3. "That ye Articles of inheritance be confirmed." 4. "That they shall not be obliged to take up Arms against their own Nation." The court communicated to them the governor's reply that they must take the oath "without Condition, Articles, or otherwise" (ibid., Mar. 15, 1675). Forty-four took the required oath on March 17, although the petitioners of two days before desired the court to intercede with the governor. The minutes further show that 193 were sworn on March 18 and 19.

A proclamation of the governor is published by the court of mayor and aldermen to the effect that "true subjects" must inform the governour of "Muttinuous words or Actions they shall See or heare done or Spoken."—M. C. M., MS., March 19, 1675.

20 John Smedes conveys to Coast Ten Eycx, Caarren Leertsen, Jacob Abrams, and John Harberding (Liber Deeds, I: 126, Albany), most of the land subsequently called "The Shoemakers' Land," the grantees being all tanners and shoemakers. The land was "to be equally divided into four proportions or shares amongst them." Cornelius Clopper, another shoemaker, threw his parcel, which adjoined, into the common field and, in 1686, these proprietors, "finding the said land to be rentable for building of houses for an enlargement of the city, projected and laid out said lands into 164 lots."—Liber Deeds, VI: 115 (Albany). For the location and subsequent history of the Shoemakers' Land, see description of Pl. 24-5, I: 215-19; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947.

23 Katherine Harrison, the "Wethersfield Witch," is declared innocent of the charge brought against her by Alice Manning in the court of mayor and aldermen.—M. C. M. (MS.), March 23, 1675. The first entry in this case is in ibid., Dec. 22, 1674; subsequent ones in ibid., Jan. 19, 1675, Feb. 9, 1675, and March 8, 1675. A decision against the "Witch" on the last named date was reversed by a doctor's report on the case had been received. Evert Duyster and Henry Willett, were appointed by the mayor's court "brand Masters to Looke after Fowle Chimneys, and fyers," also "Lighthookes & keyer Buckets."—M. C. M. (MS.), March 23, 1675. Herein the English magistracy was following the practice of the Dutch court in appointing firewardens. Duyster had been a Dutch appointee to the same office.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 35. See Jan. 8, 1678; Dec. 21, 1678.

24 "This day was Proclaimed the edict prohibiting hoggs going about the streets of the City more then 8 days after the Publica, on the penalty of £50 for the first offence, £40 for the second, and forfeiture of the hoggs found in the street & Stood for the third offence."—M. C. M. (MS.), March 24, 1675. This was the English order that suspended the New Orange Act of August 28, 1673; it was considerably milder in tone. The Dutch order prohibited stray piggs in the whole area south of the Collect, not merely in the city streets. The hoggs were expelled from the streets and into the vacant, rented, or decayed houses within this City, convenient or lett to build," whose proprietors were either absent or unwilling to improve the property, so that they might be hanned on to those who were willing to make repairs or build houses.—M. C. G., I: 14-15. On May 26, 1676, the governor in council ordered the mayor and aldermen of the city of New York to publish an ordinance providing that all "Vacant Land without fence not Improved" be appraised and disposed of to those willing to build "Sufficient dwelling houses" within a year upon the payment of the "Purchase to the right Owners according to the appraisement."—Ibid., I: 15; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 46.

The Duke of York, writing from St. James's Palace, London, to Governor Andros, in answer to the latter's letters of Nov. 20, and Dec. 24, 1674, says: "I apprehend it cannot be right for a Seale and Mace for ye City of New York, ye charge whereof wilbe allowed you upon Acct & it is well that you have ye other Seale for ye Province."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 230. See also O'Callaghan's "Historical Introduction" to the Jur. Leg. Coun. (1861), I: xvi. For the first provincial assembly in New York, see Oct. 17, 1675.

By order of the court of mayor and aldermen, strangers are required to pay eightpence per ton, and freemen sixpence, for goods "brought into this Government, and Landed on the Bridge;" goods brought from New Jersey, and salt, were the only things excepted. Revenue from this source was needed to repair the "bridges" or landing-places of the city which had been reported as "in great decay." The city fathers ordered "all Other vessels with decks" occupying the "Camber" or dock more than 24 hours were required to pay two shillings per day. Smaller vessels and "open boats without Decks;" one shilling.—M. C. M. (MS.), June 5, 1675.

The inhabitants of New Harlem delegate Captain Carteret and others to present a petition to Andros for confirmation of their patent, granted by Nicolls Oct. 11, 1667, and confirmed by Love-lace June 22, 1670.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 562; Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 216 (in N. Y. Pub. Libr.)

King Philip's War begins, at Swansea, in the Plymouth colony, caused by Indian jealousy of the English, but was more of the English than Indians than the other way round, and the almost complete extermination of hunting-grounds by treaties. It raged in New England until April 12, 1678 (p. 32).—Lincoln, Nat. of the Indian Wars, 1-167.

July
On account of the Indians, the several towns (evidently both on and off the Manhattan settlements) are directed to maintain strict watch. (See Dec. 6.) A message from the mayor is published in the village of Harlem, on Aug. 9, requiring the inhabitants "not to beat the drum nor to hold any meetings, neither to ferry any stranger across the river, without the knowledge and sanction of the constable." This had reference to the practice, long in vogue in the town before they had a bell, of beating the drum to call the people together. Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 563; Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 246.

Sept.
By order of the court of mayor and aldermen, all writs of the courts must be executed by the sheriff "before the sitting of the next Court."—M. C. M. (MS.), Sept. 21, 1675. This order followed "hundy Complaints" to the court that executions were delayed.

Courts of assizes are the following:
1. To prevent troubles arising from the sale of liquors to Indians at their plantations, where small relief can be expected if troubles and Dec. 4 and 7, the said constables shall be allowed an additional watch, a Seale and Mace for ye City of New York, ye charge whereof wilbe allowed you upon Acct & it is well that you have ye other Seale for ye Province."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 230. See also O'Callaghan's "Historical Introduction" to the Jur. Leg. Coun. (1861), I: xvi. For the first provincial assembly in New York, see Oct. 17, 1675.

2. English weights and measures shall be used in New York City three months after the publication of the law providing for the same. The prohibitions proclaiming the exportation of corn and flour shall continue in force six months longer.—M. C. C., I: 2-4.

4. An annual fair or market shall be held at Brooklyn near the ferry for all grain, cattle, or other produce of the country, on the first Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of November, and in the city of New York on the Thursday, Friday, and Saturday following. —Ibid., I: 4.

7. There were probably no permanent buildings erected in connection with this annual fair in New York, which must not be crowded with the weekly market, which, doubtless, still was held on the smaller plain east of the fort; but see Jan. 29, 1677. See also Castello Plan, II: 144.

1. "Magistrates throughout the "whole Government" are required in all cases "to do Justice to the Indians, as well as Christians."—Ibid., I: 4.

5. By reason of Staten Island's insular position, it is given "Jurisdiction of it Selfe; and to have noe further dependance on the Courts of Long Island nor on their Militia."—Ibid., I: 4.

Gov. Andros appoints William Dervell to be mayor; Gabriel Minville, Nicholas de Meyer, Thomas Gibbs, Thomas Lewis, and Stephen van Cortlandt to be aldermen, and John Sharpe to be sheriff of the city of New York, to hold office until Oct. 13, 1676. The mayor and aldermen are given "full power and Authority to keep Courts, Administer Justice as a Court of Sessions, and Govern" all the inhabitants of the city.—M. C. G., I: 1-2.

On this date the "town clerk" begins to keep the "Common Council" minutes in a record-book separate from the minutes of the "Court of Mayor and Aldermen."—M. C. C., I: 1. Beginning in 1677, "according to the custom of our Fatherland," the burgomasters of New Amsterdam began to meet apart from the "Court of Burgomasters and Schepens," Thursday mornings at 9 o'clock, and to consult then together about all that may happen in the City, and to dispose thereof as shall be found proper." Their records were kept separate from the court records and are found translated up to Jan. 28, 1661, in Vol. VII of The Records of New Amsterdam, and from Feb. 11, 1661, to May 20, 1664, in Minutes of the Orphan-masters (pub. 1907). From Nov. 11, 1674, until Oct. 17, 1675, the English court of mayor and aldermen transacted administrative and judicial business at the same sitting, or at least the clerk recorded such business in the same book; a separate book, however, contains administrative business after Oct. 17. This probably means that at this date the court sessions and legislative sessions were separate, marked by the seating of a new Common Council. Until Feb. 14, 1674, the same magistrates, mayor and aldermen comprised the judicial body and the administrative body, and the same clerk recorded the actions of both bodies. Whether by misplacement on the part of the latter, or by the willingness or consent of the magistrates to consider an administrative matter when sitting as a court, the minutes of the mayor's court contain much that one would expect to find in the minutes of the common council. This continued to be true even after 1684, when, through the addition of "Common councilmen" or assistant aldermen, there came to be a so-called "Common Council."—Ibid., I: 103, 237. For re-production of the first page of the Minutes of the Common Council, see Pl. 16, Vol. IV. Also see Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 9-12.

Gov. Andros, having appointed Samuel Leete to be clerk of the court of assizes, administers the oath of office.—M. C. C., I: 4.

Upon ye Proposals of building a Church [for] the Towne [see Jan. 16, 1671; Oct. 6/16, 1673; May 11/21, 1674, Ordered that ye Thomas Lewis doe call [to] his Assistance, Mr. Adolph Pieters & Abraham Janssen, who are desired to make a Calculation of ye Charge of building a wooden Church of sixty two English foot in length, and fifty in breadth; to be both measured on the inside, the height of ye wall to be twenty [feet] to have a Convenience to hang a bell in. —M. S. Exec. Council Minutes (N. Y. State Libr.), Vol. III, part 2, p. 68. This was the new Lutheran Church, at the south-west corner of the present Broadway and Rector Sts.—See June 9, 1671; Oct. 11/21, 1673; Nov. 17, 1673; and Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 563; Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 246.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

The magistrates of the town of Harlem appoint two fire-wardens to inspect houses and chimneys.—Harlem Recs., op. cit. I: 244.

At an organized session, it is ordered that former regulations to prevent the strayings of horses, cows, and other animals in the streets of New York be enforced; also that former orders for the cleansing of the streets be carried out. The inhabitants are required, each Saturday or oftener, to sweep the dirt before their doors and to have the streets cleaned. The Carmens are required to cart it to some convenient place by the water-side.—M. C. C., I: 7–8, 14. The order was emphatically reiterated the following year.—Ibid., I: 18.

With this date begins the record of the admission of freemen of the city. The list is published in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1889), p. 39, following the record that the year 1686; the original records are in the city clerk’s office. For the beginning of the boroughrigh in New Amsterdam, see Sept., 1843.

Conditions are decided upon and recorded whereby the weigh-house is “to be let to farm. The contract is undertaken by John Sharpe. Orders are issued regarding payments at the weigh-house, including the tariff of duties.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 43. The following year (Dec. 2), a similar record was kept, with the list of bidders and the amount of their bids.—Ibid., 52. See Nov. 29, 1679.

Public notice is given (signed by Samuel Leete, clerk of the mayor’s court) that, on Dec. 4, at the house of Peter Denier, the privilege of selling wines, etc., is to be let to the highest bidder. This privilege is referred to as “The Great Puckt or Excise and the Small Puckte or Excise of all Manner of Wines etc., as hath been heretofore used and accustomed.” It is to “bee Lett or Sett for one yeare from Such time or times as the old Farmer terms Shall have expired.”—M. C. C., I: 7. Regarding the “Conditions on which the Great Puckt’s or Tapper’s excise is to be let to farm,” on Dec. 4, with the names of the bidders and the amount of their bids, see Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 43.

In January, 1676, the mayor and aldermen discontinued the “Small Pukket or Excise, for any Strong Liquors, wines, beere Syder etc.,” it being found “a great Burthen and Imposition” on the inhabitants. They presented the following proposals to the governour:

1. That there bee 6 houses appointed to Sell all Sorts of wine, and Brandy & Rume etc and Lodging 2. That there bee 8 houses appointed to Sell beere Syder, Munn and Rum, and to provide for Strangers as the Law directs, to Sell Brandy Rum strong waters & Tobacco. 3 That 2 of the wine houses bee Ordinaries and 4 of the Beere houses. (An “ordinary” was a set meal, similar to the French table d’hôte of to-day.)—See “Famous Taverns of Old New York,” by John Austin Stevens, in N. Y. Herald, Dec. 17, 1893.) The prices of wines and other liquors as they were to be sold by the tappers were scheduled in detail, including the price of “The ordinary at ye Wine house p’semeale,” and the same “Att the Beere house.” These proposals included also “att a room for Lodging at ye p’semeale, 36 wine house” and “Att the Beere house.”—M. C. C., I: 10–11.

Another arrangement went into effect on Jan. 29, 1676, which was that “the great Pucket or Excise, as alsoe the Little Puckte Burgers or Towne Excite is wholly taken offi, remitted, and no more to bee paid, by any private or public persons or houses of entertainment; but all at Liberty to buy and Sell freely at due times, when they please.” It was nevertheless ordered, “to prevent the irregularity or confusion that mayt happen by to many disorderly Retailers or houses of Entertainment; that no one should “Sell or Retayle at home nor out of doors, Less then one Gallao except Licensed houses.” All persons desiring to sell drinks at retail or keep a house of entertainment were required to apply to John West, deputy clerk of the mayor’s court, before Feb. 5, when they might see the regulations regarding taverns and other houses of entertainment where liquors might be sold. Persons who were approved were to “have out their Licence, and regulation set. This order included also at the same time the local excise of wine.—Ibid., I: 15–14, 16–17. See also Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 66, regarding the conditions on which licenses were “to be let to farm” in 1678, with the names of bidders; and ibid., 77, for a notice to retailers to take out licenses in 1679. See also the order of Aug. 16, 1681.

In December, the city council ordered the governour and council, a night watch (see Aug. 9), divided into four corporalships of seven persons each, is established in the town of Harlem.—Harlem Recs. (M.S.translation). I: 255: Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 367.

A license is granted by the governour and council to Thomas Smith, fencing master, to open a school to teach the “use and exercise of arms” in the city of New York.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 44.

Members of the provincial council and the justices of the north and west rid of “Yorks”, were charged with see to the comfort and safety of New York with respect to the harbour and harbour defences of this city.—Cal. Coun. Min., 24. See further, Jan. 10 and 20, and April 15, 1676.

Many "ill Coonventants" having happened in the past "by several young people bring off of Pistols and other Gunns upon the day of January," the deputy mayor and aldermen forbid the practice.—M. C. C., I: 7. This is a revival of an old ordnance of New Amsterdam, which dates back twenty years.—See Rec. N. Am., I: 18, 430; II: 254; III: 431.

Several orders have been issued (see Nov. 24) "that noe person or persons whatsoever, shall set any Waygon or Carts, or lay any Wood, Timbers, Dirt, Mucke, or Stones, or any other Rumbilish in the streets or high ways." The deputy mayor and aldermen now order "that all Persons take notice that they Cleanse the Streets; Every Person cleansinge before his or her dores." Proceedings will be taken against those who fail to clean the street within one week, or those who "set any Waygons, Carts, or Sleade to the Streets."—M. C. C., I: 7–8.

This order was reiterated in various forms in later years, always regarding (1) the cleaning of the streets, (2) the prohibition against obstructions, and (3) against throwing garbage, rubbish, stones, and filth into the streets. The instructions to barren were in keeping with these orders. Regarding the first, see ibid. I: 136, 137, 224, 247; II: 74–75, 95, 156–96, 246; IV: 101–4; VIII: 49. Regarding the second, see, ibid., II: 224; IV: 101–4; V: 470–77. Regarding the third, see ibid., I: 157, 224, 4477: I: 193, 196; IV: 104–1.

Some time after Nov. 8, 1675 (p. v), probably during the year 1676 or shortly thereafter, and certainly before 1684 (p. v), the Lutherans erected their first church building at what is now the south-west corner of Broadway and Rector St., on the plot granted to them by Gov. Colvye on May 12, 1674 (p. v).—See Land Papers, I: 161 (Albany). It should be noted that the Cal. Land Papers (1864), 19 (under date of Dec. 11, 1679, citing the original record in Albany), is in error in giving the location as "Broad street" instead of Broadway. See also March 25 and Nov. 8, 1676.

This structure was demolished, and a new edifice erected in its place, which was begun May 22, 1727 (p. v), and opened in 1729.—Lutheran Minutes. The second church was partially destroyed by fire in 1776.—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 30, 1776. This church was not rebuilt, but the building was erected for some years thereafter as a store-house; and the land was sold to Trinity Church in 1806.—Jour. of the Lutheran Church (1796–1821), 113. Shown on Pls. 23–2, 26, 27–2, 30, 31, 32, 34, 35, 40, 41, 42, 44, and 68–8, Vol. 1. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 929.

A meeting of the mayor and aldermen with some of the council present, to whom the governour has referred consideration of the question as to what may be done by the city toward building a new dock (see Dec. 30, 1675), it is thought that 18,000 cart-loads of stone will be sufficient, "if three foot high." The cost of this is figured at two shillings a load. The record shows the following estimate: "Eightsene Loads of Stone will make butt: 4 feet: 3:3 foot: high: and: 24 foot: Over the Length of the worke: Computed att: between 900: & 1000: besides: the Closing the Ends if Occation." The carrying capacity of a sloop and a scow is considered, with canoes to help load. The work is to be done by the inhabitants, divided into companies. Carpenters are to have a time proposed for them to undertake the work, at an agreed rate "by the foot or Rod."—M. C. C., I: 17. On Jan. 15, it was ordered by the mayor and aldermen that a tax be levied for building this new dock or wharf.—Ibid., I: 10, 18. See further developments on April 15, July his force for a year.—Ibid., I: 15–14, 16–17.

The deputy mayor and aldermen order that the watch be set every night by eight of the "Clock" immediately after the ringing of the bell; that the city gates be locked by the constable or deputy before nine of "the Clock," and opened in the morning "presently after the ringing of the bell of "Yorks" (see June 22, 1680, note 9).

The deputy mayor and aldermen order that the watch be set every night by eight of the "Clock" immediately after the ringing of the bell; that the city gates be locked by the constable or deputy before nine of "the Clock," and opened in the morning "presently after the ringing of the bell of "Yorks" (see June 22, 1680, note 9).

1676 soldiers appear with good arms before their captains at the first beating of the drums. Penalties are fixed for failure to comply with these regulations.—M. C. G., I, 8-9. Undoubtedly the Indian war of this period made these regulations desirable. See 1682.

1677 The mayor and aldermen of New Amsterdam ordinance in detail “Goods, wares, and Merchandises,” unless he be a freeman of the city or a settled housekeeper for one year, or has given security, except by special license from the mayor and aldermen with the approbation of the governor. A freeman loses his privileges by absence from the city for six months, if during that time he does not “keeps fire and Candle Light and pay Scott and Lott” (i.e., his share of the taxes). A merchant may be made a freeman on payment of six beavers; and all “Handicraft trades and others,” on payment of two beavers.—M. C. G., I, 10, 18, 19. See also March 15, 1684. Regarding the burgervright in New Amsterdam, see Jan. 23, 1657.

1677 It is ordered by the mayor and aldermen that all masters of vessels, as soon as they “come on Shoare,” shall “give an account to the Mayor or Deputy Mayor of all and every Passenger” landed here. A “Merchantable Vessel” is the fine to be exacted for every passenger not represented by such a mayor or alderman. This ordinance is in force still later, April 22, 1691. It was to this way the magistrates hoped to minimize pauperism in the city. The local communities in New England were also “exceedingly jealous of the intrusion of strangers,” says G. E. Howard in his Local Constitutional Hist. of the U. S., S. 226.

1677 The mayor and aldermen appoint appraisers to survey and value vacant land and “ruined houses” whose owners are unwilling to improve the property so that such may be handed over to those who will build.—M. C. G., I, 11, 14-15. See also Jan. 22 and March 25, 1677.

1677 The “Wikkertreeck” (Wicquackset) Indians are allowed by the council to settle near “Spitting Devil” on Manhattan Island.—Col. C. M., 25. The date of the order is Feb. 6, as given by Riker in Revised Hist. of Harlem, 329. During the previous autumn when New England was in the throes of King Philip’s War this tribe had been ordered to the interior of the state, but had returned in February, 1677, with a fortification to their usual winter quarters within Hell gate upon this island.”—Ibid., 326-27. So it was nothing new to have a tribe of Indians for neighbours on the island, although their presence was the occasion regularly for an increase in the number of the watch.

1677 Common fences enclosed the cultivated lands on Jochem Pieters’ Flat and Van Keulen’s Hook at Harlem. The location was on the Harlem River, opposite Randall’s Island and Morrisania. See “Map of Harlem: Showing the Lands as in the Original Lots and Farms,” in Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1911), p. 620. No provision was made by the city to set up, or maintain, a public boundary within a fortification that the spring of 1768 these fences should be generally renewed and made at least 5 ft. high and that if any failed, it should be done by the town at his expense.—Ibid., 70-71.

1670 Apr. On account of the Indian troubles, the council orders that all boats and vessels desiring to pass through Hell Gate shall first obtain a permit from the custom-house. This permit, except for merchandise, shall be given “gratuit and with all dispatch.”—Col. C. M., I, 15; Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 370.

1679 May. An ordinance, passed by the mayor and aldermen on Jan. 15, is now allowed by the governor and ordered to be put into execution, requiring “that all Merchants and other that Shall at any time come and trade at this place before the new Docke or Wharfe (intended to be built) Shall be see finished and paid for, Shall pay proporctable for his and their Estates, as hee or they shall bring here, as the Inhabitants and other Traders doe towards the building up of the said Dock and Wharfe and for payinge the Charges thereof.”—M. C. G., I, 9-10, 25-26, 29-38.

1679 The carpenters report to the provincial council concerning the frame of timber, or mole, necessary to be erected in the harbour.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 45. The original of this report, entered as a draft in the N. Y. Col. Hist. MSS., XXV: 98 (Albany), states in part:

“Adolph, the carpenter, and a great many of them being present, . . . do unanimously agree and give their opinion that the groundfields beneath and plates above will be most proper.

"That at each end of a groundline one beam to go at height; that for every ten feet a stud and a beam will be necessary, the beams to be laid at ordinary highwater mark and every other beam to be under-braced.

"To be filled with wood and stone, the wood all undermost and the stone uppermost.”

1679 An agreement is made between Elizabeth Bellow and Capt. James Carteret for the purchase of Love Island.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 45. Elizabeth Bellow was the widow and administratrix of Isaac Bellow, an English merchant residing in New Amsterdam as early as 1664, who became factor for Gov. Lovelace after the English gained possession of the town, and who died in 1672.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 38. Brodhead, in his Hist. State of N. Y., II, 168, refers to the transaction of April 20, 1676, as a sale of the island by Mrs. Bellow to Capt. Carteret; but this appears questionable, because, on July 1, 1679, Mrs. Bellow joined in an agreement with Capt. Carteret to relinquish the island.—Col. Land Papers, 19.

1679 In 1739, a quarantine was established there by order of the government.—M. G. C., IV, 429. Kennedy sold the island to the city in 1738 (bid, VII, 151-52), and a permanent use was there (bid, VII, 162, 225), which was placed in the care of various tenants until 1773 (bid, VII, 211, 369-70; VII, 179, 368, 429, 441-42). Barracks also were erected there some time immediately prior to 1767—(bid, VII, 53, 55. The island is shown on the Montesqu’s Map of 1765-6 as “Kennedy’s or Corporation L.” (Pl. 40, Vol. I), and on the Ratzer Map of 1776 as “Bellows or Kennedy’s Island” (Pl. 41, Vol. I). It subsequently became the property of the state. By act of the legislature, on Feb. 15, 1800 (q. v.), it was ceded to the United States government, together with Ellis or Oyster Island, and Governor’s Island, at which time the state reserved the right to erect and maintain there military, and New York civil or criminal courts. The pecuniary, above mentioned, which Bellows Island had enjoyed since 1679, was thereby abrogated. Thereafter, for over 50 years, the island was occupied as a military station, fortifications being erected there from time to time on the side facing the channel.—Mar. C. C. (1855), 498, see Adelphi.

1679 The mayor and aldermen order that persons living “within the Streete Called Heregrace” (Broad Street) shall “fill up the gratt Ditch or Common Shore” (sewer), and make the same level with the street, and then pave and “pitch” it before the inhabitants shall bring to the house shall be fronting towards the S4 gratt Or Ditch.”—M. G. C. I, 19. The “pitch” was the incline of the street towards the center, where the channel or gutter was

The governor in council orders the mayor and aldermen to publish an ordinance providing for the disposal of unimproved property to those willing to build.—M. C. C., I: 19; Col. Hist. MSSs., Eng., 46.

The court of mayor and aldermen appoints Peter Stoutebrugh Receiver-General of Andros. He is to collect 5% commission; and is to give a bond, as well as to render an account, to the court, and to continue in office "till the Election of the next May or further Order."—M. C. C., I: 19.

The office of treasurer had been abolished June 17, 1665 (q. v.). Mr. Stoutebrugh continued in office until Feb. 14, 1680/1 (q. v.). For alteration in the amount of the treasurer's commission, see Oct. 19, 1685.

The mayor and aldermen order that after Nov. 1, 1676, there shall be no slaughter-houses within the city, "nor any Oxen Cows Hogs Sheepe or Lambs killed w/in ye same."—M. C. C., I: 20. See also Feb. 16, 1677; Jan. 8, 1678; Oct. 15, 1681; May 11, 1696; Nov. 9, 1693; Oct. 11, 1720.

It is ordered by the mayor and aldermen that tanners and shoemakers who have tan-pits within the city shall give them up Nov. 1, 1676, and shall not erect others within the limits of the city.—M. C. C., I: 21.

By a "quasipartite deed," New Jersey is divided into East and West Jersey. The former is granted to George Cartaret; the latter to the Quaker assignees of Bylling.—N. J. Arch. 1st ser., I: 205-19; Seller-Fisher Map, Pl. 11-b, Vol. I. In 1687, an attempt was made to run the boundary line between the two provinces, but the result was unsatisfactory. See also Feb. 17, 1676.—Winsor, 6 vols., III: 445.

The mayor and aldermen, for the first time, appoint building inspectors and require permits for building within the city or paving before houses, that the same may be placed on record.—M. C. C., I: 21.

Regulations are issued by the council concerning butchers, shoemakers, and tanners, and the distilling and selling of liquor to the Indians.—Cal. Com. Min., 26. See Aug. 25.

A memorandum of orders directs that persons be appointed to supervise the making of the mole of the new dock for the harbour.—Cal. Hist. MSSs., Eng. Aug. 1005; April 15, 1676; and the new (Great) Dock, in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 990.

The governor and council order that the magistrates of New York appoint a town treasurer. A committee is appointed to confer with the magistrates on the subject.—Cal. Hist. MSSs., Eng., 48. See also Dec. 30, 1675; April 15, 1676; and the "New (Great) Dock," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 990.

King Philip's War practically ends with the death of Philip, although continued by tribes in Maine and New Hampshire until April 12, 1675 (q. v.).—Lincoln, Nat. of the Indian Wars, 104-5.

Matthew Hilliard is reappointed at a meeting of the deputy magistrates to make complaint of "a Schoole for ye Educating & instructinge of Youth Either in Reading Writing Arithmetic Latinn or Grecke." He had already served about two years and had received from the city a small salary, but there had been some dissatisfaction, and another applicant, Ebenezer Kirtland, now appears. Hilliard is continued in the position, "be he behaving himselfe for ye future better than ye time Past." The city will now provide him with a school-room but no salary.—M. C. C., I: 22-24.

John Harbendigo and Jacob Abrahamson are appointed the tanners for the city, and given the sole right to exercise this trade. Peter Pangborne is appointed sole currier. A butcher is not permitted to be a currier, tanner, or shoemaker, and a tanner is not permitted to be a currier, shoemaker, or butcher.—M. C. C., I: 24.

A pure food regulation is made by the mayor and aldermen. Grain which is not fit to grind or bolt shall not be distilled. The people of Harlem, wishing to secure the two extremities of their patent from further encroachment, engage Robert Ryder, the government surveyor, to lay out five lots at Spuyten Duyvil, "upon the old Matthys Jansen patent 'beginning by Johannes Verveelen,' who as ferryman occupied the upper end of that patent; and ranging down the Harlem River to 'the hills and the meadows,' or the southern line of the Jansen and Aerden patent, which touched the river at what is now 211th Street. Subsequently the lots of Spuyten Duyvel made, when Dyckman and Nagel bought out Vemelje and Bock, and thereby became the owners of the whole five lots, containing 74 acres of upland; the beginning of the fine estate subsequently held there by the Nagel and Dyckman families. With no intention of yet quitting the field, they agreed with Michiel Bastiaensen and his son-in-law, Kierseo, to take these lands upon lease for a term of twelve years. The contract, written in Dutch, "relates to the first successful effort to make improvements in that section of Manhattan Island, on which as yet there was not another white man's heartstone north of Harlem village."—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1st ed.), 181, 386; Harlem Rec. (MS. translation), i: 304-92. 312.

Cornelis Mattysen received a patent (Land Papers, i: 144, Albany) for 60 acres of land to the northward of Turtle Bay, being bounded on the south-west by the land of Jacobus Fabricius and to the south-east by the East River; on the north-east by the land of John Bassett, and on the north-west by the Commons. The modern boundaries of this farm are, generally speaking, as follows: Beginning at a point on the south line of 70th St., a little east of South Street, running eastwardly to the East River; a little south of the south line of 69th St.; thence southerly to a point a little south of the south line of 64th St.; thence westerly to a point a little west of Second Ave. and south of 64th St.; thence northerly to the point of beginning. This farm became subsequently subdivided into the Peter Sawyer lot; the Widow Hardenbrook tract; and the southern part of the Louvre farm.—Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, i: 249-390.

In this year, Hubbard's map of New England was published, in his Narrative of the Troubles with the Indians in New England.—Church Catalogues, No. 650; Winsor, i. ed. cit., iii: 374. 312

M. C. C., ii: 197-241: VII: 777, see also pl. 34, vol. i. One additional dock was constructed by the municipality prior to the Revolution, the "Corporation Dock," the first dock or pier on the Hudson River shore of Manhattan Island; it was built in 1771-5.—Ibid., VII: 324; 351; Landmark Map Ref. Key, iii: 909.

The mayor and aldermen pass an ordinance for the observance of Sunday, as follows: "Ordered that no inhabitant Merchant or Trades Man or other Person or Persons whatsoever which is or shall bee in the said Citye Prefixt or Liberties Threfor Shall att any Time hereafter willfully or obstinatly intrude on the Sabbath daie By Buyinge or Sellinge of any wares of Merchandizes of his or their Trade or Mystery Or by Unlawlie Playinge att Cards Dice Tables or any other Unlawlie Games whatsoever Either In Sermon Time or w/out..." As also the disorderly Assemblies of Clubs or other Places To the disturbance of Others with Noyse Upon the Sabbath day which is to bee Understooed from Sun Risseige Till Sunn Settinge. Restrictions were placed upon selling or drinking wines and liquors, and fines of from 10 to 100 guineers were fixed for disregarding these regulations.—M. C. C., i: 27.

The mayor and aldermen appoint "Jacob the Baker" to be "head Viewer or Cury Master of the flower of this City and the Liberties thereof," and define his duties and those of his two deputies.—M. C. C., i: 38-39.

Robert Ryder (or Ricer), surveyor, prepares a description of a survey he made of the City of New York, or of Manhattan Island, on the East river, which he has laid out for Gabriell Curtese.—Cal. Land Papers, 14, Ryder's name as a surveyor first appeared on a MS. map of Long Island (including Manhattan Island), of 1670 (q. v.), which is preserved by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. It measures from 506 to 517 in., in height, and from 4 ft. 3 in. to 4 ft. 6 in. in breadth. It is reproduced from the original in Ex. Coun, Min, i. opp. 217. The map is his name is record of on Oct. 26, 1675.—Cal. Land Papers, 7. Other surveys by him, on Manhattan and Staten Islands, and elsewhere, followed.—ibid., 14 et seq.

16 council minutes are listed the names of over a hundred individuals whom the city owes money, and against each name is the amount due; to Gov. Andros the largest amount is due, 6280-10. The town council is asked to "pay or discount with each of them."—M. C., I: 47-48.

28 The common council orders that "for the Necessary and Sublime Vse a General or Publicke slaughter house shall be built for the Vse of the Cytie over the Water without the Gate at the South End of the half Mile."—M. C., I: 46. See Jan. 8, 1678. See also Pl. 17, Vol. I.

The mayor and aldermen order that six wells, "for the publique good of the Cytie," be made in certain specified streets by the inhabitants thereof. One is to be "in the broad way against Mr. Vancomeces." (Hendrick van Dyck's house)—, io Broadway, just south of the present Exchange Alley, and another "in the yard or backside of the Cytie hall."—M. C., I: 46-47. The records show the establishing of two public wells prior to this date. —See Feb. 14, 1667; June 15, 1667. The Van Dyck well is shown on Pl. 17, Vol. I. After the six established this year, four more were dug before 1700, making ten new ones. "Of these wells, seven are known by name, and the sites of the other three have been established beyond [reasonable] doubt. They were located thus:"—"De Riemer's Well," in Whitehall Street, near Bridge; "Well of William Cox," near the Stadt Huys, at the head of Coenties Slip; "The Dey's Well," in Broad Street, near South Williams; "The Duke's Kay's Well," in Broad Street, a little above Beaver; "Frederick Wessel's Well," in Wall Street, west of William; "Mr. Rombout's Well," in Broadway, near Exchange Place and the "Well of Suert Olpherts," in the same neighbourhood. Of the three which are not known by name, two were in Broad Street, near Exchange Place, and the third was in Wall Street, between Broad and New Streets. The water from these wells was brackish and the supply was not plentiful; but they were regarded as an important addition to the resources of the fire department, and valued for this, if for nothing more."—From "Old Wells and Water-Courses of the Island of Manhattan," by Geo. Everett Hill and Geo. E. Waring, Jr., in Historic New York (1897), 200. See also Sept. 10, 1686.

The mayor and aldermen order that persons having houses with "goe Chimneys or not fit to keepe fire in" repair the defects within three months or remove therefrom.—M. C., I: 42.

It is ordered by the mayor and aldermen that "the old Church yard or Late burying place in the broad way bee Layd out in foure Lotts Conteyning Twenty five foote each Lott in the forme (English measure) And the same to bee sold at a Vandee or Out Cribe of 90 florins, with the right to the issue that shall be made and surveyed by Adolph Peterson; he is to make a return to the clerk of the county, who is made "Vandee Master for the [sale] of the said Lotts att such Convenient time or times as hee shall think fit."—M. C., I: 47. Goodrich states, in The Picture of New-York (1818), 27, that "Here is the first mention of an auctioneer in our city annals;" but this is a mistake.—See Rec. N. Ams., I: 76. It is interesting to note this, and even earlier examples of the 25 foot lot, which later became so common.—Cf. Pl. 24, Vol. I.

The location and history of the "Old Church Yard on the Herre Straat" are summarized in the Landmark Map Map III, H27. See ibid. for the distinction between this burial-place and the "New Burial Place without the Gate of the City;" see also Hoffman, Treatise on the Estate and Rights of the Corporation (1862), I: 119, and Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 522. Valentine stated in 1836 that, "Summers in the woods, a great white wood, by the spades of workmen on the site of this burial-place, a few doors above Morris St. He also gave brief biographical mentions of prominent citizens of New Amsterdam who died while the graveyard was being used for interments.—Ibid, (1836), 454-457.

A law is reenacted (apparently one of April 4, 1677) regarding the keeping of horses on the Commons, keeping of records of branding both horses and cattle. It requires, first, that "two horses be continually kept in the Commons." (According to Valentine, in Man. Com. Coun., 1856, p. 533, these were stud-horses, which were to be let loose for the increase of the animals.) The law requires that an exact account shall be kept of all the horses and cattle branded, their colours and markings, and the names of their owners. It is to be done in the manner of which is to be given to the inhabitants "by fixing tyy Bills for that purpose." The branders of Harlem are to account to the recorder every quarter, and those of the city every month, for all horses and cattle branded by them. The branders' fees are prescribed, and these are to be paid, through the medium of the recorder, every half year, a certain portion being left "to the dis- posal of the Mayors Court."—M. C., I: 47-48.

In a "History of the Domestic Affairs of the Inhabitants," Valentine thus describes the system of horse-breeding: "The horses of those days were of a very poor class, all having been bred from the wild or pastoral改良, which covered the upper part of the island. Many thousands of animals were thus running at large, the only trouble taken by their owners being at a certain season of the year to engage in a common driving expedition, by means of which the animals were collected in a large pound, where the young of the season were branded with their owner's mark, and the whole were then turned loose until the winter snows rendered their protection necessary. Those which were turned out again in the spring were all of the female gender, except the bulls and stallions, which were public property, and were devoted to the common use. So great an increase was occasioned by this system, that it is said the island was over-run by animals almost as wild and dangerous as the wild horse and buffalo of our prairies at the present day."—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 504-5.

Jacobus Fabricius is granted a patent for land on Manhattan, Mar. 12, 1693, containing 60 rods, or 900 square rods; it was bounded to the Northeast by the land of Cornelius Mattyssen, to the southwest by the lot number four and to the northwest by the Commons, as by the return of the survey . . . may appear.—Lib. Patents, IV: 116 (Albany). The survey referred to is dated Jan. 27, 1687, and filed in Land Papers, I: 101 (Albany), and is by Robert Ryder, surveyor. See also Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, I: 89-98: 227-47.

Christians are prohibited, by proclamation of Gov. Andros, from trading with Indians at the towns and plantations of the latter. The regulation was renewed by proclamation on Jan. 25, 1682.—M. C., I: 89-90.

John Danielson receives a patent (Lib. Patents, IV: 120, Al- bany), according to a survey by "Ro. Ryder" (Land Papers, I: 103, Albany), for 30 acres of land lying to the north-east of Turtle Bay, having the East River on the east; land of Jacobus Fabricius on the north; the Commons on the north-west; and land of David Defore on the south-west. On modern maps, this patent was bounded, generally, westerly by a line running from a point on the north line of 57th St., midway between Second and Third Aves., to a point in the middle of the block between 59th and 60th Sts., Second and Third Aves.; on the north, by a line running hence between 58th and 59th Sts., 268 feet east of Avenue A; on the east, by the East River; on the south, by a line running from a point in the centre of 56th St. at the river, back to the place of beginning. The land later be- came the property of Thomas C. Pearson, and was known as the Pearall Tract.—See Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, I: 179-88.

Dirck Seckers (or Slecken—see Feb. 25, 1672) receives from Feb. Gov., Andros and council a lease for 30 years (not recorded) of the Duke's Bowery or Farm (later known as the Trinity Church Farm).—See recitals in Bogardus v. Trinity, 4 Sandford's Chancery Rep., 609, Col. Hist. Map 585, Eng. 56.

Jacob Young receives a patent according to a survey by "Ro. Ryder," dated April 25, 1677. It is described as follows: "Being in breadth by the River side, 43 rods; being bounded to the north-east by the Commons or a certain run of water ranging beyond, which shall be the west line of the same; and in bounded to the southwest by the land of George Elphistone." It contains in all 324 acres.—Land Papers, I: 110; Lib. Patents, IV: 124.

Aug. A line of 20 shillings is imposed upon Thomas Taylor by the mayor and aldermen "for his Contemn to ye Authority of this City." Taylor had failed to "doe his duty upon ye watch as other did." When summoned he acknowledged at first that it was not his watch night; then he declared he was not well. It could not be discovered that he "staid anything," and the mayor commanded the contemner's watch to "be without ye watch." "In ye 16h day of Au-bust he was ordered in ye St. Kings name." Even then his stay was brief;
"he went away in a very short time after he Came uncommened."—

16 Two negro slaves belonging to Capt. William Palmer are brought before the mayor's court. One ran away from "his Master's Service by ye Space of eight Days," and the second assisted him by "giving him Lodging and Victuals." The runaway was ordered to "have fifty Lashes on Saturday next," while his abettor had to stand "at ye watch quape nailed to ye waist with Rodds under his Arms."—M. G. C. (MS.), Aug. 16, 1677.

Sept. The Slapp Eliza Carry, daughter of "the Dutch Owners & Manned with Dutchmen," is declared forfeited by the court of mayor and aldermen because it came "directly from Amsterdam into his Maijesty's Plantations" contrary to the act of trade and navigation.—M. G. C. (MS.), Sept. 19, 1677. The act of parliament referred to was passed in 1660, and required ships of other countries to stop at an English port before proceeding to any English colony.
This was aimed particularly at the extensive carrying trade of the Dutch, and aroused such bitter feeling that war broke out between the two nations in 1664. One of the first events of that war was the surrender of New Amsterdam to an attacking English force. See also 1676.

29 John Benew receives a patent for a piece of land, which, according to a survey by Robert Ryder, surveyor, dated July 20, 1667, is described as follows: "Being in breadth by the Water Side, 40 rods, being bounded to the southwest by the land of Jacob Youngue, Ranging north north west in the tract of Gabrill Currie, and bounded and twenty rods, being bounded to the northwest and northeast by the Commons" and containing 30 acres. This survey is endorsed: "N.

began to be employed. En. A."
The patent followed on the above given date.—Land Papers, I: 121; Liber Patents, IV: 126.

Capt. Nicholas de Meyer obtains a patent for a piece of land "by the edge of the Hill near the Fresh Water, ranging southeast by the edge of the hill," 8 rods square, "to set a wind-mill on."—Liber Patents, IV: 126 (Albany). This lot, lying north of the present Park Road, on the north of a survey of Duane St. was surveyed; and 16, by Robert Ryder.—Land Papers, I: 121 (Albany). The heirs of Captain De Meyer, in 1691, partitioned the land, including the wind-mill, the cottage and ground belonging thereto, "the Jews burying ground & the De Meyer family vault excepted."—Liber Deeds, XVIII: 134, 137, 165 (N. Y.). William Merritt, mayor of New York, 1693, wrote in favor of the Negroes Rombley, Thomas Allowell, Peter Jacobs Marius, and Juliana Verplancke, aldermen; and Thomas Ashton, sheriff.—M. C. C., I: 63. For Van Cortlandt's

While he was in England, articles of complaint were "exhibited" against Sir Edmund Andros, governor of New York, by Thos.
Griffith, Henry Griffith, Thos. Harwood, and others, on behalf of themselves and several other merchants "trading to those terriitories." One of these complaints was as follows: "To That a 1678 Whipping post is erected in New York after ye Belgick fashion, far different from ye English manner, by wch y^ execution is much fieldier and with greater Reflection and cruelty. The Stocks was thereby maderly more ridiculous to ye nethelnders, & had in great detraion by them."—From piece 9 (an early transcript) in vol. of MSS.
In this year, Richard Blome printed in London a work based upon papers received from friends relating to territories in Am-ERICA in which the English were interested. In this he described
New York City as follows: "Here is one very considerable Town, first built by the Dutch, and called New-Amsterdam, which name is now changed to New York: It is well seated both for Trade, Security, and Pleasure, in a small Isle called Malastaon, regarding the Sea, made so by Hudson River, which severeth it from Long-Island, which said River is very commodious for Ship-ning, and is about two Leagues broad. The Town is large, containing about five hundred well-built Houses; and for Civil Government, it hath a Mayor, Alderman, a Sheriff, and Justices of the Peace for their Magistrates. For the further security of this Town, here is raised a Fort called James-Fort, which is very strong, and well Defended and Maintained with Men, and Ammunition.
The Town is Inhabited by the English and Dutch, and hath a considerable Trade with the Indians, for the Skins of Elks, Deer, Bears, &c.
Also for those of Bever, Otter, and other Furey, and dothlikewise enjoy a good Trade with the English."—Blome, Description of the Island of Jamaica, etc., 76-77.
There are 343 houses in New York. There are only three ships, seven boats, and eight sloops belonging to the port. Not over 400 beavers are killed in the year.—From M. C. M., III: 98, where increases are shown even to the years 1668-8.
While Gov. Andros is in England, Capt. Brockholls is obliged to plank the platforms and new stockades around the fort.
This was done at the country's charge.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 307.
The town "by the waternside," including Brooklyn, Harlem, Manhattan Island, and others, were laid out on March 18, 1658, to out "three thousand stockades for the use of the Fort, to be built in length eighteen feet by seven inches through."—Ibid., XIV: 734.
Ashur (Asser) Levy asks permission of the court of mayor, July 8, 1677, to be a deputy mayor, and aldermen to build the slaughter-house mentioned in the order of Feb. 16, 1677 (p. v), and to take Garrett Janson Rose (Gerrit Janson Roos) to be his partner therein, and that all persons shall "have Liberty to kill & bang their Meat there, paying for the same as formerly in other places." This is granted.—M. C. G., I: 67. Levy reported to the court Oct. 8 that he had built the slaughter-house, and it was confirmed to him and his partner.—Ibid., II: 68. This slaughter-house is well shown on the Labadist View of 1679, Pl. 17, Vol. I. This slaughter-house was made a store-house for powder on April 6, 1684 (p. v.), and again on March 12, 1696 (p. v.). It was removed when Kelly's three slaughter-houses were erected in 1721. For Kelly's houses, see

The Duke of York authorizes Gov. Andros to appoint a judge, regent, and marshal of a court of admiralty; it having been authorized by the government of New York and its dependencies. N. Y. Col. Dict., III: 268. These officers were appointed Oct. 5, 1678 (g.t.).

Aug.

He is accompanied by several merchants and factors, including William Pinhorn, James Graham, John White, John West, and others, and also by the Rev. Charles Wolley, A.M., recently appointed by the duke as chaplain, the first clergyman of the Church of England "to hold a charge" in this province. The latter remained here until July 15, 1680, when he returned to England. He wrote, and published in London in 1721, an account of his experiences, entitled A Two Years Journal in New York. The extracts here given are from the first ed. (see also that of 1902, Cleveland). Wolley states, in discussing a large variety of subjects:

"The Fort and Garrison of this place lieth in the degree of 40th and 41st of north latitude, and is twenty miles west of the mouth of the Schaghticoke; where they have several wigwams or lodges, having their own form of government. They have a law of taking prisoners and distributing them among their members, and the one who takes prisoners is allowed to have them for himself and his officers: and taken by Mr. Andrew Norwood, son of the Famous Mathematician of that name, and by Mr. Philip Wells, and Van Cortlandt Junior, Robert Rider and Jacobus Stephens, the seventh of July, 1679, with whom I was well acquainted, and at that time present with them."—(pp. 2-34). The temperature and climate at New York are described and explained.

"The Skins of all their [the Indians'] Beasts, as Bears, Bevers, Racoons, Foxes, Otters; Musquashes, Skunks, Deer and Wolves, they bring upon their backs to New-York, and other places of Trade in the province. They have a house and garden for Duftles or Gunz, but too often for Rum, Brandy and other strong Liquors, of which they are so temperate lovers, that after they have once tasted, they will never forbear, till they are inflamed and enraged, even to that degree, that I have seen Men and their Wives Bilinggate it, through the Streets of New York, as if they were metamorphosed into their beasts. No intimation of those beasts whose Skins they bartered."

Wampum, made of cockle shells which are found at Oyster Bay, is described; the prices of skins, rum, sugar, wheat, pork, beef, tobacco, and other commodities are given; Indian customs, particularly their food supply, hunting and fishing, are described.—(pp. 25-27).

"I was one with otheres that had very good dissension and spurt with them [beasts], in an Orchard of Mr. John Robinson's of New-York; where we followed a Bear from Tree to Tree, upon which he would swarm like a Cat; and when he was got to his resting place, perch'd upon a high branch, we dispatched a youth after him with a Club to an opposite bough, who knocking his Paws, he came grumbling down backwards with a thump upon the ground, so we after him and another had a thing particularly remarkable: Of which I never read noy account."—(p. 49).

... When they [the Indiennes] travel by water, they have small Boats, which they call Canoes, made of the barks of Trees, . . . to which they bring their Hysters and other fish for the Market, they are so light and portable that a Man and his Squaw will take them upon their Shoulders and carry them by Land from one River to another, with a wonderful expedition; they will venture with them in a dangerous Current, even through Hell-gate it self, which lies in an arm of the Sea, about ten Miles from New-York Eastward to New-England, as dangerous and as unaccountable as the Norway Whirlpool or Maelstrom: in this Hell-gate which is a narrow passage, runneth a violent Stream both upon Flood and Ebb; and in the middle lieth some Islands of Rocks, upon which the Current sets so violently, that it threatens present Shipwreck; and upon the Flood is a large whirlpool, which sends forth a continual hodos roaring; it is a place of great defence against an Enemy coming that way, which a small Fortification would absolutely prevent, by forcing them to come in at the west-end of Long-Island by Sayacke-Hook, where New-England and Governor Island would force them within the command of the Fort of New-York, which is one of the strongest and best situated Garrisons in the North parts of America, and was never taken but once through the default of one Captain Manning, who in absence of the Governor suffer'd the Dutch to take it; for which he was condemned an Exile to a small Island from his name, call'd Manning's Island [Blackwell's Island], where I have been several times with the said Captain, whose entertainment was commonly a Bowl of Rum-Punch."—(pp. 61-65).

He next refers to Indian snow-shoes, etc.

... Now I am speaking of the Indian Shooes, & I seldom or never observ'd with the Dutch Women or anything but Slippers at home and abroad . . . They feast freely and merrily at the Funeral of any Friend, to which I have been often invited and sometimes a Guest."—(pp. 64-66).

"The Dutch eat and drink very plentifully at these Feasts; but I do not remember any Musick or Minstrels . . . In all their Feasts I observ'd they sat Men and Women internmixt, and not as our English do Women and Men by themselves apart."—(p. 67). He next describes Indian marriages, burial, and other customs.

I observ'd them [the Indians] very civil and respectful both in their behavioir and to me. As I observ'd and was observ'd by them, and they gave no occasion of complaint, which I frequently did to my walkes in Town, but they would bow both Head and Knee, saying here comes the Sucho-makers Kahn-a-oat, i.e. the Governors Minister, whom I always saluted again and again with all due ceremony."—(pp. 76-77).

Wolley describes New York as "a place of sweet and agreeable air as ever I breathed in the habitable world, and Dutch very civil and courteous . . . I cannot say I observ'd any swearing or quarrelling, but what was easily reconciled and recanted by a mild rebuke, except once betwixt two Dutch Boors (whose usual oath in Sacramento) which abating the abusive language, was no unpleasant Scene. As soon as they met (which was after they had alarmed the neighbourhood) they seized each other's hair with their forefoot, and down they went to the Sod, their Vrouws and Families crying out because they could not part them, which fray happening against my Chamber window, I called up one of my acquaintances and ordered him to fetch a full of water and discharge it at them, which immediately cool'd their courage, and loos'd their grapples; so we used to part our Mastiffs in England."—(pp. 80-82).

... In the same City of New-York where I was Minister to the English, there were two Ministers or Presbyterian. I sent them a letter, the one a Lutheran a German or High-Dutch, the other a Calvinist an Holland or Low-Dutchman, who behav'd themselves one towards another so shily and uncharitably as if Luther and Calvin had bequeathed and entailed their villainous and bigotted Spirits upon them and their heirs forever. They had not visive or spoken to each other with any respect for six years togeth'er before my being there." He describes how he brought them together by inviting them and their wives to supper, unknown to each other, and on pledge not to speak in Dutch. Latin being the 1678 common tongue, he found they out-did him in fluency. "The name Aug. of the Calvinist was Newenhous, of the Lutheran Bernhardus Pratus, who was of a Gentle Personage, and a very agreeable behaviour in conversation. I seldom knew of any Law-suits, for indeed Attorneys were denied the liberty of pleading. The English observed one anniversary custom, and that without superstition, I mean the "strenuum commercium," as Sotoenus calls them a "neighbourly commerce of presents every New-Years day."—(pp. 82—83). "Some would send me a Sugar-loaf, some a pair of Gloves, some a Bottle or two of Wine."—(p. 86).

Here he gives an account of the patronity of a younger son in New York, and recommends that both older and younger brothers come here. "... if they are entitled to settle a Plantation, they may purchase a tract of ground at a very small rate, in my time at two-pence or three-pence the Acre, for which they have a good Patent or Deed from the Governor."—(pp. 86—89). He continues with an explanation of the expense of useful commodities.

...The City of New-York in its time was as large as some Marlet Towns with us, all built the London way; the Garrison side of a high situation and a pleasant Prospect, the Island it stands on all a level and Champion; the divison especially in the Winter season used by the Dutch is auguration, i.e., riding about in Waggoons which is also a very pleasant exercise by Land. And upon the Ice its admirable to see Men and Women as it were flying upon their Skates from place to place, with Markets upon their Heads and Backs. In a word, it's a place so every way inviting that our English Gentry, Merchants and Clergy (especially such as are Hypochondriacal, and Stamina of a consumptive propagation in them; or an Hypocondriacal Consumption) would flock thither for self preservation."—(pp. 92—93).

In Wolley's opinion, the great objection to going to New York is the tedious voyage, but he does not consider this insurmountable. (pp. 97—98)

17 Jacob Baker, with several other residents of New York, having sailed for Europe in his "Pincke" (vessel), and been captured by the Turks, a "brief" is at once granted by Andros permitting the church officers to collect money to ransom them. Lesler paid 2,000 "pieces of eight" (Spanish money) for his own ransom.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 73, 75; Cal. Guern. Min., 314; Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 139, and authorities there cited. After the captives were redeemed, the surplus of the fund collected was given by Andros toward building a new Dutch church in New York, but it was not so applied by the church-wardens.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 717. See also May 19, 1699.

Sept. Permission is given to a French man-of-war and her prize to take on wood, water, and provisions in the port of New York.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 74.

8 Ashur Levy reports the public slaughter-house completed.—M. G. C., I: 68. See June 7, 1676; Feb. 16, 1677, and Jan. 5, 1678. This building is distinctly shown on the Danckaerts and Suyter View, Pl. 17, Vol. I.

14 Gov. Andros appoints Capt. Thomas Delavall to be mayor during the following year. John Inians (Inians) is continued as deputy mayor; Francis Rombout, Peter Jacob Marius, and Guylaine ver Planck are reappointed aldermen to serve with William Beeckman and Christoper Hoogland, who are newly appointed. Thomas Ashton is continued as registrar.—M. C. G., I: 69. For description of the life of Thomas Delavall see Mar. Com. Coun., (1851), 330.

The new mayor and aldermen are authorized to act as a court of admiralty.—Ibid., I: 69—70. Judge Hough, of the present (1918) U.S. superior court, has in keeping the early New York admiralty records a "Treasure of Biography."

Dec. Mayor Delavall authorizes John Cooley and John Derrickson Meere to perform the duties of overseers of chimneys, fires, and dry fodder. The original document was owned by the late John D. Crighton.—Bulletin, N. Y. Pub. Library (1901), V: 92. See Jan. 8, 1678; also March 23, 1675.

Commissioners are appointed to have a survey made of the land in New York City lying between the gates and the Fresh Water. It is ordered that the lower part of Pearl St. be fenced and that a gate be set up there.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 77. The gates in Pearl St. and on Wall St. at Broadway and Rector or Collect Pond lay at about the location of the present (1918) criminal court building.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945 (the land gate), 946 (the water gate).

The court of mayor and aldermen issues a fine of £100 Richard Prattshall, master of the "loopp" Edmond and Martha," for landing passengers "without giving ane notice to ye Mayor or Deputy Mayor as the Law Directs."—M. C. M. (MS.), March 11, 1679.

In this month, the "Griffin," the first vessel to sail the Great Lakes, was launched on Lake Erie.—Winsor, op. cit., IV: 182—83, 223.

The governor and council issue orders for "staking out a new street in New York from the Bercerorg to the fortifications northward."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 78. The report of John Lawrence and Johannes van Bruege, dated May 14, shows that, in obedience to the order of "the Governor and Magistrates of this city," dated May 5, for "staking out the new highway," they have staked it out, and have appraised the land contained in it "twenty guineas per rood, Dutch measure, according to each owner's land brief, excepting that part fronting to the street of Roulfe the Butcher, formerly belonging to the widow of Urin Planke, which 28 rods or thereabouts stood unto the Carpen. Hogenau, and now taken up in the highway for eight hundred guilders, which we judge ought to be allowed to the said widow."—Ibid., and Hoffman, Treatise upon the Estate and Rights of the Corporation of the City of N. Y. (1862), II: 248, citing a document in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. The street or highway referred to was the present New Street; not the road to Harlem, as Hoffman erroneously supposes. See also May 24, 1694; Jan. 13, 1696.

The king allows £1,000 per annum towards the maintenance of "y Garrison and Forts of New-York in America."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 278.

John Tucker is accused by the sheriff, John Archer, of "keeping unlawful gaming in his house," on September 1, 1679, as a common Bowling and place for reel playing, for his own proper gain." Tucker is also accused of keeping a public-house without license, and is put under bonds for selling strong drink.—From complaints entered in the "Court of Mayor and Aldermen," in latter part of Liber 19 B, cited in Alfred Wills, II: 434—35.

Joseph Sanderson, Peter Sluiter, and John Romboult, having left their home in Vienward, Friesland, on June 8, and sailed from Amsterdam, arrive at New York. Their purpose is to find in America a suitable place to establish a community of their sect. See Bibliography regarding the Journal of their observations and experiences. For reproduction of a page of the original MS., see Pl. 17, Vol. IV. The following extracts are taken from the edition translated and issued by James and Jameson (N. Y., 1913), entitled Journal of Jasper Danckaerts. The narrative is the best account we have of a voyage across the Atlantic in the seventeenth century. The more important references to New York and vicinity follow:

"The anchor was therefore raised [on Sept. 23, 1679] and we sailed on for the purpose of passing between Staten Island and Long Island, where there are two high points of land for that reason called the Hooden [Headlands, at the entrance to the bay]; but going to the Hooden, and between them... As soon as you begin to approach the land, you see not only woods, hills, dales, green fields and plantations, but also the houses and dwellings of the inhabitants, which afford a cheerful and sweet prospect after having been so long at sea. At length, as you are through the Hooden, you begin to see the city, which presents a pretty sight. The foot, which lies upon the point between two rivers, is somewhat higher; as soon as you see a ship coming up, they raise a flag on a high flag-staff, according to the colors of the sovereign to whom they are subject, as accordingly they now flew the flag of the King of England. We came up to the city about three o'clock, where our ship was quickly over-run with people who came from the shore in all sorts of craft, each one inquiring and searching after his own, and his own persons. For housekeepers and officers came on board as in England, and the ship was all the time free of such persons."—(pp. 35–36).

Leaving the ship, the two travelers went into the town. "As we walked along we saw in different gardens trees full of apples of various kinds, and so laden with peaches and other fruit that one might doubt whether there were more leaves or fruit on them. I have never seen in Europe in the best seasons, such an overflowing abundance."—(p. 44).

The next day, "As it was Sunday, in order to avoid scandal and for other reasons, we did not wish to absent ourselves from church. We therefore went, and found there truly a wild worldly world. I say wild, not only because the people are wild, as they call it in Europe, but because almost all the people who go there to live, or who are born there, partake somewhat of the nature of the country, that is, peculiar to the land where they live. . . . The church being in the fort, we had an opportunity to look through the latter, as we had come too early for preaching. It is not large; it has four points or batteries; it has no moat outside, but is enclosed with a double row of palisades. It is built from the foundation with quarry stone. The parapet is of earth. It is well provided with cannon for the most part of iron, though there were also some brick pieces, all bearing the mark or arms of the Netherlanders. The garrison is small. There is a well of fine water dug in the fort by the English, see Feb. 14, 1677, contrary to . . . the Dutch, who supposed the fort was built upon rock, and had therefore attempted any such thing. There is, indeed, some indication of stone there for along the edge of the water below the fort there is a very large rock extending apparently under the fort, which is built upon the point formed by the two rivers . . . In front of the fort, on the Long Island side, there is a small island called Noten Island [Nutt, now Governor's Island], around the point of which vessels must go in sailing out or in, though there are a close line of several of the batteries. It has only one gate, and that is on the land side, opening upon a broad plain or street, called the Broadway or Beaver way. Over this gate are the arms of the Duke of York. During the time of the Dutch there were two gates, namely, another on the water side; but the English have closed it, and made a battery there, with a false gate. In front of the church is inscribed the name of Governor Kuyt, who caused the same to be built in the year 1642. It has a shingled roof, and upon the gable towards the water side there is a small wooden house, with a bell in it, with the clock. There is a sundial on three sides. The front of the street stretches east and west, and consequently the sides run north and south."—(pp. 44–46).

Danckaerts describes a visit on this Sunday evening to a tavern, which was also a brewery, kept in another part of town by the daughter of his landlord. "On account of its being to some extent a place of refreshment, they were always crowded, and was a low pot-house." They preferred to walk in the garden, and later retraced their steps in the dark, "exploring a way over which we had gone only once in our life, through a salt meadow and over water, upon the trunk of a tree."

The tavern is again referred to on April 23, 1690, as "a tavern, or drinking-house," kept by one Arie and Rebecca, his wife, "having a situation therefore . . . upon a delightful spot at the Vers Water [Fresh Water], a little out of town."—(p. 190).

On Monday morning (Sept. 25) they went on board the ship to observe the way and the objects presented to the eye in a small country on the shore of the sea, and was a low pot-house." They preferred to walk in the garden, and later retraced their steps in the dark, "exploring a way over which we had gone only once in our life, through a salt meadow and over water, upon the trunk of a tree."

The ship was moored at the coast, the two travelers went ashore and called the public storehouse, where they had to be examined; but some time elapsed before it was done in consequence of the examiners being elsewhere. At length, however, one Abraham Lennyn, a good fellow apparently, befriended us. He examined our chest only, with the greatest complaisance, and added: 'If you take care, we will send you all, persons or anything, with all the list of the tin which we have in the upper part of our chest, and he examined it and also the tin, and turned up a little more what was in the chest, and with that left off, without looking at it closely. He demanded four English shillings for the tin, remarking at the same time: 'No custom officers came on board as in England, and we would not examine them closely.' This being finished we sent our goods in a cart to our lodging, paying for the two heavy chests and straw beds, and the other goods from the public storehouse, to the Smitt's Valey. . . ."—(pp. 48–49). See reproduction of original text, Pl. 17, Vol. IV.

Describing the East River, he writes: "There is a ferry for the purpose of crossing over it, which is furnished by the year, and yields a good income, as it is a considerable thoroughfare, this island [Long Island] being one of the most populous places in this vicinity . . . The fare over the ferry is three stuivers in zeecen for each person" (less than half a cent)—(pp. 51–52).

Days later, the two Labadists explored Manhattan Island. "This island is about seven hours' distance in 1678, but is in a full hour broad. The sides are indented with bays, creeks and coves. It is almost entirely taken up, that is, the land is held by private owners, but not half of it is cultivated. Much of it is good wood land. The west end on which the city lies, is entirely cleared for more than an hour's distance, though that is the poorest ground; the best being on the east and north side. There are many brooks of fresh water running through it, pleasant and proper for man and beast to drink, as well as agreeable to behold, affording cool and pleasant resting places, but especially suitable places for the construction of mills, for although there is no overflow of water, yet it can be shut off and so used."—(p. 64).

"We went from the city, following the Broadway, over the valley, or fresh water. Upon both sides of this way were many habitations of negroes, mulattoes and whites. . . . We left the village, called the Bouwerie, on the right hand, and went through the woods to New Harlem, a tolerably large village situated on the south [east] side of the island, directly opposite the place where the northeast creek [Harlem River] and the East River come together, situated about three hours' journey from New Amsterdam, as old Harlem, in Europe, is situated about three hours' distance from old Amsterdam."—(p. 65). The next day, Oct. 7, they walked from Harlem to the North River which they followed to Sappingkine (Greenwich) and thence along the shore to the city.—(p. 68).

On Oct. 15, Danckaerts writes: "We went at noon today to hear the English minister, whose services took place after the Dutch church was over. There were not above twenty-five or thirty people in the church. The first thing that occurred was the reading of all their prayers and ceremonies out of the prayer book, as is done in all Episcopal churches. A young man then went into the pulpit and commenced preaching, who thought he was performing wonders; but he had a little book in his hand out of which he read his sermon which was about a quarter of an hour or half an hour long. With this the services were concluded, at which we could not be sufficiently astonished."—(pp. 75–76). The minister was Rev. Charles Wolley, the only English minister then in the province.—See Aug. 7, 1738.

On Oct. 27, "we made the acquaintance of a person from Zeeland, or who had lived there a long time, for he himself was a Hollander. He had been an apprentice to Jacques Fierens, printer, at the Globe in the Gist street [at Middleburg, Zeeland, in Holy Ghost St.] . . . He sometimes bound old books, and was the only bookbinder in the province."—(pp. 81–82). From Nov. 14 to Jan. 2, the Labadists journeyed to Maryland and Virginia.

Danckaerts recorded on Jan. 15, 1680, that on Jan. 5 "the ships left the harbor in front of the city . . . for Deutel Bay, a cove of Long Island in the East River, about three miles east of the city, opposite Hellgate, where they lie during the winter, to be out of the way of the floating ice, which is sometimes very great."—(p. 166). ("Deutel Bay was a small bight in the East River, about at the foot of Forty-seventh Street. The name was later borrowed from Turtle Bay. It was not a cove of Long Island."")—Ibid., footnote by Jameson; see also Bridges Map, Pl. 80, Vol. III; and Chronology Nov. 15, 1659.

In conversation with an Indian named Hans, on March 4, "he told us certain things which we had never heard any Indian or European mention, the opinion of the Indians in relation to the Godhead, the creation and the preservation and government of all things." He is quoted as saying, with reference to his opinion: "we did not have so much sickness and death before the Christians came into the country, who have taught the people debauchery and excess; they are therefore much more miserable than they were before. The devil, who is wicked, instigates and urges them on to all kinds of iniquities, and war, and to strife and violence amongst themselves, by which many men are wounded and killed."—(p. 174). "I asked Hans, our Indian, what Christians they, the Indians, had first seen in these parts. He answered the first were Under May 8, the author describes the North River.‖—(pp. 242–248); and, under June 23, the East River.‖—(pp. 256–257).

On May 30, M. De La Grange, whom they had met in New York a few days after their arrival in September, asked them to go with him to "Wale Bocth‖ (Wallabout), opposite "Correlaers Hoeck.‖ It was De La Grange who had taken them during the winter to the "South River" [Delaware River], where later the Labadie settlement was established.—(p. 49–50). They accordingly set off in the boat, and landed first on the "Mahatans, a little north of the Burst Mill, on a beautiful farm, having two fine ponds of water before the door, where a mill was standing.‖ Arriving at the "Wale Bocth,‖ they found a ship aground, which had struck on the reef of rocks which juts out from Corlair's Hook towards this bay, and had floated over here and sunk. She was a French privateer, which had taken some rich Dutch prizes in the bay of Campeachy and was going through here to New England, in order to dispose of the goods which would not bring money enough in New York. Many of their goods still in the ship were burnt.‖ (Valentine, without citing authorities, locates Burst Mill Point at what is now Dry Dock St., between 10th and 12th Sts., and states that a wind-mill was erected here by Gov. Stuyvesant's property at an early date; that it had been destroyed by fire and that it was allowed to stand for many years, so that the locality became known as Burst Mill Point.—Man. Com. Coun., 1856, p. 474.)

Dancykerts gives an almost contemporaneous account (see April 30, 1680) of the troubles between Andros and Carteret,—(pp. 239–244, and footnote by Jamsone). The city's trade and shipping interests at this time, the manufacture of flour, and the large commercial intercourse, especially with the West Indies, in which the governor was supposed to have a share, are all described (pp. 244–247), as are also Andros's high-handed methods and ill treatment of various persons at New York (pp. 248–249). Certain pages, now missing, probably contained a detailed description of the town. On June 19, 1660, the travelers left New York for Boston, and returned home to Friesland. On June 23, Dancykerts records that "Noten island was the first place the Hollanders ever occupied in this bay.‖—(p. 256). See April 22, 1659.

Three views of New York, drawn in these years by Jasper Dancykerts, as illustrated in his Journal, showing the East River front and the city from the north, are reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pls. 17, 18, and 19.

Oct. 24 After a joint meeting of the mayor and aldermen and the governor's council, it is proclaimed that fires for the boiling of pitch for the use of vessels shall be kept "against the inhospitable island.‖ While "the halfe Moone near the Cryse Wall,‖ the fires are to be extinguished every night. No fires for any purpose are to be made on vessels lying within the harbour, "Unless in Extremity of Winter.‖ The fires where the pitch is boiled is to serve all purposes,—M. G. C., I: 73. The "halfe Moone‖ was mentioned on Feb. 16, 1677 (p. 6) in connection with the location of the public slaughter-house. See Dancykerts and Skyver View, Pl. 17, Vol. I.

Nov. 24 Gov. Anders appoints the following officers for New York, to 21 serve until Oct. 14, 1680.—Francis Rombaut, mayor; William Beckman, Johannes van Brugh, Thomas Lewis, Peter Jacobs Marries, Eline Verplanck, and Samuel Wilson, aldermen, and John Archer, sheriff.—M. G. C., I: 74. Beckman acted as deputy mayor.—Ibid., 87. For brief account of the personal history of Francis Rombout (a Frenchman), and the inventory of his household furniture, see Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 586; ibid. (1854), 512–513. His property was described as "a Dutch burgomaster Vandeventg (or Van der Griff), the estate having a large garden and orchard extending to the river. It lay north of the old cemetery on Broadway (see Feb. 18, 1677).—See, Castello Plan, II: 221–222; Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 512–513.

A record is made of the amounts realized from "farming‖ or leasing, from 1675 to 1680, with the names of the lessees.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 81; see ibid., 66, regarding its regulations. See also Nov. 25, 1675: April 22, 1676.

Dec. 2 Abraham Corbett is appointed city clerk by Gov. Anders, and sworn in.—M. G. C., I: 75. He succeeds the late Samuel Leete, whose last official act of record was on Dec. 13, 1678.—Ibid., 1: 72.

For an inventory of Leete's effects, which included "Thirty-eight books and a great great chest of books,‖ consider a considerable private collection at that period here, see Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 541.

In 1681, the settlement of Charleston, S. C., was removed to Oyster Point, the present Charleston.—Winson, op. cit., V, 309. See April, 1670.

In this year, Hempen, a French priest, with La Salle, explored the Mississippi River, and discovered the Falls of St. Anthony.—Ibid., IV, 184, 244, 248.

Jan. 7 The council orders that "Spitting Devil" be viewed for the erection of a bridge.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 82, and Aug. 17, 1691.

7 The council orders that no store-house, bolting mill, etc., be kept at the ferry.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 82, 83. The ferry to Brooklyn of this time to be a municipal institution, but, being deemed part of the land system, was controlled by the province.

The governor and council order that in future no flour shall be bolted or packed for exportation in the province except at New York City. Regular inspection of bolting mills, and of the cleaning and packing of corn, was provided. This regulation was made because trade suffered on account of the poor quality of the flour exported.—M. C. C., I: 80; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 82. It was confirmed by Dongan on May 31, 1683 (M. C. C., I: 152-53); see, however, March 24, 1694.

In the time of Andrew there was no assembly, but all legislation was executed by the "Governor in Council." To improve the trade of New York City, he issued two orders. One was to encourage the bolting trade by prohibiting the exportation of wheat flour in which corn was mixed. The other was to lay a duty of ten per cent. on all European commodities imported into the province from any part of the world, except from England direct. This was the first encouragement given "to build shipping."—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 57-58.

8 Articles of agreement having been entered into by 22 cooperers of this city to raise the price of casks (see text of the agreement in Man. Com. Cour., 1850, p. 442), they are summoned by the council, this day, to be at the tavern here to meet in (not given), those in the public employ being dismissed. It is ordered that cooperers, pinters, smiths, etc., serve five years before being allowed to set up business. The record gives the names of those in the combination and those fined.—Ibid., 439; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 82, 83. This is perhaps the first reference to a "trust" in American history.

13 The wife of John Henries is fined ten pounds by the court of mayor and aldermen for reselling stolen goods. A warning was added that she would be "whipped out of the town" if ever again "found in the like Error."—M. C. M. (MS.), Jan. 13, 1680.

The mayor's court seldom prescribed the lash or whipping-post, less frequently still the pillory, stocks, or ducking-stool.—Peterson & Edwards, N. Y., as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 194-96.

There appears under this date in the Court Minutes the first inventory of city records. These are said to be only a part of the "Records of the CYTIE deliv'd to M. John Sharp by ord of y C. Gov'n & wth all other wth one wth these books belonging to yt same."—M. C. M. (MS.), Jan. 14, 1680. A few months later (see Nov. 8), Andres commissioned John West to be "Clerke of the City." For a later inventory of records, see Nov. 21, 1739.

John Vincent and Andrew Breasted are appointed by the mayor and common council of Charleston, S. C., to prepare the "Bye laws" applicable to the town of Charleston. (see note on Charleston, Charleston, C. C.)

Their duties were further defined by Mayor Rombout on Feb. 18. They were to see that casks were made of dry and well-seasoned timber, and that "there be a burot mark sett upon" every one; also that the "Porte and Beefe you shall hereafter pack shall bee good victuall and hoselome."—Ibid., I: 78-79. See Feb. 5, 1693; see also June 8, 1668.

Feb. 24 Treasurer Stoutenburgh (see June 5, 1676) presents to the court of mayor and aldermen his account, "for the tyme of his Office" and "Doth Engage himself to make good ye accompt Debtor and Creditor as ye Same is Delivered in." The court agrees to "fully freely and Absolutely Release and Discharge him," provided he performs "by beforementioned Engagement." William Bird is appointed to inspect his account. —M. C. G. C., I: 75-76. See Oct. 19, 1685.

It is ordered by the council of mayor and aldermen that the Saturday market (see Jan. 29, 1677) be continued, and that an additional market be held every Wednesday, at "ye usual market place opposite ye Bridge and Weigh House."—M. C. C., I: 76.

In view of the "Ill Consequence of any Indians to bee Slaves or Servants Within this Government Cortedey to former Custome Practice," the common council resolves that they shall be considered free and not slaves, and not be forced to be servants.—M. C. C., I: 80.

Seven persons are "Lyceosed to sell wine & other Liquors." Seventeen additional licenses were granted between this date and Oct. 1 next.—M. C. C., I: 80-81. See also March 5, 1672.

Gov. Dongan, in 1683, proclaimed that none could receive licenses without first obtaining a certificate that they were "of good life & Conversation and fitt to keep such a house."—Ibid., I: 100-1.

A license is granted to Abraham Corbett to sell wine and other liquors.—M. C. C., I: 80. Corbett's tavern was at the sign of the Royal Oak on Broadway, on part of the present site of the Standard Oil Company's building at No. 26 Broadway. He continued to keep an inn here until at least 1867.—Of. Librs. Hist.III: 161; XVI: 377 (New York). See also Castello Plan, Pl. II: 232-233; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980.

Adrian Cornelison is licensed to sell wines and liquors.—M. C. C., I: 81. His house was at the south-west corner of Bowery Lane and the Sand Hill Road (Astor Pl. and Fourth Ave.). Adrian Cornelison (va Schakel) had married Rebecca, daughter of Teunis Ide; after his death, she continued to keep the tavern on the Bowery Road, and the place became very well known as "Rebecca's House."—Title Guarantee & Trust Co. records. John Clapp kept a tavern here to 1671 (n.s.). See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980; Pl. 175, Vol. III. See also March 26, 1690.

Andros sends soldiers to Elizabeth-town, who break open Gov. 30 Carteret's house at night and bring him a prisoner to New York. Here Carteret is "committed to the custody of Sheriff Collyer, on a charge of unlawfully assuming jurisdiction over the king's subjects." A special court of assizes is ordered to try him, "on an indictment for riotously presuming to exercise jurisdiction and government over his Majesty's subjects within the bounds of his Majesty's letters patents granted to his Royal Highness." Andros presided at the trial. "Carteret protested against the jurisdiction of the New York court; being overruled, he surrendered his commission as governor of New York 'to be legal, and by virtue of power derived from the King.' He was acquitted on May 28, but had to "give security that, if he went to New York, he would not 'assume any authority or jurisdiction there, civil or military.'" Thereafter the authority of New York court was "kept up as late as 1657."—Of. Librs. Hist. of N. Y., II: 333-34 (and authorities there cited). See also the graphic account of this occurrence in the Jour. of Jasper Danckerts (1913 ed.), 239-44, with footnote by Jameson.

The magistrates of Harlem authorize the constable (Johannes Vennelp) and Daniel Tourenaire to employ a carpenter to build a "town house" 21 ft. long by 21 ft. wide. Adolph Pietersen de Groot, carpenter at New York, undertook the work for 250 guilders. The inhabitants agreed to work on the building a certain number of days gratis.—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), II: 420; Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1814), 410. Daniel Tourenaire, Jan Hummers, Jan Hendricks Brevoort, Arent Hermons, Jan Nagel, Adolph Meyer, Jan Dyckman, and Laurens Janse all took part in "riding" the shingles and clapboards. It took 400 clapboards and 1,800 shingles to inclose the house. There were obtained from Gabriel Legget of Westchester, "woodswayer," 450 ft. of sawed planks for flooring the rooms. Henricus de Forre, C. M. C., Licence, 1175. Their duties were further defined by Mayor Rombout on Feb. 18. They were to see that casks were made of dry and well-seasoned timber, and that "there be a burot mark sett upon" every one; also that the "Porte and Beefe you shall hereafter pack shall bee good victuall and hoselome."—Ibid., I: 78-79. Pennsylvania is granted to William Penn, who proposes to found a commonwealth based on freedom, without respect to colour, race, or religion, to subdue the Indians by love and justice, and to establish a refuge for the persecuted Quakers.—Winsor, op. cit.,

A proclamation is issued by the mayor and aldermen forbidding the inhabitants or others within the city "to Harbour Intertain-tance or Maintenance any Indian Negro Slave or any House or Houses or otherwise to sell or Deliver to them any Wine Ramm or other strong Liquor, or receieve or take from such Indian or Brokholms, now in charge of the government, writes to Sir John Wedren, the duke's secretary: "I have one thing of great moment to acquaint you with, which is the Loose or else wise a great costation from payment of his Royall Highnesse Customs Established here, the time to with they were Limited to be Received being expired in November last, it being mencioned in the Regulacion of the Customs that is to hold good for three years from November 1677, which being publikly knowne to the merchants they all refuse to pay any Customes or Dutyes and Capt. Dyre, the Collector, being now very ill, a Paine [pless] from London hath Unloaded his Goods and carried them to their warehousnes without taking any notice of the Custome house or officers, absolutely Refusing to pay any Customes." A general confusion in the government followed. "The Councell met and advised thereupon but find noe power or author-ty to continue the same longer, without orders from Home."—

Capt. William Dyre, one of the council, collector of the duke's revenue, and mayor of New York, is accused of high treason in the mayor's court. By warrant from the commander and council, the general court of assizes met on June 29 (q. e.) to try him.—N. T. Col.

Rev. Casper van Zuuren writes to the classis of Amsterdam that Joue was present, on account of vacancies at New York and Esopus, 35 "there are only three preachers in this whole province of New York or New Netherland." These are at Schenectady, New York, and the neighborhood of the city of New York; in the winter season, they were in the city, where they both preached and taught. He further writes: "Even the Capital, New York, has no English minister or chap-

William Dyre, collector of the port (see May 31), is tried before a special session of the court of assizes, held in New York, on the charge of high treason, on the ground that he has imposed unlawful customs duties on goods passing through the port. He questions the authority of the court, and consequently is sent to England so that the king may proceed against him as he deems best.—N. T.
Col. Docs., III: 287-84. This difficulty arose from the fact that those customs duties, which, by reason of a three, tae history were about to end, had been arbitrarily ordered continued by the Duke of York. At the same time, Gov. Andros was ordered to increase the duty on imported rum.—Ibld., III: 368; Chalmers, Political Annals, I: 531. However, just at this time, Gov. Andros was recalled to England, and the corporation of New York united in asking the duke to permit the people to take part in the legislative power. This request was granted in the administration of Douglass—Political Annals (op. cit.), I: 583; Brockhead, Hist. State of N. T., II: 351-55, and appendix, note D. It was the resistance offered thus early by the merchants of New York united with the corporation of the city which eventually led to the representative form of government in the province.—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 289, footnote. See Dec. 31.

The text of the petition to the duke just referred to reveals the intensity of desire at this early day for freedom from oppression. It calls attention to the "sure knowledge and unalterable condition of his majesty's subjects." They plead for an assembly "of the people" as the only remedy possible for existing conditions, an assembly established "by a free choice of the freeholders and inhabitants." They express their satisfaction in the appointment by 1681 the duke of the agent, John Lewin, and concur in his "grand inquest." They explain that for many years they "have groaned under inexpressible burdens by having an arbitrary and absolute power used and exercised," even being required by their own Constitutions, by which a yearly revocation had been expected without their wills; and "trade grievously burdured with undue and unusual customs imposed on the merci-dize" without their consent—"our liberty and freedom infringed, and the inhabitants wholly shut out and deprived of any share, vote, or interest, in the government, to their great discouragement, and to the disadvantage of the city's laws, rights, liberties, and privileges, of the subject; so that we are esteemed as nothing, and have become a reproach to the neighbours in other his majesty's colonies, who flourish under the protection and provision of his majesty's unpar-alled form and method of government in his realm of England, the undoubted birthright of all his subjects." They supplicate that the colony may be ruled in future "by a governor, council, and assembly: which assembly to be duly elected and chosen by the freeholders of this your royal highness' colony, as is usual and practicable with the realm of England, and other his majesty's plantations."—Brookhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 658, citing O'Callaghan's "Historical Introduction" to the Jour. Leg. Coun. (1861), viii-x.

The "Greate Packt or Excise For Selling wine and all other 16 Strong liquors by Retaile within this City" (see Nov. 10, 1675) appears to have been revived since its revocation in 1676 (see M. C. C., I: 13-14), for on this day an order is issued by "The Comend in Chief," signed "A. B:" (A. Brockholts), that no one was to sell liquors at retail except those who "would agree with the Farmers or pay Excite at Formerly." The permit for selling wines and liquors (referred to the order as "the Greate Packt or Excise") is "let to service" on this day for the ensuing year to five persons named in the order, and any one desiring to sell at retail is required to agree with them upon the terms of the excise.—Ibid., I: 87.

15 The deputy mayor (William Beckman) and aldermen, influenced by Frederick Phillips, one of the governor's council, draw up a declaration protesting against Lewin's taking depositions privately and administering oaths for that purpose. Such proceed-sings as were ordained by an order in council of April 9, 1682, which required that no one but the mayor, deputy mayor, or eldest alderman, shall grant any warrants, admit any private heartings, or take oaths, and that no oaths shall be taken except in courts, unless in case of necessity and when the parties are present. Lewin has allowed the parties concerned no opportunity to vindicate themselves or to make answer. He has not made application to the city's authorities for assistance, or made known any of the depositions obtained. Since his arrival great disorder and confusion have occurred in the government, due to such irregularities.—M. C. C., I: 87-89. See also July 25, 1685. The original declaration or remonstrance is filed in metal file No. 1, city clerk's record-room.

14 Brockholts, the commander-in-chief, is serving in the absence of Andros, who is in England (see Jan. 7). Brockholts observes that Andros seems to have determined not to return to New York, for his wife now sailed in the ship Beaver to join him in England. Hist. State of N. Y., II: 355, note.

The report of John Lewin, the duke's special agent to audit accounts at New York (see Oct. 16, 1680), having been delivered to Andros, who is now in England (after leaving New York in January, 1681), Andros makes answer to Lewin's charges. Among other things he states:

"Nor Patents have been altered or changed in my time but at the Request of the owner, or by verdict & Judgment or according in Lawe, . . . The Revenues of New York of Houses, Wharifes, Dockage &c have been ordered & managed by the Majestates & officers of ye city (as their own) and Employed to the great benefit & Improvement thereof, particularly in making the Harbor or Mill, . . .

"The roome over the Custome house was ever used by all my Predecessors as a Granary or store roome and soe continued since the tale of his Royall Highness Cargo, and the Ceillar left to the Collec'ter as formerly for his Royall Highness service . . .

"The Dutch having built and fitted an Armory over the kitchen as the most proper room in the fort, it proved extraordinary leaky and too rotten to bee repaired as was found by survey, whereupon I was forced to remove the arms to the garrett over the souldiers Quarters, and to avoid charge pulled down all armory and kitchen, and making up a shed to serve for kitchen & Hall. But afterwards finding the Armes could not be well kept in the Garret by reason of smoke from the sollorners rooms and moisture from the Tythes both being unused, I did receive upon rebuilding the Armory, Of the walls of the Church, of the great house, of stair case and of the flort made the greatest part of the stone work, w'h hath brought the kitchen againe to what it was, And the Armory (being the only [one] that is in those parts) is a work absolutely necessary in the fort, where I left above four hundred good arms fist and in good order, and place for more.

"The taking the Tylles off the great house and shilling it, was in imitation of what was done to the Church by the Inhabitants in my Predecessor's time to prevent Leakage by reason the Tyles were usually broken when the Guns were fired. The Tyles paying for the shilling it.

"The house was soe leaky th'n lately built and never finished by Govt Lovelace that the stairs and some rooms were quite rotten, and see of necessity to be repaired.

"Some of the plantations being in decay were new made during my former voyage to England, but were ordered and part of the materials for the same, and for some new Carriages for the guns were brought up the place before my coming away. But Lieut.
Brockholts in my absence not observing my directions left with him making shippe instead of Land Carriages for the gunns, &c, stockades to sett round the fort, where other Expenses contrary and without order as aforesaid occasioned an extraordinary charge, w'h ought to be laid at his dure and not at mine.

"The five houses [see note below] of Old hospital in the townne, in w'h office also used to be lodged for want roomes in the fort being yearly chargeable & a little use, and upon a Survey found too old & rotten to be of use so I sold it and the ground to be appraised & then pulled downe, and brought the materials into the fort for the rebuiting of a like old house designed to be built by all my predecessor's w'h is rebuilt accordingly and therein made very convenient lodgings for the Officers & secretary &c which was before very much wanted.

"The ground of the hospital and a little part of the streete by convent to the Towne was appraised at 200l & sold in 4 lots. As to what it is objected concerning Coll Morris having offered 300l I rememberd nothing of it but acted herein for his Royall Highness's best advantage.

Andros refers to the improvements in trade, population, and the condition of the province since his first coming to New York.
Of Frederick Phillips and Stephanus van Cortlandt he says that neither they nor anyone "was ever particularly countenanced then they justly deserved," etc., everyone receiving equal justice "without respect of persons, nation or quality."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 308-15. A footnote states that the quarter "knowne by the name of the ground of the five houses" was situated between "Stoney St. and Bridge St. It was surveyed into four lots (two on Stone

THE “Old Church” on Pearl St., between Broad and Whitehall Sts. (the earliest church on Manhattan Island), is sold for $10,200 guilders seawant, or about $1,000. This was the sale to De Sille.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 934-35; Mon. Com. Coun. (1855), 545.

The Jews acquire land for a cemetery, which still exists, near Chatham Square, as the oldest burying-ground on Manhattan Island.—See Feb. 22, 1681; and Dec. 17, 1729.

A committee of the Society of Friends is appointed “to endeavor to purchase a plot of ground for a meeting house and burying-ground, as the present timber to build such a house twenty feet square.” However, it was not until 1696 (p. u.) that land was purchased, on Green St.—Onederonck, Annals of Hemptstead, 102. See 1684.

Brookhills issued orders (presumably at this time) to be observed by the military watch appointed for this city. Each company of militia was to watch by turns, and three divisions, with a commissioned officer in charge of each. The watch or guard was to be set every night by the captain or other commissioned officer at eight o’clock, “Immediately After the Bell Ringing.”

The city gates were to be locked before nine o’clock, by the captain or other commissioned officer, and opened in the morning just after daylight. A fine was imposed for neglect of duty. By nine o’clock there was roll-call. Absentees were fined. Whoever “shall come Over Charged with Drinke” was to be fined two shillings sixpence; but, “if Quite Drunk Quarrelsome or Abusive,” five shillings.

Regulations of a similar character were added about making the rounds, keeping order in public-houses, and against profanity and gaming while on watch. Each person appointed to be on watch “shall bring his Armes that is to say his Sword and Gunno Well fitted and Provided with Six Charges of Powder and as many of Ball Att Least.” Each one was to serve in person “or send three Men in his stead.”—M. C. G. ii, 1689. July 2, 1683, June 1, 1688.

Later in the year (date not given), orders were issued to be observed by the constables’ watch. They were practically the same as those for the military watch. The principal variations were the following: “That whosoever Shall Presume to make any Quarrell upon the Watch upon the Account of being of Different Nation or any Other Pretence whatsoever shall be fined.” Frequent rounds were to be made, “and especially towards the Bridge.”

Instead of the sword and gun required of the military watch, “The Constable or Deputy Shall have with them the Staffes of their office And Every one of the watch Shall have only A Halbert halfe pike or Good Quarter staffe.” There was a fine for neglect. The orders stated in closing that “Going in the Rounds the watch be Still and quiet And not suffer any Laughing or Loud talking in the Streets or notice to be made by any of them.”—Ibid., i: 93-94. This last mentioned particular differs from the order issued for the city’s bellmen or night watchmen of 17, 1687 (p. 12).

The report by J. Churchill to the commissioners of the duke’s revenue, regarding the management of affairs at New York, shows, among other things, “That S’d Edm: Andross did of his own authority tax y’ inhab’ New York to the building of the Mold, & the inhab’ of Long Island to find Stockades.” From the same report it appears that this was a good and necessary work. It also shows that several fines which should have gone to the king “were directed to be employed towards building of a church.” The report closes with the statement that there is no proof that Andross “hath misbehaved himself or broken y’ trust reposed in him.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 714-15.

The proclamation of March 14, 1677, prohibiting Christians from trading with Indians in the towns and plantations of the latter, is renewed.—M. C. G., i: 89-90.

The town house in Harlem (exact location not known; see May 6, 1660) has been finished, and must be paid for. To provide for this and other claims against the town, a meeting is held. “On a careful audit of the accounts, the public debts were found to amount to 1100 fl., and the sums due from country persons to 12 st. To meet the deficiency of 783 & 8 st. a tax of 800 florins upon the lands and erven was voted.”—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1881), 417.

The Duke of York writes to Brockhills that he intends to establish such a form of government at New York as shall give all the advantages and privileges of the king’s other plantations in America enjoy, particularly the chosing of an assembly, and other things agreeable to the laws of England. But he expects the colonists to support the government, and clear off the arrears which have accumulated since the obstruction of the collection of duties began.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 117, 18. See also O’Callaghan’s “Historical Introduction” in Jour. Leg. Coun. (1851), ix.

The elders and deacons of the Dutch Church agree to rent a town house for the new minister. The deacons are to complete the kitchen, cellar, and “bleaching ground.”—Evrekt. Rec., ii: 804-5. See also Sept. 1, 1681; and Nov. 15, 1682.

William Penn signs the “Frame of Government” for his colony. Apr. 24, 1682.—Macdonall, Select Charters Illustrative of Am. History, 1676-1775, 192-93; Church Catalogue, No. 676. See Oct. 27.

Jasper Neucept and Peter Jansen Mosier petition for a spot “uppon the plain” for a government mill. The petition is not granted.—N. Y. Col. MSS., XXX: 96 (Albany), quoted by O’Callaghan in Notes on Windmills (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961; and Addenda.

Alderman James Griscom is dangerously wounded by Capt. Jarvis Baxter, who stabs him with his sword at the tavern of Duck Van Clift, “in the Orchard.” Baxter is ordered to be in readiness “to abide his tryall if the said Graham shall dye of his wounds.” Graham recovered and no action was taken.—From complaints entered in the “Court of Mayor and Aldermen,” and included in last part of Liber 19, vol. in Abstr. Wills, ii, 453-536.

The city of Philadelphia is laid out, Penn’s charter for Aug. 15, 1681, having been signed March 4, 1681.—Wistar, Nat. Hist. Am. ii, 477, 481, 491; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 236. 1683; 1685; there was published in London A Letter from William Penn Proprietary and Governor of Pennsylvania In America, to the Committee of the Free Society of Traders of that Province, residing in London Containing A General Description of the said Province. . . . As Also an Account of the City of Philadelphia Newly laid out . . . with a Portraiture or Platform thereof . . . (drawn by Thomas Holmes, came to America, and lay out that Plan). The plan of Philadelphia shows numbered lots, and spaces left for public buildings, and was intended to interest investors. The letter states (p. 8) that, at the time of writing (Aug. 16, 1683), the town “is advanced within less than a Year to about four Score Houses and Cottages, such as they are, where Merchants and Handicraftsmen are following their Vocation as far as they can, while the Countrymen are close at their Farms . . . “

The payments made from this date until Aug. 21, 1683, for repairs on city works (the particulars of which are not specified), and the amounts of dock money received for expenses, are recorded in documents now preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., in folio lettered “N.Y. City 1670-1700 Miscellaneous,” Box 1 N. Y. MSS.

The Duke of York signs a commission at St. James’s for Col. Thomas Dongan to be governor of New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 328-29. Sir John Werden, the duke’s secretary (p. 317), wrote on Jan. 4, 1685, to Lieut. Brockholles, commander to lay out the plan, that the duke had appointed Dongan, who would “ere long” be in that city.—Ibid., III: 330. Dongan’s instructions from the duke were dated Jan. 27, 1683 (p. v.).

An order is issued against negroes congregating together and engaging in sports, etc., with white persons.—MS. Records of Court of Assizes, 15-36, in N. Y. Hist. Soc.; and M. C. G., i: 92-93.

William Penn, with a number of immigrants, arrives opposite New Castle. The next day, he took formal possession of the town and surrounding country.—Wistar, op. cit., iii: 483-84. 27 Aug.

Dominic Selens writes to the colonist at New York: “As the number of inhabitants here, together with the people coming in from the vicinity, is too great, for the size of our church building, they are contemplating the building of a new church, or else of increasing the accommodations in this one by a large galleria. . . .”

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1682. "The English residents here worship in our church building, entering and occupying it immediately after our morning service. They have no minister, but only a 'reader' who also marries people and baptizes the children, but does not publish the word. There is here also a Lutheran church with a minister. Besides, we have Quakers, Jews and Labadists, all of whom hold their own separate meetings. The Quakers are the most numerous, the Jews come next, and the Labadists are fewest. . . . As to Papists, there are none; or if there are any, they attend our services or that of the Lutherans."—Ecles. Rec., II: 828-30, 832. But see 1683.

Nov. 15. The elders and deacons of the Reformed Dutch Church resolve to build a dwelling for their minister.—Ecles. Rec., II: 841-43. See also Sept. 1, 1681; March 29, 1682. Selyna wrote to the classis of Amsterdam on Oct. 21-23, 1682: "My congregation is now engaged in building me a large house, wholly of stone and three stories high."—Ibid., II: 866. Selyna's parsonage and the deacons' chamber were on the site of the present 21-23 Beaver St.—See Selyna's List, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1841), Vol. I; M. G. C., I: 1531. 1683.

—This date is found upon a "Map of the Rariton River," the first map or plan, indeed the first engraving printed from a copper plate (of which we have any record), made in America. It was engraved by R. Simson (very possibly in New York City) from a drawing by John Reid. But two copies of the map are known, one in the Map Division of the Library of Congress, the other in the Collection of the New Jersey Historical Society. For further information regarding this map, see description of Pl. 27, I: 254, footnote; and Addenda.

—Phillip Wells (or Welles) was appointed surveyor-general this year.—Hutchins, Civil List (Albany, 1880). He acted in this capacity in 1684, in running the New York-Connecticut boundary line.—Col. Coun. Min., 61 (Oct. 10). He also acted as such in running the New York-East New Jersey line in 1686.—Ibid., 49 (June 50), and 50 (Sept. 1). His name first appeared of record as a surveyor Nov. 24, 1686.—Col. Land Papers, v. See also description of Pl. 24, I: 235; and May 13, 1686.

—During the period from 1683 to 1690, Father Thomas Harvey, of the Society of Jesus, was in New York, and again in 1696, according to the Roman Catholic Catalogue of that society. Father Henry Harrison, another priest of that society, was here in 1685, and returned to Ireland in 1690. Father Charles Gage was employed here in 1686—7.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., III: 71. These were English Jesuits.—Ecles. Rec., II: 877.

—Capt. William Dyre (see July 2, 1674) is commissioned to be "Controller & Surveyor General of all ye rates duties & impositions due upon or into his Majesty's Commodity of vertue of ye 4th act [i.e., the act of parliament, cited 25 Charles II, for encouragement of the Eastland and the Greenland trade] in all his maates plantations in America."—Wofforde Papers, XIII: 123, in Mass. Hist. Soc.; Mass. Rets., V 516.

—Instructions are issued at St. James's Palace by the Duke of York to Col. Thomas Dongan for his guidance as governor of New York. These state that, with the instructions, Dongan will receive his commission. He is to "repair thither to New York" with all convenient speed. He is to "call together Fredericke Phillips, Salluh Courtland and so many other eminent inhabitants of New York, not exceeding ten," to be members of the duke's council. He is to publish his commission; administer to the members of the council oaths of allegiance to the king and fealty to the duke "as Lord and Proprietor of the place;" and inform the council what transactions require their consent and approval. He is to issue orders for the appointment of all necessary officers throughout the province that there is to be a general assembly of representatives of all the freeholders, who are to consult with the governor and council regarding the enactment of laws. All parts of the province are to send not more than 18 representatives, to meet in New York by election on the 15th of October, and to elect their delegates. All laws passed by the assembly shall be presented to the governor for his assent or veto. Laws which the governor assents to he is to transmit to the duke, signed by the governor and council and under the seal of the colony (which is also to be used "in passing of grants"), that the duke may ratify and confirm them or reject them. Money is to be raised by passage of laws, for the maintenance of the government, both civil and military, and to pay arrears due to officers, soldiers, etc. Public monies are not to be disposed of except by the governor's warrant. He is not to impair or remit the duke's revenue, without the duke's command; nor displace high public officers without good cause, nor execute the duties of any such officers, nor suffer anyone to execute more than one office by a deputy.

—He is to protect life, liberty, and property; discountenance and punish drunkenness, swearing, etc.; establish courts of justice, taking care that they shall be "as near answerable to ye laws and Courts of Justice in England as may be," subject to the duke's review. He shall grant estates under the seal of the duke's government, at yearly rent or service reserved to the duke and his heirs.

—He is authorized to pardon and remit any fines imposed by the courts, and also pardon crimes before or after conviction, excepting high treason and willful murder; and even in the latter cases, if he finds the criminal deserving of mercy, he may reprieve the execution.

With the advice of the council, he is to "reform and appoint convenient houses and other necessaries, for Custom-houses and matters relating thereunto," where he may judge convenient.

—He is authorized, with the advice of the council, "to settle and establish a Militia of the inhabitants, to be mustered and disciplined" by officers of the governor's appointments, and to "direct such forts & castles . . . as shall be necessary for defense."

—He is to endeavour to ascertain and agree upon the boundaries of the duke's "territories towards Connecticut" with the governors and inhabitants of that province, and to send to the duke "true and exact description of the same."—Ibid.

—if he dies in office, the deputy governor or the chief officer under him at the time shall succeed him, until the duke appoints another person to be governor.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 313-314.

—Permission is granted to Joseph Bueno and other Jews "to trade and traffic within the colony of New York."—Daly, Settlement of the Jews in N. Y., (1853), 27, footnote, citing Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 154. But see Sept. 12, 1685.

The duke appoints Lucas Santen his collector and recorder of New York and its dependencies, to levy and collect dues and revenues from customs, excise, quit-rents, etc. He is to be paid a salary of £1000 per annum out of the monies collected, or, in default thereof, by the duke's treasurer and receiver-general. His instructions are dated April 28, 1685.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 353-356.

—Anticipating the convening of the first representative assembly (see Oct. 17), the Duke of York addresses a letter to that body announcing the appointment of Col. Thomas Dongan as lieutenant-governor of the province. This probably was given to Dongan, with his instructions, to serve as a letter of introduction to the assembly at New York.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 101; Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 22.

—Orders previously made by the governor and council Apr. 23, 1684, that no Bolting Mills be Allowed to boil or flower [be] packed for Exportation but all at New York under penalty of forfeiture nor noe flower to be brought to this City from any place whatsoever, having been violated, a warrant is issued to the sheriff to see that the orders are observed, "and to seize all such flower as shall be bolted and packed in any other Place and Brangted or Imported into this City."—M. An order is issued to Capt. Anthony Brodcholls, Matthias Nickols, Stephanus van Cortlandt, and Edward Antill "to inspect all the papers in the secretary's office and to give an exact catalogue of them."— Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 152. These were the records surrendered on Sept. 15 by John West, the city clerk (M. C. G. VIII: 166-47), clerk of the council (Cal. Coun. Min., 35), and clerk of the court of assises.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 375.

The mayor and others are appointed to view the fortifications of the city.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 152.

At a meeting of the governor and council held at Fort James, it is determined to summon an assembly, in accordance with the duke's instructions to Dongan, to be held in New York on Oct. 17, 1683. Writs are issued to the sheriffs of the various settlements, directing the inhabitants and other representatives to meet in the city. Each one; or, if he is resident on Long Island, was entitled to two representatives; Staten Island, one; Esopus, two; Albany and Rensselaerswyck, two; Schenectady, one; Pemaquid, one; the islands about New York, one; and New York (including the boroughs and Harlem), four.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: xi. By order of the deputy mayor (William Benezon) and aldermen, the provost and the marshal of the city are directed to go from house to house throughout the city and its precincts, and make a list of all the freemen, householders, and inhabitants, and their male children above 16 years of age.—M. C. G. I. 98.

After adjournment of the court of assises, over which Dongan presided, the sheriffs draw up an address to the Duke of York, thanking him for sending over Dongan as governor, and for granting the assembly which is to be held on Oct. 17, 1683.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 386-81, and authorities cited.

Lake Sancton is appointed by the deputy mayor and aldermen the collector of "Duke money" payable to the city by vessels trading at that port. On Nov. 1, a proclamation was issued by the governor and council directing masters of vessels to make payments to the collector, as required by the act of assembly, at the custom-house near the bridge.—M. C. G. I. 199. 100. Cf. March 5, 1684.

"The inhabitants of New York now first participated in the legislative power. The Council, the Court of Assizes, and the Corporation of New York having concurred in soliciting the Duke of York to permit the people to have a share in the government, the Duke of York has, by his sitting in the Province, appointed that he intended to establish the same form of government as the other plantations enjoyed [see April 6, 1675], particularly in the choosing of an assembly."—Holmes, Am. Annals, I: 429, citing N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, III: 247-52. See Jour. Leg. Coun., I: ix. Regarding use of word "legislature," see Oct. 19, 1776.

The representative chosen by the inhabitants of the province, under the order issued by the governor and council on Sept. 13, now meet in general assembly at Fort James in the city of New York.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 1644. "Historical Note," I: xvi. Most of the members were of Dutch descent.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 382. The assembly remained in session until Nov. 5, or about three weeks. The journal of its deliberations has been lost, but the 15 acts which it passed have been preserved, and constitute the beginning of the statute law of New York Province and State.—Osgood, The Am. Colonies (1904): 166-68. Transcripts of the laws passed at this session, and at the second session, were, in 1853, in the office of the secretary of state, in a book entitled The Duke of York's Charter of Liberties and Privileges to the Inhabitants of New York, Anno, 1685. With Acts of the Assembly of that Year, and the Year 1684.—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 355, footnote. When The Colossal Laws of N. Y. were published, in 1894, this book was in the state library.—See Vol. I of that work, p. 111.

"The Charter of Liberties and privileges granted by his Royall Highness to the Inhabitants of New York and its Dependencies" is passed by the colonial legislature. It was the first statute law of the province of New York, enacted by a legislature composed of the governor, council, and representatives elected by the people. It provides, among other matters, that the supreme legislative authority shall ever be in this assembly, under the Duke of York, and that meetings shall be held at least every three years. Freeholders and freemen are allowed to vote; and in every election the majority of voices is to decide. There is also given freedom of religion and a jury of conscience. The whole scheme of government in the province is outlined, and several provisions enacted affecting private as well as public interests. The full text of the act is printed in Col. Laws N. Y. (1894), I: 116-16, from the manuscript compilation of the "Dongan Laws," formerly in the office of the secretary of state, and later in the state library. On Oct. 31, this charter and the act for declaring the requisite numbers of the government were proclaimed at the city hall.—M. C. G. I. 99. The Dongan Laws survived the Capitol fire of March, 1911.

The charter, "not yet perfected," was received by the board of trade on Feb. 17, 1685.—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 354, citing Board of Trade Journals, VII: 90. It was vetoed March 2, 1685 (q. v.) by James (who became king on Feb. 6, q. v.), as too democratic.—Ibid., III: 159.

There is also passed on this day: "A Continued Bill for declaring the Requisite Charges of the Government." The bill was passed in consideration of the duke's resuming to the inhabitants and their posterity "the Rights priviledges Libertyes and Imunities before recited." By it, the duke and his heirs are given "the duties and Customs hereafter Specified." For example, a duty of fourpence is imposed on every gallon of spirituous liquors imported, and other charges for various wines and other articles of merchandise. The duke is also to have an excise tax on all liquors (except beer and cider) which are retailed in the city and county of New York, or carried up the Hudson for consumption, or retailed throughout the province, a different scale of duties being provided for beer and cider. A duty is charged on various skins exported; and traders who traffic in skins with the Indians are to pay a tax of 6d on every £100 paid by them as first cost.

The master, mate, or parser of every incoming vessel is to declare by a sworn invoice a true account of all goods and merchandise on board, and a full statement of the ship's cargo. If any part thereof should be "not the break bulk" before making his report. The act is a detailed and extended law for the regulation of the custom-house (here designated as "such place or places as shall be appointed by the Governor").—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 116-21. The original of this act is in the office of the secretary of state, as well as in the manuscript compilation of the "Dongan Laws," formerly in that office and later in the state library. On Oct. 29, 1684, another act was passed explaining this one.—Ibid., I: 170-71.

The colonial legislature passes "An Act to divide this province & dependences into shires and Counties." This is "for the better administering of the same." This act was subsequently confirmed. The first name is "The City & County of New York, to contain all the Island commonly called Manhattanes Island, Mannings Island, and the two Barne Islands, the City to be called as itt is, New York, and the Islands above specified the County thereof." The other counties are Westchester, Ulster, Albany, Dutchess, Orange, Richmond, Kings, Queens, Suffolk, Dukes, and Cornwall.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 122.

The legislation passes "An Act for naturalizing all those of foreigne Nations at present inhabiting within this province and professing Christianity, and for Encouragement of others to come and Settle the Same." This is also passed. "An Act to settle Courts of Justice." Every town is to have one court every month to determine small cases, three persons to be commissioned for the purpose without jury. Every county is to have a court of sessions and a court of oyer and terminer to meet yearly, at different times in the year, and determine both civil and criminal cases, the time and place for holding it in each county being stated, and each of the courts being with a jury of 12 men. A court of chancery is established for the province "to hear and determine all matters of Equity and shall be allowed and accounts thereof as a Supreme Court of this province." This is to consist of the governor and council, the governor being given power to appoint a chancellor in his stead. Appeals are allowed from the court of chancery or the court of oyer and terminer to the king, after payment of the costs of the decree or judgment from which the appeal arises. By an act of Oct. 21, 1684, several clauses to the foregoing act were explained. The court of

1683: chancery was abolished in 1687 as provided by the Constitution of N. Y. State, Oct. 9, 1846. See July, 1847 (first Monday).

Another Act passed at this session was one "to prevent wilful Perjury," and also one "for the Defraying of the publick & necessary Charge of each respective City, town and County throughout this Province & for maintaining the poor, & their clerk's books." The latter law provided for the annual election of assessors and a treasurer in each city, town, and county, to make assessments and receive money to pay the public charges.

Another law permitted the burning of ruins "found att liberty, in the streets and meadows, or upon any other publick fences or inclinations." The latter law proved for the annual election of assessors and a treasurer in each city, town, and county, to make assessments and receive money to pay the public charges.

ibid. (1838), 312. For his will and the inventory of his estate, see ibid. (1864), 661-64. For his first term, see Aug. 17, 1668.

Dongan reappoints John West clerk of the city.—M. C. C., I: 107, 109; 1684.

A proclamation is issued prohibiting all persons from trading with the Indians without a license from the secretary's office.—M. C. C., I: 168; Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 107, 153. The order was renewed on April 15, 1686.—ibid., 115.

James Graham's commission to record the words of the city bears this date.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 154. The office of recorder was one of long standing in English towns, but was introduced into New York now for the first time, under a provision of the Dongan Charter. He served "during pleasure" as "Ass't to the Mayor and Aldermen in the 8th Rule of Governing of this City and administration of Justice in their Court of Record."—M. C. C., I: 117-18. As legal adviser to both common council and mayor's court, James Graham may be called the first corporation counsel of the city of New York. For Graham's career in other capacities, see Dec. 10, 1683; and for his restoration to the office of recorder, see Sept. 1, 1692.

Replying to the city's petition of Nov. 27 (see Nov. 10), Gov. Dongan, in granting it, states that vacant lands to low-water mark are already disposed of, but "The whole Island is ordered to be surveyed & when ye 1st is done some land in ye woods not yet dispose of shall be appointed for ye use of ye City." The ferry is granted on condition that "two boats for passengers be kept on each side of ye Ruer and one boat for Cattle on each side of ye Ruer also." He also prescribes that no other ferry shall be allowed besides the one already established. "The Dock & Wharf is allowed to ye City proovit be it well kept and Cleared." No duty is to be paid "upon ye Bridge." The granting of licenses is not allowed, as these "are always belong to ye Governo." He grants "the benefit of ye Market and Market houses," provided "there be nothing sold, but upon Wednesday & Saturday beginning betwixt Nine & Ten of ye Clock in ye floore conce [Dongan Charter, April 15, 1686] and all broach, nett, etc. Nothing being allowed to be sold in any vessel boaste or Canoe wsoever." Only butcher's meat is to be sold every day in the week, Sunday excepted. The governor will appoint a clerk of the market, and will "see after ye Weights & Measures, & due Regulation of ye Market."

There shall be only 20 cunmen, as well as a certain number of sworn porters, whose wages shall be regulated; and there are regulations relating to assay of food, etc.—ibid., I: 111-12. On Dec. 19, he ordered that the "form of Method" prescribed in the petition of Nov. 9, "Flor ye Wel & Governm't of ye City," be put into operation "until such time as his Royal highness pleasure shall be further known thereon."—ibid., I: 113. The charter did not receive the official seal of the province on Apri, 27, 1686 (p. v.).—ibid., I: 395. See also Dec. 10, 1683.

The common council agrees upon the division of the city into six wards. For detailed description of the boundaries of the wards, see Feb. 5. The "Ward of the South-westward, or Westward, or the Southward, was the present north side of Pearl Street between Whitehall and Broad Sts.; the "beare Graft" was the present Broad St., and the "Beaver graft" was Beaver Street between Broadway and Broad St. The "Smith flowes," in the description of the East Ward, was part of the present William Street. The street called "prince Streets" in the description of the North Ward was Beaver Street between Broadway and William Stts. The "house of Thomas Coker," one of the landmarks in the boundaries of the West Ward, stood (on the modern map) in Battery Park, immediately south of Battery Pl. "New street" becomes this name-to-day. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 992 et seq.

Although the Dongan Charter was not signed until April 27, 1686 (p. v.), its provisions are virtually in effect at this earlier date. By the governor's order, "ye 8th form and Method" were to be "put in practice," and his seal was to his series dated Aug. 8, 1686. (ibid., 116). The new common council was not presented and sworn until Feb. 14, 1684 (ibid., 120). For the first election of aldermen by popular vote, see Oct. 13, 1684.

In this year, Franquetin's Great MS. Map, entitled Garte de la Louisiana, ou des deux rives du Salle et des pays qu'il a decouverts depuis la Nouvelle-France jusqu'a la Geff des quatre ans 1679-80 et 82, by Jean-Baptiste Louis Franquetin, the 1684, Paris, was completed.—Winston, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 227-28, where a manuscript copy in the Harvard Library is reproduced. There is, in the L. C., a splendid MS. copy in colours of the more important map of 1688.

Some time this year, deacons of the Lutheran Church petitioned for a patent of confirmation of title to their church lot, on which their new church stood (see May 16, 1674).—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 107. This petition, addressed to Dongan, recites that the petitioners had the privilege of erecting a church "on Ground without ye Gate of this City and in ord're thereunto Did erect and build thereon;" and afterwards, when Governor Colvile came, they were forced "to Remove and Breake Down wv was erected and built on sd Ground, and in Lew thereof, ye petitioners was allowed and Allowed ye Peace of Ground within ye Gate where ye Erected Church now Stands and house adjacent and had a Patent thereon, but it happens to bee mislayed." They ask for a confirmation of their patent for this ground.—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 245, and footnote by O'Callaghan, who points out the error of Governor's statement (Hist. of the Churches, 57) that this church within the gates was erected in 1702. Its location was at the southwest corner of Broadway and Rector St., where later Grace Church was built. For Colvile's patent to the ground, see May 12, 1674.

The original petition, formerly kept in the state library, was destroyed in the Capitol fire of March, 1911. Its full text is therefore no longer of record in the original form. As described by O'Callaghan, as well as in the Calendar, it is undated, and the year 1684, assigned to it, is taken from the congregation's petition to Dongan, and his order of Sept. 6, 1684 (q. v.), exempting the church property from taxes.

It was agreed by the Friends that "the meeting (begun in Hempstead) continue at Patience Story's" (in New York).—Ox- derdonk, Annals of Hempstead, 102. See 1682.

The first session of the court of general sessions of the peace for the city and county of New York is held. This court was established by the legislature Nov. 1, 1683 (q. v.), and a series of velvet and old leather-bound volumes in the criminal courts building contains its records. See Pl. 19 for reproduction of first page. The law prescribed that the judges should be the justices of the peace of the city—"three of them at the least"—and the first session was held in Colvile's room, in the house of James Graham, recorder, and aldermen Nicholas Bayard, John Inians, William Pinhorne, John Robinson, and William Cox. The first case before the court has an amusing aspect. A Long Island planter, Henry Thomassen, indicted by the grand jury "for that he natt having the feare of God and being by the innocent and unresisted process of the laws... did by force and arms enter the cellar belonging to and being part of the dwelling house of William Cox, merchant... and there feloniously and burglariously break into the same with the intention to steal and spoil the chattels of the said William Cox contrary to the Peace of our sovereign Lord & King, his crown and dignity." The court adjourned until a.p.m. in order to afford the jury an opportunity to discuss the case in all its bearings; when the session resumed, "the sheriff appeared, sore in mind, and re- turned that he [Thomassen] has broke prison and he, the sheriff aforesaid, desired tyrne till next session to pursue ye charging Thomasen."

The runaway was captured soon, and in the meantime his wife was convicted of being implicated with him in the burglary. "Therefore it is considered by the Court that Henry Thomassen is guilty of burglary felony and that he be branded on the forehead with the letter B and be whipped on the bare back 14 stripes to 14. day in November, or as the court shall determine before the City Hall, and pay the costs of prosecution." His wife was condemned to be branded on the "fatt of the thumb" for her part in the crime.—MS. volume General Sessions of the Peace held for the City and County of New York, 1684-6, opening pages. This court, created by provincial law, yielded place to a similar court established by the municipality by the Dongan Charter in 1686. Court sessions were held four times a year, in February, May, August, and November; hence the term "Quarter Sessions" was often used.—Daly, Hist. Sketch of Judicial Tribuna of N. Y., 33-34. Adolph Meyer and Resolved Waldron were chosen inspectors of chimneyes and firewards, and Barent Waldron and Isaac Delamater, surveyors of the common fences. These fences were ordered to be repaired and made of four split rails, good and suitable.

—M.C.C., I: 120. This name was at first applied to the six assistant aldermen provided for in the Dongan Charter (see April 25, 1686).

"Att a Meeting of Mayr Aldermen and Common Council" was the language employed to describe their meeting with the other aldermen in the following week (Feb. 28, p. v.).—Ibid, I: 121.

Very soon, however, the whole body came to be called "A Common Council."—Ibid, I: 114. See also Oct. 17, 1675.

The common council appoints a committee to "view ye publick works of this City & Make report what Repairs are Necessary & what may be ye Charge thereof."—M.C.C., I: 120. They made an itemized report on Feb. 23 (p. v.), showing the estimate to be £150 for repairs to the "City Hall and Yards," to "The Wharfe," and to "The Markett House."—Ibid, I: 122-26.

The council orders that a court of chancery be held.—Col. Coun. Min., 36.

William Bogardus, the city treasurer, prepares an account of the city's revenues running from July 25, 1681. It shows an aggregate income of £141:13:0, an expenditure of £109:20:0, and according to Himman (see The Blue Laws, 259), may be classed among the strictest codes of law intended to preserve order and morality in the English colonies. It is as follows:

Ordered That noe manner of Servile work be done On the Lords Day (workes of Pietie & Charity in the Parish, and any Goods bought or Sold On that day within this City or Liberties thereof under the Penalty of Tenn Shilling for the first Offence. And for Every Offence After double that Summe.

On Mar. 15, the period was reduced to seven days. The penalty was to be paid by the parent or master of a guilty person who is under age; and, in default of such payment, the "Child, Children, servants or Apprentices to be sent to the House of Correction or to the Cage."—Ibid, IV: 78-80.

Another ordinance is passed to prevent fires. Inspectors are to 20 appointed (and no more) by "the Mayor and Court of Aldermen." Their duties shall be to "fill up Amend and Repair the Breaches in the Streets and Highways in and About this City when Required by the May or Gratt." And, every week on Saturday afternoon, they are required to "Carry and Cart the dirt out of all the Streets and Lanes, within this City and Convey the Same, to Some Convenient place where the same, Shall be Deepened." The dirt is to be "dug up and Loaded or Putt into their Carts by the Ownere's or Tenantes of the house before wth the Same Lyth." The ordinance also provides a system of charges for carting various goods, such as lime, bricks, "great Cables," and cordwood.—M.C.C., I: 135-36. On April 18, 1691 (p. v.), an increase in the number of cartmen to 14 is noted.

be appointed to examine chimneys and hearthes; the inhabitants are not to keep combustible matter in or near their houses; and hooks, ladders, and buckets are to be kept at convenient places within the City. —Ibid., I: 119. See also ibid., I: 187, 211, 255, 372, 392; II: 22, 183, 223; IV: 82-83; VI: 116; VII: 330-331.; Chron., Jan. 23, 1648, July 3, 1672, Feb. 17/17, 1672; and chapters on "Fire and Fire Prevention" in Peterson & Edwards, N. V. I., as an 18th Cent. Municipality.

Another ordinance states "That, until a Particular Place Shall be for that Purpose Made And Apoynted, the Strand between the Whelghouse, and the Corner of James Matthewes: And the Veet grotto, before Mr Van Brugh, And the Smiths Fly And Places Apoynted for fire wood to be Brought to And Coaled." —M. C. C., I: 118.

It is further ordered "That there be Swoone Surveyor's Apoynted for this City by whose Advise And Directions, the ground within this City shall be Built and that none doe Build Before the front of their ground be Reck & Loyd out by them. And as they shall Direct: That A Regular Order, and Uniformity may be kept and Observed in the Streets And Buildings And y' none Pause before their houses, but in such manner, As Apoynted by the Sayd Surveyor's. And that for Laying out Each house Lott, And guesing Convenience, the Sayd Surveyor and Receiver from the Owner thereof the Summe of Six Shilling." —Ibid., I: 117.

The regulation is repeated by ordinance of May 4, 1691 (ibid., I: 216), and again, with a revision, on Nov. 18, 1731. —Ibid.; IV: 81-82.

And again in the regulations in order to the admission of freemen (see S.P. 1717, page 14, as printed). England money is substituted for beavers in payment. Thus, no one is allowed (under penalty of £3 for each offence) to "keep Shop and Sell Any Goods or wares, By Retaile or Exercise Any handicraft Trade or Occupation," unless a freeman or admitted as such for the time being by the mayor and court of aldermen. Henceforth, merchant, trader, or shopkeeper, who is "made free," shall pay £2 12s. and a handicraftsman, £1 4s. (See Jan. 20, 1676.) A freeman absent from the city for a year, who does not "keep fire and Candle, and Pay Scott and Lott," shall lose his freedom. —Ibid., I: 137.

Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday are appointed market days "for the Exposing to Sale at the Market house all Butchers meat, and fish whatsoever." Before and after the ringing of the bell, with which the markets shall be opened and closed, "no butchers, meate, or victualls is to be Exposed to Sale in the Sayd Market, under the Penalty of forfeiture. . . Fish Butter Cheese Egg Poultry fruites Rootes, and herbs, may be Sold Every Day in the week at Any time in all or other Convenient places. . . . Noe Person Shall Forestall Any Provisions or Victualls Coming to the Market, as to buy in Any Private or Other Place than the Market under Paine of forfeite of the Same, whether it be found or not." —Ibid., I: 139-40.

The Dongan Charter (April 25, 1686) provided that the mayor, etc. "Shall And May for ever hereafter hold and Keep within said City in every week of ye year three Market Days the one upon Tuesday the Other upon Thursday And ye other upon Saturday weekly for Ever." —Ibid., I: 303. But, on Nov. 18, 1771, every day in the week, except Sunday, was made a market day. —Ibid., IV: 108-9.

By another order, bakers and others who sell flour shall pack it in casks having the maker's brand upon them; also the former order against bring flour into the city from any other place shall be enforced. —Ibid., I: 172-73.

An "Address and Petition" is drawn up by the mayor and aldermen, to be presented to Gov. Dongan, "Praying Confirmation of the former Orders, Prohibiting Bolting Mills, or flour or Bread to be made in any Other Parts of the Province or Importing into the City." The following facts are inserted:

"That for many years Past, Even from the first Settlement, of the Government of the Flower or Biskett was, Boulted made or Packed for Sale or Transportation, but in this City until About the [years] 1679 & 1680. The causes of complaint at that time, and the prohibitions then enacted, are recited, and request is made that this government remove the orders of his predecessors. —M. C. C., I: 141-42. On March 18, Dongan asked for "Reasons att Large why there Should be Any Prohibition for bolting" outside the city. —Ibid., I: 142-43. These reasons were drawn up by a committee appointed on April 6, and are, in part, as follows: "This City being the Matropical of the Province hath from, tyme to tyne, the Mayne Supfogere thereof the flowerishing or Decay of [with Doh] such [all] and its Parts: and itt is in trade and Trafficke maynoted by its Number of Inhabitans. There be besides Credit and Reputation Abroad by whose means alone all Foreigns Commerce and shiping, Is Drawed hether. That the Manufacture of flower and Bread . . . hath been and is the Chief Supfogere of the trade and Trafficke to and from this City and Maintenance of its Inhabitants of all Degrees, and if used and Practised in other. . . . Parts of the Province must of necessity Lessen Our Trade and Consequently the numb' of the inhab'3 Implied therein. All Other Parts of the Province have some Particular Advantage and war of Luineg As Long Island & Husbandry and Whaling Espan is the being far the part by Tillage and Trade or War and busandhury this City noe Other Advantage Or Way of Luineg but by Trafficke and Dependance are on Another Chiefly upheld by the Manufacture of flower and Bread," etc.—Ibid., I: 148-50 and see II: 43-48. On May 21, the governor signed a proclamation, which was published on May 23, reaffirming to New York the sole bolting privilege "until the Will and Pleasure of his Royall Highness James Duke of York And Albany Lord Propriet' of this Province be Knowne." —Ibid., II: 152-53. See, also, Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 109, 110; and Jan. 7, 1680.

On Feb. 11, Gabriel Thompson and Receiver of the White Lion tavern, at the north-west corner of William and Wall Sts. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981,) petitions against a seizure of flour on March 17,—From the original petition, kept with papers filed in the comptroller's office. —M. C. C., I: 141.

Jan. 17 appears by a provision of this date to Dongan that the inhabitants of New York have complained of daily abuses in the sale of firewood, on account of the stick's being of different lengths and size. Moreover, "Often tymes Severall noches put On a Stick whereby they are Deffrauded of their due (it being Only att the Pleasure of the Interstate) & wherein they have hath gained them half Hundred Sticks." They ask that it be sold by the cord, which shall be 8 ft. in length, 4 ft. wide, and 4 ft. high. —John 11, 1677 (ibid., I: 41), when an order was issued to sell by the cord. So, now, a proclamation is issued that "no firewood Shall be Exposed for Sale in the city of New York but such as shall be cut after the manner of cordwood, and sold by the cord." —Cal. Hist. MSS., 169, on Oct. 6, the common council ordered that "the Execution of the Ord's about fire wood, be suspended until Provision be made by Act of Assembly." —M. C. C., I: 156. See Oct. 27.

The common council approves of the first set of orders for regulating the affairs of the great dock (here defined as "the Porte Mould [mole] Dock and Bridge of the City"), and requires that they be submitted to the governor for his approval. They are:

Vessels not belonging to the port shall pay certain prescribed taxes when anchored, etc. —Ibid., I: 159-60.

Vessels belonging to the port shall pay yearly, according to tonnage, "for Lying within the Dock or Mould;" but vessels not belonging to the port, which come within the dock, shall pay "for Every Voyage," and may not lie there longer than one month.

No vessel shall lie "in the mouth of the dock, within the mole, or near the bridge in Inconvenient places," or longer than a conveniente time for loading and unloading, except in winter or under stress of weather; and if by accident any vessel run aground in the mouth of the dock, it is to remove as soon as able.

Vessels within the mole or dock may make or keep fire on board only from dark to "the Ringing of the City Bell at night."

No vessel may cast "Anchor, Grapeall or Kelleck within or near the mole or dock, where it may endanger other vessels. None may cast dirt, etc., "to fill up or Annoy the mould or Dock or the neighbourhoud."

A vessel may not lie at the outside of the dock or mole except in fair weather, and then not longer than one tide, except by leave of the haven-master.

"Timber, Pipe Staves [staves], wood or Other Lumber" may not be landed upon the mole or wharf, and carts are not permitted "to Rye there."

These "hauen Master" shall direct the shipmasters to have fit and convenient berths, where they may lie or fasten.

Various fines are imposed for violation of these orders. It is the haven-master's duty to see that the orders are obeyed. He shall pay half the fines collected to the treasurer, and keep the other half. The fees to be collected by the haven-master may be grouped
The Theography of Manhattan Island

1684 under three heads, anchorage, dockage, and bridgemony. The Mar. 32 a chart of the port and of the Sound on such exports as well as imports as are not liable to custom duties. Several articles are specified, including sugar, molasses, and tobacco, and on the other hand lumber, staves, heading, and ballast are excepted. Imported merchandise from Long Island is not taxable, it being defined to be a statement that "for lovers of the seas" means "from any place beyond the East End of Long Island and to the Southward of Sandy Point." For the purpose of dockage the ordinance makes a distinction between vessels "belonging to this Port" and those which do not. For the former there is an annual fee varying according to tonnage from $10 to $15. For vessels belonging to other places there is a fee of one time the vessel docks from 6d. to 2s. 6d. For all vessels a proportionate increase of fees is payable, if they "Lye Above one Month," a liberal privilege that was subsequently changed, Sept. 6, 1699 (M. C. C. II: 84), to a penalty of six shillings for every tide beyond a "Convenient time" for loading and unloading. Fees for anchorages appear to have been fixed at an earlier period and are renewed at this time, namely, one shilling for a vessel of ten tons or less, and an additional shilling "for Every Ton Ten More." Vessels "not belonging to this Port" are the only ones mentioned in this category, probably, because it was expected they would always take advantage of the liberal rates of dockage.—M. C. C., I: 143-45. See June 6, 1675; March 8, 1683; Aug. 28, 1694.

When the city's system of docks and wharves had developed, in later years, these regulations were modified accordingly.—See Sept. 18, 1690; Nov. 18, 1731; Jan. 15, 1759. For other references to the great dock, and other docks and wharves, consult Index. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987-91; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, Addenda, Vol. V.

155. Fifteen cartmen "strike," refusing to "Obey Observe and follow the Ord's of the Corporation," and are Apoynted to be Apoynted and Kept. They are "Discharged being Any Longe Carman by the common council, which body also issued a proclamation giving "free Liberty and Licence to all except the strikers and slaves to become members."—M. C. C., I: 146-47. See reproduction in N. Y. : as an 18th Cent. Municipality. plate VI.

The common council orders that the "Loft Over the Quarters house belonging to Garritt Jonnes Rose is Apoynted to be the general store for all Powder he and to Take Care and Look After the Same."—M. C. C., I: 150; but see May 31.

8 John van Gelder is approved by the court of mayor and aldermen as "Jviter to funeralls." For all who shall employ him he is to "Compent himself Civilly."—M. C. M. (MS.), April 8, 1684.

28 "Some complaints having been made of the abuses in bread, & that Cornel is put into it," the executive council orders "that the bread be inspected, & that the beer be looked after, & the Market place be inspected," and that the oath be taken by the Mayor & wardens of the Market place before they enter it. The secretary shall inform Deputy Mayor N. Bayard.—Ex. Coun. Min. (MS.), V: 80 (Albany). See May 24.

30 Cornelis Jansen engages Adrianus Westerhoit to build a house for him on his land on Montague's Flat, for which he agrees to pay "soo gilders in pat catlile, wheat and east." In this house, standing near the present junction of 99th St. and Harlem Lane, Jansen established a tavern, later famous as the "Half Way House," which, after his death in 1686, was kept by his wife.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 438-39. See Oct. 13, 1694.

The governor desires (see April 28) "that the Market may be Removed fo' the Place where it is now kept" (that is, near the bridge and weigh-house.—see March 9, 1688) "to the Vacant ground before the Fort," and the common council so orders. That is, it is ordered that "that henceforward the Market, for Butchers meat be held in the Same Place Accordingly," the butchers bearing the expense of erecting their nales [stalls] in the original and Other Conveniencies. —M. C. C., I: 151. This market became known as the "Broadway Shambles or Meat Market."—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 958. See also April 1, 1691. The old building continued in use, however, principally as a store-house (ibid., 1691, 202, 203). De Vos, Market Book, 70-77. See also Jan. 29, 1677.

The common council orders that "the New-Streete beginning from Edward Taylers Carouse to the Cornour of Domini Sellys Lott and int there to the Warehouse of the Widlow Ver- planten he Tvane In the Timese Owning the Lotts therein. Each before his owne Lott before the 25 July next."

C. C., I: 151. The "New-Streete" here mentioned is the present New Street.—See May 5, 1679; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., III: 336. The tax list of 1677 shows the names of owners of lots on "The Smiths Street" (the present William St.). —M. C. C., I: 57. The "Beare gracht" is Beaver St.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 995.

The common council resolves that "in Some Convenient Place On the Common A Powder house be Built of Stone."—M. C. C., I: 152. This was not acted upon at this time.—Ibid., I: 400.

Anthony Brockhulls, Lucas Santen, and others are appointed (probably by the governor and council, since the record does not appear in the Minutes of the Common Council) to examine the fortifications of the city, and report what repairs are immediately necessary.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 129. See ibid. for their report.

A paid night watch is established, the military officers and troopers being excused therefrom. The common council orders that the constables in the five wards on the south side of the "Fresh Water" watch by turns, one each night, and hire eight assistants who shall each be paid 12d. per night out of the city treasury.—M. C. C., I: 153.

Peter Stoutenburgh is appointed overseer of the work to be done on wharf and warehouse. The work was evidently a large one, each house was to provide a man to help unload and secure the timber and stockades. On failure to do so, a fine was to be levied.—M. C. C., I: 153.

Virginia becomes a royal province, with Lord Howard as governor.—Cal. of State Papers. Am. & W. Indies 1661-1685, 670; Bancroft, Hist. U. S., I: 471.

From this date until Aug. 5, representatives of Massachusetts, New York, Maryland, and Virginia, and sachems of the Five Nations, meet at Albany, and settle on the terms of a lasting peace.—Winsor, op. cit., V: 611; Brodhead, op. cit., II: 356-407.

The Duke of York's secretary (Werden) writes to England to Dongan. "As far as we are able to inform the coast from Carolina to Nova Scotia, it seems a very reasonable thing, and you may offer the privilege thereof to any undertakers for ye space of 3 or 5 years by way of farme." The duke is to have not less than one-tenth of the profits of all post-offices in his dominions.—N. Y. Col. Rec., III: 349-50. Dongan answered Werden on Feb. 15, 1685 (g. v.). See, further, Dec. 9.

The duke's secretary also informs Dongan, by his letter of this date: "The house and garden with you desire to have, ye Duke designs for ye use of the Govt for the time being, see as you make use of ye during the time of ye government there."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 350. Dongan replied on Feb. 16, 1685 (g. v.).

On a petition of the Lutherners to have their church and personage exempted from taxes, Dongan and the council give their opinion that the exemption should be granted, as it was to "the Dutch and French Ministers and their Ministers, who are the ministers to the reformed church in the west, who are not lawfull to be out of the land."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (40 ed.), III: 246; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., iii.

The "green before the fort" is designated in an order of the place of parade for the several companies in New York, at seven o'clock in the morning on Sept. 20. —Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 151. This was the "usual place of rendezvous for the companies assemblable for exercise."—Ibid., I: 170. In 1730, this same space was designated "The Parade."—See Ps. 26, 27, 27-A, Vol. I. There is therefore little probability, and no record, that the "green before the fort" was a bowling green prior to 1733, when leased for that purpose. —See "Bowling Green," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 968. Where, on this point, features connected with its subsequent history are indicated. The earliest use of this ground was at part of the common highway, which had various successive Dutch designations, and was finally anglicised as Broadway about 1668.—See ibid., III. 994. It was in 1684 (see May 24) that there were erected here the shambles of a meat market.—Ibid., III. 958.

For the first time, the aldermen, councilmen, assessors, and constables are elected by the freemen of the several wards. A "Return of the Seuerall Persons Chosen" appears in the Minutes. The common council establishes the following fines in case the person chosen to serve in an official capacity refuses to serve:

A constable, £3; an assessor, £3; a "Common Counsell Man," £710s; an alderman, £10; the mayor, £25.—M. C. C., I: 156–57.

Such action breathes of the time when there was no compensation to attract, and when in a large measure "the office sought the man."

Gabriel Minville is appointed mayor.—M. C. C., I: 159. This appointment was made by the governor from a list of seven names presented by the mayor and aldermen.—Ibid., I: 158. In the petition for a charter, Nov. 9, 1683 (q. v.), one request called for the governor to make his choice of a mayor from the aldermen elect. Curiously enough, only two of the seven nominees referred to above were aldermen elect. Minville himself was an assistant from the West Ward.—Ibid., I: 159. This plan of presenting nominees was a survival of the Dutch practice of choosing magistrates (see Oct. 9, 1669); it was destined to continue only one year longer, the charter placing no such limit on the governor's choice.—Ibid., I: 298. For a brief sketch of the life of Gabriel Minville, see Man. Com. Coun. (1831), 178; Wilson's Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 51.

The legislature passes the following acts:

"A Bill against Common Baratry, Champerty and Maintenance."

"A Bill to prevent deceit & Forgery."

"A Bill Concerning Purchasing of Lands from the Indians."

"A Bill Concerning Marriages."

"A Bill Concerning Cattle Corne Fields and Fences."

"A Bill Concerning Burials."

"A Bill Concerning Assignments of Speciallrs."

22

The legislature passes the following acts:

"A Bill Concerning Orphans."

"An Act for quieting mens estates & the Limitation of certain actions for avoiding of suits in Law."

"A Bill to Prevent the Absence of justices of the Peace from their Courts."

"A Bill Concerning Masters servants Slaves Labourers and Apprentices."

The legislature passes the following acts:

"A Bill for the Settlement of the Militia. " Vide infra."

"An Act to prevent Arreasts of Judgments and superseding Execucions."

"A Bill for Executing the Judgm't of the former Courts of Assizes & Sessions."

"An Act for the Encouragement of Trade and Navigation within this province. " This was by a levy of export and import duties on merchandise, to be paid to the persons appointed by the duke to receive them.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 161–67.

The first provincial act "for the Settlement of the Militia" is above referred to. It provides for the appointment by the governor of a mayor "in such County (capable thereof)" as head of the militia there, and for the appointment and commissioning, also by the governor, of all officers of militia within the province. They are to be "Chosen out of the Freeholders inhabitants within the Respective Townes and Counties where their Companies are." Among the other provisions is one requiring "That noe Master of Vesels bee exempt from Training but such as are above forty Tuns." All persons, though freed from training by law, are nevertheless "obliged to keep Convenient arms and ammunition in Their houses as the Law directs To others. All fines collected by the commission officers are to be used "in the buying of Drames and Colours Italherbas [sic for harlebards] Trumpetts", etc. "Match Locks being not thought necessary in this Country that none bee obliged to provide them." These and a few other brief regulations comprise this leading statute; it is being expressly provided that, in other matters relating to military affairs, all persons are to be regulated as in his Royall Highnesses Laws is Directed.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 161. For the Duke's Laws, see ibid., I: 6 et seq.

The legislature passes the following acts:

"A Bill to prevent Damages done by Casting Ballast Into Rivers."

Sarah Burgier, in behalf of her daughter, Elizabeth Shackerly, the child of John Shakerly, deceased, states in a petition to Gov. Dongan: "That whereas your Honour was pleased to Ord that for the Convenience of the City a certaine piece [piece] of Land lying in the Broadway belonging to yof Petitioner said Child should be left Vacant and unimproved for a street or highway, And that the Law [sic] thereof the City should give to the said Child a piece [piece] of Land Equivalent thereto in such other part of the City as to the Mayor and Aldmen Should seem Most Equall and Convenient, to whom for the Effectuating whereof yof petitioner was referred, to whom yof petitioner having accordingly made application reco'd for Answer that if yof said petitioner's Child had any Right to the foresaid piece of Land they might improve the same without any Lett or disturbance from the City and wholly refused to give your petitioner any such Land in Leeuw thereof or other Satisfaction therefore [thereof] whereby yof petitioner's poor Child is left wholly deserted, not only hence dispossessed of her Land but in noe way or possibility of obtaining satisfaction therefore [thereof] unless relieved by yof Honour. She asks that "either she may have Liberty to Expromve the said piece of Land or have another equall thereto in Leeuw therof . . . .

This petition is referred to the mayor and aldermen "who are desired speedily to doe Justice to the said petitioner . . . ."—Land Papers, II: 63 (see of state's office, Albany). A similar petition of Sarah Burger was recorded about ten years later (see April 25, 1693), but whether it related to the same land does not appear.

The legislature passes the following acts:

"A Bill A Bill Concerning former Molly Masters. " This act was necessary because the customs of the Dutch were different from those of the English. The act made all old mortgages effective under the English rule.

An Explanation of the Continued Bill for defraying the Requiste Charge of the Government" (see Oct. 30, 1681).

"An Act for the confirming all Judgments and proceedings in the former Courts, taking away the General Court of Assizes. " Actions pending in this court were to be determined and finished in the high court of chancery.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 169-71.

The governor and his council took action to establish the post-office on March 2, 1685 (q.v.), but further proceedings to effect the desired result had to be again enacted on April 4, 1682 (q.v.).

John Sprague is commissioned to be "master of the rolls of the province of New York."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 155. This office is rarely mentioned in colonial annals. To England the master of the rolls is "one of the judges of the chancery division of the High Court of Justice." He is "the keeper of the rolls of all patents and grants that pass the great seal, and of all records of the Court of Chancery. He ranks next after the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, and above the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas."—Century Dict. The office, therefore, appears to be in addition to that of the secretary of the province, to which Sprague was appointed by royal commission on Jan. 27, 1683.—Cal. Gen. Min., 61.

In this year, an order was issued that no wampum, wampum pipes, Indian jewels, or money should be carried out of the government by trade or traffic, etc.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 159.

There was complaint at this time by the residents west of the Broadway to the Southward of the alley now called Beaver land," according to a deposition made by Jacob Goelet in New York under date of July 12, 1725. The deponent related that when he was an apprentice, "in the years 1684 and 1685...to Oliphant Storres," he heard "the court was on the South side of the highway, being laid out a long the St. Street or Broadway with a deep Hollow Core inward, and the patents was granted formerly to the owners and possessors thereof in line from the St. Street westward according to the measures there of." The deponent further said that the condition of the locality was called to the attention of Gov. Andros, who "ordered the naybourhood aforde to ad and advance so much more Ground in the Street as hee thought fit to make the trunks more even from Baltus Bayars unto the South Corner of St. Beaver land being part of the old herringing place and the owners were commands to build their houses according. And those that did not build they took that ground in their possession and took in there Clabbor fences before there dores. Whereof as I remember was Luyska Andressen and the Ground of Mr. Darkens and peeter Limkam the others, as, Jan Jooste van Rollegom, the little house of darkens and the house of Jenette int Fortorang, now to Mr. May blykle, & the house at the South Corner of Sd. land then belonging to the Wen Couwenheven nowe already frutned the said broadway, according to the Gouver's order, so that I find they took the benefit of there priviledge they granted as a for said, So that old Corner house of St. Couwenheven wed afterwards Van dike was made and in the St. Street or Broadway to foot longer by Reason of this addision—this Granted addition is in som patents not Included and may bee in none, and therefore it appeareth that Summ Lotts is Longer than there patents doe Require, and the Said additions and benefitts are eversents freely and absolutely left in prouidence, and Qiet possession of the owner there of unmolested or In Comebereath by anye anytryer or any other person or persons whatsoever from the time a foresaid until the date of this present."—Mag. of the Daughters of the Revolution (N. Y., 1895), III: 134—35; citing the letter in possession of Walter Van d'Nest.

About 1685, Adrian Dircksen petitioned the common council as follows regarding "his ground in ye place, Called Mlaegde pather":—"The humble Petition of Adrian Dirksan Sheweth most humbly, That this petitioner sovereign of his present wife Elizabeth by name Peter harnes, was ordered by ye $11 Governor1 to remove his house & have his ground in ye place, Called Mlaegde pathe, by order of ye Dutch government in time of wart, for w$ was granted to them an other house & ground, belonging to Wm Patson, then Counted Confinisated [sic]. But lately this petition was much troubled by one George Lockart attorney of Said Wm Patson, and was forced, to prevent further Content to allow ye $2 Said Lockard a Competent sum of money with ye $2 that came with ye $2 to be used in the Charges to fifteen pounds Current money by ye $2 to $2 house & ground is paid again & nothing allowed for that what is Lost in ye maegde patere, there- this petetf Craves ye $2 worships please to Consider ye $2 premises, and to give that allowance of good again, or mony as ye $2 worn& Shall think fitt & he shall always pay ye $2."

An inventory of the wardrobe and other personal effects of Dr. Jacob de Lange and his wife, reveals the characteristic dress of a gentleman and lady of fashion during this period. His wardrobe included a gros-grained cloak, lined with silk; a broad black broadcloth suit; a coloured serge suit, with silver buttons; a coloured cloth waistcoat, with silver buttons; while his wife's contained numerous "bettocottas" variously described, including one "with pointed lace," and one "black potttofoo petticoat, with black silk lining;" also a "black tartane samare, with a tuckery." Three "flowered calico samare;" three "black love-grounds;" and a white one and a yellow one; "Four Yellow love drollies;" "Two pair sleeves with great lace;" "Four corts caps, with lace, one without lace;" "One black silk rain cloth;" "One black plush mask;" one "embroidered purse with a silver bugle and chain to the girdle, a silver Dr. De Lange's." The heads of some of which were mounted with silver and with ivories; while his wife possessed, in a "silver thread wrought small trunk," various articles of jewelry, including "One gold boat, wherein are thirteen diamonds to one white coral chain" (valued at £16); "One pair gold stocks or pendants, in each ten diamonds" (£53), etc.—Man. Guv. Com., 1685, 541-42; see also ibid., (1858), 499; Abstracts of Wills (1892), 326, 281. In this year, William Bradford established, at Philadelphia, the first printing-press in the Middle Colonies.—Winn, op. cit., III:443, Sec. 2. The common council resolves that Dongan be "Treated w' to Complain to this House of the extraordinary discouragement and difficulties in And About this City and Island to Low Water mark the Ferry and all the Several Patents to the Inhabitants, The City ball & Land thereto belonging Market house & Market Place Dock bridge and Streets w' all Royalties and Privileges thenceunto Belonging." A committee is appointed "to manage the Treaty."—M. C. C., II 160. The desired privileges were eventually granted in the Dongan Charter, April 27, 1686 (q.v.). See, further, Feb. 28, infra.

Derrick Jansen, the ferry-man, buys the "plantation" of William Morris of Flatbush for his barn, house, and boats.—See original bond for unpaid balance on the contract, in N. Y. Pub. Library (Man. Div.).

"King Charles the 2d of Ever blessed Memory departed this life in his Palace at Whitehall After whose decease, at which many of the Lords the Privy Council were present their Le's together with the rest of the Privy Councils in town assembled in the Council Chamber in Order to prepare the form of a Proclamation for Proclaiming his Present Ms 59 K James the Second." Orders were given to dispatch letters to the governors and proprietors of the several plantations to issue an enclosed proclamation of the accession of James II, and to publish James's proclamation that former officials remain in office until further notice.—Jour. of G. for Plantations, 1670-1686 (MS.), III: 25-26. Cf. N. Y., Cal. Docs., III: 359; Osgood, The Am. Colonies, II: 167; Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 421-22; Winner, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 406. The reign of King James II ended Dec. 11, 1688 (q.v.).

The Duke of York being the late king's only brother at that time, "his rights as a subject proprietor were merged in his sovereignty; and New York, with her dependencies, having devolved to the crown of England, became a royal government, under the supervision of the Plantation Committee. A few days after the accession of James [see Feb. 17], the records belonging to the Committee were ordered to be sent to the Plantation Office, and Sir John Werden delivered all that were thought 'material' to Secretary Blathwayt."

For a discussion as to how this affected the legal status of the government of the province of New York, respecting the charter, see March 5 (infra), and Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 424. Xc. John Knight, Gov. (see page 325, Liber Patents, V: 295, Albany), for a tract of land in the city of New York, which, by modern streets and landmarks, was bounded generally.

The governor and his council ordain "that for the better correspondence between the colonies of America, a post-office be established [see Aug. 27 and Dec. 9, 1684]; and that the rates for riding post be per mile threepence; for every single letter, not above one hundred miles, threepence; if more proportionately." — Cal. Coun. Min., 41; Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 415, and authorities there cited; Smith, Hist. of the P. O. in Brit. No. Am. (Cambridge, 1920), 7. A permanent postal system was not established until April 4, 1692 (q.v.).

To prevent the running away of servants and debtors, the governor and council order that "a Scale be made with His Majesty's Hinges, Cypher in every County at the Charges of the County to be kept by the Chief Magistrates of every Town, & [of] all that are lodged without the said seal & certificate from a [Magistrate], notice is to be given of them by the next Magistrate; & the first magistrate that receives the scale from any neighboring Colony, takes that seal & gives another of that Governor in w'h he lives."—From Exec. Coun. Min. (MS.), V: 106, in N. Y. State Library.

At a meeting of the committee of trade and plantations in the council chamber at Whitehall, "The Charter of Incorporation of the Province of New York [passed Oct. 30, 1685] is read, and several powers and privileges therein granted being considered His Majesty do not think fit to confirm the same."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 357. Brodhead says: "By this action James the Second did not repeal the charter of New York. He merely declared to confirm the charter of 1664 which thus left it in force until his disapprobation should be notified to Dongan." [See May 26, 1685].—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 423.

The king directs that the government of the province "be assimilated to the Constitution that shall be agreed on for New England." He orders that letters be prepared directing Dongan "to pursue such powers and Instructions as he shall receive under His Majesty's signet and seal manual, or by Order in Council until further Order."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 357. "Observations upon the Charter" are filed at the same time, the several provisions being separately considered and objected to. Among these is the following statement in the charter: "That the Supreme Legislative Authority shall remain in the Governor, Council and the People met in a General Assembly." The objection to this is: "The Words The People met in a General Assembly are not used in any other Constitution in America; but only the Words General Assembly,"—Hud., III: 358. Brodhead observes that "The People" has always been a cherished term in New York. Her first state constitution of 1777 declared that the style of all her laws should be: "Be it enacted by the People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly." Under her second constitution, of 1821, she repeated the more direct formula, "The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact," etc. The constitution of 1846 ordained that this form should be observed in the enacting clause of all bills.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 385.

An order in council from the colonial chamber in Whitehall directs Dongan to proclaim James king over the province of New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 359-60. King James addresses his command to Dongan, to the same effect, on the same day.—Ibid., III: 360-61. A proclamation printed in London "by the assignees of John Bill, deceased, and by Henry Hiles and Thomas Newcomb, printers to the King's most excellent majesty, 1685," was sent over to be used in the colony for this purpose. A copy of it is listed in the Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 165-37. A record in Blathwayt's Jour., in Lib. of Cong., dated March 19, says: "A Box directed to Coll Dongan at New York is delivered to Capt. Baxter containing a Packet to Coll Dongan, with the King's Letter of 11th Coll Burgesses the 19th Instant directing him to pursue all Powers as shall be sent him under His Majt Signet or Sign Manual or his Order in Council; and further signifying that His Majt hath committed to his Care the Province of the Care of the Province.

A proclamation is issued against landing dutiable goods at any other place than the city bridge, New York, with the exception of hay, wood, and lime. Another proclamation of this date prohibits peddling goods or merchandise within the province when the duties have not been paid; and it grants "one-third part thereof to anyone who shall seize the same."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 176.

A caveat is issued by Mary Manningham (Blackwell) that, until the question is decided by the governor, the patent to Manning's Island (and the neck of land belonging to it) may not be granted to John Manning longer than during his lifetime.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 168. The recorded history of Blackwell's Island (formerly known as Manning's Island) began with its conveyance, together with Great Barn Island, in 1623, from two Indian chiefs of "Mayrechkeniokching" to Gov. Wouter van Twiller.—Man. Com. G. (1697) 347; ibid. (1853) 496. By a decree of Gov. Nicolls 1655, all the property within the territories of the Duke of York belonging to Dutch subjects who had not taken the oath of allegiance to the king was to be confiscated; and "Hog Island in Hellgate," one of these properties, was granted, on Feb. 3, 1668, to Capt. John Manning. From this time it was called Manning's Island, and later Blackwell's Island.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 91, 118, 376. For the subsequent history of the island, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 496-496; ibid. (1855) 577.

The council orders that a proclamation be forbidding all vessels to trade at other ports than New York.—Cal. Com. G. 16. See Feb. 11, 1669.

6 A warrant is issued to Philip Wells, surveyor-general, to survey and lay out a parcel of land without the gate of the city of New York, commonly called the governor's vineyard.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 157. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 346.

21 Note on record of the death of Charles II. An order is issued by the governor and council that King James II be proclaimed.—Cal. Com. G. 42. The original entry in the Council Minutes is: "Ordered that on Thursday next Capt. Santen be in a readiness with his troops & that Major Demerey be on guard."—Council Minutes (MS.), V: 109-10 (Albany). See also Feb. 6, and April 23.

25 The succession of James II to the throne of England is celebrated, in accordance with the order issued on April 21 (p. v.) to Maj. Nicholas Devere, "to have all the foot militia of the City and County of New York paraded before the gate of Fort James, on the next Thursday after the date hereof, his majesty King James the second being then and there to be proclaimed."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 136, where an error is made in assigning the order to April 24. See also Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 455.

It is ordered by the governor and council that the fortifications of the city be repaired.—Cal. Com. G. 44.

John Knight conveys to Gov. Dongan the tract later known as "Stuyvesant's Manor," by a transaction recorded in Liber Deeds, IX: 387 (Albany). See Feb. 10 and 18, and April 6, 1685; April 22, 1697; 1735.

At a meeting of the committee of trade and plantations, their lordsips agree that Mr. Attorney Gen'l may have direction to Consider the Grants & Proprieties of East & West New Jersey & of Delaware And to Enter witts of Quo War.—Against the Proprietors thereof if he shall see cause. It being of very Great & Growing prejudice to his Majesty in Affairs in the Plantations & to his Majesty's Customs here that such Independent Gov't be kept up & Maintained without a Nearer & more immediate dependance on his Majesty." This action was taken after the consideration of a letter, dated May 13, from the "Mayor, Aldermen & Principal Officers of New York," setting forth that since his Majesty had permitted Delaware & the two Jerseys to be separated from the Government of New York that Citty hath extremely suffered by the loss of at least one third part of its trade, And hath ever since much decayed in the number of its inhabitants & buildings, And that that said Revenue doth likewise suffer thereof. —Jour. Coun. for Plantations, 1670-1686 (MS.), I: 117-18.

The council orders that a proclamation be issued against giving information and taking affidavits in a clandestine manner.—Cal. Com. Min., 43. On Aug. 5, Maj. Wm. Dwyre was charged by the governor with giving given information in this way. He was examined on Aug. 5.—Ibid., 44. See also the case of Lewis, July 15, 1681.

A warrant is issued to Philip Wells, surveyor-general, to measure and survey all the house lots on the north side of "Pearly street" and report whether they are in accordance with their patents.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 158.

License is given by Dongan to the inhabitants of Manhattan and directed to buy and sell all commodities there on Aug. 6th.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 158; Rikey, Hist. of Harlem (1st ed.), 445.

Dongan, having caused the general assembly to meet Oct. 17, 1683, and adjourned it from time to time until Sept. 29, 1684, now, "for Several important Reasons," dissolves it, and gives notice to the effect by proclamation.—M. C. G., I: 166-67.

"Saul Browne," a merchant from Newport now settled in New York, having complained to Dongan of ordinances of this city which interfered with his trade (see Daly, The Settlement of the Jews in N. Y., 1853, pp. 24, 27), his petition is referred by Dongan to the common council, and the latter endorses upon it the opinion that "no Act ought to Sell by Retaile within this Citty But may by whole Sale if the Governor think fit to permit the same."—M. C. G., I: 168-69.

"The Jews Petition to the Governor for Liberty to Exercise their Religion" is recommended by him to the mayor and aldermen. The board expresses the opinion that "The Jews publicke Worship is Tolerated by act of assembly, but to those that profess faith in Christ, and therefore the Jews Worship not to be allowed."—M. C. G., I: 169. The original rough minutes of this action of the common council (dated Sept. 12) are filed in the city clerk's record-room. See also Daly, Settlement of the Jews in N. Y. (1853), 25-26.

Dongan writes to the council that he has given his consent for "a new seal of this Province is very much wanting, and ye people extraordinary desirous to have ye King's Seal to their Patents and other papers that concern them." The letter was received in England "22 Dec. 1685."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 366. No new provincial seal, however, appears to have been provided until Aug. 14, 1687 (q.t.).

The Edict of Nantes (April 13, 1685), by which Henry IV of Oct. 12-22 France granted toleration to his Protestant subjects, is revoked by Louis XIV. A considerable part of the province of New York, particularly the city of New York, the counties of West Chester and Richmond, and a tract called "the Palts," in Ulster County, was "settled by many of those unhappy People who fled from the Persecution in France upon the Revocation of the Edict."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (410 ed.), III: 295. See also an account of "The Huguenot Settlers of New York City and vicinity," by Frank W. Ballard, in Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 741 et seq.

Col. Nicholas Bayard is appointed mayor.—Cal. Com. Min., 45.

The names of the several officers chosen for the ensuing year are found in M. C. G., I: 170, among which that of Nicholas Bayard does not appear. Evidently Dongan did not feel bound to appoint "one of the aldermen."—See Oct. 14, 1684. Bayard was reappointed mayor Sept. 1, 1686.—Ibid., May 31. A brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 388; Wilson's Mem. Hist. N. Y., III: 52.

The alderman of each ward is required by the common council to certify to the mayor what persons in his ward "are poor and wanting alms for their sustenance," that care may be taken at public expense for their relief.—M. C. G., I: 172. This action followed the receipt of a letter from the governor "Recommending to the Consideration of the Common Council the maintenance of the poor." Furthermore, it is the initial step taken by the municipal government in charity. In New Amsterdam it was the church deacons who cared for the poor and looked for voluntary contributions in the "poor-boxes." They were called upon by the court to render an account yearly at a public meeting of how they had disposed of the money they had collected.—Rec. N. A. M., VII: 352-355. See also June 14, 1655; Dec. 4, 1661. Cf. "poor farm" mentioned in Selyns' hist. 1686.

The common council appoints Peter Delaney treasurer of the city (see Oct. 27), and votes to allow him 12d. in the pound (see June 5, 1676) "for all Receipts and payments of the publice moneys."—M. C. G., I: 171. This commission system of compensa- tion to the treasurer chamber was still in vogue 1685, when a suggestion was offered by Recorder Livingston that it might be "more for the Interest of this Corporation to Allow their chamberlain a Certain Sallary than a Commission."—Ibid., VIII: 23.

Colden on May 5, 1774 (p. 41), and published in Mem. Com. Coun. (1852), 247 et seq.—

— About this time Philip Wells, Dongan's surveyor-general, made a general survey of "The Yealand of East- -", and in the year 1687, a claim was entered for this service (which covered seven days), and for the services of two persons employed in the work, besides the "expenses of Mr. Vaughan & Mr. Cortlandt." The original survey has disappeared.—The Hist. Mag. (1st ser., 1857), IX: 285, citing the original claim.—

— It was probably during the years 1686-9 that Philip Wells made his survey of the upper and lower bays, showing Manhattan and Staten Islands, the principal sand-bars, soundings, etc. This drawing, which bears the inscription "A sand draught of New-York Harbour by (Philip-Wells)," is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 11. Wells made also a survey of Boston harbour, and one of the entire coast of North Am. (British Museum, No. 4344, Roll 19).—

Dongan, to acquire an interest in the fur trade, held correspondence with Fronetac's two successors as governors of Canada, Le Fevre de la Barre and the Marquis de Denonville, regarding the latter's braft, in which the French were fighting with the enemies of the French." News reached Denonville that Dongan "contemplated sending, early in the spring of 1687, an armed expedition in the direction of Michilimackinac to forestall the trade there "—Winson, Nar. & Crit. Feb. 19, 1664. A motion of council, Dongan establishes a "court 19 of Judicature," to be held before the governor and council, on the first Monday of every month, at New York. This court, which corresponded to a court of exchequer, was given power to hear, try, and determine suits between the king and the inhabitants of the province, concerning lands, rights, debts, and revenues. — 21 The attorney-general makes a motion in the council that the inhabitants of New York may have the vacant land to low-water mark, and the liberty of granting licenses.—Cal. Coun. Min., 47.
22 The "patent" (charter) of New York is considered by the 22 governor's council and "referred" (probably to a committee).—
Cal. Coun. Min., 47. It was passed on April 26 (ibid., 48), and signed April 27 (p. 5).
Mar. 11, 1665. Jacob Milborne and Samuel Swynock, of London, trustees for 11 the creditors of William Darrall, convey to Thomas Dongan, governor-general of the province, the large "Message," etc., which had been Stuyvesant's "Great House." John Delavall had already released his rights as his father's heir.—Liber Deed, XIII: 250, 258. See Nov. 12, 1677; The Castello Plao, II: 277-78; C. Pl., II; Landmark Map Red. Key, III: 692; Pl. 176, Vol. III.
23 Measures are taken to build a new church at Harlem. "The 23 old church was no longer adapted to the needs and improved tastes of the community, though still answering the purposes of a schoolhouse. . . . The church was built of stone, and upon a new site; and an arrangement being made with Laurence Jenel and the Dolamatter family, who gave up their two north orzen for this purpose, and which also afforded ample ground for a new churchyard or cemetery." The community subscribed liberally, and assumed the labor of preparing and bringing the stone, lime, timber, shinglers, lathes, etc., all of which was to apply on the subscriptions.
On March 29, the foundation is begun, Resolved Waldron, with due ceremony, placing the first stone, and Johannes Vermelje the second. The following day the contract was made for the 25 carpenter work with William Hellacker of New York. The agree-25 ment, which is preserved among the Harlem Records (see Bibliography), reads: "Specification of the Church at Harlem: The size of the church across it either way, is 36 Dutch feet; upon which William Hellacker undertakes to construct the roof, with an arch therein, and a small steeple upon it, and to cover all properly with shingles, and to make a steeple thereon; upon condition that the people of this town shall be obliged to deliver the timber at the building place. For which the said Hellacker is to pay the aforesaid William Hellacker, the sum of Seven Hundred and Fifty Guilders, in Wheat, to be paid in the month of January following this year, 1666, the wheat to be delivered at the current price . . . Done at New Haerlem, this 30th of March, 1666." This is signed by William Hellacker, Jan de Lameter (constable), 27 Daniel Tournere, and Jan Nagele. The witnesses are Johannes 27 Vermelje and Resolvert Waldron, before Jan Tibout (clerk).—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1st ed.), 452-53. For earlier church, see 1665.
28 The location of this church on the modern map would be 28 between 124th and 125th Sts., west of First Ave., the second site of the Harlem Reformed Dutch Church.—See Pl. 178, Vol. III, and Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), II: 470. The above specifications which were entered in these Records, and quoted in Riker's Hist. of Harlem (1st ed.) 453, are printed in the description of Pl. 19, I: 206. This edifice was destroyed during the Revolutionary War; it was rebuilt in 1788, and taken down in 1835. The new building is shown in Pl. 60-b, Vol. I, for description of which see I:
29 437, citing Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1st ed.), 439. See also Randel's
Map of the Farms, Pl. 86, Vol. III.
24 Apr. 25 Mesier's wind-mill is first mentioned of record.—See June 18, 1666. See also Hurd, N. Y. Hist., I: 623.
26 The common council agrees to give the governor £500 26 upon signing his charter, and security for £100 more to be paid in six months.—M. C. C., I: 178. On May 11, the mayor reported that he had paid Dongan £500 for the "Patent" (charter) and £24 to the secretary, and that he had "taken the same up at ten 2nd 27 Cent Interest, to be payed in a year." The common council approved, and on May 18, it was resolved that care be taken "to raise money for Satis-28 fying thereof."—Ibid., I: 178. To pay in debt, 2,000,000 lbs. of lime, the water front between the docks and the city hall were sold, and 16 acres on the North River shore near the present Gansevoort St.,— 29 It is that described: "Beautifully engrossed on fine vellum and 29 thick sheets of parchment, it is so massive, so imposing to the eye, that it seems to have been prepared as a guaranty of the liberties not of a little colonial capital of some four thousand inhabitants, but of a city like the New York of to-day. Once pendant from it but long ago detached by the hand of time, is an impression of the large provincial seal bestowed when Loveland was governor in 1669, protected by a silver box bearing on its cover the inscription:
'N. Bayard Esqr Mayor, 1669.'"—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 295; cf. Wilde, The Civic Ancestry of N. Y. City and County, 44, and Pl. XII. The charters of April 4, 1664, and April 12, 1666 (q.v.), is reproduced for the first time on Pls. 18 a to 6, Vol. IV.
For reproduction of Dongan's provincial seal, see Frontispiece, Vol. V.
Govern. Bellomont, writing to England on Nov. 29, 1700, said of the charters: "is sealed with the Duke of York's seal, and adorned with the Great Seal of England our Seal of the Province, yet it bears date the 24th year of King James, so that the whole foundation is wrong." This led him to declare that it was "not a legal Charter" that "In strictness this is no City, and all the judgments that have been pass'd in their Mayor's Court are void."—N. T. Col. Docs., IV: 812.
30 The charter was transcribed into the Minutes of the Common 1867: Council (I: 290-106) under date of Jan. 5, 1669.
Although Dongan states, in the charter, that he gives it "for 31 and on behalf of his most sacred Majesty . . . his Heirs Su-cessors and Assigns," and "by Virtue of the Commission of and Authority unto me Given, and power in me residing," it did not emanate directly from the crown, but from the governor individually. It begins: "Thomas Dongan Lieut. Governor and Vice Admirall of New York and its Dependencies under his Majesty James vth Second . . . Proprietor of ye Collony and Province of New York, and its dependencies in America seis. To all whom this shall come Seodeth Greeting,"—M. C. C., I: 290. It was confirmed and extended, however, by the Montgomerie Charter, granted by King George II himself.—See March 23, 1750; see also Gerard, A Treatise on the Title of the Corporation, etc. (1872), 31 31 and 501; a history of the charter by Gerard in Mag. Am. Hist.,
1876, XVII 370-491; and Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Dongan states that the charter is granted, "at ye humble petition of the new Mayor, Aldermen & Commonality of the Said City of New York," and "for Diverse Other good Causes and Considerations." His purpose is to "give Grant Rattle, and Confirm, in unto them "every Such and the Same Prulilegdes, Liberties, Franchises, Rights, Royalties, Free Customs, Jurisdictions and Immunities, which they by the Name of the Mayor, Aldermen, & Commonality or otherwise, have anciently had, held, used or enjoyed," provided that none of these liberties, etc. be "inconsistent with or Repugnant, to the Laws of his Majesties Kingdom of England, or any other the Laws of the General Assembly of this Province."
The charter recites that the citizens and inhabitants of the city were erected, built, and confirmed into a City and incorporated, and charged, to erect, build, and maintain Public Buildings, Accommodations and Charges for the said City, that is to say the City Hall or State-house with the Ground thereunto belonging, two Market houses [see De Voe, Market Book, 99] the Bridge into ye Wharf or Docks with their rampes and Covertances and the New royal place, without the Gate of this City, and have Established and Setled one Ferry from the said City of New York to Long Island, for the accommodation and Conveniency of Passengers,
" These and the benefits arising from them are confirmed.
There is also a grant of the streets, lanes, highways, and alleys
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1656—oo Manhattan Island, for public use. The charter confers to the inhabitants their lands obtained through former governors, lieutenants, stewards, and evedent clerks, to the extent of the town law of the province. It grants to the mayor, etc., all the waste, vacant, unpatented, and unappropriated lands within the city and island, extending to low-water mark in all parts of the city and Manhattan Island; all rivers, rivulets, coves, creeks, ponds, waters, and water-courses thereof not being occupied by former governors, mayors, etc., to some respective person or persons, etc.; also certain royalties of fishing, fowling, mining, etc. The city limits are established at low-water mark around the island of Manhattan.

The city government is established as a body politic and corporate, and various officers are specified. These are a mayor, recorder, town clerk, six aldermen, and six assistants, who are to be called "the Mayor Aldermen & Commonalty, of the City of New York;" also one chamberlain or treasurer, one sheriff, one coroner, one clerk of the market, one high constable, seven sub-constables, and one marshall or "Sarjeant att Mace." The mayor, recorder, aldermen, and assistants, or the mayor, recorder, or any three or more of the aldermen, and any three or more of the assistants shall be called "the Common Council of the Said City." It may be notified and appointed, yearly, "upon ye last day of the Mayor's Michaelmas term," to "the Said Mayor and the governor or commandant-in-chief, with the advice of his council. On the 14th of October following this, they are to take the several "Corporal oaths" before the governor and council. According to "the new Usage & Custom of the Said City," the recorder, town clerk, and clerk of the market shall be such persons as "his most Sacred Majesty Aforesaid his Heirs & Successors Shall. . . Appoint & Command them," but in case of "Defect" (omission) of such appointment by the king, etc., the appointment shall be made by the governor or commandant-in-chief. The aldermen, assistants, and petty constables are to be "Chosen by Majority of Votes of ye inhabitants of each Ward," on "ye feast day" aforesaid. The high constable is to be appointed by the mayor. The chamberlain is to be chosen "on ye Said feast day" in the city hall by the mayor, three or more aldermen, and three or more assistants. Dongan, in the charter, names John West to be town clerk, clerk of the peace, and clerk of the court of pleas which is to be held before the mayor, recorder, and aldermen. —M. C. C., I: 258-300.

The charter provides that the corporation shall have a common seal, with power to break, alter, or remake it (see also July 24); that the corporation, tenants, etc. may "sell, let, lease, or in any way dispose of" any goods, under ye common Scale to make Free Citizens of ye Said City And Liberties thereof. Only free citizens may "use any Art Trade Mystery or Manual occupation" within the "City Liberties And Precincts thereof," save in times of "Fairs." If any person, not being a freeman, uses it in any such occupation, or sells or himself, or in any way dispose of or sell any merchandise at retail, in any house, shop, place, or "Standing," at a time when no fair is being held, and shall persist in doing so after being warned, the mayor may "cause Such Shop Windows to be Shut up.

He may impose a fine of not exceeding £5 for each offence, under a warrant to take and sell the offender's goods, paying him the "Overplus." This may be done without rendering any account of it to "ye Lieutenants, Governors, Officers of this Province," etc., shall be "made free," who is now Nehemiah Dodge, "his Majesties Natural born Subjects or Such as shall first be Naturalized by Acts of Genl Assembly & Shall have Ordained [obtained] letters of Denization under the hand of ye Lieutenants Governors or Commander in Chief . . . And Seal of ye Province. . . ." He also says that it may be a freeman "to pay the charge formerly exacted for this purpose not exceeding £5—M. C. C., I: 302-3. Five years later, April 24, 1691 (p. v), the old ordinance of March 15, 1684 (p. v) was reenacted with very slight change in wording and without violating the purpose of the charter provision, until June 1, 1691. The general provision in the Dongan Charter relating to freemen was reenacted in the Montegomery Charter of 1731.

Certain exceptions are made in the grants to the city, the first being the use and possession of Fort James; also "one Message or Tenement next ye City Hall and one Message by the Fort Now in the Possession of Thomas Coker, The Piece of Ground by ye Gate Called ye Governor's Garden & ye King's Farme with ye Swamp next ye Said Land by ye fresh water;" also reserving all quit-rents, and requiring that all lands, etc., heretofore set apart for pious or charitable uses, shall not be wasted or misemployed contrary to the trusts or intents of the founders or givers of the said ground. —M. C. C., I: 390-398. Regarding the locations and descriptions of the "City Hall," the "Governor's Garden," and the "King's Farm," see Gerard, Treatise (op. cit.), 343 and Landmarks, Map Ref. Key, Vol. III.

Below the signature of "Thomas Dongan," in the transcribed charter in the Minutes is the following: "Recorded in the Secretary's Office for the Province of New York in lib. N° I: book of Pattents begun 1684, from Page 278 to 309—signed "J. & Spagg Secr. Following this is the entry: "May 17, 1695. Honour The Attorney General hath perused this Patent and finds Nothing Contained therein prejudicial to his Majesties Interest Ja: Graham Recorded & Examined by ye Original Will Sharpes Cl." See also Lincoln, Constitutional Hist. N. Y. (1906), III: 610.

At a meeting of the committee of trade and plantations, "A Draught of Instructions prepared for Coll. Dongan read. Whereupon it is thought fit that a clause be added signifying his Mat's pleasure that a Bill or charter of Franchise passed in the late Assembly at New York be forthwith repelled & disallowed But that Coll. Dongan do Nevertheless with the Council Continue the Duties & Impositions therein mentioned to be raised until he shall with ye Consent of the Council Settle such Taxes and Impositions as shall be sufficient for the support of the Government."—Jour. Coun. for Plantations, 1670-1685 (M. S.), III: 241-42. See May 29.

Dongan is given an increase of salary from 400l. to 600l., to be taken from New York surtax (see July 24).

The king's new instructions to Dongan are issued at Windsor. Among its 67 articles is one (No. 12) repealing the Charter of Franchise, but continuing the taxes and duties imposed by it until new taxes are imposed by the governor and council for the support of the government (see May 20). Another article (No. 18) orders Dongan "to observe in the passing of Laws, that ye Style of Enacting the same By the Governor & Council, bee henceforth used and noe other." This order vests all legislative authority in them, instead of in a general assembly. The names of the governor's council are given, and the governor's duties defined regarding the appointment of other members, the enactment of laws, etc. There is also an order that the Book of Common Prayer be read each Sunday and holy day, and the Blessed Sacrament administered according to the rites of the Church of England. "You shall be careful that the Churches already built there shall be well and orderly kept and that no new shall ever be built or maintained. The ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury is to be upheld. No schoolmaster is to be permitted to come from England and keep school in the province without a license from this archbishop. Other instructions relate to military affairs, trade, etc. The king also directs the governor, or shall be "by himself, or others," to impose a tax of 6d. per 100 lbs. for poor, etc. A prohibition is placed upon printing without a license from the governor.—N. Y. Col. Acts, III: 606-75. See Addenda.

An order is received from the committee of trade at Whitehall by the governor and council of New York to transmit quarterly reports on the state of the colony.—Col. Coun. Min., 65.

The king issues a commission to Sir Edmund Andros as governor.
nour-general of the “Territory and Dominion of New England in North America” and diligently to pursue Our Service and perform His Duty in relation to Our Revenue in that Our Province and Territories committed to your Government.

The governor is given special instructions to aid Blathwayt in every possible way, and is informed that as “we are graciously inclined to apply Such of Our Revenue as may appear to Our said Province to the immediate Support and Security thereof, so We are resolved to hold a strict hand” upon the execution of the duties of the revenue officials.—Blathwayt’s Jour. transcript, in Lib. of Cong., I: 504–5.

Up to the time of King Charles II’s death (see Feb. 6, 1685), personal considerations had compelled the duke to concede the granting of a legislative assembly in the province of New York. See “Historical Introduction,” Jour. Leg. Coun. (1681), I: xvi. On his accession to the throne as King James II, he now abolishes the assembly by a new commission giving Gov. Dongan “full power and authority of a governor and council of the said province, and other part of them, to make, constitute and ordain Laws, Statutes and ordinances for the Public peace, welfare and good government of the Province and of the people and inhabitants thereof;” such laws to be transmitted to England within three months after their enactment, for the Royal approbation, and to be null and void if “at our pleasure it shall not appear to the satisfaction of the council of England, as expressed in Dongan’s instructions, see May 29) was received in New York on Sept. 14 (v.o.), and on Jan. 20, 1687, Dongan dissolved the assembly, and set up, in its place, a government, executive and legislative, by governor and council, respectively.—Ibid., I: xvi-xviii, citing N. Y. Col. Doss, III: 370–378. See Dec. 9, and Addenda.

A packet for Col. Dongan containing a warrant for “Authorizing the Present Seal” is delivered to the captain of the “Susanna,” “Ready to sail to N.Y.”—Jour. Coun. for Plantations, 1679–1686 (M.S.), III: 253a.

Initial steps are taken to run the New York–New Jersey boundary line.—See Addenda.

July

According to a new book by Richard Blome, of London, licensed July 20, 1686, and published in 1687, the houses in New York were “built with Dutch-brick, and the meanest not valued under one hundred Pounds.” The city was “encompassed with a Wall of good thickness” to the “landward,” and fortified “at the entrance to the River” by a fort called “James Fort,” so as to “command any Ship which passeth that way.”—Roger L’Estrange (Richd. Blome), The Present State of His Majesty’s Isles and Territories in Am.

The Dongan Charter (see Apr. 27) provided that “that ye Said Mayor, Aldermen, and City of New York, and their successors Shall and may for ever hereafter have one Common Seal to Serve for the Sealing of all and singular their Affairs & Businesses touching or Concerning the said Corporation;” and that it shall be lawful for them “as they shall See Cause to break, Change, Alter and New Make their Said Common Seal, when and as often as to them it Shall Seem Conveniente.”—M. C. C., I: 296. The mayor now presents to the common council “the New Seale of this City with this inscription, SHILLEY CIVITATI [sic] NOVI [E]Borac—See Pine, op. cit., 8.” The common council agrees upon it, and orders that it “be the Common Scale of this City,” and “Received in the Custody of the mayor for the time being.”—Ibid., I: 179. See Frontispiece, Vol. V.

The earliest known impression of this seal, and the only impression known of this “state,”—i.e., having a ducale coronet instead of an imperial crown,—is upon a grant of a water lot by the city to Conrad Ten Eyck, dated Sept. 1, 1669, owned in (1672) by Mr. Frank W. Demarest, East Orange, N. J.—Pine, Seal and Flag of the City of N. Y. (1915), 38–39. See Frontispiece, Vol. V. The history and symbolism of this seal are described at length by Dr. H. Haganman Hall, in ibid., 38–51, its principal features being the windmill, the two N.Y. coats, the New York merchant, the sailor, the crown, the date, and the Latin name of New York.

The seal is reproduced in ibid., on plate 3, opp. p. 18, which shows both states, one with ducale coronet, the other with imperial crown. Of this feature, it is said:

“The Crown, forming the crest of the seal of 1686, on the Ten Eyck land grant of 1687, is a ducale coronet. This is surprising, because in 1685 the Duke of York ascended the throne as James II. [Cf. Dongan Charter, Sept. 27, 1677.] At any rate, it is unlikely that the present writing [vide infra], the crest on the seal was ever changed to an imperial crown, showing the distinguishing arches rising from the circle and supporting the orb and cross. The Manuscript Section of the New York State Library can give us little on the question of the date of the change from the ducale to the imperial crown, owing to the fact that all the seals which appear on documents in the New York Colonial Manuscripts or other manuscripts in the collection were so melted by heat at the time of the fire in the Capitol in 1911 .... But the change was made at least as early as 1705, for a bill of constraint of 1705 shows the imperial crown may be seen at the New York Historical Society on a document dated October 1, 1701, certifying that Thomas Evans had been a freeman of the City.”—Ibid., 48–49, and footnote, comparing it with the seal (showing imperial crown) reproduced and erroneously described (as having ducale coronet) by O’Callaghan in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (Svo ed.), III: 398. Compare provincial seal with coronet in ibid., IV: Pl. 2. See, however, Jan. 7, 1690, from which it now appears clear that the change was made in 1686 or 1689.

The other impression of this seal with the imperial crown, which was used as the corporate seal from 1688, or 1689, to the Revolution, is reproduced by Wildes in his Civic Antiquities of New York. The Pl. 26, from the John Paulding collection, presented to the N.Y. Hist. Soc. in 1845.—See Frontispiece, Vol. V. The seal was also alluded to and partially described by Du Simitière in May, 1769. —See volume lettered “Papier relating to N. England, N. York, etc.,” formerly belonging to Du Simitière, in the Library Co. of Phila. (shelf mark, No. 1432 G); Van Reeselaer, II: 394–5.

Besides the mystery of a ducale coronet on the first city seal of 1686, there is another in the fact that a smaller “common seal” of the city, also having a ducale coronet, was in use at the same time as the other (1689). This is described in Pine, op. cit., 37–51. The earliest known impression of this seal is on the certificate of allegiance of Johannes Kipp (dated Sept. 8, 1687), in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Other impressions are upon a land grant to Anna Maria van Horne (April 21, 1692), in possession of the Title Guarantee & Trust Co.; and on warrants signed by Mayors Ebenezer Wilhon (1709), Caleb Heathcote (1711), and John Johnston (1719), now preserved in the city clerk’s record-room. —Ibid., 51–52. Of this seal, it is said: “It is not known when and under what circumstances this seal came into existence. Between the granting of the seal of 1669 and the year 1689, when we find the other seal in use, there is record of the making of only one City seal, namely, that of 1686 with the legend. If this were the seal of 1669 still continued in use, the problem would be solved, but that cannot now be established. That the use of both seals was officially recognized is evidenced by the fact that on April 24 and again on October 15, 1689, the Common Council of New York, and their successors, made and issued two City Seals at “Six shill. for Every great Seal and three Shillings for a small Seal” [M. C. C., I: 222, 249], and on October 14, 1689, ex-Mayor Stephen Van Cortlandt was directed by the Common Council to deliver to the High Constable “two City Charter and also two City Seales” [ibid., I: 206]—showing that there were more seals than one.—Pine, op. cit., 53–55. The impression of this smaller seal on the Van Horne deed, above referred to, is reproduced by Wildes in his Civic Antiquities, Pl. 29, with accompanying description (pp. 72–73), attributing its origin to Loveless in 1669 (pp. 43, 61).

It is ordered by the common council that “the seal of the ground from the house of Frederick Philips to the house of Lovise Kurstead and from thence to the house of Willow Mathews and from the house of Thomas Crundell to the said City Hall be by the Severall inhabitants Paved from the front of their houses nine foot deep into the Streete.”—M. C. C., I: 179. This ground, on the modern plan, lay along the easterly side of Whitehall St. from the south end, and along the northerly side of Pearl St. from the easterly corner of Whitehall St. to the westerly corner of Coenties Alley.

Negroes and Indian slaves are regularly employed by their masters "to work on the bridge Weighhouse and Market house of this City and their Masters." This term tends to "the discouragement and Louse" of the "Sworne poorters" of the city. The common council therefore orders that those of these slaves "be admitted to work upon or intermediate with any goods whatsoever," at these places, whether imported or to be exported; but that such goods "Shall be Received and delivered by..."
The Sworne porters of this City and Nee others. —M. C. C., I: 1583. See Dec. 1, 1674.

The common council orders "that the Markett house of this City be and Employed as a warehouse for goods." The charge for "each turne of [or] Caseke" is fixed at 9d. for 24 hours; and for "each bayle of goods"—"amount not stated," and is See proportionally.
The order requires that the mayor appoint a "first person to be Keeper of the same Who Shall for the next Six months Have the half of the profit thereof for his Service." —M. C. C., I: 179. See Nov. 24, 1675.

Aug. 28
Gov. Dongan and the mayor and aldermen of the city deem it "fit and convenient" that a street shall be laid out from Broadway to the Smithia Vly. For this purpose the common council reported on The part of land of George Heathcote. For public convenience, Heathcote conveys to Dongan, for £12, "A certayne piece of land situate in the King street, Beginning at the land of Jan Vange [Vinge] and so along the east side of said street to the Smithia Vly, 16 rods, 4 feet, Dutch measure. And in breadth at the upper end 23 feet like measure, and fronting to the water side, 14 feet like measure." —Abstract of Willis, II: 447, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1895).

A footnote, Pelletreau explains that this tract, measuring 202 ft. long and 213 ft. wide, English measure, is the east part of End St., next west of Pearl St. For the origin of Fine St., see Dec. 17, 1685.

The general assembly, having been adjourned until Sept. 25, 1686, Dongan prorogues it until March 25, 1689, "for weighty and important Reasons," and gives notice to that effect by proclamation on The 1st of Oct.

Francisco Bastian, a negro, receives a patent for "A piece of land part of which is improved and is adjoining to the shore of the Bass Baywyk upon York Island, beginning at the northeast corner of the land of Solomon Peters the Negro and runs as the Highway or Road, north 24° easterly 56 rods and from the east 18° southerly 44 rods and thence south 24° westerly 56 rods and thence west 18° northerly 44 rods, to the first marked Tree being bounded on the south by the land not laid out and the west by the High Way or Road on the north by the land not laid out and the east by a Swamps, containing 15 Acres and 64 Rods." —Liber Patents, VI: 67 (Albany).

The common council orders that public wells of stone be made in specified places, half the expense to be borne "by the inhabitants of every Street proportionably and the other half by the City." There is to be one before each of the following houses: Those of Corbett and William Verumere in "the broadway"; that of William Merrett (location not given, but possibly in "Field Street," as appears by the tax list of 1675); and before those of James Provooat, Thomas Lewis, Andrew Teller, and William D. Tonneur (locations not given): also one to front Smith St. near the house of John II: 1546, V: 476; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 377-82.

Peter King and Adolph Pietersen, the city surveyors, are required "to survey ye Vacant Land within this City near and in ye Dock beginning from ye westhe whyse to ye City hall and to lay ye same out in lots of Eighty foot long into the Dock and about ten rods breadth from the Dock front breaf and on ye Dock street as also to lay ye street Ranging with ye Here Grat." —M. C. C., I: 195. This order was not recorded in the minutes until May 4, 1688. See Chron. regarding the action of the common council at that time. The vacant land referred to was the newly filled in land between the custom-house and the street (present Manhattan Slip) and the city hall (Corticls Slip). The street for which sufficient space was to be left was either Dock (present Pearl) St. or the water-side of the street. Regarding the filling in of the water-side around the custom-house bridge, and the derivation of the name Moore St., see Man. Com. Coun. (1825), 404; and drawing in Chron. opposite 1700.

Charges of fraud and misconduct are made against Luke Santen, the collector of customs, on Nov. 2 and Dec. 9. On Jan. 10, 1687, an examination was ordered by the governor and council. The assembly was dissolved, Santen suspended, and Peter Delacroy appointed collector pro tem. Santen, when arrested, was ordered to deliver his books to Stephen van Cortlandt; he refused, and Isaac Swinton was ordered to search and seize them when necessary to the help of the sheriff. —Col. Coun. Min. II: 52. On Feb. 22, Dongan stated in a report that Santen had been so troublesome that he was forced to send him home to England. —N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 421. See also Feb. 23, 1687.

This is "ye feast day of St Michael the Arch Angel," named in the Dongan Charter as the day on which the mayor, aldermen, and sheriff are to be appointed, assistants and petty constables elected, and the chamberlain chosen. —M. C. C., I: 198-90.

"Michaelmas Day . . . properly named the day of St. Michael and All Angels, is a great festival of the Church of Rome, and also observed as a feast day by the Church of England." —N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1895). Now we have learned with some surprise, that these notions of presenting angels and saints are what have led to the custom of choosing magistrates on the 29th of September . . . Local rulers were esteemed as in some respects analogous to tutelary angels, in as far as they presided over and protected the people. It was therefore thought proper to choose them on the day of St. Michael and All Angels . . .

Chambers, The Book of Days, II: 357 et seq.

An order is issued by the governor and council to the several sheriffs throughout the province to make a return of the number of horses and foot within their respective counties, also the number of inhabitants and merchants, English or foreigners, servants and slaves; the number of marriages, christenings, and burials, for the seven years last past, with the names of persons holding lands from the crown, etc. —Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 155. For results, see Dongan's report of Feb. 22, 1687.

This day of the moon is designated in the Dongan Charter as the one on which the mayor and sheriff are to take their oaths of office before the governor and council. —M. C. C., I: 218. It is likely it was chosen because it was the birthday of King James II (see Chambers's Book of Days, II: 443), as well as because it followed at a convenient interval after Michaelmas Day (see Sept. 29), when elections and appointments to office occurred. In England, the mayor was sworn in on St. Simon and St. Jude's Day. —See The Privileges of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen (London, 1721), 107.

A "Court of Lieutenant," or military tribunal, begins in the city of New York to try such delinquents as the lieutenant may think fit. They are now preserved in the custody of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and have been published in the society's Collections, 1886, where an "Introduction" explains the province and influence of this court.

The magistrates of Harlem pass an ordinance forbidding the inhabitants to cut any more wood within the town than is necessary for their own immediate use, under penalty of 200 guilders ($80). —Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), III: 475.

William Merritt receives a patent for a tract granted to Wolpert Webber by Director-General Stuyvesant, April 1, 1659. It is described as follows: "One certain piece of land situate and being upon the Island Manhattan on the further side of the Fresh Water lyeing between the land of Cornelys Jacobs Stille and the Valley or Meadow Ground, being in length from the Beginning or run or creek along the High way northerly to the marble which divides Cornelys Jacobs Land, 53 rods; thence in length along the said Stille's land to the Meadow south-west, 40 rods; thence, along the Meadow to the next corner of this land, 44 rods, and thence along the Hills northerly to Beginning 84 rods" (a mistake for 48 rods).

Various conveyances (not dated or particularly referred to) are recited from the assios of Wolpert Webber to William Merritt

See a city of the New York, mariner, who is now in possession; and Dec. 31, 1659, confirms the grant. —Liber Patents, VI: 64 (Albany).
The records of the proceedings of the legislative council under Dongan and his council (after the abolition of the general assembly — see June 1) begun in 1686, continued by the said act of assembly or in the journal of the city, mentions are made, among other locations, of "brewers Streete" and "garden Streete." — M. C. G., I. 185. The former of these later became Stone St. — Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1010. The latter (originally Town St., this Dutch name being literally translated) is now Exchange Pl. between Broad and William Sts. — Ibid., III: 999. See Sept. 10, 1689.

It is resolved by the common council that application be made to the governor for confirmation, by him and the council, of the charter which he granted to the city. His recent commission from the king made provision for this. The mayor and recorder are empowered to procure confirmation. — M. C. G., I: 182. The petition is dated Jan. 29, — Ed. Hist. N. Y., Eng. 168. This and the answer of the governor and council were read at the common council meeting of Feb. 24 — Ibid., I: 187. The text of the answer does not appear. The subject was not again brought up until Feb. 4, 1693. — See Jan. 5, 1691.

Dongan makes a long report on the state of the province, in Feb. 1689, to answer questions by the lords of trade. The following extracts contain the leading facts relating to New York City:

"Courts of justice are established principally by "Act of Assembly." The court of chancery, consisting of the governor and council, is the supreme court of the province, and appeals may be brought to it from any other court. A court of oyer and terminer is established, to be held once a year in each county, in place of the court of assizes which was held yearly for the whole province at New York. This court likewise hears appeals from inferior courts. The changes were made because of "the inconvenience of bringing of ye peace, inquests, Constables & other persons concerned from the remote parts of this Government to New York."

"There is likewise in New York & Albany a Court of Mayor & Aldermen held once in every fortnight from whence their can be no appeal unless the Cause of Action be above the value of Twenty pounds, or by any Act of Assembly or by Laws for the regulation of their own affairs as they think fit, soe as the same be approved by ye Govt. & Council."

"Their Mayors, recorders, Town Clerks & Sheriffs are appointed by the Governor."

"Courts of sessions are held by the justices of the peace twice a year in each of the counties, except New York where they are held four times, and Albany three times, a year."

Dongan reports that "in Feb. last," with the advice and consent of the council, he established a court of judicature (exchequer), to be held by the governor and council, or before as many of the council as the governor might authorize, on the first Monday in every month at New York. — See Feb. 19, 1686. Heretofore, there had been daily difficulties in these cases, on account of "the great distance betwixt the Cursory settled Courts," the consequent delays, and the hazard of submitting the king's cases to "country Jurors who over and above that they are thereby ignorant enough & for the most part linked together by affinity are too much swayed by their particular humors & interests."

There are in the province about 4,000 foot-soldiers, 700 horse, and one company of dragoons.

"At New York there is a Fortification of four Bastions built formerly against the Indians of dry stone & earth with Sods as a Breast work well and pleasantly situated for the defence of the Harbor on a point made by Hudson's River on the one side and by turning out of John Smith from that position; the difficulty he has been making in accounting for the great part of the revenue; etc. Concluding, he replies seriatim to charges made against him by Santen, stating, among other things: “Every Town ought to have a Minister. New York has first a Chaplain belonging to the Fort of the Church of England; secondly a Dutch Calvinist, thirdly a French Lutheran. Here be not many of the Church of England; and a few Roman Catholics; abundance of Quakers preachers and Women especially; Singing Quakers; Roasting Quakers; Sabbatarian; Antisabbatarians; Some Anabaptists some Independents; some Jews; in short of all sorts of opinions there are some, and the moat, none of all.

“The Great Church which serves both the English & Dutch is within the Fort which is foun to be very inconvenient therefore I desire that there may be an order for their building in an other, ground being laid out for that purpose, & they wanting not money in Store where all with to build it.

“The most pr̄vailing opinion is that of the Dutch Calvinists. —N. Y. Col. Docs. III. 359—415. In a footnote (p. 415), the names of the ministers referred to are given.

Dongan adds in a postscript to his report that he has caused Santen to be arrested for misappropriating revenues and falsifying accounts, and that he will be sent to England (p. 416). This document is printed in Dec. Hist. N. Y. (416 ed.), I: 95—118, where the date assigned to it is Feb. 22, 1687.

In a letter to the “Lord President,” Doogan states: “Mf Santen has for some time kept the Chancellors fee near the town that noe vessel can go in nor out but she must come see near the Point that from on board one might toss a biscuit Cake on Shore.

“T. in this Government look upon that Bay that runs into the Sea close Hudsons River & fort & there being a clause in my Instructions directing mee that I cause all vessels that come into Hudsons River to Enter [e., pay duties] at New York, I desire to know whether his Maj[e]y intends thereby those Vessels that come within Sandy-Hook, the People of East Jersey pretending a right to the River so far as their Province extends which is eighteen miles up the River to the Northward of this Place.

“The principal Towns within this Government are New York Albany & Kingston at Esopus. All the rest are Country villages, the buildings in New York and Albany are generally of Stone & brick. In the Country the houses are mostly new built, having two or three rooms on a floor. The Dutch are great improvers of the Land—New York and Albany live wholly upon Trade with the Indians, England and the West Indies. The returns for England are generally Beaver Peltry, Oile and Tobacco when we can have it. To the West Indies we send Flower, Bread, Pease Pork and sometimes a few cows, the monster part in rum, which pays the King a considerable Excise, & some Molasses which serves the people to make drink & pays noe custom.

“There are about nine or ten three Mast Vessels of about eighty or a Hundred Tuns burthen, two or three Ketches & Barks of about forty Tung, and about twenty Sloops of about twenty or five and twenty Tonn belonging to the Government. All of which Trade for England Holland & the West Indies except six or seven Sloops that use the river Trade to Albany.

“T. thousand Ships may ride here safe from Winds and weather. I send herewith to your Lord a Map from the coming in of Sandy-hook to the northern end of this Island where the Soundings are markt, by which youl perceive the coming in and conveniency of this harbor.”

“I beleive for these 7 years past, there has not come over into this province twenty English, Scotch or Irish Families. But on the other side, on Long Island, the people increase so fast that they complain for want of Land. But of French there have since my coming here several families come both from St. Christophers and England & a great many more are expected as afo from Holland are come several Dutch Families which is another great country on this side of the Clore and may to the northneighboiring English Colonies, that a more equal balance may bee kept here between his Maj[esty]s natural born subjects and Foreigners which latter are the most prevailing part of this Government.”

Dongan also answers questions regarding obstructions to trade; the tariff on certain imports; quit-rents; collectors of revenue; the appointment of Thomas Coker to the office of surveyor, and the
to deliver the books of the States General or W. I. Company to Wm. Nicolson—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 1666. [Page 14.]

The attorney-general is ordered by the governor and council to draw a legislative bill enacting that all bills, bonds, records, etc., shall be in English. The bill was passed the next day.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 1666; Jour. Leg. Coun., I: xix. See also Nov. 17, 1674.

In the absence of New York, Albany, Maj. Van Cortlandt is to take charge of the seals, Maj. Flynt of the keys, and to have the books containing the books and records, and John Knight of other books, etc., and act as deputy secretary. On July 26, Charles Lodsycyk, John de la Val, and George Mackenzie were required by the council to take an inventory of the books and records in the secretary's office with a view to going to London for business. Copies of proclamations and acts of council were to be made. On July 30, these copies were to be sent to the sheriffs of all counties, rules being prescribed for receiving and opening them. On Aug. 1, an inventory having been taken of the secretary's office, the keys were to be delivered to John Knight.—Cal. Coun., Min., 55.

A committee of the common council is appointed to "view the streets of the City and Report, how they find them that Care may be taken for making Common shores [sewers] and to Pave..." them as will be found necessary.—M. C. G., I: 188. They reported, on Aug. 8, that they "think convenient that..." the Pavement of the Guttering ye Here Gate be taken up from Cornelius Barnes his house to Alderman Crudens and be new paved so that the descent all along may be Equal and that it be paved on both sides for ye Descent of the water to ye River as shall be only directed by ye surveyor of the said street and consequently usable for Paving ye said street be new Paved as is proposed," also "that the Mill Street be Repaired in ye same Manner and that ye Pavement of ye Brewer street be likewise new Laid from Jasper Nesepats to Brunt skylers house."—Ibid., I: 189.

The common council orders the inhabitants to summon all the inhabitants of the several wards of the city, to appear before a committee of aldermen at the city hall and "Give an account of their fire-places." The aldermen are to determine "who shall be allowed as firemen and who not," that the names of these allowed may be enrolled.—M. C. G., I: 188. Such an order was again made in 1691—(Ibid., I: 218, 248, 264), and again in 1695 (Ibid., I: 373, 379, 391). A later order, Dec. 13, 1695 (p. 90), was more sweeping. The common council orders "that Alderman Cortland Assisted with the surveyors Make two Drafts of the land by the water-side from Coenraat ten Eyck to Martinus Clock [i.e., from Counties Slip to Burger's Path] the same to be laid out in lots."—M. C. G., I: 189.

The property of both Ten Eyck and Clock may be located on the Burgis View (PL 25, Vol. I) by means of the key (I: 132) and the plate description (I: 247). See also Oct. 15.

King James sends to Dongan from Windsor a seal, appointed for the use of the Province of New York. He directs Dongan to cause it as being engraved on the one side with Our Royal Effigies on Horseback over a Landskip of Land & Sea, with a Rising Sun and a Scrole containing this Motto. Aliusq{ue*} Descent and our Titles round the circumference of the said Seal; There being silver engraved on the other side Our Royal Arms with the Garter, Crown, Supporters & motto. With this inscription round ye Circumference Sigillum, Provinciarum Nostror Nedarum & in America; which seal we doe hereby authorize & direct to be used in the Sealing all Patents & Publick Grants of Lands, and all Publick Acts and Instruments which shall be made & passed in our Name & for our service for the Province and the Territories depending thereon. And that it be to all intents and purposes of the same force & validity as any former seal within our said Province, or as any other seal whatsoever appointed for the use of any of Our Plantations in America is or hath been.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 447. (A footnote suggests that this may be from Hawkes’s "Carman Sculeare.") See, further, Aug., 1688.

On or about Aug. 15, Dongan wrote to the "Lord President" of the lords of trade: “A Great part of the Fort & Breast Work which was down I have rebuilt, new, and am still repairing the Batteries have remoued seven & thirty gunnes, with the keys of the presse..." It was ordered "that the Officers quarters & am patching & mending ye Soldiers & my own, Dally the timber & Flank in this Country moulting away to dust in four or five yeares..."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 459.

Dongan recommends to the "Lord President" that people be sent from Ireland to colonize New York Province.—Doc. Hist., Aug. N. Y., 1706, ed. 157.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1687. An order is issued for a draft of every tenth man of the militia of the city of New York and the frontiers of Albany and Schenectady.

11. The council having heard that "ye friender at Canada is providing about one hundred pair of Snowshews," and letters from Albany expressing apprehension lest the French come "down upon them this winter," therefore, the military of New York, and the province is ordered put to readiness, "to go up thither."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), I: 166. Col. Nicholas Bayard is in this order of the militia here.—Cal. Coun. Min., 54-55.

27. The resolutions of the "Court of Lunacy" are to be seen at Oct. 16, 1686 are confirmed.—Cal. Coun. Min., 55.

27. Robert van Cortlandt is appointed mayor.—Cal. Coun. Min., 55. He held the office ten years earlier. See Oct. 13, 1677. On Oct. 14, he was installed.—M. C. G., I: 191. With all the other civil magistrates, he was continued in office for 1688-9 (ibid., I: 196-200), a fact which was overlooked in a note by the editor of the Minutes in VIII: 149.

Oct. The common council orders that "that street be made by the French in the New York," and the next lotts by ye Water side from the Weigh house [present TOAD to Martin Clocks [Havergro Sqr] be hence forth called y° Dock street."—M. C. G., I: 199. Formerly, this street was the Strand, or The Waal.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1007.

31. Andrus visits Hartford to establish his authority. He writes the word "fort" in the bottom of the assembly records of that colony, and demands the immediate surrender of its liberal charter.

See A. Tradition relates that this was secretly taken by Joseph Wadsworth Nov. and hidden in an oak-tree.—Winnor, op. cit., III: 335; Bancroft, op. cit., I: 587-88.

After hearing the charges against Lucas Santeau (see Sept. 26, 1688), the king appoints Matthew PLOWMAN to be collector in New York in Santenin's place, at a salary of £200 per annum. PLOWMAN's instructions were given on Dec. 13. Among these is the direction that all vessels coming within the channel of New York or the Hudson River shall be obliged to make entries of their lading at New York.—N. Y. Cal. Doc., III: 500-3.

In a letter to Dongan of March 26, 1688, the lords of the treasury directed the governor to require from PLOWMAN the security which he had been ordered to give in England but had neglected giving. If PLOWMAN failed to give security in New York before entering upon his duties as the king's lieutenant in the province, Dongan is to suspend him until such obligation should be fulfilled.—Blackett's Jour. (transcript), I: 492-93.

Hitherto, Dongan had not succeeded in getting the king to recognize the Iroquois as his subjects; but now a warrant arrives from England authorizing the governor to protect the Five Nations, and to repel the French from their territory by force of arms, should they attack the villages again.—N. Y. Cal. Doc., III: 503-4; Winnor, op. cit., IV: 349; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 326.

The common council orders that James Larkin "Deliver the Key of ye 3° City Market house to ye Mayor."—M. C. G., I: 192. This was now the public warehouse.—See July 24, 1686. See, further Feb. 26, 1688.

27. Matthias Nickolls, writing to Maj. Gen. John Winthrop, says: "It was my hap to hear at Southold the beginning of this month, at our annual Courts, when the great Guns echoed to us on Long Island, his Ex'≥ Edmond Andrus, welcome back to the rivers mouth, from his progress through Connecticut, where he was accompanied by an honourable suite, amongst whom your way with his was the time are well altered in the reception of St' Edmond Andrus in those parts now, to what they were formerly."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 167.

Dec. The consistory of the Dutch Reformed Church, after considering the "great decay of their church building, which there is no hope of repairing," believes "it necessary to inquire after the proper means of erecting a new church." They pass a resolution to solicit contributions, which shall be payable in three installments, on July 1, 1688, 1689, and 1690 respectively.—Eccles. Rec., II: 930-31. Dec. 30.

Prior to this year, a spur or fortification was erected before the gate of the fort.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1827), 170-77. This was called "a howse," and was in the province is ordered put to readiness, "to go up to the fort in New York" (PL 23-b, Vol. I). It evidently had been removed before c. 1773, as it is not shown on PL 46-a, Vol. I.

In a memorial to the British board of trade in 1696, Jacob Leister and Abraham Gouvenier stated that in 1688 there were in New York province "as many as two hundred men might be raised to 1200 fighting men, from 16 to 60 years of age."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 213.

In or about this year, the French Huguenots (Protestants) had a "church "butting Northward on the Petticoat lane."—Wittmeyer, Hist. St. of the Eglise Francoise, 24. There is no record showing that this edifice was erected by the congregation for a church, and the probability is that it was the house of one of the, citizens, so used. Petticoat, Petticoate, or Petticoat Lane was later called Marketfield St.; it extended from Whitehall to Broad St. Part of this street was closed when the New York Produce Exchange was erecting its building, and that structure now covers the site of the earliest French church in New York.—See The Castello Plan, II: 255-56; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 933, 1007; Man. Coun. Coun. (1682), 679, 682, 745 et seq. This church building was sold, and on July 8, 1704 (5 v.), the corner-stone of a new church, the Paroisse du St. Esprit, was laid on the north side of Pine St., east of Nassau St.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 73; Wittmeyer, op. cit. Eccles. Rec., III: 1528. For the succession of its pastors, see Corwin, A Manual of the Reformed Church in Am. (1925). 2002. Du Simiètre, writing in or about 1769, asserted that "before 1696, the French Protestants, at the beginning a small number in New York, held their assembly in a certain house in the little street which runs from Broadway to New River past the new house of P. R. Livingston. It was afterwards transferred into the street which runs from Broadway to Broad Street, named Marketfield Street but commonly called Petticoat Lane, from which it was transferred into the present church which was built in 1705."—Translated from a volume, lettered "Papers relating to N. England, N. York, etc., formerly belonging to Du Simiètre," now in the Ridgway Branch of the Library Co. of Phil. In instructions are sent to Dongan to maintain friendly relations with Denonville, the French governor of Canada.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 5041 Col. State Papers, Am. & Fr. (1685-88), 488. The common council orders that Anthony Demelt, "Shall keep ye Key of ye market house" (the citywarehouse—see July 24, 1686) until March 27; and receive 9d. per ton for "Every Night of Such Goods as Gamp or Wampum."—For every half Barrel," This shall be for the city's benefit.—M. C. G., I: 194. On March 24, Demelt's time was extended.—Ibid., I: 195.

The common council appoints Leonard Beckwith surveyor for the city and county of New York.—M. C. G. I: 194-95. Beck- with's name first appeared as surveyor in an undated record of March 16 or 17, 1677.—Col. Land Papers, 14. Gov. Dongan returns from Albany.—Cal. Coun. Min., 57. See Oct. 25, 1685. Capt. Jervis Baxter, one of the councillors, had come down to New York from March 15 with instructions from Dongan "for the Council to consider ways and means to defray the extraordinary charges which the French movement had caused the province. These charges were more than eight thousand pounds; and the council, finding that New York 'alone is no way able to get the French charges off,' and that the 'neighbouring colonies' should be invited to concur."—Brodehead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 495-96. With the authority of the king's letter of Nov., 1687, Dongan calls on the governments of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and New Jersey to aid that of New York with money; as New England, "being to help us with six hundred men, any other assistance cannot be proposed from them."—Ibid., II: 496.

At this council meeting, called by Dongan on his return to New York, and at which he gave an account of his doings at Albany, it was resolved to ask the king in support of the appeal to Lord Godolphin, Philip Dongan from Albany; and in this they stated "that this government has been much diminished by taking

The king having issued a proclamation at Whitehall on Dec. 23, last, relative to the queen's expectation of the birth of a child, Dongan issues a proclamation appointing April 11 as a day of public thanksgiving.

One of the instructions given by the king to Andros is that the seal which the king gave the province of New York on Aug. 16, 1657, shall be "forthwith broken and defaced," in Andros's presence; and "that the Seal appointed for the said colony of New England be henceforth made use of for all that our Territory and Dominion in its largest extent & boundaries aforesaid." Another instruction is: "And you shall transmit unto us by the first opportunity a Mapp with the exact description of all the whole country as far as any discovery shall be made thereof, and of the several fortifications you shall find or erect there." Another is: "And as much as great inconveniences may arise by the liberty of printing within our said Territory, under your Government, you are to be bound by all necessary orders to prevent that no person keep any printing press for printing, nor that any book pamphlet or other matter whatsoever be printed without your especial leave and license first obtained." —Ibid., III: 537-40. The legislative power is continued in the governor and council, as under Dongan.—"Historical Intro." Jour.Eng. Coun., I: 236. Aug. 11.

Capt. Francis Nicholson is given a commission as lieutenant-governor of New England, with directions to observe such orders as he shall receive from "The chief Govt. of New England" (Andros).—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 537.

The king at Whitehall issues an order to Dongan to deliver the seal of the province of New York, public papers, and ensigns of government, to Andros in London to return to England, there to receive marks of the king's favour for his services in America.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 536. This order was read in the meeting of the governor's council at New York on July 28 (q.v.).—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1821), III: 335. It reached Dongan prior to that date on his return from Albany Aug. 6. Credit is given by Brodhead to the policy and firmness of Gov. Dongan in that bringing to pass the cession of Niagara by the French, although before it was accomplished his authority over New York had ceased.—Hist. State of N.Y., II: 509.

For the support of the government, the council resolves to make a new tax levy of £2,556 upon all the inhabitants and freeholders in the province, to be paid to the collector at the custom-house in New York before Nov. 1. The amount to be levied in N. Y. City is £347.—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), I: 167.

Mayor Bayard's order of Sept. 15, 1666 (q.v.), requiring the city surveyors to survey the vacant land "near and in ye Dock," "and to lay ye same out in lots," is entered in full in the Minutes at this time, with the additional order "that no Jobes Kipp and Mr. teunis De Kaay be added to Ald.m. Francis Reombouts Ald.m. m^r thomas Crudelii and Mr. Dirck Van Clyff and Mr. Orp Report thereof under their hands to this board the second Monday in June next."—M. C. C., I: 195-96.

The common council appoints a committee to "view ye New lotts laid out in ye Dock and examine whether any Deformity or other Inconvenience to ye City or any of ye streets therein is occasioned by laying out ye said lotts as they Now are if they shall be built upon, or not, that they lay out ye same Street running into ye Dock between or thre ye said lotts Even and equal in breadth with ye Here Graft [Braft St.], and that they lay out a Convenient inlet in ye Midle of ye said street for ye water to flowin in at and Channell the said Here Graft to ye Dock in the City."—M. C. C. I: 195. The street to be laid out running into the dock is the extension of Broad St. from Dock or Pearl St. through the new-made land.—See June 14.

The court of mayor and aldermen assigns definite places on the water side for wood to be "Coaded," namely, "at ye Burgess Gate and between ye Weigh house and Francis Parsons house."—M. C. M. (M.), May 15, 1668.

Gov. Thomas Dongan transfers to George Browne a lot now known as 56 Wall St.—Liber Deed, XVII: 90-91 (New York). Browne sold to William Cox (ibid., XVIII: 92-94) on March 15, 1669. In 1741, Cox being then dead, Capt. William Kidd married his widow, and came into possession of this parcel which, with his wife, she transferred, Jan. 27, 1694, to John Watson and Katherine, his wife.—Ibid., XXI: 757-77 (New York). For other properties of Capt. Kidd, see Jan. 24, 1687; April 18, 1689.

Privateers being reported off the coast, the council orders that a military watch be kept in New York City.—Cay. Min., 560.

At a "Court of Lieutenancy," held in New York on this day, there are adopted "Orders to be Observed by the Military watch Appointed for the City of N. Y." These orders provide, among other things, "That the Watch bee Sett Every Night by nine of ye clock immediately after the ringing and continue till the ringing of the Bell in the Mornings" and "That frequent annos bee made about the City and Especially towards the Watter side and not less than three times a night."—These records are deposited in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and pubd in Collections (1858), 508-405; see also 1662. It is ordered by the common council "that the Lotts in the Dock on the East Side of the Heresgraft shall be forthwith Surveyed
The King's order of April 22 (p. v.) directing Dongan to turn over the government to Andros is read in the meeting of the governor's council—Col. Cmns., 61: N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 313: 253; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 345. See Aug. 11.

The Quakers of New York and Long Island make a petition regarding their grievances "for conscience sake." A schedule is made of property taken from the Friends in New York Province since the arrival of Gov. Dongan, showing on what account it was taken.—Col. Hist. MSS., Aug., 171.

Aug.

It relates to the tanning of hides.—Jour. Leg. Cmns. (1861), II: 23.

For a sketch of the life of Gov. Thomas Dongan, see ibid., II: 23 (footnote by O'Callaghan, citing the manuscript Introduction to the 'Eccles. Hist. from 1664-1691, about to be published by George H. Moore, Esq.). He remained in America until 1691, when he returned to England.

It is ordered by the common council "that Fredrick Phillips Builds his house: Square upon the Wharfe and upf and make: the road from the Said house to the End: of his Ground: rounding twenty five foot to the End, and that the Said Fredrick Phillips doe leave for the breth of the Street fronting from the Said house: ten feet, the same to Be Don and Complied at the first of January next."—M. C. C., I: 200.

Andros, having received the king's commission (see April 7) "for the annexing the Province of New York and ye East & West Jersyes to his Ma'ty's territory of N. England," thereupon "addressed himself to that service with all convenient speed." Leaving Francis Nicholson installed as lieutenant-governor at Boston, and "being accompanied with several of the members of His Ma'ty's Council," he arrives on New York on Aug. 11, "being met by a regiment of foot and a troop of horse belonging to that place."—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 554, 567. "His Ma'ty's commission was read in ye Fort and afterwards published at ye City Hall, and immediately HI: Col. Dongan of the West, sent word to the Governor and the seal of the late Gov. which was defaced and broken in Council; then a Proclamation for continuing the revenue, and all persons civil & military in their respective offices till further order was published."—From Randolph's letter to the lords of trade, dated Oct. 3, 1688, in ibid., III: 567; M. C. C., I: 198.

The breaking of Dongan's provincial seal, which had been in use less than a year (see Aug. 14, 1687), and which Broadhead refers to as the "almost virgin seal" (Hist. State of N. T., II: 512), was in accordance with King James's Instructions of April 16 (p. v.) to Andros: "And whereas since our Accession to the Crown, We have appointed a new Seal for our Colonies of New England, as also another Seal for our Province of New York [Aug. 14, 1689], which being now united under one governor, We do hereby direct and require that the Seal appointed for the said colony of New England be henceforth made use of for all that our Territory and Dominion is also also ought to be employed and that the Seal for our Province of New York be forthwith broken and defaced in your presence."—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 546.

A description of the seal of New England is contained in the receipt given for it by Andros, as governor of New England, on Sept. 15, in 1689, given on the margin of his Majesty's effigies standing under a canopy, robed in his royal vestments and crowned, with a sceptre in the left hand, the right hand being extended towards an Englishman and an Indian, both kneeling: the one presenting the fruits of the Country, and the other a scroll, and over their heads a Cherubim holding another scroll with this motto: Nuncquam libertas gravior exist, with his Majesty's titles around the circumference; there being on the other side the King's Arms, Aug. 1687, crowned, supporters and motto, and this inscription round the Circumference: Sigillum Novae Angliae in America."—From the original receipt in the State Paper Office, London, N. E., IV: 267; cited also in Col. State Papers, Am. and West Indies, 1685-88, 225. A parchment, having attached to it the great seal of New England which was under ye motto, therein mentioned in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. An historical account of this seal accompanies it, written by Geo. Adlard, of New York, Feb. 4, 1862, and addressed to Luther Bradish, president of the society. It was published in Man. Com. Cmns. (1862), 725 et seq.

It is evident, as Mrs. Van Rensselaer has pointed out (Hist. City of N. Y., II: 347-51), that New York was no longer in the old way a capital city." See, further, Addenda.

"Thus Andros began his second government of New York. He had left it seven years before to be justified with the Duke of York. In the interval, the province had gained and lost a popular assembly. Her old governor now revisited familiar scenes to assume almost imperial authority as the viceroy of James the Second."—Broadhead, op. cit., II: 512; Hist. Mag., 21 ser., I: 1. The loss of the popular assembly is seen in that part of Andros's instructions (of April 16, p. v.) where he is directed "to observe in the passing of laws that the spirit of energy of the same by 1686, in the Governor and Council be henceforth used and no other."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 218.

One of Andros's first official acts, after being installed governor at New York, is to write to Monsieur De Deenonville, governor of New France, placed at Quebec, that the king has placed the province of New York and "other parts of his territory," together with the "dominion of New England" (see April 7), all under his command; and he gives notice to Deenonville that the king "hath thought fit to owe the Five Nations or Cantons of Indians . . . and to protect them as such."—N. Y. Docs., 567.

The common council orders that the recorder draw an address "to his Excellency [Andros] for Confirming the Several: Privileuges belonging to the City: and Congratulating his Coming here:"—M. C. C., I: 200.

"All Civil Magistrates 8th are Continued by Publication of the Government & Council."—M. C. C., I: 200.

The common council orders that "a Transport" (or conveyance) be drawn "for the peace of Ground formerly appointed for the building of a Church."—M. C. C., II: 200. The reference here is evidently to the ground petitioned for by the Dutch Church on April 4, 1688 (p. v.). The order appears not to have been carried out, for the same petition was again made on Dec. 8, 1691 (p. v.).

Capt. Francis Nicholson, who is in Boston, having sent to Andros "ye joyful news of a Princes being borne" (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 553), Andros issues a proclamation at New York on Monday, announcing the birth of "a prince, and an appointed Sunday, Sept. 23, as a day of thanksgiving."—M. C. C., I: 199. Dr. Corwin, in annotating the Eccles. Rec. (II: 955), is in error in stating that a "Princess" was born; it was James Francis Edward.—See memorandum under title "Thanksgiving" in Index of M. C. C., VIII: 450.

A side-light on the character of Capt. Nicholson was revealed by Andrew Hamilton in the course of his argument at the trial of John Peter Zenger, Aug. 4, 1735 (p. v.), when he explained that the first libelling of a governor that he had ever known of in America was of Nicholson. He related the circumstances, which he said, "may look like a romance," and which he presented as an example of the exercise of arbitrary power. The alleged libeller was a parson, whom Nicholson prosecuted, until the proceeding was stopped by order of Queen Anne, "with sundry others set on foot by the same governor, against gentlemen of the greatest worth and honor in that government" (Boston).—Man. Com. Cmns. (1860), 457-58.

1688 The proprietors of West Jersey vote to surrender their government to New-England.—Bancroft, op. cit., III: 32.

Andres leaves New York for Boston. "Some days after that Capt' Nicholson delivered in an order" (presumably to the New York council) from Anders "to view and take an account of the condition of the fort and City fortifications, ammunition of war, &c., the fort being extraordinarily out of repair."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 390. Nicholson's report bears date of Nov. 15, 1688 (q. v.).

The assessors' valuation of the several wards is as follows:

2 West Ward, £6,600; North Ward, £7,655; South Ward, £4,954; East Ward, £3,645; Dock Ward, £18,241; Harlem, £1,727; Bowery, £14,610 total, £28,231. "Upon which it is Ordered that: one and a half & $: shall be forth with Raised upon the people according to the Act."—M. C. C., 1: 201. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1839), 532.

5-15 In pursuance of the warrant directed by Anders to Nicholson, Bayard, and others, dated Oct. 4 (q. v.), appointing and authorizing them to view the fort and fortifications of the city, to report what repairs are needed to the buildings within the fort, the palisades, the Magazine yard, the armory of the guns, munition, and military stores, and to make an estimate of the cost of repairs, they have taken with them two carpenters, a mason, and a glazier, have made the required surveys, and now report the following conditions:

"The inner part of the Armoury Curtain is to be new made, the charges whereof are computed at £16.

"The Room over the Gate wants shutters, and ye restoring of ye same computed at £5.

"Upon the Merry Mount are 4 Seekers and two brass Culverins which need new carriages, a stone Platform wants beds and Coynes, which will cost £12.

"Within the Curtain at the back end of the Guard are a Seekers and a carriage half worn, wants beds and coynes, which will cost £5.

The Platform rotten, wants to renew it 1600 foot of Planck, and 50 sleepers, which will cost with the workmanship, £50.

"Wants a smaller new house of office, computed for timber and workmanship, £5.

"There wants a new Crane for the guns, which will cost £5.

"There wants aprons for all ye guns, which will cost £5.

"Item, 2 new Century boxes, besides two new ones new made, £1.10.

In the Fort before the house two Brass guns, two new mailies, but old work.

"Upon the Spur before the Gate, three Seekers, one iron and one brass. No Carriages nor Platform.

"The Breast works upon the wall most part quite out of repair, except from ye gate Room to ye Merry Mount, ye repairment of ye new wall will cost £45. Out of the Fort under the Flagg mount, near ye water side, 5 iron Demi Culverins, four sea carriages worth nothing. To make up the same there will be wanting 50 sleepers of 15 foot, 1600 foot of Planck, which will cost with the workmanship, £5.

"The cost of the bricklayer work, for ye repairing of ye Great House, the Chimneys, Souldiers rooms, officers rooms, and what further ought to be done to the Fort, is computed (besides what is done already as per Sergeant Olphert's account amounting to £18.16.4) the sum of £40.

There wants a new Gate between ye Spur and Ironmounts, for which there is to be 2 Posts, 6 Ribs and 15 laths, which will cost with ye Workmanship, £3.

"The Guard and Souldiers room we find the Roof decayed and ought to be renewed with boards and shingles. All ye floor is old, ye lodgings as followeth: The 1st Room, 4 Cabins, one new and three old beds. The 2nd Room, 5 Cabins out of repair. The 3rd room, 6 Cabins out of repair. The 4th Room, 7 Cabins out of repair. The 5th Room, 7 Cabins, and new beds ye men had at Albany, and two new beds they had new made.

"The Armourer's room, 6 Cabins. For ye repairing of all this there wants, according to ye carpenter's calculation, 52 beams of 18 foot, 50 beams of 20 foot 7½-9 inches square, 60 Rysters 14 foot 5½-7 inches square, 2400 feet of oak Planck for ye first floor, 2400 foot ditto for ye middle floor, 2400 foot ditto for ye upper floor, 3360 foot ditto, for ye Roof, 7000 Cedar shingles, 3 foot long, 259 pounds nayles. Which will cost, with ye workmanship besides ye repARATION already done by ye Carpenters, and materials used, amounting, as per ye carpenter's accounts, ye sum of £24.13.13.

"The Great House wants some Shutters, doors, ye floor is to be mended. Shores under ye beams in ye cellar, Stairs in ye Garrett, and several other reparations. Ye material and workmanship will cost, according to ye carpenter's calculations, £6. The steps into the Powder room are all rotten. To make new ones will cost about £1.5.

"The Glazier, taking a view of all ye Glazier's work, brings in his report of glass to be made and mended as per account amounting to £7.7.4, viz. 9 glasses in ye kitchen, and 4 to be mended, 5 new glasses in the Lunto Jeantier. In ye Armoury two new glasses and 17 to be mended. In the Court Guard, 8 new ones and 5 to be mended, £13.9. There is wanting at ye outward door of ye Great House and at ye doors within, locks, some hinges and other iron works, which by computation may cost £5.10. Cost of iron works there will be wanting when all is to be mended; but not in good condition, cannot well be said at present.

"The Curtine from ye Panty mount to ye point of ye merry mount and ye panty [at the north-west corner of the present State St. and Bowling Green] was all Stockaded and breast work but none now. There is no military or other stores at all in ye City of New York, otherwise than is above expressed. We are informed by his Excellency Colonel Dongan that he intended to longtime ye city and, if occasion, to lay ye Fortifications further out. How much ye charges of Fortifying the city anew will come to we cannot compute till it be laid out and surveyed by some artist, and such one is none here at present.

"This report, containing 12 more pages, is hereby offered unto your Excellency by your Humble Servaunts, Francis Nicholson, Colonel N. Bayard, Wm. Beckman, S. Van Cortlandt, Matthew Plowman, Minneath.

"Peter King, John and Andrew Muyer, Carpenters, Sweet opherts & his son were employed only to repair the necessary work making the houses, soldiers' rooms, Courtpearugs &c. only wind and weather tight which took up the time till the winter and cold weather hindered their works." After that Stephen Van Cortlandt got an order from Andros "to furnish all materials for the repairing of the fort, as Cap' Nicholson should order. Nicholson of Old Cortlandt's told me to make the planck and shapers. and the "said Carpenters" gave Van Cortlandt the dimensions, who "had them sawd and cut by one John Mask & Josiah Halfmar and were ready in the month of March and April" (1689). "The time for the mason's works" Van Cortlandt "had spoken for to be ready when there should be occasion for to use the same which was resolved on by Cap' Nicholson was to be done out of hand if this unhappy resolution at Boston had not happened."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 599-91.

King James II abdicates the crown and leaves England.—N. Y. Dec. Col. Docs., III: 572. From this day until Feb. 13, 1689 (g. s.), was 11 the "Interegnum," when England was without a government.

"In the year 1688, war broke out in Europe between the French and Spaniards; and in a short time the English joined the Spanish against the French. This war was continued nearly to the end of King William's reign—and, during that time, New York became the principal headquarters of the privateers and adventurers from Europe and other parts."—"The Red Sea Men," in Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 491. See also N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 223.

"The first privateer commissioned by the government of New York, which is found to have resulted from the legalized capture of enemy's property to the more profitable one of piracy upon the commerce of friendly nations, is William Mason, who received his commission in 1689 [error for May 16, 1690; g. s.], authorizing him 'to sail for Quebec in Canada, to war as to his wisdom shall direct, to meet, and to assault, and destroy; and for the French interests in Canada, and to seize and make prize of all goods on shore, and vessels at sea belonging to the French king or to Frenchmen, and to kill, slay and injure the people of that nation in any way possible.' Several vessels similarly commissioned sailed from New York about the same time, with instructions to act under Mason as their admiral. Some of these vessels were successful in the design of crippling the enemy's commerce, and brought in several French prizes to the port of New York, which were regularly condemned in the admiralty, and there is no reason to suspect the government, then in power (Leister's administration), of any design to countenance any but the recognized system of war. But Mason himself, being less successful in obtaining prize money on the American coast, pushed his adventure to a distant region, then but little known to the commercial world except to slave traders, and cruised along the eastern coast of Africa, pushed out to the coast of Madagascar, in the Arabian gulf, and in the Red Sea." How he turned pirate, and how his successor in command, Edward Coats, returned to the east end of Long Island in April, 1693, and procured the favour of Gov. Fletcher, who, with his council, benighted by gifts from Coats,—engaged Coats—Gow (1657), 462-65.

In this year, the wind-nill on the Common was destroyed by lightning—See Nov. 24, 1692.

During this year, or somewhat earlier, the Fly blockhouse, in the Smith's Vly or Valley, was erected.—Doc. Hist. N. T. (3vo ed.), II: 299, 307. Depositions two years later, recounted the narr- render of the Fly blockhouse, held by Capt. Ingolesby.—See March 13, 17, and 18, 1694. Its site was at what now is Wall St. at its intersection with Pearl St. See Pl. 23-a, Vol. I.
The Chevalier De Callieres, of Montreal, gives to the Marquis of Seignelay an account of a project for the conquest of the province of New England (then alluded to as ‘New England at the Foot of the City’). “This place,” he states, “consists of a town composed of about 200 houses and can put about 400 inhabitants under arms. They are divided into four Companies of Infantry of 50 men each, and three Companies of Cavalry of the same number, the horses being very numerous in that country. “The king,” he added, in his report to the French government, “accepted on the proposal on June 7, and gave instructions to Count De Frontenac accordingly.—Doc. Hist. N. T. (40 ed.), I: 179-85.

Andros issues, at Fort Charles, Pemaquid, a proclamation informing the public of a letter from King James, dated Oct. 16, 1658, which states that the colonists living there have been invaded and sudden Invasion from Holland, with an armed Force of Foreigners and Strangers, which will be speedily be made in a hostile manner upon His Majesty’s Kingdom of England”; that, while false pretenses may be given out, “relating to Liberty, Property, and Religion,” it is manifest that this invasion purposes “an absolute Conquest of His Majesty’s Kingdoms”; and that this purpose is promoted by some of His Majesty’s Subjects, being persons of wicked and restless Spirits, implacable Malice, and desperate Designs, who... do again endeavour to embroil His Majesty’s Kingdom in Blood and Ruin, to gratify their own Ambition. Boyry and Booty in such a publick Confusion.” The proclamation states further, that the king will rely upon his own people and not upon foreign succour for defence; and that he “does solemnly Conjure His Subjects to lay aside all manner of Animosities, Jealousies, & Prejudices,” and unite in defending His Majesty and their native county. The king has made such provision as did become Him, and has no doubt “of being found in so good a Posture that His Enemies may have cause to repent such their rash and unjust Attempts,” this proclamation is made to the king’s subjects of New England “that they may be the better prepared to resist any Attempts that may be made by His Majesties Enemies in these parts, and secured in their trade and Commerce with His Majesties Kingdom of England.”—From one of the printed original in N. Y. Soc. Library; there is a facsimile in Man. Com. Coun. (1859), opp. p. 452. Cf. Brodhead, op. cit., II: 548.

Feb. 15, 1687. The reign of William III and Mary begins. It ended March 8, 1702.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: Intro., p. viii. ibid., III: 572. A most useful printed source-book of the history of that series of important events involved in the English religious and political revolution of 1688-9, is Cobbett’s Parliamentary History of England (London, 1839), V. 1 et seq. Brodhead, evidently following this authority in his Hist. State of N. Y., II: 557 et seq., gives an excellent summary of these events as current history, with reference to their bearing upon American affairs, particularly in this province. Following the abdication of James (see Dec. 11, 1688), Brodhead observes, “they have been the basis, to prevent or antedate anarchy in the deserted kingdom. In this crisis, the Archbishop of Canterbury and York, with other British peers, met at the London Guildhall [Dec. 11, 1688], assumed provisional direction of English affairs, and declared for the Prince of Orange [soon to be James II]. William soon afterward came from Windsor to Saint James’ [Dec. 18] where a great multitude of Protestant Englishmen, wearing Orange ribbons—‘the emblem of civil and religious freedom’—assembled to welcome their Dutch ‘Deliveree.’... Having received the communion according to the Episcopal rual of England [Dec. 29], as his ‘first act’ of administration of the Dutch prince published a declaration authorizing all civil officers in the kingdom, ‘not being Papists,’ to act in their several places until further orders. ’... The Convention called by William declared that the throne was vacant by the abdication of James. It was then considered how New York’s vacancy should be filled [Jan. 22, 1689]. The Commons resolved that the ‘religion, laws, and liberties’ of England should be first secured [Jan. 29]. Some assigning accordingly submitted a report [Feb. 7] exciting the causes of the revolution, and contemplating, among other things, that the forfeited or surrendered charters of the Plantations should be restored. But the clause, in stating the restoration of privately recovered charters was omitted from the instrument adopted by the Convention [Feb. 12]. That famous state-paper—chiefly the work of Somers—set forth the errors and crimes of James; reviewed his administration; asserted the rights of subjects and Parliament; defined the authority of the sovereign, and then settled the English crown on William, Prince, and Mary, Princess of Orange, during their lives, and the life of the survivor of them, with the executive power in the prince; after them, on the posterity of Mary; then on the Princess Anne and her posterity; and then on the posterity of William. New oaths of allegiance and abjuration were ordained in place of the abrogated oaths of allegiance and supremacy. This instrument—the most important in English annals next to Magna Charta—is known as the ‘Declaration of Rights.’”

A Board of Trade and Plantations” is appointed at Whitehall, and ordered to meet Feb. 18 to prepare drafts of proclamations “for Proclaiming their Majesties in the several Plantations and for continuing all persons in their Employments and Offices till further order.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 572; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Coll. (1868) Sec. A. 12-13.

Information is brought to Lintel-Gov. Nicholson by letter from Philadelphia that the Prince of Orange has invaded England. At the council meeting at Fort James on this day, it is decided to open a number of private letters addressed to persons in New York and Boston, which were bought by the same messenger for Philadelphia, their object being “the prevention of any tumult and the divulging of secret strange news.” They find the same news is contained in two of these letters. Whereupon it is further resolved “forthwith to send Expresses both by water and land, unto His Excellency Sir Edmunde B. Somers, Governor of this Province, and to him with this matter.” This is accordingly done.—Couns. Min. in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 241-13. This news when given out troubled the Papists.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 591.

The council considers the money in the hands of Matthew Plowman, the Roman Catholic collector, “not safe at his lodging being a private house and a great distance from the Fort.” They resolve that he “bring all the said money he hath in his hands into his Majesties Fort James there to be locked up in a strong chest and sealed by him for the better securing off the same till further order from his Excellency.”—Coun. Min. in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 245. The amount is about £1,200.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 591. For the similar case of Collector Santen, see Feb. 25, 1687.

The common council appoints a committee to agree with Capt. John Tudor and others about letting “Such Shops in the Market house,” as it “may Conveniently Contain: propr. adjoining to the Longth thereof.”—M. C. C., I: 202. At the next meeting, the committee reported that they had leased to Tudor “a Place To build a Shop on in the Said market House” for the term of three years from March 25, for a rental 40 shillings a year. This appears to be a warehouse. See N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 202. Feb. 26, 1688. The committee reported on March 30 that it had leased other shops in this market-house. At that time Tudor was appointed to “receive all persons such incomes and benefits as shall accrue to the market house [warehouse] for Lodging of Merchants Goods: according to the rates Established, of which he is to have one half and the city the other.”—Ibid., I: 202. A warrant is issued at Whitehall to pay the two foot-companies to be employed in the province of New York; and a chaplain, surgeon, storero-keeper, armorner, master gunner, and two “Matrosses” (as assistant gunners and guards), who are to be employed at specified rates per diem.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 601-22.

It is ordered by the common council “that the Street before m7 Beeckmann Dooore be thirty foot Wide.”—M. C. C., I: 203. This street became known as Queen St., and later the modern Pearl St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1007; and Oct. 13, 1694.

This property is covered by the present Nos. 25, 27, and 29 Pine St. On the death of Cox, Sarah (Bradley) Cox, his widow, married, first John Outet, and second, in 1667, Capt. William Kidd. Later notorious as a pirate and commander of the “Adventure” galley. On July 3, 1693, Capt. Kidd, and Sarah, his wife, and Samuel Bradley, her brother, conveyed this parcel of land to Thomas Clark.—Liber Deeds, XXVI: 158-59 (New York). Under the terms of the Revolution and the Uprising, Boston and the towns and from abroad between England and France and the number of the Council being so few, considering the necessity that all affairs ought to be put in good order, the peace kept and government secured from invasion abroad," it is ordered by the lieutenant-governor and council that the mayor, aldermen, and common with the chief military officers be called together this afternoon, to meet the lieutenant-governor and council at the town hall, to consider what is needed. A letter is sent to the several of counties to meet the council in New York on certain days next week. —Coun., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 345. The news of the war from France, and that the French maltreated the English and Dutch, created "a great fright and tumult in the Towne."— 28 The four members of the council, Nicholson, Phillips, Van Countland, and Bayard, who are the only ones left out of thirty-done, wrote to Lieut.-Gov. Winthrop, Col. Treat, Col. Allen, Col.
Yonge, Col. Pinnacer, Walter Clarke, Esq., Walter Newbury, Esq., and Maj. Smith, urging them "to come with all expedition to advise and consult" with them "as to what is proper to be done" for the safety and welfare of the Government of this City," etc.—
Ibid., III: 574–59.
At the "General Meeting held at the City Hall," in the afternoon, consisting of the lieutenant-governor, the three members of the council (Maj. Stephen van Countland, Frederick Phillips, and Col. Nicholas Bayard), the aldermen, common councilmen, and military officers (including Jacob Leisler, Charles Lodwick, and others), it is unanimously agreed "that the City be forthwith fortified," and a committee is appointed to see what is needed for this object. It is also agreed "for the more security of the fort since the present garison is but a very small number that some part of the City militia help the Guard in the fort."
It is believed this will "remove all the jealousies of the people," and
Col. Bayard is recommended to give suitable orders accordingly. —Coun., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 272–73.
The inhabitants began to keep watch at the fort the following day.—
29 The justices of the peace and captains of the militia of King's County come to New York to meet the council as requested (see April 27). They promise to do all in their power to keep the people in quietness and defend the country against the common enemy.
They resolve to set sentinels at Coney Island to watch for incoming vessels and give warning.—Coun., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections

Capt. Nicholson (the lieutenant-governor), the council, mayor, aldermen, common council, and all the military officers, meet and resolve "upon the fortifying the City," etc., to "be upon the poor and exposed and the danger they run to one another when the merchants also begin to disturb the Cteachers," Capt. Nicholson proposes that the revenue from the first of May be employed toward the City fortifications, and this is thankfully accepted.—N. Y. Col.
Docs., III: 592. The committee on fortifications which was appointed on the 27th, reports that five of their number "think it very necessary that the fortifications be according to the bounds of the ancient fortifications," but that Abraham Depeyster thinks they should be "according to the latter bounds layed out being

A "General meeting" of the mayor, council, aldermen, common council, and military officers, is ordered that no rum shall be sold to the Indians in this city and county until further orders.—Coun., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections no military officers in commission there, a captain, lieutenant, and esquire were given commissions—Coun., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections

A "Representation," dated April 26, from the committee of trade and plantations, is read at the meeting of the privy council at Hampton Court, regarding the state of the provinces and the war with France. It recommends, among other things, "six speedily setting of such a government in New-England, New York and ye Jerseys" as will enable the inhabitants of these provinces to oppose their united forces against the French of Canada and Nova Scotia.
It is ordered by the king and council—N. Y. Col. Doc., III:
571–74.
All the magistrates and military officers meet to determine where the platforms shall be made and the guns placed.—N. Y. Col.
Docs., III: 593. At this "General Meeting" the committee reports that they find 17 guns throughout the city without carriages.
They recommend that four be placed "against the Widow Richardson;"
three "on a Platt form without the Batterie at the Water gate to be placed under the Platt;" three or four "on the Whare by Coll.
Dongan's House," and one or two "on the Whareff nigh the State House." A committee of carpenters and masons is appointed "to view the places for to make the Platt formers," and to report what planks, etc., are necessary. They reported on May 6, showing in detail what timber, planks, beams, etc., were needed for stockades, platforms, wheels for gun carriages, breastworks, gates, etc.; a committee was appointed "to provide the materials for the fortifications;" and it was ordered "that the Proclamation for fortifying the City be forthewithstanding published and copies thereof put vp att the State House and att the bridge."—Coun., in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

The civil and military officers from Richmond County came and met the [Lieutenant] Governor and Council at the town-hall. He recommends to them "to be watchful with courage and if unity amongst the people they promise to do."—Coun., in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Collections (1868), 248.

News reaches members of the council in New York regarding the "Revolutions at the East End of Long Island and of the dissatisfaction of the people there." Letters are sent by the council to Col. Young and Maj. Howell "to pacify the people" as much as they can.—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 592.

A merchant from Boston, one Philip French, is stopped near the French lines. His activities will be found under a deponent. He is told three are sentries on all sides of the town. He is taken to the fort, and on the way the soldiers keep the people back with their halberds. The commanders, "M’f Jacob Laysler and M’f Charles Ludwig," are sent for, and they examine French "about the present affairs in England" and whether he has any letters for this place.—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 578. For Leisler’s career, see May 16.

At a general meeting (such as was held almost daily) of Lieut.-Gov. Nicholson and his council, with the mayor, aldermen and common councilmen of the city, and the military officers, it is ordered "that the Proclamation for fortifying the City be forthwith published and coppedes thereof put vp att the State House and att the bridge" (the customary places for government bulletins).—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 278.

The Auditor Stephanus Van Cortlandt complaining that the Collector M’f Matthew Plowman is much backward in making up his accounts, the Collector says that for a time he was in the town of Northampton (Plowman), and also at Sodom. But the said Collector refuses to pay a Bill drawn upon him by the Lefseant Gouverneur . . . It is ordered that M’f Plowman be sent for, who coming said he had no money to Cash. Then it was further ordered that the Collector M’f Plowman bring in the Secretaries of the revenue of the Town and place them before his Majesties and the Collector’s revenue both by receipts and disbursements together with his Commission and Instructions and to remain till he hath given an exact account thereof."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 578-59.

Lieut.-Gov. Murray, and the council of the province, write from the fort in New York to the lords of trade that the inhabitants of Boston have imprisoned Andrews, and several of his council, officers, etc. There is rebellion in Suffolk, Queens, and Westchester Counties. Armed militia have approached as far as Jamaica "in order if they could to make themselves Masters of this City" and fort. Alarming rumours are heard of war with France, "which occasioned a resolution to be made for the new fortifying of this City since all the former [fortifications] . . . are suffered to fall to ruine, if not for some part demolished "But how to raise any money for the accomplishing of any such fortifications no way could be found to resolve us therein as our condition is now." The civil magistrates and military officers of the city have convened, and by their advice it is ordered that all the revenue arising from the customs, excise, and weigh-house be applied toward defraying the expense of fortifications. Plowman’s accounts are being examined. Judges appointed for this circuit.

Nicholas Bayard is said to have been aed to the city and province of New York to be annexed "to that of Boston," and "if it had continued would have occasioned the total ruin of the inhabitants of said Province."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 574-76.

Certain inhabitants petition the “General Meeting” that “the line for fortifying the said City” be not run “through or before their Lotts of Grounds;” but at the next meeting, May 18, there being the rumour of war and the invasion of the French, it was ordered “that the fortifications for this City be laid according to the ancient bounds,” as recently ordered.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 274-76.

Jacob Leisler begins to make his influence felt in the public affairs of the city and province. Col. Nicholas Bayard’s narrative of what occurred this year (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 617) alleged that, while the work on the fortifications was begun with vigour and was soon perfected, it was obstructed by “many discordis and dissensions promoued by the ill constrivances of Jacob Leisler and his associatists.” Both in convention and elsewhere, they were endeavouring “to stir up the minds of the people to sedition and rebellion agst the established Authority, and to destroy the Revenue, Uppon hopes thereby to be exalted, and reipe [ripe] some particular benefit.”

Leisler, however, at a ship in town mentioned the matter of wine on which he refused to pay customs, and “enticed others to do the same.” Another narrative (attributed to Bayard) states that the duty on this cargo amounted to more than £100. Leisler contended that the collector (Plowman), being a Papist, was not qualified to act for the Prince of Orange, denying that he had legal title to receive customs. Bayard, however, questioned the sincerity of Leisler’s refusal to pay. He estimated that it was for his own private interest, and professed his detailed story of the events which followed with the comment, “let the impartial judge.”—Ibid., III: 667-68; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 332.

To aid the reader in examining the career and studying the character of Jacob Leisler, the following brief summary of his earlier useful work will be given. He was an exiled Protestant German who drifted from the Rhine countries into Holland . . . the son of a clergyman driven by persecution from the Palatinate to Frankfort-on-the-Main.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 184. His name first appears, in records relating to the province of New Netherland, as “Jacob Leisler the Frankfort,” in a shipping list of soldiers who embarked April 27, 1660, for New Amsterdam.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 37. He was then in debt even for his musket (Van Rensselaer, op. cit. II: 184); but he soon began to lay the foundations of an ample fortune. Court records of Jan. 1 (52) and 16, 1665, show him a successful trader in tobacco and other goods at Wholesale.—Min. of Orph. Court, III: 47-49; Rec. N. Am., IV: 180. On March 18, 1665, he was married to Elseje Tymens, a step-daughter of Guvert Lockerman, a niece of Annetje, and widow of Peter Cornelissen Van derveer, merchant.—Marriages in Ref. Dutc. Ch., 28; Van Rensselaer, op. cit., II: 185; Manuscript Collections, V: 778, 777. For an account of Leisler’s real estate holdings, part of which he acquired by this marriage, see Castello Plan, II: 278, 284.

A curious domestic incident stands out in the records of that time and illustrates his manner of living, and his stubborn will. A maid was discharged under the refusal of her wage (100 guilders in seaweed and four beavers). He answered that, as she had consumed “almost a bottle of preserved strawberries, also biscuit of his,” as well as received visits from two men, who climbed over the wall while he was at church with his wife, he wanted nothing more to do with her. She entered a general denial, and reported that the children had eaten the strawberries. The court ordered him to pay a quarter’s wages according to agreement. At the end of a week, the marshal was required to execute the order.—Rec. N. Am., V: 77-78, 84.

When it became necessary to fortify the town, Leisler subscribed, on Feb. 24, 1664, 250 £ toward this object.—Rec. N. Am., V: 30. He was one of the many signers of the successful remonstrance addressed to Stuyvesant and his council, in the summer of 1664, in which they pictured the expected destruction by the English of the town and its inhabitants, and pleaded that the generous terms of capitulation offered by the foe might be accepted.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 248. In October of that year, he took the oath of allegiance to the government of the Duke of York.—Ibid., III: 74-76.

The next year, he contributed 2 £ toward quartering soldiers (Rec. N. Am., V: 211); and, a few years later, he subscribed 50 guineas in “Good’s Day” in Boston toward the repair of Fort James.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 2.

Leisler’s name often appeared in court records, as plaintiff, defendant, or otherwise, revealing his enterprise and responsibility. On April 22, 1664, a litigant pleaded that he had paid a debt by drawing upon Leisler to the amount of 212 guilders.—Rec. N. Am., V: 47. That his judgment and fairness in business were greatly respected is indicated by the many times, during those years, that he was made referee or arbitrator by the courts in suits at law. For example, on July 25, 1665, he was appointed a referee to inspect tobacco.—Ibid., V: 281-82. For other occasions of the kind, see Rec. N. Am., VII: 12, 162, 246, 250, 276, 401, 493; VII: 25; Coun. Min., 17. Between 1667 and 1674, besides doing ordinary duties as judge, (Rec. N. Am., VI: 103, 242, 247), he was one of a committee, on Jan. 7/17, 1674 (q.v.), to render a report on amounts due to workmen at the fort.—Coun. Hist. MSS., Eng., 21.

He was equally faithful as a charitable contributor (Feb. 7, 1667) 12 beavers toward the maintenance of one of the Dutch ministers (Rec. N. Am., VI: 58); and (June 5, 1670) serving as a deacon in the “Reformed Christian Church in New York” (Eccles. Rec., I: 611). Leisler’s leadership in opposing what he considered the heresy of Dominick of Rensselaer (Sept. 15, 1667) was significant of his intensely religious nature, inherited from his father; and significant also of the fanatical role he was later to play so prominently in 1689-94.

The importation of a ship-load of vines indicates that Leisler was one of the heaviest traders in the province, where, that as early as 1673, he was making large shipments of tobacco, the commodity in which, apparently, he then chiefly dealt. On Oct. 31 of that year, he was defendant in a suit in which the plaintiffs demanded "2000 lbs. of tobacco for freight of 25 hogsheads of tobacco from Virginia, according to charter party." (Rec. N. A., VII: 16, 18, 19); while, on Dec. 12, he was required to pay the "dead freight" on 25 hogsheads of tobacco, which had not been shipped from Maryland by Lesler's factor as agreed (ibid., VII: 32).

Bedell He was chosen to a representative in 1662, on a commission to make a general assessment upon the "most affluent inhabitants," whose capital was estimated to exceed 1,000 guilders or "wampum value."—N. Y. Col. Doc., I: 65. Their report en Feb. 19, 1674, presented a list of such inhabitants and the amount of their personal wealth. The assessment of 15,000 lbs. was one of the richest meths of his time in New Orange. Only six inhabitants were wealthier. These were Fredericke Phillipes (sometimes spelled "Philippen" or "Flipsen"), 80,000 lbs.; Cornelis Steenwyck, 50,000 lbs.; Nicholas de Meyer, 10,000 lbs.; Oloff Steevensen was Cornelis, 15,000 lbs.; Jeronimus Ebbing, 50,000 lbs.; and Cornelis van Ruyven, 15,000 lbs. Johannes de Peyster had the same capital as Lesler.—Ibid., I: 699—700.

He continued to fulfill the usual obligations of citizen and man of business. We find his name in the municipal tax list of Nov. 10, 1676, which reveals the fact that only Fredericke Phillipes and Cornelis Steenwyck had been assessed that year; and greatness tended to M. C. C., I: 32. The city was his debtor on Feb. 6, 1677, to the amount of 356 lbs. "in wampum."—Ibid., I: 45; and he paid the small real estate tax exacted on July 24, 1677, (Ibid., I: 50. 52).

His trip to Europe in the summer of 1675, in his own vessel, where he was detained and captured by the Turks but paid his own ransom, turned the benevolence of the citizens of New York to pay for the release of his fellow sufferers.—See Aug. 17, 1675. On Sept. 15, 1683, he was appointed by Dongan a member of an admiralty court to inquire into any pirates or feloues committed by Capt. Nicholas Clough of the ship "Camelio" of London, its officers and men.—

Public and business obligations of considerable importance were fully performed in the succeeding years; it does not appear that he sought these special public duties, which became matters of formal record only after he was chosen to the city council. He was commissioned captain of militia Sept. 10, 1683.—Ibid., 311.
He was appointed a justice of the peace of New York Oct. 13, 1687.—Col. Coun. Min., 45. He was empowered in 1686 by the inhabitants of Suffolk County, L. I., to represent them in a petition to Gov. Dongan regarding their commercial rights and trade practices.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 124, 164. On Sept. 26, 1689 (p. 70), he purchased, as agent employed by Huguenots about to come from England, land in New Rochelle.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 568. Dongan appointed him, Sept. 21, 1688, as one of several experts to fix damages sustained by Fredericke Phillipes (the least of which amounted to 46 guilders a member of the council), with his partners, "in the case of the ship "Bever."—Col. Hist.

MSS., Eng., 159. The records of a contested case, in Nov., 1687, show Lesler concerned in a transaction in salt (ibid., 172); and, in the same month, the governor's council granted him permission "to enter a wreck." (Col. Coun. Min., 56). One of his various enter-pri ses was said to be "searching the depths of the sea for treasure from the wrecks of plate ships."—Mon. Coun. Coun. (869), 731.

Address before the N. Y. Hist. Soc., Nov. 22, 1884.

One of the most saddest events of the unhappy times of Bowerness in the hands of Andros in Boston. Nicholson is required to call the council together and "intimate to them the unjust proceedings of the people in Boston by keeping his Excellency prisoner and the other gentlemen upon frivolous pretenses off their own houses without due reason." They are to "send Coll. Hamilton and Coll. Smith to Boston in conjunction with his excellency and the other gentlemen to be att liberty that they may come amongst you." They are to "take special care to keep Albany in quiet and eavour not to let the Indians know that his Excellency is prisoner," and they are to send a sloop to Pemaquid to receive Major Leisler.—Address before the N. Y. Hist. Soc., Nov. 22, 1884.

Several of these men are said to have been deserters from the British army, and it was said that the "king's Barke should be repaired if occasion should be

May II. S. Nicholson is overboard to say that "if they should any manner displease him he would set ye town a fire."—Ibid. This alleged threat was one of the principal reasons why Leisler and his followers seized the fort on May 31 (p. 205). The circumstances were described by Henry Cupyer in an affidavit on June 10.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1863), 292-93.

31 The Leisler rebellion that overthrew the government at New York, begins. At a meeting of the council, Lieut.-Gov. Nicholson informs them "that most part off the City's militia where in rebellion, That noe comrds, either from him selfe or their Coll. ware in any ways regarded nor obeyed, That he was Credibly informed some of the-officers were to marche off it, and therefore desired the Mayor to convene this afternoone at the City hall the Court of Mayor Aldermen Comon Council and all the military officers of this City for to advice with them off this matter off great moment."—Couns. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1863), 26.

At a meeting of all the magistrates and officers at the town hall, Nicholson informs them "that divers of the Inhabitants were very factious and rebellious." Several of the magistrates, and all the others, "protested against such people," declaring "they would with all their power stand up for the good of the Government and Country."—Ibid. The latter was a war in rebellion, that they would obey neither him or their colonel, and that some of the officers were "the instigators and inflamers" of it.—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 593.

Hendrick Cupyer, who had the watch in the fort with half a company of soldiers, Captain Nicholson would not suffer him to sett a sentinel at the Sally Port, and, when he told Capt. Nicholson of it, that he was threatened and his Corporal to be pistalled and that Capt. Nicholson would fire the Town" (see May 30). This Nicholson denied, and explained the circumstances as they occurred. What he had said to Cupyer was: "I rather would see the Towne on fire than to be commanded by you." This opened a feud between Cupyer and Nicholson, in which Cupyer's commission as lieutenant was taken from him. Cupyer's captain, Abraham de Peyster, also had a controversy with Nicholson. Van Cortlandt, in describing later to Anders the events of the day, said—"We heard the drums beat and the Towne fell of noise, and seeing the people rise and run together in armes Mr. Phillips and I went to Jacob Leyshaer's doore where the people mett and endeavoured to ally them but in vain, they marched to the fltore where Henry Cupyer received them, in 1/2 hour's time the fltore was full of men armed and iraged, no word could be heard but they were sold, betrayed and to be murdered, it was time to look for themselves." Nicholson then, on demand, gave up the keys of the fort. For details see N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 593-94.

"The Soldiers under Col. Bayard, in regard to Nicholson's surrender of the keys: \"This was indeed an important decision, for it left the mutineers to their own course, men who were not simply civilians, but who were enrolled and in service as militia and were thus properly subject to military discipline. It sealed the fate of the Andros regime in New York as effectively as did the Boston uprising of April 19 in New England.\" Another account of the events of the day is given in the minutes of the \"General Meeting\": \"The Inhabitants of New York ryseing this afternoone have taken possession of the Fort, disarm the soldiery, and came with a squadron armed in Court demanding the keys of the Garrison and with force and would and have them they forced Capt. Lodwick to come into the Towne hall and came there armed demanding the keys againe and would have them delivered to Capt? Lodwick, the Lievit? Governor seeing himself forced asked the advice of this Board what to doe in this connted busine.

\"This Board for to hinder and prevent bloodshed and further mischiefe and for endeavouring to quiet in the minds of the people think it best considering they being forced to itt to let them have the keys.\" In considering the problem of ways and means to reduce this pestle from their raisings, etc., the Board were of opinion that there is noe way to reduce them by force, and that \"they be lett alone for some time.\" It is thought best, however, to remove the money from the fort to the house of Frederick Phillips.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1863), 288.

Still another account of the revolution is given by the council of New York in a letter to the Earl of Shrewsbury on June 10—"Fort James was seized by the Rable whilst the Lieutenant Govr and Council with all the Civill Majestatures and Military officers except Capt. Leisler were within the City Hall to consult w't might be advisable tending to the common safety of the City and alllaying of all Uproar and Rebellion."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 585.

A statement in writing, made on May 31, evidently prepared (but not signed) by Leisler, gives his reasons for taking the fort. It is entitled \"A Declaration of the Justifiable and Necesssity of the late Insolents Soldiers Belonging under the Several Companies of the Train Band of New York.\" Affidavits taken the latter part of February, 1691, brought out other details of the events of May 31 and the days that followed. These are printed in the Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 246-53.

From this time until Aug. 1691, there was no recognised government in New Jersey, on account of conflicting claims.—Bassett, op. cit., II: 32.

Although William and Mary have not yet been \"proclaimed amongst us, no ships as yet being arrived to us from England,\" the militia of New York prepare an address to the new king and queen, on hearing from Barbadoes of their being proclaimed. This address expresses joy over \"our deliverance from Tyranny, popery and slavery.\" It states that the government here has been lately mostly under Papists, who have \"in a most arbitrary way subverted our ancient privileges making us in effect slaves to their will contrary to law.\" This was chiefly affected by themselves, they are known enemies to our Religion and liberty.\" The militia states that they have taken possession of the fort in this city, \"dismaying some few papists therein and do keep and guard fort against all your Majesties enemies whatsoever until such time your Majesty's Royal will shall be further known, wholly submitting ourselves to your Majestyes pleasure therein,\" etc. The address further states that \"Our late Governor Sir Edmand Andross exercised \"a most arbitrary commission procured from the late King, most in command over us being babbet papists.\" It also states that \"Our Lieut. Govr Capt. Phillips, as a proper man, and contrary both to his promises and pretences, countenancing the Popish party, denying toexclude both Officers in the custom house and Soldiery in the fort, being most Papists, contrary to the known laws of England,\" etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 583-584.

Leisler publishes a proclamation expressing his intention to preserve the Protestant religion and \"the fort of this City, to the end that we may avoid and prevent the rash judgment of the world, in so just a design.\" He declares that on \"the safe arryell of the ships that we expect every day from his royl Highness the prince of Orange with orders for the government of this country,\" etc., he will \"execute the said orders punctually.\"—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 3-4. See also Winor, op. cit., V: 189, 190.

Information is brought to Nicholson and his council that four or five ships are seen in the bay. \"Capt. Jacob Leisler coming in the fltore gave the sign of an arm by firing off guns and beat of drum and garrison fired a gun and \"exclaimed Capt. Lodwick to \"act in this conjuncture by virtue of his commission as Collonel of the Regiment and give suitable orders.\" He had at first declined to appear in arms except as a private soldier, \"since his comands as well by officers and soldiers had been soe often disobeyed and the government not being to state to support his commiss whilst the fort was detained from the Letten1 governor by force.\"—Couns. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1865), 269-69.

Arm'd men board a vessel from Barbadoes off Coney Island, and seize one John Dischington. They bring him before Leisler at the fort, and take newspapers from him, including a London Gazette of Feb. 14-15, 1689, containing the proclamation of William and Mary as king and queen. Dischington has difficulty in recovering them, but as soon as possible delivers them to \"his Honour the Letten1 Gou vernor.\"—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 586.

Referring to the events of this day, Van Cortlandt wrote to Anders (on July 9): \"Capt. Nicholson sent for Mr. Bayard and me at the house of Mr. Phillips where he lodged, saying that a message was sent by Capt. Lodwck, that an express was come from Long Island reporting that 4 to 5 Shhips were seen within Sandy Hook. We sent and I went my bard through all the Towne but could not find the man that brought said news. Immediately Capt Leyshaer gave the alarm which created such a tumult that some were ready to fall upon us thinking really that the French ships came. \"The people all mett before the fltore, would not obey their Officers, left them and ran in the fltore to Jacob Leyshaer.\"—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 594.
Col. Bayard relates to the council how most of the soldiers of four companies, while "in arms at the place off Parade before the fort," the day before, had disbanded commands, had rebelled, and gone "to the fort to side with Capt. Layster [Leisler] and committed insufferable innsence." He also complains that Leisler, meeting him in the custom-house, used "filthy and scurrilous expressions" to him, calling him "a. Coll. [colored] off a tipographical person." The council would see him hanged," etc.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 369.

Leisler writes to "the Governor and Committee of Safety at Boston," in part as follows:

... The Lievt. Governor Nicholls is departed last night without taking leave. It is believed the Custom House, Capt. Duggan, who has been in the bay this this sixteen days. ... I have made one full inventory of the fort with guns and ammunitio, and found of 33 great guns but fifteen fit for use of 50 barrel powder was but one that could goe 7 degrees ... the fort is guarded by five companies two watchs 15 company per night, and the Capt whose watch is for that tyme Capt of the fort, the Collector in the Custom house is a rank pirate, I cannot get the other Captains to resolve to turne him out but [he] acts still as before. ... 0. Edmund Andros & his wicked crew have carried all the Records out of this country to Boston," etc.—Doc. Hist., N. Y. (4to ed.), III., 5, citing a "Vol. in Sec's Office, endorsed, Papers etc., in Leisler's time."

6 The council deems it "most safe for the Leften. Governor to depart for England by the first ship, for to give an account of the desperate and deplorable state of the government, and to pray for some assistance." It resolves, etc., "that the Court of Mayor, Aldermen and Comon Council be convened to and to desire their opinions whether it be not advisable to send to the several Captains off the City, or such off them as have encouraged the rebellion of the people, and to protest against them for all the losses, damages, and blood-sheds that shall or may arise by occasion of said rebellion."

Particular reference is made to several offenses already committed, such as "For the detaining off the Fort James from the L. Governor," etc. The court of the mayor, etc., was convened accordingly.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 370-71.

This general meeting, consisting only of the lieutenant-governor, the council, and aldermen, but not the common councilmen, met at the house of Mayor Van Cortlandt. They complained of the "many Insolencies the people in the fort committed," and Nicholson directed two of the aldermen to ask the officers (captains of militia) to come to the meeting, but none of them would come.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III., 595. Leisler's reply to this summons was that "he would not come neither to the Governo Council Mayor or Aldmen nor had not anything more to doe with them." The board resolved that a protest be drawn against all the captains, except that of the 4th company, and blood-sheds that shall or may arise by occasion of said rebellion. Particular reference is made to several offenses already committed, such as "For the detaining off the Fort James from the L. Governor," etc. The court of the mayor, etc., was convened accordingly.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 370-71.

8 The committee of safety appoints Leisler captain of the fort, "till orders shall come from their Majesties." He is promised aid, when needed and demanded by him, "from the city and county to suppress any forth Fiction & prevent all disorders."—Doc. Hist., N. Y. (4to ed.), II., 70.

10 The lieutenant-governor and council resolve that "the three gentlemen off the Counsellor dispose off the Kings Barcke, woodboat and pine, either by sale or hire as they shall see cause since the same ley upon decay."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 271.

The council of New York writes to the Earl of Shrewsbury expressing delight on learning from Barbadoes and Boston of the Prince and Princess of Orange being proclaimed king and queen of England. They state that "by the means and ill conivances of some disaffected and dangerous persons all manner of Government is totally overthrown here," as in Boston, "whereby the state of this City (who depends wholly on Trade) is become very desperate, no person being safe either in Person or Estate which undoubtedly will cause it utter Ruin unless prevented by sending some succours." For on the 31st day of May last [he] the fort James was seized." The letter of the council continues: "And since we are assured sufficiently that although Orders from his now Maj. should arrive for the continuing of the persons formerly entrusted in the Government that no such orders would be obeyed."

"We have therefore thought it advisable that the Lieut. Governor Capt. Francis Nicholson doe depart by the first ship for England to render an account of the present deplorable state of affairs here, most humbly praying that his Maj. will be graciously pleased to order His Province and City & County unto speedye Relief from the present exigency & necessity requires." The letter is signed by "Fred. Flyepe," "St. Courtlandt," and "N. Bayard."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III., 585-86.

Nicholson leaves secretly for "the Netherlands," and there meets Dougan, who has gone to sea but been forced to return by rough weather. Nicholson, unable to persuade any one of three ship-owners or captains to accept him as a passenger, bought an interest in a brigantine and cargo, and so sailed on June 24. Van Cortlandt, in relating the event on July 9 to Andros, explained: "He doth not doute but [he] will goe over here for they have severall times threaten to fetch him back and put him, firedrick Phillips, M'Bayrd & me in prison."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III., 595.

Leisler changes the name of Fort James to Fort William, as appears by a letter of this date which he wrote to Major Nathan Gold.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II. 4. This name was retained until the coming of Slaughter.—See March 24, 1691.

Leisler writes to "the Governor of Boston" from "fort wms":—"I am daily working in the fort with sixteen carpenters & twenty men which I shall continuill till it is truly in good posture of defense, I am digging up the old wall [well] which was fill'd up by Coll. dongan I intend to stockade the fort round and hope within three weeks if it please God to have it compleat," etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II., 5. Regarding the well, see Nov. 15, 1688; Aug. 5, 1689.

Leisler puts Peter Delaney and George Brewster in charge of the custom-house, and repairing them, etc. He appoints to secure the fort at New York on behof of King William and Queen Mary.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III., 596, 608, 609. See also, Dec. 11.

Major Nathan Gold (or Gould) and Captain James Fitch, delegates from the "Court" of Connecticut to Leisler, arrive at the fort. Having "some printed papers of news," they give them to Leisler, who, "finding amongst them a printed Proclamation to proclaim King William and Queen Mary King and Queen over England & Ireland," requests "the use of that paper for one hour or two," and has "the drum beaten and the King and Queen proclaimed in the forenoon."—From Stephen van Cortlandt's narrative of July 9 to Andros, N. Y. Col. Docs., III., 595.

Of this day's events, Van Cortlandt further said: "About 3 O Clock they sent for me to be at my house. I went home there, the 2 Harbor Gentlemen and our Capt's came with their Hallablers, being set down Leysler asked me whether I would not proclaim the King and Queen, I told him it was done already. He answered if I would not do it he would do it at the Town Hall, I told him he might doe what he pleased: They fell out CalM'd me a Papist, or Popishly affected, and several abusive words in my house: At last Major Gold's Capt. Cawood came to the Town Hall where they should proclaim their Matjes. I told them I would acquaint the Aldermen with it which they approved off, and gave one hour time, I sent for the Aldermen, who came and resolved that we would wait upon them. When they came at the Town hall Leysler comes and would have me proclaime the King. I answered, He that read it before the fort can read it here, I have no clarkes: Upon which he falls into a rage saying if it was to sett up a Tyrannical King, a Prince of Wales, then he would doe it, Yo'a a Traitour, a Papist, etc. and made the people just to knock me in the head. Others said, 'Tis hold of that Regue, So I was forc to answer for myself, saying, that Leysler told a false untrue, I did not hinder the reading or proclaiming of their Matjes etc. These 2 Gent. would not lett me goe, but kept me fast, and persuade me to go along to the fort, which I did: Coming in the fort they told me all this City & Province must go along to the Town Hall where the Sheriff, took his sword and abused him badly. They took Alderman Crundell and turned him out the fort. After that M'r French and M't John Smith. They sent and fetched Mr. Middleton's sword from his side at M't Vettes. I expected the same, Went through the people out the fort, Going out, one of them [of Gable?] dont want you here," etc. See also May 15, 1690. Another proclamation of William and Mary was made by Leisler on Dec. 10 (p. 24).

Mayor Van Cortlandt is given by William Merritt a printed proclamation from William and Mary, dated Feb. 14, 1699, containing in office all Protestant officers, if there were sheriffs, justices, collectors, etc. He sends for the aldermen and common council; they meet at the town hall, and resolve to publish this proclamation. When published it greatly angers the Leislerians. —N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 534.

The aldermen and common council, meeting with the mayor at his house, resolve that under the existing circumstances Matthew Plowman desist from acting further as collector of customs. They appoint commissioners of customs, with prescribed terms for paying over their commissions to them. They go to the customs-house; and soon Leisler enters with armed men, who pull them out, "several cutting at Coll Bayard while the crowd being so thick cut only his bate and he escaped into the house of Peter De La Noy where he was all night. They watched the house and swore they would kill him. Afterwards he got out the house. They searched for him, but he went for Albany" (June 25). —Van Cortlandt's letter to Andros, N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 596. For Bayard's own Journal of what transpired from June 11 to July 5, see ibid., III: 599-604; see also 617.

26 The two military delegates from Hartford (see June 22) write a communication to Leisler while they are still at the fort, and to other captains who have been active with him in taking the fort "for His Majesties service," giving the following facts and advice: They find the fort much out of repair, most of the great guns unfit for service, very few platforms "for guns to play," powder unfit for service; it was "in the stock of a man in the Country." They have gone from the fort to join Dongan and other Papists about seven leagues from the city. They therefore advise Leisler to continue in the fort and secure this and other fortifications, and make repairs. They also advise that "no Papist be suffered to come into the fort, lest they should continue providing the State with danger." —N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 589-90.

"Leisler had the letter in the King's arms standing before the fort altered in the letter W." —N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 604.

Stephen van Cortlandt, writing to Andros an account of what has transpired since the preceding October, states that a committee of safety has been appointed (at some time after July 2), whose New York City members are Peter Delanoy (in charge of the custom-house) and Samuel Edwall. They have raised 60 men, with Jacob Leisler as captain, and William Churchill as lieutenant. This committee opens all letters. Van Cortlandt further states: "I had thick planc provided for the platforms and Carriages, and the fort being taken had carried them by Phillip Smith's house, but Leyler caused them to be brought to the fort." —Van Cortlandt's letter to Andros, N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 597.

10 In a letter to William Jones of New Haven, Leisler writes, in hardly intelligible English, an account of recent happenings in New York. It is imbued, as usual, with distrust and fear of so-called "Papists," and recounts his efforts to guard against them, and to carry on the government for William and Mary. He has a carpenter at work to repair the fort, but "his work little appears in so far out of repair." He hopes to have some of the Papists disarmed within two days, and "those Idols destroyed which we hear are daily still worshipped." —Dec. Hlst. N.Y. (410 ed.), II: 5.

An inventory of the books and papers in the secretary's office is ordered by the committee of safety. —Cal. Hist. MSS, Eng., 174.

24 An address of the council at Whitehall, London, to proclaim William and Mary in New York. It is addressed "To our loving friends Francis Nicholson Esq and their Maj's Lieut Governr and Commander in Chief of the Province of New York. And in his absence to such as for the time being take care for preserving the Peace & administering all laws in virtue of their Majesties of New York, America." —N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 605. It was this order, so addressed, which, when it came into Leisler's hands, on Dec. 8, gave him the power of chief executive in the government of the province; but for so seizing the government and carrying it on with fanatical zeal, he was imprisoned and executed. —Dec. 13, 1689; March 16, April 15, 1691.

The king, having received letters from Nicholson and others containing reports of Nicholson's faithful services, authorities and others, orders him to take upon himself "the Government of the said Province," calling to his assistance and protection the English inhabitants, or as many as he shall think fit. —ibid., III: 606.

The king's letter of July 30, signed also by Nottingham, was sold by Henkle, Phila. (Item no. 786), Oct. 22, 1699.

At the quarterly session of the court of general sessions, the record shows the following variety of cases appearing in succession: —the proving of a will, the appraisement of an estate, the report of inquisitions into two deaths by drowning, and the sentencing of a thief to the whipping-post. —General Sessions of the Peace, Vo I. Aug., 1699. In general, however, cases appear to have been reserved for this court when the royal authority was in question, the plaintiff appearing as "Dom Rex." One such case is printed by Peterson & Edwards in N. Y. as an 18th Century, Municipality, app. p. 409.

Col. Nicholas Bayard, who is still in Albany (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 610), writes to Capt. Nicholson: "It is greatly feared if no sudden orders or reliefe arrives from His Majesty that some great mischief will befall, for the abuses and threatsings of Leisler and his rabble encrease daily to improvin, plunder and massacre those who will not acquiesce, although they do submit to their illegal proceeding." —N. Y. Govt. Docs., II: 611.

Van Cortlandt, writing to Capt. Nicholson, states that Leisler, Churchill, and Stoll have made a new well, using the planks provided by Van Cortlandt and Nicholson; they have also made the platforms and carriages just as Nicholson had ordered; and "are prepared to stacke & stacke the great guns, formerly—and have made a battery behind the fort upon the flat rock to the westward." One Mr. Willson, who had been sent by Leisler to proclaim the king and queen to New Jersey, fell out of a canoe at Staten Island and was drowned; he was "burried in a great state, the whole town invited. Every man and woman gowes, all ships and vessels their flagges & halfe staff, firing all when he was carried to the grave. The Kings flagg at the fort halfe staff, all the men upon the Fort in arms, the Drums beating mournfully the guns firing continuously till he was in the grave. his death is much lamented by them, as being a man that stood up for the liberty of the people and protestant Religion." Another account of the drowning gives the name as "Mr. Cox." —N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 609, 617.

Continuing, regarding the conduct of Leisler, Van Cortlandt explains: "Their threats, insolencies, abuses, falsities and lies unlawfull actions and mischieves are so many and unsummerable that if noe speedy reliefe [sic] and orders doe come from England many of the Inhabitants will leave the city and goe to live in the country, for fear of life and Estate, for they imprison whom they please, and take out of prison those that are there for debt, they take peoples goods for no other cause than they have paid their debts; if they come with great numbers and fetch it out of the Justices house by force, and doe what they please, that their Capt. can no more Rule them—It troubles them that they did not put you in prison [i.e., Lieut.-Gov. Nicholson] and seized upon your papers, they there would have found the reason, for you are a papist and so is D'h Lines and have severall witnesses as they say against you both." —N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 609-10.

In a letter to Gov. Treat of Connecticut, Leisler reports the following preparations for defence: He has used "all the diligence imaginable" to fortify and repair the fort. The "wall" (well) is completed (see Aug. 5), and there are seven feet of "very good water," which is "16 feet deep." All the platforms are recovered, and all the guns substantially mounted. The powder-house will be ready on this date, and the "pouder" (possibly error for platform) "is made good and elevates the engine from 13 to 26 degrees." There are 6,000 lbs. of the king's powder in the fort, and 100 lbs. of the best spoiled powder for salutations. About 100 arms are "well fixed." He states that "there was a battery under the fort, which being quite demolisht and ruined in place of which I am making an halfe moose of 100 foot over grass which defends the landing of both rivers & also the coming in, and it is defended easily by the fort." Stockades and sod are being obtained "to stockaded & breastwork the fort according to your advice for which I am obliged & hope within fourteen days if it please God to compleat all . . ."

He also states that when Captain Cutler's company was at work at "the spurre," and wanted stone to finish it, they "resolved to pull down the pigeon house of Coll: dongane which was made of the stone see mising & went armed with collours & drums without 16th Aug. 1689 Capt: Leisler in a boat with 12 men, and 3 loads of stone, and "they left of & had done very little damage." They intended at the same time "to break some wall and stairs at Grahames house made of the same stones" (as those desired), but 56 loads were given for that. He states they are "complexed 53 men in the fort." - Doc. Hist. N. Y. 175. "The halfe moon battery to which he refers was situated within the enclosure of the present Battery Park, a little south of Battery Pl., on the line of Greenwich St. It is shown on the Miller Plan of 1695, Pl. 23-a, Vol. 1. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

"I was sent by Gov. Bradstreet, which Treat had sent him, and which gives information regarding the escape of Andros. He informs Treat that "we have had newes of his stope at Rhode Island about two days agoe." There has been expectation on the part of the "grandez" of seeing him in New York. The mayor and several others, he says, "are departed from hence, It is thought now to meet sir Edmund." - Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), II: 13-14

Capt. George McKenzie, in a letter to Nicholson, recounts his recent experiences with Leisler and his men. Having returned from Albany at 11 o'clock on the night of Aug. 11, McKenzie reported the skipper to set him ashore "above the wind mills" (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961), in order to save the letters he carried from being opened by Leisler's men. On the following day, he was ordered to appear at the fort, but refused to obey the summons without a proper warrant, whereupon, he was seized while walking "in the broad way," and taken to the fort. Questioned by Leisler, McKenzie denied being a Papist, or "Popishly affected," and declared that, "in all the six years" he had known New York, he had never "so much as out of curiosity looked into their [Catholic] Chappell." After a number of questions put to him, and answered, McKenzie was allowed to go. He reports to Nicholson that "Sir Edmund [Andros] got out of prison and escaped as far Rhod Island, but was there seiz'd on, and it is reported that Coll: Dongan is likewise kept prisoner, who went thither much about the same time with a design to sell Martin Vineyard, upon which, foolish and ridiculous reports were raised, viz: that they were to join together and with I know not how many men, to come to take the fort." - N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 612-14.

The committee of safety issues a commission to Capt. Leisler to be "Commander in Chief of the said Province to administer such Oaths to the people, to issue out such Warrants, and order such Matters as shall be necessary & requisite to be done for the preservation and protection of the peace, of the inhabitants taking all ways, seasonable advice with Militia and Civil Authority as Occasion shall require." - Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), II: 14-15.

Leisler writes to King William and Queen Mary a letter, which he sends "by the express harer Joost Stoll the Ensigne of Your Majesties fort," giving his account of events since the imprisonment of Andros in Boston. He accuses Nicholson of a design to "lye the tower," for which reason the captains seized the fort. He states that on June 22, when he proclaimed the king and queen, they had a "miraculous deliverance of a fire which had been kindled in three several places upon the Tertor of the Church in the fort 6000 lb powder being next under the same roof and suspected to be done by one Papist who had been there before and was discovered by one Neger," etc. He tells about the committees formed in the neighboring counties and in New York, the electing of himself, Captain Leisler, and others to "to your Majesties order," in authority which he has exercised from the first of July. He says: "I have caused to mend, and make most all the gun carriages, there being not above 8 or 10 able to make use of, all the rest were sunk upon their platforms, which I have caused all to be made new with thick wadding, and patching, and the better defended have caused one battery to be made at the River side at the west of the fort, where I have planted seven great guns—I am now mending the breast works and palisadings the fort round, and the well in the fort, which was filled up by Coll: Dongan is made new again and gives promise to Govr, the salutary work being quite rotten and ruined is renewed and in good condition . . . the city is fortified at the landside, with good palisades, and in several places there are guns—I have fifty men in the fort, which the country has promised to pay, and above that, the train bands, mounts every night with one company to the guard, so that we watch for our conservancy," etc. He states that Mayor Van Cortlandt has gone to Albany to join Col. Bayard. - N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 614-16.

A "List of the Papers delivered to Capt. Leisler, by the Ensign Mr. Joost Stol sent to England" has been translated from the original Dutch, and is printed in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Coll. (1688), 297-98.

The king, in a letter at Whitehall, declares his pleasure "that two Companies of Foot of sixty men in each Company besides Officers, be forthwith raised, for their Mat's service in New York, to be carried thither on bord the ship, which shall be appointed by the Right Honrible the Commissioners of the Admiralty, to carry the Governor of New York to that Government, and His Mat's further pleased to order that the said two companies be paid out of the Revenue here in England until the Government of New York be settled." It is ordered, also, by the king that £300 be paid to Henry Sloughter, the governor of New York, for buying presents to be given in the king's name to the Five Nations of Indians, bordering upon New York. - N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 645. See also Addenda, Sept. 16.

In a manuscript record of this date regarding Jacob Leisler, "In ye fort of New York," complaint is made against Andros; it tells of guns mounted at the fort, and compares the present with the earlier state under the Dutch government. - From a MS. volume in Mass. Hist. Soc., Person, Incl. The manuscript is of 1656-1720.

One Nicholas Brown signs an affidavit that in July or August, 1696, he saw Nicholson exercising his devotions as a Papist. - Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), II: 17. On Sept. 26, two workmen named Meyers made an affidavit before Leisler that, on orders from Nicholson, they helped to build a Roman Catholic priest, John Smith, in the "Images erected by Colé Thomas Dongan in the fort" to "a better room in the fort," where they were ordered "to erect all things" as the priest directed. This was after the departure of Andros, when it was supposed Nicholson "would defend and establish the true Religion." - Ibid., II: 28.

Nothingham writes to the lord president regarding the new governor for New York. - See Addenda; and Sept. 2, supra.

John Pell, lord of the manor of Pelham, conveys to Jacob Leisler a tract of land constituting the present township of New Rochelle. This is for a consideration of £1,675 5s. sterling. The tract is described as "lying and being within said manor of Pelham, containing six thousand acres of land, and also one hundred acres of land more, which the said John Pell and Rachel, his wife, do freely give and grant for the French church erected, or to be erected," etc. - Scharf, Hist. of Westchester Co., II: 27. This was in trust for the Huguenot Governor of New Rochelle, in large numbers from England. - Men. Com. Coun. (1862), 752.

In a letter written by Col. Bayard from Albany, it is stated, as the reason why Andros was appointed in Dongan's place, that: "Millibourn arriving in New York from Holland it was reported, that the late King James had sold this country to the French, and because Governor Dongan would not be such an ill person as to deliver it he was removed and Andros put in his place with me and some others had undertaken to surrender it unto their power, but this lye as all the rest having no root suddenly vanished so they are daily inventing new ones to keep up the people in their madness but it will not continue." - N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 621.

An affidavit is entered among the records of the committee of safety showing, by various incidents, the fear which the people of New York and vicinity have of the Papists. - Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), II: 17-18.

By unusual effort, Leisler succeeds in procuring the election of his son-in-law, Robert Walters, as alderman of the South Ward. - N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 674; M. C. C., II: 204.

At a common council held at the city hall, new aldermen, assistants, and constables are selected from all the wards, Peter Delanoy being continued as city treurer. - M. C. C., II. The two meetings of the old board were held, on Oct. 5 and 7, at the house of Alderman William Muzzett, with Mayor Van Cortlandt presiding. - Ibid., II: 205, 206. On Oct. 14 (r. v.), a new city government, under Leisler and his followers, began.

Buckmaster was an inholler, and these payments for services, etc., indicate the variety of interest, public and private, centring in the tavern. On the same date a payment is made to the "for two Sessions Expenses at ye house of Joho Party."—Ibid. Buckmaster’s house was appointed in 1694, as the place for leasing the dock (ibid., I: 358), at which time he was still an inholler.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (40 ed.), II: 237-38.

10. Col. Bayard, writing to Andros, who is still a prisoner, states: "Leisler took yesterday [Oct. 7] at his seat in Ye Gov’t pewe at Church, with a large carpet before him. . . . Henry Cuyler yd betrayed ye Fort, a silly fool and coward is made Major of ye Regiment and Gorit ye Mason [Gerrit Duyckingh] Capt. in his room. 14. Leisler, as commander-in-chief (he did not act as lieutenant-governor), this week also, as the act of the city’s affairs as representative of Protestant freemen, and procures the election by popular vote of Peter Delanoy as mayor, Joannes Johnson as sheriff, and Abraham Gouverneur as clerk. His proclamation, "At Fort William yd 14 oct 1689 & in yd 1st Year of their Majt’s Reigne [sic] read." Wherein yd Comitee of Safety have appointed Me to Confrime ye Civil magistrates & officers for yd City & County of New York chosen by ye Protestant freemen of Sd City & County of NYork According to Returns Made by virtue Whereof I do hereby accordingly Confrime Peter De La Noy to be mayor Joannes Johnson Sheriff & Abraham Gouverneur town Clerk for Sd City & County of New York to Continue in their Sd Station according to ye true intent & meaning of yd act of Said Comitee. [The aldermen and assistants are also confirmed by name.]

Therefore are all Inhabitants hereby required to give due obedience to yd Magistrates & officers & are to acknowledge the same accordingly."—M.C.C., I: 206-07. Delanoy’s commission as mayor is dated Dec. 11, 1689.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 188.

Up to this time, the mayor had been appointed by the provincial governor and council. After the Leisler régime, up to the Revolution, the mayors were appointed by the corporation, until 1821, the appointment was by the governor of the state; after which, until 1834, it was by the common council. For a brief sketch of the life of Peter Delanoy, see Man. Com. Coun (1833), 390.

At the first meeting of the common council under Delanoy, it is ordered "that ye late Mayor Stephen van Cortlandt be employed with ye other Commanders in Chief to make an inquiry into ye high Sheriff of ye City Charter as also ye City seals with all other Papers & Books wch may be in his Custody Belonging to Sd City & County."—M.C.C., I: 208. There evidently was no response, for a more peremptory order was sent on Oct. 16. The high constable reported back that he delivered the order "to ye wife of m’s Cortlandt & that she did throw it away out yd doors."—Ibid.

At the next meeting of the common council, a complaint was drawn up "to Capt. Jacob Leisler yd Coahnd in chief," rectifying these occurrences, and asking "Protection in ye P’most . . . that ye yd M’s Cortlandt may Be Constrained to Pforome his duty."—Ibid., I: 209-10.

About this time, Mayor Van Cortlandt, to save his life, is forced to escape to Albany, where Col. Bayard is.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 645; see also 610. "With this, the last vestige of government as organized in the dominion of New England vanished."—Osgood, The Amer. Colonies (1907), III: 457.

A ship from Nevis (one of the islands of the Caribbean Sea) arrives at New York with "a parcel of negroes," some of whom have "ye small poxcs." The common council orders that the sick "Be Landed a Mile or thereabouts from this City," and permits no tradesmen who have been "by ye authors Chirurgions & attendants to the ship’s charge to get into ye City."

16. —M.C.C., I: 208-09. Smallpox is here first mentioned in city records.

Writing from Albany, Col. Bayard addresses an order to Capt. Abraham de Peyster and Capt. John de Bryuns, commanders of two companies of the train-bands in New York, which is to be communicated to the rest of the commissioned officers, commanding them immediately to "desist from any ways counselling aiding or abetting by resort to arms the said Jacob Leyseler and his associates," etc. Bayard explains in the instruction that he finds this step his present duty to the crown; that he is acting as one of the council and as colonel of the train-bands, under commissions which have not been vacated or superseded, and that Leisler has not "the least idea of authority" from the king and queen.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 628.

At about this time, the Present State of New English Affairs, the earliest precursor of the newspaper published in America, was issued in Boston by Samuel Green. See April 24, 1704, and Addenda.

The Leisler faction celebrates the birthday of the king "with bonfire & roasting one ox etc."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (40 ed.), II: 24-25.

"Gunpowder Treason Day" is celebrated by Leisler and his party "with bonfires & burning the pope."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (40 ed.), II: 25. The draft of a commission for Henry Slother, Esq., to be governor of New York, is approved by the king and council at Whitehall. It is ordered that the Earl of Shrewsbury, one of the king’s principal secretaries of state, "prepare a Warrant for His Majt’s Signature for passing the said Commission under the Great Seal."—N. Y. Col. Docs., see also Jan. 30, 1699; March 19, 1691. For his instructions, see Jan. 14, 1690.

Ensign John Stoll, agent for the committee of safety, having presented an address to the king and queen in London from the deputies and military officers at New York, on Nov. 9, submits a brief for the information of the Earl of Shrewsbury, who has been made commissioner to examine the condition of the affairs of New York. This brief is a list of declarations, testimony, proclamations, affidavits, etc. One of these is "a printed paper, entitled, An account of the proceeding at New York 1689, printed at Boston by Samuel Green 1689." Another is "An inventory of the fort of New York as it was found when the Trainbands took possession of it."

In an accompanying petition, Stoll asks, among other things, "that His Majestie might be pleased to grant New York a Charter, in the like manner and with the same or more privileges as the city of Boston, belong that the costs of that Charter, doth best agree with the humour and nature of those inhabitants, and with the constitution of the said city."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 629-32.

Leisler writes to the governor of Barbadoes regarding affairs at the fort; about Capt. Blagg’s bringing a French man-of-war into New York harbour; about a council of war, and sending the prisoners from this ship as back to Barbados; and with this Blagg also sends Nicholas Blaggs yd City Charter as also yd City seals with all other Papers & Books wch might Be in his Custody Belonging to Sd City & County."—M.C.C., I: 208. There evidently was no response, for a more peremptory order was sent on Oct. 16. The high constable reported back that he delivered the order "to ye wife of m’s Cortlandt & that she did throw it away out yd doors."—Ibid.

Several "merchants and adventurers trading to and interested in the province of New York and the adjacent Colonies" send a petition to the king, expressing thankfulness for his care of these colonies, and more particularly in appointing Coll Slater [Slaughter] Governor of New York, whose integrity courage and conduct render him worthy of your Majesty’s choice and so important a trust." They ask, for defence against these "informer enemyes" to the king’s person and dominions, the French, that he will furnish a considerable number of men, with arms and ammunition, and ships of war. In support of this petition, they give several reasons, describing the growing strength of the French in Canada, who have taken away the beaver trade, excepting from the Five Nations of Indians, who are friendly to the colonists, and whose trade is also menaced. They therefore recommend:

1. That a platform be built at Sandy Hook or Sandy Bay in East Jersey at the entrance into Hudson’s River from the sea which lies so inconveniently situated on the northern side, so as that no ship can pass up into Hudson’s river but within muskett shot, as will appear by the map, which said platform will require twelve guns and eighty men with arms and ammunition proportionable.

2. That the Fort of New York be sufficiently repaired and fortified with suitable outworks as it was formerly, or otherwise as shall be found most convenient, and that fifty guns may be allowed to the precincts of that fort, and that two hundred men be kept in that fort in time of war, and one hundred and twenty men be constantly kept there in time of peace, [sic] the Town of New York [sic as liable to be attacked by land as by sea].

They also recommend that certain forts be built in other parts of the province:

6th. That four hundred Carabines with Belts, Saldes, Horslets, and Pistolls be sent over to equip the Militia horse of New York and Long Island and one thousand small fire arms with Bandeleers and ammunition proportionable for foot.

7th. That the Governor of New York have power to issue out commissions for raising volunteers in New England upon any exigency.

8th. That two fifth rate man of war be appointed to cruise upon coasts as the Governor shall see occasion.

9th. Among the records of the committee of safety there is a Memorial [sic of this period] of what has occurred in their Majesties Province of New York since the News of their Majesties Happy Arrival in England. — Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 33-34.

10th. William and Mary are "very solemnly" proclaimed a second time king and queen, etc., by Leisler, who received by word of Boston "two gracious letters the one from their majesties with orders to doe & performe all things which to the peace and safety of this country may contribute," etc. — Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 18, 29-30. But see Bayard's explanation of Dec. 15. The first proclamation occurred on June 22, 1689 (p. 6).

11th. After a due deliberation and consult with the committee of safety, Leisler, as lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief, appoints the members of his council. — Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 27. See Oct. 10.

12th. Peter Delaney, who was appointed receiver of the revenues of the province by Leisler and his council (Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 29), while still acting as mayor, is now given a commission as collector of the port of New York. — Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 185.

13th. Col. Nicholas Bayard writes concerning the occurrences in New York since the preceding April 27. Concluding, he states that, on Dec. 8, John Riggs, the despatch-bearer, who had been sent to England by Van Cortlandt on May 18 (N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 593), arrived with two packets from the king and directed "To our Trusty and well Beloved Francis Nicholas," etc., "or in his absence to such as for ye time being take care for ye preservation of the peace, etc. Before the council could meet, the governor was commanded to the fort and forced to deliver the packets to Leisler. Since then Leisler "has taken upon him the title of L. Governr and Commander in Chief." — Ibid., III: 648. On Dec. 13, also, "Fredrick Flypse" and "S. v. Cortlandt" made a certificate that on Dec. 9 they too demanded the two packets, "being of the King's Council." They claimed them as their right in the absence of the lieutenant-governor, who had deputed them "to preserve the peace during his absence and until his Maj:pleasure should be knowne therein." Leisler, however, told Riggs that they had nothing to do with the government, that they were Papists, and that the packets were directed to him. He took the packets from Riggs, and told Philipse and Van Cortlandt, with "many approbrious words," to leave the fort. — Ibid., III: 649.

A commission of this date is given to Abraham Gouverneur as city and county clerk. — Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 188.

Leisler issues a proclamation ordering all persons holding civil or military commissions from Dongan and Andros to surrender them. — Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 31.

Fearing that the French "have a designe upon New York," Peter Reverbryde writes to the Bishop of London that there are 200 French families about New York "which will be put to the torture if the French takes it." — N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 650.

About 1690, the wardrobe of an English officer stationed at New York, Capt. Caesar Carter, included a blue cloth coat with silver buttons, a frize coat, a white flowered jacket, white Holland jackets, a silver flowered waistcoat, green silk breeches flowered with silk and gold, silver gaunt breeches, scarlet stockings, black silk stockings, white cotton stockings, embroidered belt with silver buckle, a campaign wig, bob-wigs, silver-bitted sword, lacker hat, laced shirts, laced neckcloths, laced handkerchiefs, flannel jackets, and fur cap. — Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 339-40; ibid. (1858), 509-10. See also Abstracts of Wills (1892), 321.

Claiming that a "hellsish Conspiracy" to subvert the government "hath been detected," Leisler issues a search-warrant to discover suspected letter-carriers coming or going between New York and Boston. — Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 32. As explained by Brodhead: "it was the office of his Major Liever's, or the Chief of New York doth or may appertain until further order." — Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 18, 29-30.

Before the council of Dec. 15. The first proclamation occurred on June 22, 1689 (p. 6). See above.

17th. After a due deliberation and consult with the committee of safety, Leisler, as lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief, appoints the members of his council. — Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 27. See Oct. 10.

18th. Peter Delaney, who was appointed receiver of the revenues of the province by Leisler and his council (Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 29), while still acting as mayor, is now given a commission as collector of the port of New York. — Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 185, 187.

19th. Leisler's appointment of Edmund Andros as collector of the port of New York, 1690, is mentioned in the Annual Register for 1691. — ibid., III: 651-57.

The answer (dated New York, 1691) to a memorial presented by Capt. Blagge to the king stated that Leisler "made to himself a Broad Seal with he called ye 2nd Seal of ye Province, with ye usual arms of Kings of England, and affixed the same to some unknown grants of land within this Province, and commissionated under ye same [sic] Justice of ye Peace ... ." — Ibid., III: 765. Probably at this time the corresponding change was made in the city seal. — See July 24, 1686: From Printer, Vol. V; Fine, Seal and Flags, V, III, and p. 48.

The accompanying Leisler's letter to the bishop is Bayard's order of Oct. 20, 1689 (p. 23); also the depositions of three inhabitants, taken before a justice on Aug. 14, 1689, to the effect that Andros, in April, had addressed an Indian sachem named Wesse-canow (their informant) to attack New York City with a band of Indians, and desired that it be done in a friendly manner, and also a affidavit intended to show the violent disposition of Nicholson when the news reached him about the landing of the Prince of Orange in England. — N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 685-86. Both factions made wild charges.

1690 a warrant from our Usurper Lelsey, & brought backto this place—Jan.
1691 York to his Letter & which the same at the Impartial Narrative of several Grievances & Great Oppressions; In America Lye Under, & the Extravagant & Arbitrary Proceeding of Jacob Leysler & his Accomplices. Printed at New-York, re-Printed at London, 1690. Inasmuch as the first printing in New York was set up by Bradford in 1693 (p. vi), the date of the first pamphlet in New York prior to that was obviously an error. It is likely it was printed originally by William Bradford at Philadelphia (see Evans, Am. Bibliog, No. 750), and when reprinted in London was attributed erroneously to New York because the subject matter related to this city. A photostat copy from (above the title which is transcribed) is in the N. Y. Pub.

Library, made from the printed original in the British Museum, which Brodhead reprinted in N.Y. Col. Docs., III: 665-54. The pamphlet reviews, with evident accuracy, from the standpoint of the regularly constituted authors of the city and province, the official transactions and the rebellious transgressions that have decorated the last year. The violations of the "Laws and Liberties of the English Nation" on the part of Leisler are all described here, which states it as Leisler's maxim that "The Sword must rule and not the Laws."

Various arrests and imprisonments, without due process of law, are described. Finally, on Jan. 20, 1690, by Leisler's command, William Churchill and several soldiers, assisted by certain inhabtants, went to the house of Colonel Bayard, and broke open doors to seize Bayard; they followed him to a neighbour's house, laid hold of him, and dragged him to the fort and imprisoned him. They likely did not open the house of Stephanus van Cortlandt, late mayor of the city, but he escaped. William Nicolls was taken at the ferry-house on Long Island, and carried to the fort. This followed the refusal of several of the inhabitants to pay customs and excise to Leisler. The pamphlet closes with an arraignment of the "principal authors" of the "martyrs" suffered by the inhabitants. These are:
"Jacob Leisler, Jacob Milburne, Samuel Eadsall, D. Geo Beckman of Flackbus, Peter DeLanoy, D. Samuel States, Tho. Williams, Jno.
Cowenbven, Benj Blage, Hend. Jansen, Hend. Cuylar." The authors of the pamphlet declare their intention to prosecute these men as soon as a fair opportunity offers to do so legally.—Ibid.

1691 Leisler issues a warrant to "ye Civill & Military Officers & Sher-ife for the Queens County upon Long Island, . . . to Secure ye Body of Colonel Thomas Dongan with a Saferguard with in his owne house & to apprehend Colonel Thomas Willet Capt Toma hicks Daniel Whitehead & others. & There he alleges, have done all in their power to advance the interests of Janv. 9th, contrary to their duty to King William.—Doc. Hist. N.Y. (460 ed.), II: 41.
On Feb. 21, a similar warrant is issued regarding Dongan, and Cortland, Brodhead, and Plowman.—Ibid., II: 42-43. As to how Dongan escaped arrest, see April 24.

A warrant is issued to Leonard Becket, surveyor, to determine the division line between the lands lying in the borders of Harlem and the lands of Theuct Ydensen (Ides).—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 1914 Black, Municipal Ownership of Land, 50.

Leisler issues a warrant for the election of representatives who shall meet in New York "to consult debate & conclude" all such matters as are necessary for "ye supply of this Goverm't in this present conjuncture."—Doc. Hist. N.Y. (460 ed.), II: 42.

Leisler writes to the "Goverm't of Boston" for a Catalogue of all the books & papers in your town relating to the province
The request was made again on April 7.—Ibid., II: 118. Regarding the return of the New York records, see April 17, 1690; May 3, 1691; Sept.
3, 1691.

Ther & his council issue a commission to Joannes de Bruyn, Joannes Provost, and Jacob Milbourne to command all the forces raised in New York and adjacent counties, and to proceed to Albany and take control of affairs there, to treat with the Indians, take possession of Fort Orange there, etc.—Doc. Hist. N.Y. (460 ed.), II: 100.
This was due to the massacre at Schenectady and the burning of that place by the French and Indians, in February.—
Ibid., II: 102-95.

It is ordered by the common council that the alderman of the North Ward appoint two fit persons to see that Church Street is paved "by every 3d son before there doors as it [sic] do by other inhabitants."—M. C., Appendix, VIII: 26.

In a letter written at "fort william" to the commissioners from New England (see Feb. 20), Leisler suggests a house out of town for their meeting, on account of the small-post in New York.
The house referred to he describes as "two miles of the town a good & neat [near] house by Capt. Arian Cornelie where no small post is."—
The house was kept by John Clapp in 1697 (q.v.).

Robert Livingston, who, prior to the Leisler revolution, had April been town clerk at Albany (see Doc. Hist. N.Y. I, 460 ed., III: 432-35), writing from Hartford to Andros, informs him that Leisler's faction seeks to have the mayor and other magistrates at New York take commissions from Leisler as lieutenant-governor, but they refuse to do so until Leisler can produce better power from King William to confer commissions. Van Cortlandt has fled.
Col. Bayard, Mr. Goer, William Nicolls, and several others are kept in dark prisons. Leisler seeks to have Bayard to be brought through the fort in a chair, in chains.—N.Y. Col. Docs., III: 708-9.

Robert Livingston makes reference to British soldiers as "Red Coats."—N.Y. Col. Docs., III: 768; IV: 875. For an earlier refer-ce of the same sort, see Aug. 29, Sept. 8, 1664. The Militia Law of the province did not prescribe the "Scarlet Coat" until July 24, 1725; however, even at this early date (1690), British law and custom evidence prevailed here.

Robert Livingston, writing from Hartford to Maj. John Winthrop, declares that to relate "ye hardships & troubles we have met withal Since this Revolution would require a whole Volume." He calls Leisler a "usurper" who tyrannizes "over there Maj^ Subjects

The committee of trade and plantations at Whitehall agrees "to more (request) the king that orders may be issued to remove the records of New York from Boston and Yale."
This he might also be delivered to him; and that the records of New York, now in Boston, might be restored. Another order, dated April 30, was directed to the colony of Massachusetts to deliver the sloop, the great guns, and the records to Slaughter, for use of the king's

In the first "assembly" under Leisler, held at the house of Robert Waiters in New York, beginning this day, only one act is passed. This contains two provisions, as follows: "to raise [raiseth] throughout the whole Government three pence in every pound reall and personal, to be paid the first of June;" and "that all towns and places should have equal freedom to build and bake and to transport where they please directly to what place or Country they think it fitt, anything their places afford, and that the one place should have no more privileges, than the other."—From Van Cortlandt's letter to Anders, dated May 19, 1690, in N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 715, which is the only source cited in Col. Laws N. Y., I: 218. By an act passed in the next session, on Oct. 2, another tax levy of the same amount was imposed, to be collected in January and March following.—From Leisler's letter to Shirley, New York, dated Oct. 20, in N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 753, and Col. Laws N. Y., I: 219.

An intercolonial congress meets in New York, and adopts measures for the Strengthening of Albany, and for Subduing the French & Indian Enemies Continuing in hostility agst their Magistrates, New York, Massachusetts, Plymouth, and Connecticut are represented by commissioners. Each of these colonies, as well as Maryland, agrees to send a quota of men and provisions at its own expense. Articles of war are agreed to.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4to ed.), II: 134-57. The report of this commission, dated May 1, 1690, appointmentg forces to be raised by the colonies of New York, Massachusetts, Plymouth, Connecticut, and Rhode Island, was signed by Jacob Leisler, William Stoughton, Samuel Sewall, P. D. Paterson, and Nathaniel Goring.—Mass. Archives, XXXVI: f. 455; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 753. See A.

Judge Samuel Sewall of Massachusetts, having completed his work as commissioner from Massachusetts, remains over Sunday in New York, before starting for home. He records the manner in which he spent the day: "Went to the Dutch Church in the morn. Sung the 60th Ps. 2d. Pause from the 24th V to the end which Capt. Lodowick taught me the evening before . . . At my Lodging Mr. Maritord . . . sung the 25th Psalm . . . a Psalm extraordinarily fitted for me in my present distresses."—Diary of Samuel Sewall, in Mass. Hist. Soc. An order in council is made "to Secure all ports within this City to be brought to his Maties Store house for his Maties service. Leisler issues a search-warrant accordingly.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 137. Only 180 barrels are found.— Ibid., II: 143.

New York merchants in London, in an "Address to the King and Queen," report the several acts of oppression and defiance of law by Leisler, and ask for relief.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 748-50. Among the petitioners are Rip van Dam, Stephen de Lancey, Jacobus van Cortlandts, Col. Abraha- ham de Peyster, Nicholas Waw, Peter H. van Stuywia, Isaac de Forrest, and others. For an authoritative sketch of the life of Rip van Dam, at this time one of the most prominent merchants of New York, see Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 720 et seq.

William Mason (Mason) and other captains of privateers are commissioned by Leisler to sail for Quebec and war upon French vessels.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 141. See also 1689; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 751-52; IV: 387, 388-96, 444, 669; and N. Y. Col. Docs. Index, titles "Mason," "Coats," and "Red Sea."—Van Cortlandt, writing from "New England" to Andros, tells who are imprisoned by Leisler, and what they have done. Most of the Albany women are at New York (evidently because of the war waged in the vicinity of Albany by the French and Indians). The reader of the money that Leisler had preserved to the use of Leisler and the other slaves in Turkey which your Excellency gave to be used in a new Church in New York, our church-warden has had it laid out in Amsterdam and gott Osnabricks limens [Osnabrueck limens] for it, all which Osnabricks Leisler hath taken and sent to Albany with Milbrod, N. Slaughter is given a seal by the king, for the use of the "Province of New York and the Territories depending thereon." It is thus described: "Engraven on the one side with our Royal Effigies, and Two Indians Kneeling & offering presents unto Us, with our Royal Titles round the circumference of the said Seal, and on the other side with our royal Armes, with the Garter, Crown, Supporters and Motto, and this Inscription round the circumference. Sigillum Province Nostre Nova Eborac in America." He is authorized to use this seal on all patents, public grants of lands, and public acts and instruments made in the king's name.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 726; Doc. Hist. N. Y., IV: 194, 259. Leisler, writing on June 23 from "Fort William" in New York to the Earl of Shrewsbury, states, among other things, that, on June 6, he was assaulted on the streets by "a Rout of Thirty odd persons," one of whom struck him "with an Adze."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 721. The justices, Delany, John Sprat, and another, issue an order to the high sheriff, high constable, and petty constables to take care that "Vagabonds, thieves, Robbers and Strangers abiding in said City and County without knowledge of 5d authority may be securely examined & proceeded against according to Law." The inhabitants, also, are to give an account of persons who disturb the peace.—From the original order in metal file labeled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room.

Leisler had sent Maj. Milburne to Albany to settle the "great disturbances amongst the Forces Raised for the Canada Expedition." Now, instead of sending him to England to give a report of the affairs of the province to the lords of trade, he sends his report to England by Capt. Blagge, one of his council.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 753. This report, dated June 23, is addressed to the Earl of Shrewsbury; it states that William Leisler, and his son- in-law, and the riot of June 4 in New York.—Ibid., III: 731-33.

Capt. Blagge wrote a petition to the king on behalf of Leisler and his council, soon after his arrival in England, beginning: "That the Inhabitants of the said Province did the first notice they received of the late Happy Revolution in England, the more effectually to secure ye said Province and Government for your Maties service Did think themselves obliged to remove the late Lieut Goverr Nobel. The purpose of this petition was to ask the king's "approbation" for what Leisler and his council had done, and to ask for guns and ammunition.—Ibid., III: 737.

This petition was accompanied by "A Memorial of what has occurred in their Maties Province of New York," etc. Both of these documents are without date. The memorial explains the circumstances of the removal of Nicholson and the appointment of Leisler and a committee, by the people's choice; "to take into their Hands the care and chastisement of the Inhabitants of New York, and in his absence to such as for the time being shall take the direction of the Government, are obliged to be further known." It reviews the events attending the proclaiming of the king and queen at New York; then the suspending of the mayor and aldermen; then the arrival of the letter from the king-in-council, directed to Nicholson, "and in his absence to such as for the time being shall take the direction of the Government, are obliged to be further known." It describes the factional differences that have arisen; the impeachment of some of the leading opponents of Leisler's government; the calling in of commissions which were issued by Deacon and Andros, and the issuing of others in the name of the present king and queen.

During this year, a report was made of the quantity of gun, powder, ball, etc., in the fort.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 202.

In this year, Maryland became a royal colony, with Sir Lionel Copley as governor.—Winor, op. cit., III: 552-53.

3 Leisler authorises Maj. DeBruyn to convene a council of officers to take suitable measures to prevent further discipline of the militia.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 181.

The ship "Beaver" with one company of foot soldiers, under command of Maj. Richard Ingoldsby, and the "John" and "James" with stores, arrive from England. They came up to New York on the 25th. Four days later, the ship "Cauterbury" arrived with another company of foot soldiers. Chiefly Brocke of the "Beaver" informed Sir Robert Southwell by letter of April 5 following, that when the first ships came up to the city, Ingoldsby sent him (Brooke) to request Leisler to admit the stores and forces into the fort. Leisler was willing to receive the stores but not the soldiers. He seemed very angry, and his insolent behaviour put Brooke on his guard. His taste of power had infuriated the "penny usurer." Such was the belief of Brooke, who said they found "the best and greatest number of the people languishing under his oppressions and now overjoyed at the hope of a deliverer." We must not renounce to land our men till we had prepared some well affected persons of ye City to stand in our defence in case he should offer any violence agst us upon landing."—N. Y. Col. Doct., III: 577. See, further, Feb. 6. than in this City," may be received by the citizens with due respect.

Maj. Inglodsey having demanded possession of the fort, without showing the least order from their Majesties King William & Queen Mary or his excellency Col' Slaughter for the same," Leisler refuses to surrender it to him and his troops. He nevertheless refuses to the proclamation of Feb. 3, that the Major and his troops shall be handed over by Mr. Chidley, and his arrival of Col. Slaughter; but adds another prohibition against persons outside the province following Inglodsey's commands.—Dec. Hist. N. Y.
(410 ed.), II: 185.

At this time, Joseph Dudley writes from Boston to Bartholomew in a letter of 13th Jan., that he arrived in the city and frigate" are daily expected at New York, where he will meet them to assume his duties. He adds that the whole country is in a very bad state in every way; and that the King's delay in settling matters would make the colonies long a prey to their enemies and to each other.—Col. State Papers, Am. & W. I., 186.

At a meeting of the mayor, common council, and militia officers, it is requested by Maj. Inglodsey that his soldiers may be accommodated in the city hall "until better entertainment is provided." Consent is given, provided there be no interruption of the "Court of

Under command of Maj. Inglodsey, the soldiers are brought ashore, "with as much caution as Chidley Brooke stated in his letter of April 5 to Southwell as if we had made a descent into an Enemies' Country." Continuing, Brooke explains: "We lodged our men in ye Town House and another House opposite thereto and their return reports are industriously spread abroad. We are Papists and disaffected persons fled from England, his [Leisler's] soldiers are encouraged to afront and threaten his Majesties Forces." Leisler fires a warning gun twice or three times a week: "to amuse, and gives no reason for doing so but "sic vosum."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 757.

Leisler desires to comply with a request from Inglodsey to release the prisoners in the fort. He gives as his reason the desire to avoid "a second hazard," peace having hithefore been secured without bloodshed.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 503.

Leisler writes to Inglodsey: "Last night your men took upon them to go the rounds of this City under Character of ye City Hall rounds sundry times passing by this fort which is a province that neither you nor any under your direction ought to tread in." He forbids a repetition of this. Nevertheless, on March 5, he is obliged to write a similar complaint.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 397.

A commission is issued to Maj. Inglodsey (presumably from the privy council of England) to command the troops at New York.— Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 201. This states that the object is to put "their Majesties' good subjects in a posture of Defence against the

In a declaration of protest against Inglodsey, Leisler explains, directly more perhaps than in his other public documents (all of which are extremely faulty in English diction), the underlying motives for his seizure of the government. He begins:

"Whereas Almighty God through his wonderful mercy hath raised up their Majesties King William and Queen Mary to be ye glorious instruments of delivering their Kingdoms & dominions both Church & State from ye imposture of ye romish religion and illegal and arbitrary power exercised under ye unhappy reigne of ye late King James . . . Such abuse of power, he says, was manifested, especially under Gov. Dongan, who was a prosessed Papist, and who, with seven "counselors," had power under his "letters patent from ye 4th King" to make laws, levy taxes, and "tax the money of the province without having any regard to advice or consent of ye representatives of ye people's and this power was continued and augmented "by Commission from ye 14th King James appointing St` Edmund Andrers governor of this province as well as New England . . .

Leisler sends a letter to Maj. Inglodsey, with one of the proclamations of the 16th enclosed, the substance of the letter being that, if the king's forces and all that appear in their defence do not in-mediate dyband and return to their abodes, he will pursue and destroy them. This letter gives Inglodsey two hours to comply,— N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 757. Inglodsey's answer is to the effect that the Several Articles of Accusatton acq^ themselves and the Said Major Inglodsey in the Said letter contained are altogether representatives for each county in the province who assisted forthwith to proclaim their Majesties William and Mary . . .

His narrative proceeds with the statement that he retained possession of the fort "until their Royall pleasure should be known concerning us" and this was made known on Dec. 8, 1689 (q. v.), by letter from the king dated July 30, 1689 (q. v.)," directed to Francis Nicholson, Esq. & is in his absence to such [as for] ye time being take charge of matters of ye Town House and administ\ning ye laws in this province to take upon them ye Govt of ye 4th Province . . . until further order from us." Inasmuch as this letter arrived when Leisler was in control of the government, he construed it as directed to himself and acted accordingly.

He is now expected by the new governor, Slaughter; and,
meanwhile, Inglodsey has arrived, and, as Leisler puts it,
"Hath presumeth to raise men and levy forces within this province wherby hostilities and irregularities are Committed to ye indignity of their majesties supremacy . . . without discovering or publishing any authority from his maj's or his Excellency Col' Slaughter for so doing,"

Leisler asserts his readiness and that of his followers to defend their pres' Majesties right and supreme authority in and over this province in opposition to ye former power & government. The Papists and French, he asserts, are ready to take revenue on those who have "prevented their ministers actions & enterprizes."

Leisler further states that he particularly protests against "a certain manifest or declaration made at ye City Hall by Six Expl of council and two Capt Comming his Majesties Forces wherein is comprized divers falsehoods and supposed matters which can never be made out. We are Papists and disaffected and odious amongst the inhabitants of this City & Province which in due season will appear to ye contrary not doubting but to aprove both their Loyalty and integrity for their Majesties service and interest and ye preservation & security of this province," etc. He commands that the forces opposed to him be disbanded and keep the peace.—

Leisler calls his "tale" into the fort from all parts of the province as well as from New Jersey, the king's troops meanwhile 期望ing Col. Slaughter daily and "suffered patiently all his [Leiser's] abuses." "Cannor are brought to bear upon the Town the Block Houses filled with armed men and the Cannon that faced towards ye River are turned forwards us," writes Chidley Brooke. Leisler "commands his arm'd mob to stop the King's Soldiers in going ye rounds both at the Fort and the Block-houses and one night imprisoned four soldiers and a sergeant."—From Chidley

Leisler writes from Fort William to Slaughter at Bermuda concerning the present disorders, stating that they cannot continue long without bloodshed, and expressing the prayerful wish that Slaughter may arrive soon.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 509.

The tone of this letter is the peace of the province . . . Till such time as his excellency Col' Hen: Slaughter shall arrive," etc.—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), II: 192.

Leisler issues an order to Capt. DuSuyng "to secure the blockouse in ye behalf of their Majesties King William and Queen Mary."

—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 510. The blockhouse was situated "upon Smiths Vally."—See Feb. 24, 1692.

Leisler and his party issue a long declaration against Inglodsey and his council, pronouncing them; "enemies to God, their present Majesties & the peace & welfare of this people and Province for-cluding them "to continue in hostility," etc, and commanding them to "forthwith discharge & disband all the said forces which have been raised within this Province or elsewhere," or take the causes this to be read on the evening of the 16th and then orders his men into the fort.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 758.

Leisler sends a letter to Maj. Inglodsey, with one of the proclamations of the 16th enclosed, the substance of the letter being that, if the king's forces and all that appear in their defence do not immediate disband and return to their abodes, he will pursue and destroy them. This letter gives Inglodsey two hours to comply,— N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 757. Inglodsey's answer is to the effect that the Several Articles of Accusatton acq^ themselves and the
Said Major Inglodsey in the Said letter contained are altogether
Brooke, in his narrative of April 5 regarding these events, which he sent to Southwell, explained the situation as follows: "Within a few minutes of the letter, the limited time we answered this paper in ye most peaceable state we could contrive, but in vain, we must all submit to be his slaves or by him be destroyed." Before Leisler had broken the seal of the answer, he said, in the presence of the messenger, "Come, we'll go out." In about a quarter of an hour "he fired a great shout at ye king's forces as they stood in their parade and made several shots at the house where they lodged and kept guard in hope to batter it down over their ears. These great shots were accompanied with Vollies of small shott." These "of his rable" in the blackhouse failed to respond to his order to fire, coincidently with the firing from the fort, many of the inhabitants being in so rash an undertaking. Several inhabitants, as well as soldiers, were wounded and two were killed in the action which lasted until night, during which time Leisler was "safe immuned within the Fort." By nightfall, this band had surrendered, having heard of a designed attack both by land and water. This so discouraged those in the fort that there was no shooting during the night.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 758.

Sloughter, writing to Lord Nottingham on March 26 about the occurrences of March 17, stated that "Leisler from the Fort discharged a great shot at the guards, and then answered from the Blockhouse at the other end of the City that held with him, and immediately many more great and small shott, some of which passed through the stone walls of the house where the guards were kept, wounded some of the King's soldiers and about seven other of the inhabitants, and one was slain. During which time the guards not only fired from the Fort, but some Laws Statutes from the Blockhouse, which were 3000 failed them, submitted and laid down their arms and went to their houses."—Ibid., III: 760. See also Bayard's account, ibid., III: 765; and the affidavit of Daniel de Klerck and others, Dist. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 210–13.

The few shots fired the next day did no harm. The king's forces, realizing their inability to storm the fort with their "handful of men," merely stood still in a defensive posture every minute expecting he would either battery or batter Town down, but it pleased God to prevent his bloody design in a great measure by ye happy arrival of Our Governor on the 19th who found all his friends with white y'd about their left arms for a badge of distinction and their lives in imminent danger.—"N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 758.

Gov. Sloughter having set sail from the Isle of Wight on Dec. 1, 1690, arrives in New York. In reports to the Earl of Nottingham, dated March 27 and May 6, 1691, he explained that his vessel, the "Arch Angel," which started with several ships in convoy, containing soldiers and stores, made for the Bermudas, where they lost 50 feet of her outer keel on the rocks; so that it took 16 weeks, after a rough passage, to complete the voyage. The other ships arrived two months earlier.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 758, 759. See also Sloughter's account, ibid., III: 760–67; and the council's resolution of March 19.-Ibid.

Writing on March 26 to Nottingham of his arrival on March 19, Sloughter stated: "I . . . was visited by the Gentlemen of the Council on board, and the winds not allowing the king's ship, I came instantly to towne in the pinnace, and at the Towne Hall in the presence of the people, published their Masts letters patent for the Government, took the oath, and, 'demissed them to the gentlemen of the Council except Coll: Bayard and M't Nicoll who were detainted prisoners . . . , and sent immediately to demand entrance into the fort, that those said Gentlemen of the Council should be dismissed, and that Leisler should render himselfe to give satisfaction to the people of this town [or the town of New York]."—Ibid., III: 761. See Col. Coun. Min., 62; Dist. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 201; Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 193.

In his report on May 7 to the lords of trade, Sloughter stated that on March 19 Coll Dudley and some others came in a Brigantine on board us. I purposed not to go to the Towne before the Mann of War, but understanding the distress the inhabitants labour under, I went up in the Ships Pincke, where I found all in Armes, one hundred men came out of the Country fort to defend the City & their Majesties Stores and Forces against Leisler.—Ibid., III: 765–67.

In the afternoon Sloughter three times demanded the fort but was refused. About eight o'clock, Leisler sent Jacob Milbourne, acting secretary of the province, and Peter DeLanoy ("the two principal instruments of misery to this Province") to the governor to capitulate. The governor "thought fit to secure them," and by that means "broke neck" of Leisler's project, "for Milbourne was his oracle and DeLanoy his great minister of State so that he being really a rash blunderer and Leisler a perfect dolt, his sting gone and unable to do more mischief." Yet, he would not deliver up the fort that night.—From Brooke's letter to Southwell, ibid., III: 758–59; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: Chap. XXIV.

By Sloughter's commission (see Nov. 14, 1690, and Jan. 31, 1690), the right of the people to a representative assembly, etc., was formally acknowledged in these words: "And we do hereby give & grant unto you full power and authority with the advice & consent of our said Council from time to time as need shall require, to govern & control the inhabitants of the Territories within your Government, according to the usage of our other Plantations in America.

"And our will and Pleasure it is, that the persons thereupon duly elected by the Major part of the Freeholders of the respective Counties and places and so returned and having before their sitting taken the oaths appointed by Act of Parliament to be taken instead of the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy and the Test (see Eccl. Rec., III: 1012), which you shall commissionate fit persons under our seal of New York to administer, and without taking which, you shall be unable of sitting though elected, shall be called and held the Gen[28] Assembly of that our Province and the Territories thereunto belonging.

"And that you the said Henry Sloughter by & with the consent of our said Council and Assembly or the major part of them, respectively have full power and authority to make constitute and ordain such and such laws and statutes and ordinances for ye public peace, welfare, and good Government of our said Province and of the people & Inhabitants thereof and such others as shall resort thereto & for the benefit of us our Heirs & Successors.

Which said Laws Statutes & Ordinances are to be (as near as may be) agreeable unto the Laws & Statutes of this our kingdom of England. Within three months after their passage such laws shall be sent to England for approval by the king. If-disapproved, they shall be void. The governor is also given "a negative voice" (or veto power), and power to adjourn or dissemble the assembly.—Journ. Leg. Coun., I: xxvi–xxvii.

Although O'Callaghan refers (ibid., II: xxvii) to three branches which constituted the government (namely, governor, legislative council, and assembly), the word "legislature," as we use it to-day, to signify the two interacting legislative branches of the government, was not used at that early date in the journals of the council and assembly, or the provincial statutes. It appears to have been first introduced in New York's provincial records on Feb. 6, 1756 (p. 10).

Joseph Dudley, Fred. Philips, Stephanus van Cortlandt, 20 Gabriel Mineville, Chidley Brooke, Thos. Willett, and Wm. Paterson were the council, and they issued the council's resolution of March 19.-Ibid., III: 762. Regarding Dudley's presence, see Feb. 5, and March 19.

Gov. Sloughter issues the order to Maj. Ingoldsby "to march your Company of Fost before the fort of this City and againe demand ye delivery thereof instantly and when you are in Possession, if Capt. Leisler and the persons call'd by Council do not render themselves arrest them in their Majesties names and send them forthwith before me in Council."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1888), 310.

Col. Bayard and William Nicoll are also "trowne of the Council" and take their places "at the board." At this session of the government and council, Leisler and 11 others are brought before them as prisoners, and they are "Committed to the Guards." The "King's letter Directed unto francis Nichols" is taken from Leisler.—Dist. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 202, citing Coun. Min. The place of imprisonment is in the fort.—Ibid., II: 202–4.

John Lawrence is commissioned and sworn in as mayor.—Col. Coun. Min., 62.

An account of this date shows the amount of ammunition and guns delivered to Capt. Kidd, Col. Willet, and others, by Mr. De Puyter, by order of the council before the arrival of Col. Sloughter.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 203.

The council appoints a committee to examine Leisler and the other prisoners before sending them "to the Common prison of this City—from the Guard where lithereto they have been held."—Dist. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 204.

The council, meeting "at first William Henry," orders that "a

of the original minute-book of the Minutes of the Common Council:

FROM HENCE BEGINS WHAT IS ACITED IN GOVERNORS' SLOTSHER'S TIME
MARCH—1691

Nowhere else in the original text is an entry spread upon the minutes in such large letters. The page seems to express exultation at turning over a new leaf in the city's life. To follow (page 353 of the copy text) is an entry under date of March 24, 1691.

It records the transactions of the new common council. John Lawrence is mayor, and William Pishorne recorder. The names of those chosen aldermen, common councilmen, and constables are recorded, after their "publication." See also M. C. C.,

Capt. William Kidd complains to the governor and council against Capt. Jasper Hicks, commander of "their Matys hired Ship the Archangel," for impressing from him, his council ordered: "Upon the Consideration of the Good Service performed by the Said Captian Kidd not only to their Matys forces but Others thence Majesty's good Subjects," that Capt. Hicks deliver to Capt. Kidd the man so detained.—Council Minutes (Albany).

Ebenese Willson is elected treasurer of the city by the common council, which orders that he take the oath accordingly.—M. C. C., II: 215. He held this office until Sept. 29, 1698 (p. 5). On Sept. 29, 1707 (p.v), he was appointed mayor.—M. C. C., III: 328.

A warrant is issued by the two justices of the peace for Leisler's

Slaughter writes from "Fort William Henry" to Lord Nottingham an account of what has transpired since the arrival of the king's soldiers in January, covering the incidents already told by Chiddley Brooke (see 1690-1). He plans to send one of the council soon to Boston "to demand the records of this Province, the man of war slop and the guns brought from Providence." The council ordered: "The whole country from Pemaquid to Delaware is extreemly hurt by the late ill managed and fruitless expedition to Canada, which hath contracted forty thousand pounds debt and about a thousand men lost by sickness and shipwreck and no blow struck for want of courage and conduct in the Officers."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 759-62.

In his report to the lords of trade on May 7, Slaughter wrote that on March 26, by advice of the council, he issued "a Commission of Oyer & Terminer for the Tryall of Leisler and his Counsellor." Ten of these were indicted for murder and treason and six pleaded and were found guilty. Leisler and Milbourne refused to plead, but received sentence of death.—Ibid., III: 767. Regarding the circumstances attending the seizure of Leisler and the signing of his dearth warrant, see Eccles. Rec., II: 1254-55.

At a court of lieutenant held in New York, it is "Ordered that

Col. Nicholas Bayard, Stephen van Cortlandt, and William Pinshorne are appointed by the council a committee to prepare the evidence against the prisoners (Leisler, etc.), and James Emmett is appointed king's counsel in the case.—Doc. Hist. N.Y. (40 ed.), II: 205. The prisoners were arraigned "before Joseph Dudley St.

"Leisler and Milbourne having been indicted for High Treason have refused to plead it is supposed the Governor will keep them for his Maj'y disposal of them."—Brooke's letter to Southwell, N. Y.
Col. Docs., III: 759. See, however, Slaughter's report to the lords of trade on May 7.—Ibid., III: 767. A graphic account in Dutch, written by one of the accused regarding the treatment he received at the trial, explains the character of the pleadings. The statement is printed in full (translated) in N. Y. Hist Soc. Collections (1886), 311-13. Mayor Van Cortlandt acted as interpreter at this hearing.
It appears likely that this was written by Leisler or Milbourne, and, judging from their dying speeches on the day of their execution, it seems more likely to have been Milbourne.

Regarding Leisler's arraignment, we have Dolton's affidavit of Feb. 19, 1692, and De Wilde's affidavit of Feb. 23, 1692, indicating that his case was not given proper consideration by the court.
Leisler and Milbourne both entered an appeal to the king from the judgment of the court, but this was overruled.—Ibid., 311, 325.

The trial was later said to have been "ordered by the Govt.
& managed by the Bench Contrary to all the Rules of Justice & Humanity, laws, etc." It ended with the execution of Nicholas Bayard's house was the more pressed, & sooner prevailed on by Bayard's Importunity to sign the Warrant of Execution. And as an Affidavit of the share he had in that Council, there was a flag hung out of a Window of his House for two days together, before the day of Execution, as a Trophy & Signal of the Pint gained by him on ye said Govt & of the Victory over the Lives, not only of Innocent, but most deserving men."—Governor's affidavit of May 15, 1699, in N. Y. Hist Soc. Collections (1888), 413.

The first session of the assembly under Slaughter begins.—
Col. Laws N.Y., II: 223. Thenceforward, until 1716, the assembly was elected biennially by the people.—Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 525-54.

The judges of the "Court of Oyer & Terminer" ask the governor and council whether the king's letter of July 13, 1689 (error for July 30, 1689—see under July 29, 1689), directed to Nicholas, "and in his absence to such as for the time being take Care for Preserving of the peace," etc., can be understood or interpreted to have given power or direction to Leisler "to take the Governement of the Province upon himself that the adminis-tratian thereupon he to be holden good in Law." The governor and council give their opinion that there was no such power or direction for the Government to the said Capt. Leisler.—Doc.
Hist. N.Y. (40 ed.), II: 207. To 1695, when the attainer of Leisler and others was reversed, the contrary view of this circumstance was taken by parliament. It was there specifically held that the latter reference to Leisler "for the time being" named Leisler as rightful commander-in-chief, and that Ingholmeden demanded the fort "without producing any legal authority," the
CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664–1763

letter containing such authority being already in Leisler’s hands.—

Alien.- It appears to be in the "Coun. Min. b. 4."

Gov. Slaughter writes to the governor of Massachusetts, requesting the restoration of the New York records and sloop, and in relation to furnishing aid to defence of Albany against the French and Indians.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 203.

17 That this act passed through the instrument of protest against the conduct of Leisler, and that they vote that these shall be presented to the governor and council, with an address, pledging their lives and fortunes in support of the present government.—Assmb. Journ., I: 5–6; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 207–8.

An act of Assembly authorizes the laying of an appeal in court as follows: From the court of the mayor and aldermen, and from the courts of common pleas, to the supreme court, for any judgment above the value of £20; from the supreme court to New York to the court of appeals, consisting of the governor and council, for any judgment above £100.—Assmb. Journ., I: 5. From the judgment of this court of appeals, an appeal may be made to the king and queen in council in any case involving more than £500.—Street, The Council of Revision (1859), 9–84, where the further development of the jurisdiction of the courts is explained.

A committee having been appointed on April 1 to regulate the carrying of passengers by water in the river, a bill was passed by the council. Carriers are to be licensed. No carrier is “to ride about the Streets in his Cart.” They shall take turns weekly carrying away the dirt from the streets, the inhabitants being obliged to load the carts unless the carrier is “forced” to do so, in which case he is entitled to three—free passengers to be under two captains, who shall keep the constant number of 24 carriers, vacancies being filled by the mayor. The number was formerly 20.—See under Nov. 8, 1663, and M. C. C., I: 111. They shall separate each day, half to tend at the waterside and the other half in the city. No boys or negroes are to drive carts, and the carriers are not to let out their carts but to drive them themselves. All carriers shall be obliged to carry loads to the fort, but to leave “all Employes to attend the Riding up of Wheat or Flour or any other Merchandize Subject to Damage.”—Ibid., I: 218–19, 245.

A bill is introduced in the assembly providing for the erection of a bridge at “Spitting Devil.”—Assmb. Journ., I: 7. In 1697, arrangements were made for Frederick Phillips to build such a bridge, the first one to connect the island with the main land.—See Jan. 7, 1680; Jan. 5, 1693.

Coenraedes Vanbreeck, a city "carnar," is appointed to the position of “inviter or invitee of the town.” He was paid for on April 1.—M. C. C., I: 216–17. On April 22, Richard Chappaman was also appointed to this position on the recommendation of the governor. Both are to be licensed by the mayor, paying the city nine shillings besides fees, and the license is to be renewed annually. Vanderbeck and Chappaman are to receive equal profits, and are obliged to "keep an eye on the laws."—Ibid., I: 217.

On Nov. 17, 1715 (g. v.), their fees were regulated by ordinance.

“Gabriel Monviele Eshr [also spelled 'Minville']—see Cal. Coun. Min., 64] and Thomas Willet Eshr are appointed to attend the house of Representatives and acquaint them of the many good services done to this Province by Capt. William Kidd in his attendance here with his vessel during his Excellence’s absence and that it would be very acceptable to His Excellency and this board that they consider of some suitable reward for him to his services.”—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 3. On May 14, the assembly voted £50 to Capt. Kidd, "as a suitable Reward for the many good services done to this Province."—Assmb. Journ., I: 13.

The common council adopts new market regulations (cf. March 15, 1684; and the Dongan Charter, April 27, 1668). These provide, first, “That there bee two Markeths for flesh kept the one in the broad way oyer against the flour house under the trees by the Slip the Old Slip Market,"—De Voe, Market Book, 83 and that the Butchers Shall bee obliged to keep flesh in both places and that the Country People Shall bring flesh to Either of the two places Suitting there best Convenience and that no butchers meate be killed within the City gates. [See July 8, 1701; Landmark Map Ref. B, 711, 1695."

"Secondly That Eggs Butter and Poultry bee brought to said places Secondly That fish be brought unto the Dock oyer against the City hall or the house that Long Mary formerly lived in [see 1661] Likewise bearst fruite Roots &c."

A market-house was erected here some time after July 9, 1691 (g. v.) and prior to Feb. 18, 1692. (See also Burgis View of that year, Pl. 25, Vol. I, where reference is No. 18 to "the Weighhouse") and the Weighhouse in the Lyne Survey of 1720, Pl. 27, Vol. I, as the "Fish Market."

The ordinance of April 18 also provides that "the Market for flesh" shall be kept on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. In case, "by tydes weather or any other accident," flesh, fish, pork, eggs, butter, cheese, fruit, room, other Provisions vendable should come to the city on other than market-days, they may "be Sould in the Said Market place" under the same regulations as on market days. Among the other brief provisions of the ordinance is one that the clerk of the market is to keep a "full Cattle killed for the Market," and the threepence for "Every hog or Shinate brought or cut out for sale in the Market house," and twopenny for every sheep, calf, or lamb. The country people are to pay nothing for what they bring "Ready Killed."—M. C. C., I: 217–18.

The common council further requires that "all Wood brought for a Market or Exposed to Sale in this City Shall be Cored."—Ibid., I: 218.

Among various bills sent by the assembly to the attorney-general to be drawn up is one "to appoint a Schoolmaster, for the Educating and Instructing of Children and Youth, to read and write in the Province.

The bill passed on May 1st.—Ibid., I: 10. No further action was taken at this time. The interest in anything like popular education, on the part of the English municipal or provincial government, was slight as compared with that of Stuyvendael and his appointees, during the Dutch regime (see, for July 30, 1666), Another bill providing for a “Free-School” was rejected by the provincial legislature in 1695 (Mar. 26, g. v.).

Judge Sewall of Massachusetts expresses regret that, as commissioner of that province, his trip to New York did little good.—DNA. of Samuel Sewall, ed. C. V., 343–44.

The common council requires the recorder to "make Inquiry about the Weigh house and to give his Report next meeting."—M. C. C., I: 220. On the following day, he was required to "draw an Address to his Excellency to Represent their Right to the Weigh house," and a committee was appointed to accompany him in presenting it to the governor.—Ibid., I: 221. On April 24, the common council approved of the draft of the "Petition to his Excellency for obtaining the Weigh house unto the use of the City."—Ibid., I: 222. No further action was recorded until Sept. 17, when another committee was appointed to apply to the governor and council "for a return of their petition formerly given In relating to the Weigh house."—Ibid., I: 253.

This petition recited that in the time of Governours Kieft and Stuyvesant the city had the "benefit of the Weigh house" that in Gov. Nicolosi’s time, according to the articles of surrender, the former privileges of the city were confirmed.—Ibid., I: 253. That the Dongan Charter of April 27, 1668, confirmed unto the city "all the privileges and franchises That any of their Predecessors at any time within the Space of Twenty years past had tooke or Experienced or ought to have had by reason or under pretence of any former Charter Grant Prescription or any other right Custom or Usage although they have bin at any time Since duased or be not particularly mentioned therein." The petition further stated that for several years past the city had not had the benefit of the weigh-house or received any of the profits from it; and the governor is asked to order that the "Said Weighhouse with the Revenue and proffits thereof for time to come To be and remaine, as of custome and right belong, to the Mayor Aldermen and Comonalty of this City."

Ibid., I: 239–40.

The governor and council, on March 31, 1692, granted to the city the revenue of the weigh-house, "for one yeare to Commence from the 25th of the Said month," to be used for materials and labor in repairing the fortifications; and on April 6, the common council expressed their thanks to the governor.—Ibid., I: 269. On April 4, Augustus Grasset, the last weighmaster, agreed with the city, in consideration of the city's securing the former rates of the weigh-house, to pay a rental of £2 40 for it. The former rates, rules, and orders were put into effect accordingly.—Ibid., I: 270–71. Col. Bayard accepted the "management of the Weigh-money & materials for the repairing the fortifications."—Ibid., P. 272.

Ordnances more stringent than before (see Jan. 20, 1676) are enacted by the common council concerning strangers in the city. Shipmasters must report to the mayor the names of any strangers "within Twenty four hours after there Arrival upon forfeiture of forory Shillings." Even a private citizen is liable to the same penalty if he fails to give proper notice of a stranger for longer time than the Space of Seven Days without giving Information to the Mayor."—M. C. C., I: 220. See also March 15, 1684.

A common council ordinance provides that the clerk "make enquiry after and Releive to the Books and papers Relating to the Publick Records of this City, and Draw an Inventory of them, and to bee charged with them by Indenture Signed with the Mayor of this City and Duplicat Signed at the clerk."—M. C. C., I: 221. The same ordinance was renewed Oct. 15, 1691.—Ibid., I: 246. The clerk is more rigidly obligated than before; cf. commission to John West, Nov. 8, 1686 (p. 56). For earliest inventory of records, see Jan. 14, 1686.

It is ordered by the common council "That the Marks of Weights and Measures be affixed as formerly in the 5th addition of a Crowne."—M. C. C., I: 222. This evidently means that, as heretofore, goods which came up to the prescribed standard as to weight and bulk were to be so marked. The mark mentioned is here for the first time described in the Minutes, although English weights and measures were prescribed in Andros's time.—See Oct. 6-13, 1675.

An ordinance relating to the admission of freemen is adopted by the common council, stated in simpler terms than those contained in similar ordinances of this subject, and is evidently identical with that of the ordinance of March 15, 1684 (p. v.)—M. C. C., I: 222; compare with ibid., I: 137 and 302-3.

The common council provides "That the Mayor Recieve for his fees six Shillings for Every Great Scale and three Shillings for a Small Scale."—M. C. C., I: 233, 235, 246.

It is ordered "That the Necessary house be removed and placed further downe upon the Dock," and a committee is appointed for that purpose.—M. C. C., I: 232. Again, on Oct. 20, 1691, it was ordered "That Ebenezer Wilson & Peter King do forthwith build a Necessary house for the Use of the Publick upon Wharfe before the City hall."—Ibid., I: 253.

Papers relating to Leiler's troubles are read in the council meeting.—Cal. Coun. Min., 64. These papers are probably the ones referred to on May 7 (v.c.). See also Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 307, 308, 309.

The common council's order of June 14, 1688 (p. v.),—that every inhabitant should complete his wharf, fit for use, before Oct. 1 of that year,—not having been observed, and "the warfe" still being unfinished, it is now ordered that the owners of the lots "lying next the Water Side betwixt the State house and the Bridge" shall finish "the said Warfe," and shall fill up and level "all holes and breaches," and be under penalty of 50 for each lot not filled up. A committee is appointed to enforce the order.—M. C. C., I: 225-26. "That the said Warfe" to be completed "next the Water Side, betwixt the State house and the Bridge," was between Cowenys Slip and the bridge into the dock, just where the present Moore St. 15, which street was opened between 1750 and 1755.—Cf. Phl. 27, 27-4, and 50, Vol. I. This "warfe" became the present Water St. See Pl. 23-2 (1695), Vol. I, and notice the bridge, running out from Pearl St., in the line of the present Moore St. Moore Street is referred to in 1731 and elsewhere as Weighhouse Street.—Landmark Maps Ref. Key, III: 1012.

The order of April 20 further requires that "Every Male Negro in the City, with Wheel barrows and Spades," shall do a day's work about those lots, under penalty of one shilling sixpence, payable to the city by the owner of the negro neglecting to work. The inhabitants of "the State Side from the City hall to the Slip," are required to assemble at 7 a.m. the following Saturday, "at Bell Ringing," to settle a time for building the wharf that is to extend in front of their lots.—Ibid., I: 255-26. This wharf (the present Water St.), which was to be built "by the Water Side from the City hall to the Slip," was therefore to extend from Cowenys Slip to Hanover St., then called the "Slip."—See Pl. 23, Vol. I.

The inhabitants having met, it was resolved that the owners of the lots "upon the Water Side betwixt the State house and the Slip" should finish the wharf before Nov. 30 next, under penalty of £10 for failure.—M. C. C., I: 247.

On July 7, the committee was enlarged for finishing the wharf "upon the Water Side betwixt the Statehouse and the Bridge." Apr. 20, this committee was also appointed "for the purpose of fitting up a frame for what lands belong to the City betwixt the Statehouse and the Slip."—Ibid., I: 250. The location "betwixt the Statehouse and the Bridge" (as already stated) was from Cowenys Slip to Moore St. and "betwixt the Statehouse and the Slip" was northward as far as Hanover Sq. A new committee on inspection was appointed Oct. 16, and another, to complete the wharf, was appointed Oct. 20.—Ibid., I: 250, 252. On the latter date, it was ordered that the treasurer pay the last-named committee such money as it "Shall be in disburse to accomplish the Same."—Ibid., I: 255.

Governor Slaughter, writing from "Fort William Henry," relates May to Lord Incliquin the condition of affairs as he found them on his arrival, and as they have been adjusted since. He states that he is not willing to execute the sentence of death against Leiser "until his Majesty shall have advis'd me & his pleasure known therein."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4th ed.), II: 211.

Bayard submits to the council an account for repairs to the fort, ordered by Leiser, and it is referred to a committee.—Cal. Coun. Min., 63-65.

It is ordered by the common council "that there be Sworne Surveyors appointed for this City by whose advice and Direction the Ground within the City shall be built;" and "That a Regular Order and Uniformity may be kept and observed in the Streets and Buildings And that none Pave before those houses but in such manner as appointed by the Said Surveyors ... Peter King and Adolph Peters are appointed Surveyors."—M. C. C., I: 226; see also ibid., I: 137.

It is ordered by the common council "that the Owners of the Severall Lotts of Land Lying upon the Water Side betwixt the State house [Cowenys Slip] and the Slip [Old Slip] doe finish and Complete the Wharfe that is to bee built before the Said Lotts betwixt this and the Last day of November next ensuing."—M. C. C., I: 227. This was Dock St., and later became part of Pearl St. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1007). On Sept. 21, 1691, time was extended "till Midsummer day Next" to complete this chart.—Ibid., I: 255.

The first act of the legislature ("Chapter 1") to be passed on the restoration of peace is entitled "An Act for the Quieting and Setting the Divorces that have lately happened within this Province and for the Establishing and Securing their Majestyes present Govenement against the like Disorders for the future." This act refers to "the late hasty and inconsiderate Violeacon" of "a true faith and Allegiance" to the crown. It complains that this "hath visitated and debarched the Minds of many people & hath also brought great waste, trouble and Destruccon upon the good people of this province." It requires only the crown as the source of authority in the government; and that no one ought or can exercise any power over the subjects of the province, "upon any pretence whatsoever," except by authority derived from the king and queen (William and Mary) "under Their Broad scale of The Revenues of England;" that all persons shall endeavour by force of arms "to disturb the peace good and quiet of this their Majestyes Government" shall be deemed "Rebbels and Traitors" and "incur the pains penalties and forfeitures as the Laws of England for such Offences made and provided."—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 223-24.

The legislature passes "An Act for the Establishing Courts of Jurisdiction for the Ease and benefit of each respective City Town County within this Province."—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 226; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grolier Club reprint, 1894), cv. note. The act expired in two years (April, 1693).—Ibid., I: 225-26. Meanwhile, on Nov. 11, 1694, a similar act was passed, to run for two years more.—Ibid., I: 399.
The first comprehensive and extended act "for setting the Militia 1664-1763. 6" in passion was passed on the 4th Oct., 1674, and Oct. 6. The act recites that "the present State and Condition of this Province Doth of necessity require that the Inhabitants thereof Should be well armed and Trained up in Art military as well for the honour and service of Their Most Excellent Majesties as the preservation of their own lives and fortunes." It therefore provides that "each person whatsoever from Fifteen to Twenty five years of Age remaine unlisted by themselves or masters mistresses or employers under the Captains in the respective places of their abode in foot or horse the space of one Calendar month after their arrival or Coming to reside or sojourn in any place within this Province." So reminded, the gallon shall receive weekly or monthly, as remaining unlisted. Every foot-soldier is to "be provided with a well fixed musket or fuzze (or if the Officer Sco appoint with a good pike or Sword or Lance and pistoll) Each muskettier Six charges of powder and one Cartouch box and so shall appeare when and where appointed," under certain penalties for Failure. Every soldier "belonging To the horse" shall appear "provided with a good Serviceable horse of his Own Covered with a good Saddle with holsters breast plate and crupper and a Case of good pistols hanger Sword or rapier and horseflesh powder of twelve Serviceable bullets," under penalties for failure. All members of the militia at his late "pay in the usual place of abode a well fixed Carahine with belt and Swivel and two pound of powde with Six pounds of Serviceable bullets," under certain penalties for default. The troops of horse of New York and Albany shall be "in arms and officer shall be commanded by the person listed in the New York City regiment, except a commissioned officer or sergeant, may furnish an approved substitute to act in the nightly guard and watch in this city.

Within one year after the publication of this act, all captains of foot companies and troops of horse shall provide their respective commands with "Drumms and Colours Trumpetts Trumpeters and Banners att the proper Charge of the respective Officers Troops and Companys." Obedience to the laws and articles of war is enjoined. The wounded are to be cared for at public expense. Punishments are provided for various infractions of this law, at the discretion of a court-martial to be appointed by the captain-general or commander-in-chief. The fines and forfeitures imposed upon any person under the degree of captain go to the captains, "to defray the charge of their Companys or Troops." They are to be levied "before the next Exercising day By distresse and Sale of the Officers goods the Captains warrant to the next Sergeant or Corporal and If no distresse be found the punishment to be by riding the wooden horse or being tyed neck and heels not exceeding an hour . . .

No one is allowed "to fire any small arms after Eight of the Clock of the Morning or Twelve at Night or at any other unlawful Occasion." In such cases, the firing of four muskets or small arms, or (where there are great guns) the firing of one great gun and two muskets or small arms, distinctly in each case, and the beating of a drum, "shall be taken for an alarme." In case of such alarm, "every Souldier is immediately to repair armed to his Colours or Court of Guard," under penalties for failure. Persons, including shipmasters, giving false alarms are to be punished and fined; but this does not apply to any captain or officer of ships of war when "firing att setting of the watch." Trumpeters and drummers are to receive annual salaries, the former of 40 shillings and the latter of 20 shillings each. All members of the militia are to "take up the seas, justices of the peace, sheriffs, coroners, officers of courts, ministers, schoolmasters, physicians, and "Chirurgoons," are exempt from military service. - Col. Laws N. Y., I: 231-36. See also note referring to this act in Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grober Ch., reprint, 1894, pves). This act, and an additional one of Oct. 18, 1705 (Col. Laws N. Y., I: 454, were repealed by an act of Nov. 27, 1702 (v. 4), which, however, re-enacted many of its provisions.

Under this law, Ingoldeby's grenadiers and fusiliers are said to have been organized.-See article by Chas. S. Clark in The Eng. Hist. Rev. Feb. 16, 1926.

Slaughter recommends to the Earl of Nottingham (principal secretary of state) that "If his Matye Soll please to graut his pardon for all except Jacob Leisler and Jacob Musbourn it will be a favour, and all care shall be taken of their estates to be at his Majesty disposal, tho' some of them are scarce worth anything."- May 6 N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 756-66.

Slaughter replies to the lords of the privy council regarding the petitions, memorials, and affidavits, for and against Leisler, which they sent him, on Oct. 17, 1690 (q.v.), to investigate. He says: "I have examined and enquired into the Allegations contained in the address of [May 19, 1690, in which Leisler is referred to as an 'Insolent Alien'] from the Merchant Traders and Principal Inhabitants of New York to their Majesties [see N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 748], and do find them severally true." He sends, with this reply, a copy of the memorial which Blagge (Leisler's delegate to England) had written to the king (see ibid., III: 738). This memorial Slaughter had received previously an doc was he was required to investigate; and he returns it with an answer prepared by Bayard and Nicolls.

This answer of Bayard's, which Slaughter evidently intended as an expression of his own opinion also, reviews the facts and circumstances as seen by the opponents of Leisler, showing many alleged errors, falsehoods, and illegal proceedings which he is said to have been guilty of. Among the many allegations are the following: That Leisler "made to himself a Broad Seal wch he called y'd Scale of y's Province, with y's usual arms of Kings of England, and affirmed the same to unlawful grants of land within this Province" that he commissioned, under this seal, justices of the peace, "to whose hertes were mischeif" that he constituted "Courts of Oyer and Terminer," and tried several subjects for alleged treason, murder, and other crimes; that he taxed and levied money upon the king's subjects "to their grievous oppression and great impoverishment" that he "for each of the said justices of the peace, and person listed in the New York City regiment, except a commissioned officer or sergeant, may furnish an approved substitute to act in the nightly guard and watch in this city."

Referring to more recent events, the answer recites that Leisler "gave orders to y'd blockhouse (a fortification at y'd opposite corner of y'd City) where he had a strong guanguard command under him, by one of his Lts Brazier) to suffer no soldiers or others to appear armed before y'd same, and if otherwise to fire at them; said he would do y'd same from y'd Fort, and at length contrived to sally out upon y'd towne and kill all y'd should be found in the streets or elsewhere in arms, and accordingly orders and a sign was given to y'd Blockhouse. He shot a karsmen throw the shoulder being in sight of y'd Fort with his karts loaded, and refusing to carry his load thither, and kill'd the karsmen horse; fired great guns through several houses of the Citty, particularly throw the house where he understood their Majesties soldiers and ammunitions was hoildge; kill'd one Josiah Browne an old soldier, one negro and a great many subjects of y'd state; one person list in the New York City regiment, except a commissioned officer or sergeant, may furnish an approved substitute to act in the nightly guard and watch in this city."

Slaughter writes to the lords of trade, reviewing the incidents that have happened since his arrival. He acknowledges receipt of their order to appoint Mr. Graham recorder of the city and attorney-general; but he states that, before Mr. Graham's arrival, Mr. Finch, one of the council, desired the place of recorder and was appointed on the request of the rest of the council. Also, one Newton was nominated attorney, "the affairs calling for a speedy settlement of Officers in order to the quieting the people." Slaughter adds that, "if it bee their Lordshipspes pleasure they shall be readily obeyed." Regarding Leisler, Slaughter states: "I am much solicited to execute the said commission but am resolved first to know their Majesties Pleasure if by any other means I can keep the people quiet."

He states: "I have written to my Lord President agreeable to the address to pray that the next Provinces of Connecticut and the Jerseys may be added to this Government for the better defence and support of each other."

It appears from the letter that the public post is now in operation between New York and Virginia, for he states: "The当事 passage of the Post to Virginia will now allow us to transcribe the Acts of Assembly."-N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 766-68. This is the
The common council order “that Mr Schuyler and Mr Colker be appointed to Enquire of Mr Cortland what Security was given by Mr De La Noy att his Entry into the Treasurers office.”—M. C. C., I: 277. Peter Delaney was appointed city treasurer by the common council Oct. 19, 1685, and was specifically named as such in the Dougans Charter. He continued to be treasurer even after he was elected assistant alderman in 1687, and as one of the Leisler faction became mayor in 1689. “With Leisler’s fall it was a completely altered municipal government that began to “Inspect the Revenues” in 1691, and try particularly to learn about the accounts, apparently with little satisfaction. After his death, his widow claimed £170, “by him disbursed for the publick Benefit.” A search for accounts to audit was again made by four different committees, apparently without avail. Very likely it was the widow Delanoy, rather than the city, that suffered because the city office was guarded by no rules.

See Peterson & Edwards, N. Y., “on 18th Cent. Municipality, 30-31, citing M. C. C., II: 89, 99, 113, 189: III: 52. It was not until 1710 that the treasurer was obliged to give bond, after a committee had reported that the “disorder of the City Affairs and Acts… hath Cost the Corporation [in Law suits &c; besides all Other Grievous Charges Damages and Losses] upwards of £200.”—M. C. C., II: 401-2. Also see May 13, 1710.

The council orders that arms taken from citizens of New York during the late troubles are to be returning.—Cal. Colon. Min., 65.

The first entry in Ledger No. 1 of the chamberlain’s office bears this date (see Pl. 10, Vol. IV). The original volume is now on deposit in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and its text was published in the society’s Collections, in 1909.

The legislature passes “An Act declaring what are the Rights and Privileges of their Majesties Subjects inhabiting within their Province &c.” It refers, particularly, to “several Members of the Assembly.” The assembly is to meet once a year. Every freeholder in the province and freeman in any corporation shall have a vote in electing representatives. New York City and County are allowed four representatives. The act also defines the character of the laws that shall not be passed, and thereby defines the rights of individuals.—Col. Laws N. Y., II: 244. See also note in Laws of Acts, Bradford ed. (Groslier Club reprint, 1894), p. 200. This act was the Charter of Liberties of 1683, with modifications relative to churches. It met the same fate as before. The king vetoed it in 1687. The real reason for this was that this bill of rights vested supreme power and authority, under the king, in the governor and the people by their representatives.—Winser, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 195.

The legislature passes an act to defray the charges for maintaining the poor and preventing vagabonds.—Col. Laws N. Y., II: 237. Delaney’s account, Bradford ed. (Groslier Club reprint, 1894), p. 200, note. It was revised Oct. 18, 1704.—Ibid., I: 456.

The council advises that it is necessary that the sentence against Leisler, etc., be carried out.—Cal. Colon. Min., 65. This was “Att A Council held at Fort Will[e]m Henry,” at which were present Gov. Schuyler, Mr. Philemon De Witt, Mr. Henry Fripp, Mr. Philipus Van Cortlandt, William Nicolls, and Gabriel Mouvrie. They resolve unanimously that the sentence pronounced against the principal offenders Leisler and Milbourne be forthwith put in Execution. This is deemed “as well for the satisfaction of the Indians as the assuring of the Government & authority residing in his Excellency & preventing insurrections & disorders for the future.”

—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4to ed.), II: 212. The following day, the May 14th, Leisler, followed by the Minute of Council, thus passed to the assembly. On the 16th, the assembly returned it, with the statement written under it that they “doe approve of what his Excell[ency] & Counsell have Done.”—Ibid., II: 213; Assembly Jour., I: 14.

Slaughter, however, had signed the death-warrant; it appears, on May 14, for the council that waiting a week, much less that of the king.—Eccles. Rec., II: 125; Bradbrook, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 648; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 553. It was said “that a very short time before their Execution they had assurance given to them by the Governor that not a hair of their head should be touched, but the Bayard party having prevailed thereupon advised him at a meeting; however, the same was for the Governor to make him drunk & then prevailed on him to Sign the death war- rant.”—From statement obtained by Du Simtire from a Mrs. Latham, recorded by him in 1790, and pub. in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1866), 445; Eccles. Rec., II: 553-55.

Domine Selyn canvassed the fatal tidings to the condemned men the same evening in “a very strange way.” While they were taking supper, “He said that he had come to bring them good news; that they were not all to die. But said he, addressing Commander Leisler and Secretary Milbourne, both of you are to die on Saturday next, the 16th of May, and you will prepare yourselves accordingly.”—Ibid.

Leisler and Milbourne and their “distress Relacoes” sent another petition to Slaughter for a reprieve “untill his Majties pleasure may be known.” This petition, while unwitting, must have been sent immediately after they were notified, possibly on the following day, May 15, for they stated in the preamble that they had received “notice from yr Excellency that Saturday next [May 16] will be yr Execucion of yr Sentence.”—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4to ed.), II: 213.

Joseph Dudley was appointed chief-justice—Cal. Colon. Min., 65. He was the first to occupy this office in the province of New York. (His name is not listed among chief-justices in the index of the Cal. Colon. Min., 670; but see ibid., 617.) For a sketch of his life, see Judge C. P. Daly’s Historical Sketch of the Judicial Tribunals of New York, from 1623 to 1863.

Leisler and Milbourne are executed. Gov. Slaughter later mentioned May 17, which was Sunday, as the day when the execution occurred; but the weight of authority indicates that this was an error, and that it took place on the 16th, as directed in the death-warrant of the 14th. Slaughter’s statement is in a letter which he intended to send to Soc. Blathwayt of the privy council of England. He said: “the Council and Assembly did represent to me the great damage it would be to the King’s Service and discourage-ment to future loyalty if the law was not executed upon the principal Actors which I was constrained to do and on the 17th of May Leisler and Milbourn, to the great joy of many, received the sentence saving the hangbrig and separating their heads from their bodies.”—N.Y. Cal. Colon. Min., III: 789. Slaughter died suddenly on July 23, and this letter, unfinished, which was found among his effects, was referred by the governor’s council, on July 29, to a committee of that body, with an order to “Correct and amend the same at their own Discretion.”—Ibid., citing “Council Minutes,” VII: 41. They did not amend the date “17th of May” which Slaughter had mentioned, and this letter, signed by the commander-in-chief, Ingoldsbey, and his council, Aug. 6, was sent to Blathwayt.—Ibid., III: 794.

Ingoldsbey, however, in the first communication which he sent to the lords of trade, on July 29, on assuming control of the government, mentioned May 16, as the date of execution.—Ibid., III: 792. The dying speeches of Leisler and Milbourne were recorded as of this date.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4to ed.), II: 213-15. A memorandum made by Du Simtire in 1769, from interviews with those who knew from personal observation or family records, gave the date as May 16—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1865), 476. This seems conclusive.

Moreover, in the long account of the Leisler rebellion written by members of the Dutch Church to the “Classis of Amsterdam, Oct. 1, 1693, in Philadelphia, Nicholas, Stephen Van Cortlandt, William Nicolls, and Gabriel Moviere. They resolve unanimously that the sentence pronounced against the principal Officers Leisler and Milbourne be forthwith put in Execution. This is deemed “as well for the satisfaction of the Indians as the assuring of the Government & authority residing in his Excellency & preventing insurrections & disorders for the future.”

moderation;" and, "after he was in prison and under sentence of condemnation, he exerted his good office with Governor Slaughter, Governor Moore, and Col. Wm. Ewing," the latter states that if Selyns, Van Rensselaer, and Drellius "had done their duty in a similar manner, who does not understand that this murder would have been avoided." Selyns had "declared that unless this thing had been done, neither peace nor unity among the people could be hoped for."—Ibid., II: 1256-57.

The dying speeches of Leisler and Milbourne have been preserved in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4th ed.), II: 215-16, having been printed from the original paper in the possession of Leisler's granddaughter, Mrs. Farmer, who was the daughter of the widow Milbourne and Abram Gouverneur. These speeches are deeply affecting and are full of expressions of Christian piety and devotion to the king of England.

One Thomas Jeffers made affidavit on Feb. 19, 1692, that he "did see the said Capt. Leisler & Mr. Milborne put to death being first hanged and then their heads cut off; and at the place of Execution this depo[s]it did hear the 6 Capt. Leisler declare his innocency and that he died a martyr for King William."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 521; see also the petition of Leisler, 2nd, in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4th ed.), II: 171. Members of the Dutch Church (Eccl. Rec., II: 1297) that a detailed account of the execution was given fully "by certain women a short time after its occurrence, who went hence to Amsterdam," but who they were or where their account was recorded is not stated. Another woman gave a letter from New York to Amsterdam on Aug. 6, 1691, describing the distress which the followers of Leisler were suffering, and expressing the loyalty of all to the king and queen. Her letter was published by Dawson in The Historical Mag. (3d ser., 1875-76), II: 180.

A third woman, Mrs. Latham, made a statement which was reported to Du Simièrè, who recorded it in 1696, describing details of the execution, at which she helped to lay out the body of Leisler. See also May 14.

This woman stated, among other things, that Leisler and Milbourne were "buried in a ground belonging to Leisler to the east of the Commons of the city near the corner of a street called George Street in the new Plan of the city."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 245. "George Street is the present Spruce Street. The exact burial spot is thought to have been near the corner of Park Row and Spruce Street, or between Spruce and Francisco Streets, back of the Tribune building of to-day. Francisco Street, it is believed, was named at this time for Leisler's place of birth. Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., III: 558; see also map by David Grim showing location of Leisler's grave, in Man. Com. Coun. (1856), opp. p. 426; ibid. (1860), 543; and ibid. (1866), 594-97.

It is interesting to observe here that both Brodhead's Hist. State of N. Y. (1879), and Van Rensselaer's Hist. City of N. Y. (1834), give the cemetery near the present city hall as the place of interment for Leisler and Milbourne. The cemetery respects his character and the effect of his revolution upon the later history of the province and city of New York.

One circumstantial detail of Leisler's execution,—namely, the storm which occurred on that day, is a fitting symbol of the national strife which disturbed the peace of the city for many years.—See the reference to this storm in Milbourne's dying speech, Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4th ed.), II: 215; and in the Assem. Jour., I: 14.

It is a curious fact also that, on Oct. 20, 1698 (q. v.), when the bodies were removed from the place where they were buried near the gallows, to be placed under the Dutch Church in Garden St., and the factional feud broke out again (as it did also in 1695, on the reversal of the attaintor of Leisler and Milbourne), the ceremony was conducted "during a very great Snow Storm."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 426. Gov. Bellomont stated that "it blew a rank storm for two or three days together."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 401.

Leisler and Milbourne were the only persons ever executed for treason in the province or state of New York.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., III: 560.

The legislature passes "An Act for the pardoning of such as have been active in the late disorders."—Leisler, Milbourne, Beekman, Grant the pardon. The letter of pardon to Selyns, Van Rensselaer from the provisions of the act.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 1255; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Goliath Club reprint, 1894), p. cviii, note.

The legislature passes "An Act for the Establishing a Revenue for the Defraying the Public Charges of the Province." It establishes customs duties, and excise by a detailed tariff schedule, regulates the entering of vessels and merchandise, and provides especially for entry of wines and liquors.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 248; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Goliath Club reprint, 1894), p. cviii, note.

Col. Joseph Dudley, the chief-justice and a member of the council, is requested by the council to go to the New England colonies and ask for assistance against the French.—Col. Comm. Min., 65. Dudley was president of the court which tried Leisler.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 215. In 1692, he was removed from New York to reside in Boston (Ibid., III: 487-489), and William Smith was appointed by Fletcher in his place as chief-justice (Ibid., IV: 25, 444, 525, 769, 821). See May 15.

Col. Bayard, Col. Smith, Major Ingoldsby, Capts. Cortlandt, Wm. Merritt, Schuyler, de Key, Wilson and Gore, are appointed a committee to inspect the fortifications of New York City.—Col. Comm. Min., 65. See also Feb. 4, 1692.

It is ordered by the court of lieutenanty "that the Rounds Shall goe about the City Every hour of the night after the Beat of the Taptoe & so to Continue till the Beat of the Revalye in the morning." It is also ordered that a search (or inventory) be made "for all the City Pouder that belongs to the Town;" and "that the alarm Post of Capl Schuyler Shall Extend from the City Hall Exclusive that Point to the Spur behind Robert darlins which is to be Inclusive & Carry up to the Mapl breeke from the said Spur to the Land gate the block house Exclusive."—Court of Lieutenancy, N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 406.

Augustine Graham is appointed surveyor-general in place of Alex. Boyle, deceased.—Col. Comm. Min., 66. Graham was employed on a survey in New York City in 1693.—M. C. C., I: 322. He was surveyor-general in 1710.—Col. Land Papers, 91.

Under the authority of the act passed on March 15, 1685 (g. v.), the common council orders that "the Sherriffe Siece all Flower or Bread that Shall come to this City which have been Boilded or baked without [outside] the Liberties of the Same."—M. C. C., I: 270.

See A. B.

The city surveyors are required by the common council to attend the committee appointed "for the laying out the heere grate Street to the Water Side."—M. C. C., I: 231. The order was renewed on Oct. 15—Ibid., I: 249. This was Broad St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1003.

The common council appoints a committee "to build a Market house at the End of the Heere grate Street [Broad St.] for all Butchers Meate."—M. C. C., I: 231. On Feb. 18, 1692, "The New market house at ye End of Broad Street was allowed "for Shambles."—Ibid., II: 120. It was taken down, according to De Voe, about 1760.—Market Book, 77-85.

On its site, in 1725-6 (q. v.), the "New Exchange" was built. See also "Broad Street (Exchange) Market" in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 998. De Voe calls this the 1st Market, which is the same spot that, in the Plan of survey (Pl. 22, Vol. I), a building at the foot of Broad St. was called "Exchange," but that the city ordinances, in 1750, called it the "Market by the Long Bridge."—Market Book, 84. See also July 24, 1758.

A memorandum is entered in the council records: "To the earl of Scarborough, for a license for Henry Leconte, of New York, to manufacture gunpowder."—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 213. Whether it was necessary to obtain this license from England because gunpowder was one of the supplies of war, or because the manufacture in America of all or certain specified articles was forbidden by English law, does not appear. In early Dutch times (1610), New Netherland manufactures in New Netherland were forbidden.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 557. But they began to flourish in the province before 1700, and Lord Cornbury's and Caleb Heathcote's reports of 1706 show that even linen, woolen, and other goods were made, which they thought would be a great profit to England in a time of war.—Ibid., V: 69, 67. For further references to the trade and manufactures of the province, see Dungan's report of Feb. 22, 1689 (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 389-415); also the collection of papers on the subject reprinted in Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 441 et seq., 451-57, covering the period from 1705 to 1768; and Gov. Tryon's report reprinted in ibid. (1852), 575-585.

Slaughter dies suddenly, and the council "unanimously declares Major Richard Ingoldsby to be Commander in Chief, until their Majesties pleasure should be further known."—From the report of Ingoldsby and his council to the lords of trade, July 25.
The Iconography of Manhattan Island

In the middle of time until "Midsummer day" to finish the wharf, under penalty of $10 for failure, the mayor and the council of the city of New York, in the name of the crown, shall hold and set up a wharf, not exceeding 100 feet in length, with walls, steps, and galleries, and all the necessary appurtenances. The bill is introduced in the assembly for regulating the buildings, streets, lanes, wharves, docks, and alleys of the city of New York. — Assembly Journals, I: 16. The bill was assented to, on Sept. 26, by the legislative council, with the amendment that the regulation "be, of future surveys and Grants of Lands, and all belonging to the said City." — Journals, I: 23. On Oct. 1 the bill was passed. — Ibid., 153; Laws of N.Y., (Gaedt ed.), Chap. 18.

The merchants of New York petition that the "Imposition at the Weigh-house may be applied towards the fortifying and repairing the Works about this City." — Assembly Journals, I: 27.

It was immediately ordered for the purpose of making and conveying their representatives setting forth their sense of the Displeasure of Almighty God for their manifold sins by the blasting of their corns," the council orders "that the first Wednesday in every month until the month of June following be Observed and kept a fast day and that Proclamation be issued through the Government to Enjoy the strict Observan thereof, and that all persons be inhibited any servile labour on the said days." — Journals, Leg, Cons., I: 12. Proclamation was issued on Sept. 30 to this effect. — Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 217; Eccles. Rec., II: 1025-27.

The legislature passes "An act for regulating the Damages done in the time of the late disorders and for the protection of their Majesties Subjects that have lately separated themselves from their habitations and the usual places of their abode." Commissioners are appointed for the various cities and counties to receive in writing within 40 days the claims and demands of persons injured by Leisler and his adherents, to hear the answers of the persons complained against, to take testimony, and assess damages. The commissioners appointed for the city and county of New York are Capt. Jacobus von Contland, Peter Jacobs Mius, Lawrence Reed, Thomas Coifortont, and Adolph Phillips. The act states that the absence of many persons from the province on account of the fear of disorder has lessened trade and weakened the strength of the province, besides injuring their families; also that it is necessary that the minds of the people should be "heartyly united," as "it is a time of war and great danger." — Laws of N.Y., I: 261; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grolier Club reprint, 1894), p. cviii. It was repealed May 16, 1699. — Cal. Laws N.Y., I: 386.

An act is passed to divide the province of New York into 12 counties, each county being bounded and described. "The city and county of New York, to contain all the Island commonly called Manhattan'S-Island, Mannaing's-Island, the two Barna-Islands, and all the three Oyster-Islands, and the City of New-York, and the Rest of the Islands, the County," — Cal. Laws N.Y., (Gaedt ed.), 6-7. See also April 20, 1676, Addenda.

The common council orders "a Ducking Stoole to be built forthwith upon the Wharfe before the Town-house." — M. C. C., I: 278. This was evidently not immediately built, for on Oct. 20 another order was issued "that the Sheriff Immediately cause a Ducking Stoole to be built upon the Wharfe before the City hall and goe to the treasurer for his pay" (ibid., I: 255); and, again, on Feb. 4, 1692, an order required "that there be a Pillory Cage Ducking Stoof forthwith built" (ibid., I: 267). The governor's council issued the same order on March 5, 1692 (p. n.). The city records reveal very few instances of the actual use of the pillory, and no instance appears of an offender being caged or condemned to the stocks or ducking-stool. The whipping-post was used several times. — Petersen & Edwards, N. Y., at an 18th Cent. Municipality, 195-98 (1870-76) but Dec. 10, 1691.

Of the original "Mayflower" company, only two were living at this time. These were John Coke, of Dartmouth, who died in 1605, and Mary (Allerton) Cushman, of Plymouth, who died in 1691. A younger generation, accustomed to the leadership of Mass. Bay, accepted, as a part of the union, in this year, of the colony of New Plymouth with its larger neighbour. This took place on Oct. 7, when Increase Mather, and Ashburnham, the resident agent in England of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, obtained from William and Mary a provincial charter, including in its jurisdiction the territory of New Plymouth and the greater part of the region lying east of the present state of New Hampshire, Col. Bayard, Judge Johnson, and Mr. Lyndale are named "to make arrangements for the governor's burial in Stuyvansent's vault." — Cal. Coll. Min., 66.

Maj. Richard Ingoldsby is sworn into office as commander-in-chief. — N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 791; and proclamation is made to that effect.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 213. The council administered the government from July 23, when Sloughter died, to July 27.

Aug. 1. In an address by Gov. Ingoldsby and the council to the king, the English provinces are described to show the territory drawn upon for revenue. Of this city they state: "New York is the Metropolis, is situate upon a barren island bounded by Hudson's River and the East River that runs into the Sound, and hath nothing to support it but trade, which chiefly flows from flowers and the making of the corne the west end of Long Island and Zopus produce; which is sent to the west Indies, and there is brought in returne from thence amongst other things a liquor called Rumm, the duty thereof considerably encreaseth Your Majesties revenue." — N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 796-800.

Ingoldsby commissions John Ashton to be store-keeper of Fort William Henry. — From the original document, sold by Henkel's, Phila. (item No. 392), Oct. 22, 1919. This appears to be the only record of this appointment, the first mention of Ashton in the council minutes being on March 17, 1692. — See Cal. Coll. Min., 70. The office of store-keeper, however, was a recognized part of the military establishment of the province.—See Blathwayte's Jour. (transcript, Lib. of Cong.), I: 563, under date of May 4, 1688.

17. The council decides that a prize is earned by Capt. Kiosk ought not to pay customs duties, because the ship and goods are already "paying the Kings teiths and the Governours fifteneenth." — Council Minutes (Albany).

9. The council ordered the lotts belonging to the City from Burgers path to the foot of the hill by Mr. Beekman be Exposed to Sale. — M. C. C., I: 235; and see Dec. 3, 1686. The annual election was approaching and no steps were taken, but a month later when a new mayor and common council "perused" former resolutions "in order to a further proceeding in the business of this City," they confirmed this same order.—Ibid., I: 243, 249. "In Order to the Sale of the Said Lotts" they were ordered to be surveyed on Nov. 26.—Ibid., I: 257.

"The common council orders that a lease be drawn to Robert Stapleton for "a certain p' of land lying beyond the Smith's hill at the foot of the hill bounded Southward by the Land of Mr. Beekman." It is 40 ft. in front and 22 ft. "Backward into the hill." Stapleton is to pay six shillings a year, and leave a "Convenient Road betwixt his house and high water mark." The term of the lease is to be during the life-time of himself and wife, at the expiration thereof to be made to the City of New York. — M. C. C., I: 217. Stapleton's land was probably between Beekman and Ferry Sts. Its relation to Beekman's house is indicated; but recent researches have failed to locate definitely Beekman's house (the old house and brew-house of Thomas Hole). The "Convenient Road" seems to have been fitting (Pearl St.), as Water St. was not yet opened.—See Pl. 25-3, Vol. I.

"The common council orders that £615 be paid by the treasurer "for Stockadocks and works for the Wharfe." — M. C. C., I: 235. On Sept. 21, it was ordered that "the Stockadocks bee brought into the City yard and Secured for the City Use." — Ibid., I: 235.

19. The buyers of the land bounded by Dock St. are given an exten-
and stretching from the St. Lawrence to the Atlantic. The governor, lieutenant-governor, and secretary were appointed by the crown. Toleration was given to all sects and Papists. The right of suffrage was given to the possessors of a freehold of forty shillings, or personal property of forty pounds.—Macdonald, Select Charters, 205-12.

Sir William Philips was appointed governor. As explained by Winthrop (Nav. & Crit. Hist., III: 228-23; V: 87 & et seq.), "the new monarch followed James's policy of consolidation, and Plymouth found herself fated to be included either in the charter of New York or in that of Massachusetts. Better known than an unknown evil; and accordingly the London agent of Plymouth was authorized to express a preference for union with Boston. . . . Sir William Philips was elected at Boston, and entered upon his duties as governor on May 14, 1692.

Abraham de Peyster is appointed mayor, and sworn in.—M. C. C., I: 238. He was in office until Oct. 15, 1694.—Ibid., I: 370-71. For brief sketch of his life, see Mon. Com. Coun. (1853), sec. 7, Wilson, Hist. of N. Y., II: 531 and inscription on pedestal of his statue in Bowling Green.

The ordinance prohibiting the slaughter of animals within the city limits (see June 7, 1676) is repealed, for some inexplicable reason.—M. C. C., I: 244, 249. One is prepared to hear subsequently (June 25, 1696) that "Slaughter houses in Queen Street North y 8th Gate, A Great Nuisance to the Inhabitants Adjacent by the Noisome Smell of y 8th thereof;" butchering there was stopped.—Ibid., I: 408.

"Merchants, traders, or shopkeepers are required by the common council, when made freemen, to pay $5, the maximum charge allowed by the charter, instead of $21 and fees, as previously charged.—M. C. C., I: 416.

The violent factional differences which developed after the execution of Leisler and Milbourne now become focused upon the question of pardon for those who had been condemned with them. The documentary sources for this information are voluminous. The following references present the main lines of inquiry. A memorial is sent to the king and queen from Holland on Oct. 15, by relatives and agents of those imprisoned in New York, asking that the latter may be provisionally liberated on bail, until they can inform their majesties regarding their connection with the Leisler rebellion.—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 899-12.

Jacob Leisler, 2d, also petitions the king, reviewing the events in which his father and his brother-in-law, Milbourne, figured, and asking "for the preservation of the Six condemned persons & the relief of Your Petitioner & other Poor Sufferers, as also for the preservation & future good Establishment of the said Province." He mentions Ingoldsby, now the commander-in-chief of the province, who "doth continue to exercise great Violence and barbarity against your Majesty's loyal Subjects there."—Ibid., III: 825-26. Vide infra.

Leisler's 2d wife, Mary, is instituted as any means of support for herself and family "for the approaching Winter," petitioned Ingoldsby, about November of this year, for the release of certain property belonging to her late husband's estate.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 224.

On Jan. 7, 1694, "At the Court at White Hall," London, the petition from Jacob Leisler, 2d, was read, complaining that his father and Milbourne were unjustly put to death, six others being condemned but reprieved, and all their estates confiscated. On his plea for relief, the king referred the petition to the lords of the committee for trade and foreign plantations, "to examine the whole case & report y same to his majesty at this board and then his majesty will declare his further pleasure."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 331-32.

Several affidavits from Feb. 19 to March 7, 1694, were made by mariners and merchants of New York, intended evidently to be used in laying claims for damages and losses in the Leisler rebellion, and showing many circumstances favourable to Leisler. The deposition of George Dolstone is especially noteworthy.—Ibid., 341-31.

On March 11, 1694, the queen-in-council, on hearing the report of the Lords of Trade and Plantations which had examined the petition of Leisler's son (referred to this committee on Jan. 7), decided that Leisler and Milbourne "were condemned and have suffered according to Law," but she declared that, "upon the Humble application of the relations" of Leisler and Milbourne, the "will order the estates" of Leisler and "Milburn" "restored to their Families as objects of her Majesty's mercy."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 827. The date here given, March 11, may have been misread by Sir John Winthrop, as it is given elsewhere as "Nov. 9, 1693," in a Letter from a Gentleman, etc. (pub. by Bradford in 1698), 25.

On May 13, 1694, by the advice of a committee of the lords of trade, the queen ordered that the recognizances taken from those condemned with Leisler be vacated and set aside by Gov. Fletcher.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 337-34.

On Sept. 1, 1694, four adherents of Leisler, who were in prison under sentence of death for treason, petitioned the governor and council for pardon and the restoration of their estates. They were Gerardus Beamman, Johannes Vermilyes, Thomas Brasher, and Abraham Gouverneur.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., Vol. 257, N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 333. Fletcher decreed that they were "set at liberty by virtue of Her Majesties Order in Council dated ye 13th May last."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 5. He wrote to Nottingham on Sept. 10 that the king's service in the province was suffering from account of suits for damages brought by those who suffered on both sides of the Leisler rebellion; and added that, "unless a pardon will come over," the province would become a prey to the enemy (the French and Indians).—Ibid., III: 847.

In writing to Blathwayt (sec. of board of trade), on Oct. 5, 1694, Fletcher gave a different version of the petition for pardon. It was his advice that they apply for pardon, and offered to assist them procure it, but they continued "positive not owing their liberty [to] a favour" and did not alter their "Justification of their Crimes." Some of them were even elected to the assembly, an event which Fletcher opposed, and which led them to say that he was "setting up the Arbitrary Power." They "will not own [that they committed] a crime but persist," Fletcher stated, "that what they did was for King William and Queen Mary." He "desires they may be pardoned or Executed."—Ibid., IV: 54-55. This letter was read at the meeting of the committee of trade and plantations at Whitehall on March 12, 1694. The lords agreed "to lay this whole matter before his Maj's in Council," and to move that, for the quieting of these differences in New York, the king should "order a Pardon for the said Persons." This the king granted on March 15.—Ibid., IV: 85.

A new struggle, on the part of Leisler's widow and son, and of the six who were pardoned, now began, to secure a reversal of the attainder whereby their estates had been forfeited and their blood "corrupted." Many affidavits, petitions, and pleas were made, containing statements of fact and arguments for this purpose.—See the printed papers in the N. Y. Pub. Libr. entitled Captain Leisler's Case; Reputed His Royal Father's, etc.对抗 the Passing the Bill for the Reversing the Attainder and An Answer to the Reasons against Leisler's Bill. See also the documents in the case printed in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 334-55. For a brief account of the personal history of Leisler's widow, see Mon. Com. Coun. (1862), 162.

On Feb. 28, 1695, the petitioners were permitted by the king to apply to parliament for reversal of the attainder. Leisler (2d) and Gouverneur then addressed themselves to the house of lords (ibid., 337-38; 339-90); and on May 3, 1695 (q. v.), the attainder was reversed by parliament. In 1696 (q. v.), however, Leisler's followers were kept out of all employment in the government service, and his son was kept out of part of his estate. In 1698 (q. v.), Bellomont took a bold stand in upholding the rights of Leisler's heirs and adherents, his predecessor, Fletcher, having refused to obey the act of parliament respecting them. As late as 1720, Leisler's (2d) had not been fully paid.—See summary, under May 15, 1690.

A committee of the common council is appointed to inspect and determine whether the former order (see M. C. C., I: 106, 225, 234, 235, 249) has been complied with for the Compleating and finishing the Wharfie and Bagging up and Levying levelling Spaces between the City hall and bridge."—Ibid., I: 250. On Oct. 20, this committee reported "that the Wharfie before the several Lotts following are not Completed," the list being given. Time was extended to Nov. 20, and a committee appointed for completing the work.—Ibid., II: 251-52.

An offer of $1000 is made for seven years for the privilege to 20 Long Island is rejected by the common council as not being "the yearly Value of the Same."—M. C. C., I: 254. On Nov. 6, John Arentsen offered $147 yearly for seven years "at Publick Out Cry" and became the ferry-man.—Ibid., I: 253. See June 15.

1691-1692. The income from this source was the largest item in the city's annual credit column at this period. In 1728, the rental was £58. This rental always included the "victualling" privilege at the ferry-house on the Brooklyn side.—Ibid., III: 430. See 1715.

The common council orders that the treasurer pay the committee appointed for disburse, "the Wharf from the City Hall to the Bridge" whatever sum the committee has disbursed for this object.

It also orders "that the Sherriff immediately cause a Ducking Stool to be built upon the Wharf before the City hall and goe to the Treasurer for his pay."—See Oct. 7.

From the ferry-house to two of the assistant aldermen, Wilkon and King. "To do forthwith build a Necessary house for the Vse of the Publicq upon the Wharf before the City hall where they think most Conveniet," and that the treasurer pay the committee for this disbursement.—M. C. C., I: 253.

The ferry is "Earned out att a Publick Out Cry" to John Arietens for seven years.—M. C. C., I: 253. See Oct. 20.

A Quaker minister, Thomas Wilson, arrives in New York by ship from abroad. He records in his journal: "We ... had a meeting there, and from thence went to Long Island, where we had several good meetings with friends." Wilson visited New York again in 1714, noting the event as follows: "From Shrewsbury we travelled to Woodbridge and New-York, and thence to Long-Island, where we stayed the yearly-meeting, which was a large and blessed meetings; from whence we went by water to Rhode-Island, and was at their yearly-meeting in the month of D... From Long-Island to New-York, where we had a large and blessed meeting: the people who were not friends, confessed to the truth."—From A Journal of the Life, Travels and Labours of Love, in the work of the Ministry, of that Eminent and Faithful Servant of Jesus Christ, Thomas Wilson, who departed this Life, at his own habitations near Edenderry, in Ireland, 12th of the third month, 1735. London, 1784 (in the John Carter Brown Library, Providence; not in Evans's Am. Biblog.). This very scarce work appears to supply a missing record in Quaker annals, for Thomas Wilson is not included in the Eccles. Rec., State of N. Y.

The common council orders "that every House in Towne that hath three fire places provide two Leather Buckets and every house of fewer fire places one Leather Bucket." The ordinance also requires that every brewer shall have six and every baker three of these fire-buckets' ready in their houses."—M. C. C., I: 255.

It is ordered by the common council "that Twenty foot further into the Dock at the End next the Bridge and Twenty five foot at ye End of ye Wharf be Exposed to Sale ... the price Sett of Said Land before each man Lott is one Shilling p^ ft & the purchaser to make a good and Substantial Street att the front of their Lott at the five foot breadth and direction of ye roadway." It is also provided "that no buildings be built in the front towards ye Waterside from the Dock to ye State House but that shall be Two whole storeys high and the Gabrell end to be of brick or Stone upon the penalty of Such buildings being pulled down."—M. C. C., I: 156.

The common council appoints overseers of the poor for the next three months. They were "Impowered to receive such persons as they Shall deeme Objects of Charity and to draw bills upon the Treasurer for Such moneys as they Shall disburse for Such Ends."—M. C. C., I: 158. This represents a change of policy in the care of the city's poor. The new officers assume the burden that had fallen previously on the alderman and assistant of each ward.—See Oct. 19, 1685; Oct. 20, 1695.

A committee of the common council is appointed "to Cause the Land before Mt. van Brooken &c to be Surveyed and laid out into Convenient Lotts and make a report thereof to the Comon Council and the Mayor."—M. C. C., I: 258. On Feb. 1, 1693/4, complaint was made that a fence was being set up "in the Highway and Street ... before the door of Mt Brougham." A committee of aldermen was thereupon to stop "any Such trespass," and another committee to "inquire of ye Ancient Inhabitants of this City how long ye Said ground [the present Hanover Square] hath been Vacant & High ways belonging to ye Same and by what right or pretence any person lays Claim to it."—Ibid., I: 308-9. On March 30, 1693, the latter reported the views of various persons, including Mr. and Mrs. Van Brougham," that for at least 50 years "it hath always been Vacant and High ways for the use of the City," and "there hath been nor fence or any thing in that nature about the Said Ground."—Ibid., I: 310. On March 31, "Upon the Petition of the Heirs of Govert Lockerman deceased Concerning the Ground Opposite Mr Vau Brougham's door," a committee was appointed "to View the Ground in Controversie and to Continue the Streets to the former breadth of forty foot."—Ibid., I: 320. Regarding purchase and survey of adjoining land, see Jan. 19, 1693/4.

The common council orders that buyers of land between the bridge and the dock (between the present Moore St. and Whitehall Slip), who are obliged to make the street (the present Water St.) in the direction of the surveyors will do so in the following manner: They shall build a good and substantial stone wall, 3½ ft. at the bottom in "baver one foote outwards on the Outside." They shall protect it from "the rubbing of boates" by driving "Spoyles or Stockades" every 5 ft., and these shall be 7½ in. in diameter, bound together at the top, a 1/2 ft. wide. When finished this wall shall be kept in good repair by the owners of the lots fronting the street or wharf, who, nevertheless, are not to claim any property or interest in the street or wharf, which, instead, is "to remaine to the use of the City." The owners of this land, to fill up their respective i's, are obliged to use either Mudd or Twenty feet high clay scaffoldings. The street or wharf is to be completed in 12 months. The city agrees that no building shall be built in front of these lots.

The common council also orders that the land between Burger's Path and the blockhouse shall be laid out into 13 lots, the first being on the slip at Burger's Path, and the other 12 lots to be each 42 ft. wide. A condition upon which the lots shall be "So Exposed to Sale" is that "they each buyer of a lot Shall fill up ye first of the Said Land with one intire house &c Shall be Two full Storeys high above the ground and the front to the Street to be either brick or Stone." The same form of building shall be "built in the Street next the Seaward;" if any other sort of buildings are erected fronting either street they shall be pulled down.—M. C. C., I: 259-60. See also May 6 and Aug. 16, 1692.

A petition from "the Minister Elders Deacons and Congregation of the Dutch reformed Church in New York, is referred to the common council, desiring that a certain vacan p^ of ground Situate to the Northward of the dwelling house of Cornelius Plouver might be granted unto them to build and Erect thereon a Church for the publick Worship of Almighty God." It is ordered that a grant be given accordingly, and the entire common council, or the major part of them, are made a committee to execute the order, it being provided that all of them who are in town shall be summoned for the surveying and laying out of the land, and shall have power to grant the patent to the church.—M. C. C., I: 260.

In Ferrenance of an Order of Common Counse, bearing date the Eight of December last, a committee of seven, whose duty was the survey lay and Sell a certain Tract of Land lying in Garden Street," reported, on Dec. 17, that they found the land measured 175 ft. English measure on the north side, and 180 ft. more or less on the south side. This land was accordingly "Ordered for the Dutch Church." The consideration is stated to be "one hundred and Eighty Currant p^ of Eight Six Shillings p^ to be paid upon Sealing the Patents." Aldermen Johannes Kipp and Brandt Schuyler accepted the proposal on behalf of the Dutch Church.—Ibid., I: 261.

An abstract of the records of the Dutch Church, dated Dec. 12, 1691, shows that the church resolved to buy this ground for a new church, and to hasten its erection by appointing building masters and persons to prepare a plan. The church in the fort was decaying, and no longer fit for public service. The consistory and great consi ordered close the sit of the Garden St. Church, and appointed Men Jan Simpons, and Jan Simpson. The plot was 80 ft. long, and belonged to the city, by deed from Josa Lawrence and Sara, his wife. The price was £54, to be paid out of the "Trounboch and the Deacons' treasury." The building masters appointed were John Kipp, Brandt Schuyler, and Tomis de Key, whose duty was to procure materials and engage on the work. The records of the church, before 1699, are lost. The Baptist Church, under Rev. Stephen van Cortlandt, Nicholas Bayard, and Adolph Pietersen, were given full power.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1020. The following year the land was conveyed to the church.—See Feb. 19, 1692. The South Reformed Dutch Church, in Garden St., was built here.—Landmark Map of New York, p. 596.

Mention is made (side supra) of a piece of ground situated northward of the dwelling-house of Cornelis Plouver. At this

In this year, the Chevalier d’Aux, an emissary of Frontenac to the Iroquois, drew a plan of New York and its surroundings, as far north as the Collect Pond. This drawing, which is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 22-3, is particularly interesting as giving a good idea of the fortifications existing at this period, and of the road system outside of the walls of the city.

M. Lamothe-Cadillac described Manhattan Island, in memoirs of this time, as follows (translated):

“Manatte, so called when in the possession of the Dutch, is properly situated on a triangular point of land, and on the banks of two rivers, one called the South River and the other the North River. It has four Bastions, and is faced with stone and terraced on three sides; on the North, South and East. Some barricades and the gate are on the west side; the ditch is but a miserable affair, and is almost filled up on the East and North. There is a very fine armory which is in good order; good muskets, fowls, pistols, balharts, pikes, swords, cuirasses. There are 27 pieces of iron cannon around the fort, and four small brass pieces at its gate. It is surrounded by houses on all sides except the South. The roadstead cannot be canvassed without counting, and throwing down almost one entire street. The same is the case on the side of the town which is built of brick and stands on the banks of the two rivers. It is not inclosed either by walls or palisades. There is one wooden wharf but smaller than that at Boston. The Vessels enter the port and are guarded at low water. There may be in the town five hundred men capable of bearing arms, but they could [must] 3,000 men in a short time. Here it must be remarked that there are a great many Quakers or Tremblers who are non-combatants. The Dutch church is in the fort. The garrison consists of 60 men. The population is composed of Calvinists, Lutherans, Anabaptists, Jews, Quakers, Abnhiedens, French Protestants and others. The Church of the Dutch and the Church and freedom of religion. Their trade is made up of beaver and peltries which they buy from the Iroquois; whale oil, pork, staves, horses and tobacco. The people are almost all Dutch; there are about forty English families, and a great many French. This Island is almost entirely cleared. They have Negroes as in Boston. East Northeast, within 120 rods of the fort, lies an Island, on which cannon can be planted to batter the fort or the town. It is clear of wood, and easy of access. This town is much richer in money than Boston. Its principal currency consists of Spanish coin. They have considerable merchandise there also.”—N.Y. Col. Doc., 1859-60, p. 19.

In this year, William and Mary College, at Williamsburg, Va., was chartered.

In this year, persecution for witchcraft culminated at Dauvers, Mass., in the judicial murder of several persons of blameless lives. Sir William Phips, governor of Massachusetts Bay, organized, with the advice of his council, a special court for the trial of the accused. By the organization of the superior court, the special one for “witch” trials was suspended. The general court having by an act made witchcraft a capital offense, the king vetoed it, but convictions did not end, under the prevailing force of public opinion, in the face of efforts by the Mathers and other ministers to sustain the frenzy, until more than twenty persons had been executed.

In this year, William Kidd, captain of the Antigua packet ship, trading between New York and Loozdon, married Sarah, widow of John Oort, a sea captain in regular trade. Immediately after, he resided in Hanover Sq., then one of the best portions of the town. “The domestic furniture of the house occupied by Captain Oort had been purchased in bulk from the representatives of the estate of William Cox, one of the leading flour merchants of the city; and upon the marriage of the widow Oort with Captain Kidd, the terms of the contract are to be happily compared with that of any household establishment in the city.” For inventory of the furniture, see Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 515.

To this year, George Keith, in Philadelphia, having charged the Friends with a departure from their pacific principles by aiding in the capture of John Christian STM, a Quaker, charged with the murder of two other persons, the latter of whom William Bradford, who supported his doctrines and had printed his pamphlets, became involved. His press and materials were seized, and he, with McCobb, his associate, was imprisoned, but released after a trial. In the next year, after Bradford came to New York (see April 10, 1691), he published, without revealing the author, an account of the trial, which took place in December, 1692. This was entitled New-England’s Spirit of Persecution Transmitted To Pennsylvania. See copy of this scarce work in N. Y. Public Library. From it we learn that “…on the soil of Pennsylvania, the latter of our press asserted, in 1692, with a precision not since surpassed, a principle in the law of libel hardly then conceived anywhere, but which now protects every publication in much of our Union Government.”—From Hildersham’s chapter in Mem. Hist. of N. Y., I: 256; and see his Sketches of Printing and Publishing in Colonial N. Y. (1895).

A letter from Ingoldenby and the council to Lord Nottingham refers to the arrival of “the Albany Post.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 112.

A letter from the council to Lord Nottingham refers to the arrival of “the Albany Post.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 813. Another letter of this date refers to “the Land Post from Long Island.”—Ibid., III: 814. These letters indicate that a post-ride was in regular operation between Albany and New York.

Although the old water gate was reported to be “all down” in 1688 (N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, I: 170, 171), it is still referred to as a familiar landmark in official records. For example, inhabitants of the city “from the Widow Lewis house to the Water Gate” are required by the common council to prove the validity of their patents to “their ground before their doors unto Low Water Mark.”—M. C. C., I: 262. The location of the water gate is shown in the Labadist View (Pl. 17).—See outline key, Vol. I, opp. p. 153, and description, p. 225 (landmark No. 71). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 169-70.

The custom-house is out of repair; on Feb. 22, the council ordered that it be repaired.—Col. Coun. Min., 69-70.

The committee of the governor’s council appointed to inspect the city’s fortifications endeavours to secure the co-operation of the common council in matters of finance. The latter appoints a committee which, in conjunction with Col. Bayard and some captains of militia, reports that the charges “…may amount to the Sume of Two hundred pounds besides great Guns powder and Ball.” A proposal that the common council contribute “Twenty or Thirty pounds towards the repairing Said fortifications” is rejected, but they are ready “to go on and support the same.”—M. C. C., I: 265, 267, 268. The governor’s council decided (March 19) to appropriate the revenue of the wharf-house to this purpose.—Col. Coun. Min., 70, 71; M. C. C., I: 269-71. By an order of the common council, on April 4, all inhabitants from 15 years upward “not listted in the trane bands,” also all servants and negroes, are required to appear, upon notice from the captain of each ward, “at the time and place appointed by the Military officers and afford their labour with Shoveles pick ax Wheel barrow and other needful Instruments towards the repairing and mending of the fortifications of this City or under another man in his Room or to be approved of by the Captain in the penalty of three Shillings,” etc.—M. C. C., I: 269, 270, 271.

A committee of the council is to view the fort on Aug. 31 regarding the repairs.—Col. Coun. Min., 75. “The Accounts of Several Disbursements to the Fortifications of the City New York,” from March 29 to Oct. 3, 1694, signed by N. Bayard, show the expenditure of $29611.11 for stockades, store, etc. (See April 3, 1693). These original accounts are preserved in metal file No. 1, city clerk’s record-room. On Nov. 12, the account of Henry Ford, for carpenter work in the fort was ordered paid.—Col. Coun. Min., 78. On Dec. 15, Nicholas Bayard was paid for gun-carriage wheels.—Ibid., 79.

A petition of Ariam Cornealdus, regarding land “lying nigh the Borde containing about five or Six Acres,” is referred to a committee.—M. C. C., I: 264. The Borde or Borre was a part of the Bowery Road.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 476. See also Sept. 16.

“The common council orders that there be a Pillory Cage Ducking stool forthwith built,” and it appoints a committee with the sheriff “for finishing the Same,” with power to draw upon the treasurer for the charges.—M. C. C., I: 267. See, further, March 5.

On examining “Daniel Ven Vos his Patent,” the common council is of the opinion that “all the land without the Wall belongs to the City.”—M. C. C., I: 264.

Royal letters patent are granted to establish post-offices.—See Addenda.

The old and new market-houses are to be let.—See Addenda.

At “the late fire in the fify” several buckets were lost. An order of the common council is issued for the town crier to give notice that buckets be restored to the owners through the mayor, on pain of prosecution for neglect.—M. C. C., I: 266-67.
Steps are taken for building a Dutch church in Garden St. "In Feb.

19 1692 Persuance to a former Order of Conion Councell hearing date the 17th December 1601" (see Dec. 8, 1691), Mayor Abraham de Blatthy and Conion Councell present the congregation of the Dutch Church, "certain a Lott or Toft of Ground in Garden Street for Erecting of a Church for the Service of Almighty God." Bayard's bond is taken for £100, binding himself and heirs to use the lot only for building a church or houses for pious and charitable uses, not to assign it to any other person or persons, excepting, "on the Tenouer" that it shall be so used.—M. C. C., I: 366. 26

The date of the conveyance to Bayard is elsewhere mentioned as Feb. 4.—Eccles. Rec. II: 1031. Bayard conveyed the land to the church-masters on Feb. 27, at a nominal yearly rental, to be held in trust by them for the church. This conveyance describes the lot as 84 ft. deep, north of the orchard of Elizabeth Driisius, widow, and bounded on the west by the lot of John Henry Bruyn, and on the east by the lots of John Sylphers and David Hendriks.—Ibid., II: 103132. The location was on the north side of Garden St. (now Exchange Pl.), about midway between the present Broad and William Sts.—Man. Com. Com. (1866), 543; see also Pl. 25a, Vol. I.

There is no record of the date of laying the corner-stone. On March 9, it was resolved by the church authorities that the moneys of the consistory, of the deacons, and of collections made at any church service to be the brought in and put into the General Chest; and that the Deacons be required to take out as much money as practicable, without injury to the poor, for the building of a New Church, to be erected when required.—Eccles. Rec. II: 1034—7.

The legislators, Sylva, Varick, and Dellius, writing to the "Classis of Amsterdam" on Oct. 12, 1692, stated that, "During this year of troubles, a new church edifice of stone is in course of erection, outside the fort and larger than the old one."—Ibid., II: 1043. On Dec. 30, "Rev. Selyna" wrote of the "newly erected church," which he thinks of "consecrating the next day."—Ibid., II: 1046. The "town" or "tor" had not been built, however, as late as Nov. 14, 1694 (q.v.), nor even begun until after the congregation was incorporated in 1696.—See June 5, 1695, and May 11, 1696. In the Revolution it was used for a time by the British as a hospital; and on Dec. 7, 1783, was reopened for public worship, and used until 1807, when a new church was erected on the same site. The last church was destroyed in the great fire of Dec., 1835.—See Chron. under the foregoing dates; also Hist. Sketch of the South Church (1837); and Landmark Map Rep. Key, III: 936.

There was a blockhouse "upon Smiths Valley" when Leisler was in control, see March 6, 1691, which was referred to in an affidavit of this date.—Doc. Hist. N.Y. (q. v.), II: 231. On May 6, 1692, it was evidently still in existence, as it was referred to in an order of the common council that lands at Smith's Fly be sold, "from the Blockhouse unto the hill next Mr. Beekmans."—M. C. C., I: 273. The "fly blockhouse & half moon" appear as landmark No. 188 on the Miller Plat of Sections 1 and 21, as shown on Vol. I.

(= 1,012:6) (£2,484:8) (1847) (in New York) he is paid to Robert Livingston or his order, in order, to satisfy a mortgage held by him against Col. Dongan. In a petition for relief, Dongan stated: "That he hath Mortgaged all his Estate for Debts contracted & Money Expended in the Service of the Crown of England against the French which Estate will be forfeited in May next unless in the meantime redeemed, his person being likewise in daily hazard of being arrested on the same [q.v.]." The entire amount excepted was the "Sum of Support of the Government of that Province & in the Warr against the French and Indians of Canada which was successfully carried on by him" was £10,174:1013; the amount of the previously mentioned mortgage having been spent by Livingston for provisions for the forces. Dongan claims that, in all, £10,1741013 is due to him, but the step now recommeded is that the covers release from the mortgage.—Blaithwaite Jour. (transcript), I: 644-646; cf. Gov. Nicolls's expenditures, April 7, 1666.

By order of the governor's council, the cemeteries are to do duty at the fort on the work of repairs.—Cal. Com. Min., 70. In 1691, they were far from conveying the命令原地 by Col. Dongan, of carrying 104 loads for nothing.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eks., 117.

Mar. It is recommended to the committee of trade and plantations that James Graham be paid a salary of £120 as services for collector of revenue in New York for the year 1657, when, according to the report of Gov. Slaughter, the revenue was improved "during the Petcon's Management in the Province,"—Blaithwaite Jour., 5th ed., I: 646-647.

Rev. John Miller, M. A., is commissioned chaplain of the two companies of grenadiers in the colony of New York. He arrived in New York in the summer of this year.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 182; Eccles. Rec., II: 114. 1696.

A commission is signed at Westminster appointing Benjamin Fletcher, Esq., to be governor of New York. Instructions, signed at Kingston on March 7, accompany the commission.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 818—24, 825—33. For an estimate of Fletcher's general character and characteristics, see Winsor's Nat. &Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 193.

This day is made one of thanksgiving throughout the province to celebrate the success of English arms in America, Ireland, and Turkey, and especially for "the preservation of our frontier at Albany against the French and unbelievers."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1034.

Rev. John Miller, of New Jersey, his deputy for all the plantations.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 190, footnote by O'Callaghan, citing New York Commissions, II: 41-42. Hamilton brought the subject before Gov. Fletcher and the New York legislature in the following October (see Oct. 29, and Nov. 11, 1692), and they immediately passed an act for "encouraging a Post Office."—Ibid., citing Coun. Minutes, V: 52-66. O'Callaghan states that "The credit of devising this scheme for the establishment of post offices in the Colonies belongs, therefore, to Governor Hamilton, and not to his son John, as some suppose."—Ibid. For the history of the method of postal regulations during the Dutch régime, see Aug. 6, 1632. The first post-office in New Netherland was inaugurated at the office of the provincial secretary in New Amsterdam. For details see Aug. 6, 1632. Lovelace, in 1672-3 (q. v.), revived the system; as did also Dongan on Aug. 27, 1684 (q. v.), and March 2, 1685. Hamilton was still deputy postmaster in 1699, in Bellomont's time (N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 294); and "Col. Hamilton" in 1717. (Boston News-Letter, Sept. 23—70, 1717.) A report from Blaithwaite to the committee of trade and plantations indicates the ignorance of the Finance Department in England regarding the revenue of the province during the Leislerian revolution. In June, 1689 (see June 20, 1689), "Capt. Leiser [Leisler] having turn'd out the Lieut Governor of New York and Sei'd the Government into his own hands the Petcon [Peter Delany] was appointed by the said Leiser to receive the Publick Revenue of the said Province," and a description of no. 2 on p. 2, in Vol. I.

rections of the Committee for the Laying out of the Lots at the May Smith's Flies."—Ibid., 11: 274. For report of the committee on sale of the lots in the blockhouse and Beekman's, see Aug. 9.

Pine, Cedar, and other street trees, were then eventually laid out through the old Damen Farm, which was bounded on the north by the present Maiden Lane and on the south by Wall St.—Valentine, Hist. City of N. Y., 212; Lamb, Hist. City of N. Y., I. 402. Crown St. (later called Liberty St.) is one of these. The present John St. and Pearl St. were laid out as a narrow street along a lane leading to the residence of Mrs. Van Clyn from the high road (Pearl St.), and was called Golden Hill.—Man. Com. Soc. (1850), 447-48. See Dec. 17, 1685.

A tablet, erected Nov. 24, 1911, by the Am. Scenic and Historic Preservation League on the north side of Maiden Lane, near Broadway, recites that this street was "Laid out as a Street in 1691." There appears to be no supporting authority for this statement. The lane is referred to as 't Maagde Plaetz as early as Nov. 25, 1687 (q. e.), and appears to be shown on the Duke's Plan of 1661 (Pl. 10, Vol. I.), and the Nicolls Survey of c. 1665 (Pl. 10-a). The name Maiden Lane first appeared on the Miller Plan of 1695 (Pl. 23-a). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1905; and an article by Albert Ulman in N. Y. Tribune, July 9, 1911, also his address at the dedication of the tablet, in the Report of the Am. Scenic & Hist. Preservation League (1911), 52.

"At a Court Marshall held at the house of Major W[illiam] Merritt, New Yorks," it is ordered "that the Guard house in the Mount Holanda be made a Prison for the Misdemeanours of the Lieutenant of this City;" and also "that Lt. Col. Monville & Capt. Thomas Clarke see that the Guard house in the Mount above said be completed and fitted a Pratom as aforesaid."—Records of the Court of Lieutenant, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 410.

The council resolves that the commander-in-chief, Col. Richard Ingoldsby, shall go to Albany with "some househounds regimine to meet the Five Nations. On May 14, Col. Thomas Willett was directed to detach a company of New York militia as escort, but later reported that he could not furnish it. The council, or five of its members, are to administer the government in Ingoldsby's absence.—Cal. Com. Min., 72. He returned on June 16.—Ibid., 72.

Charles Ludwick gives an account of New York in a letter to his uncle, Francis Ludwick, and one Mr Hooker, members of the Royal Society of Great Britain. It was read before that society Nov. 26, 1715. For his failure to write sooner ("it is now full 4 years since I rec'd ye Comands to give you what Acc! I was capable of ye Constitution of this Country") he pleads "ye Confusion & Disturbance here among our selves," which "wholly impeded even our Colone Affairs, that for sixt and twenty years, we had in ye Lords, our selves, in all our brains to secure our plunders & that little we had from ye Crueltie & Tyranny of an ungooverble Mobb [the Leisler Rebellion—see May 31, 1693] which by ye peculiar Mercy of God, & ye extended Favour of our Prize, we are in part released from." As for the rumors, he writes: "As for our own people, they collect ye Opinions of our graven Sages here, where my young experience would not let me Conclude . . . MF's [masters] of Ships are ye chiefest Mathematicians & ye Nations Geographers." Regarding the city of New York, he says: "this Island of New York was formerly call'd by ye Natives Manhatanns, is abt 5 leagues in extent, & is an Island by a runn of water fordable at Low water between the 2 forementioned rivers [Hudson River and East River], before ye Town is an excellent Harbour Land-Lotk on all sides, ye Country woody but very pleasant. Our chiefest unhappiness here is too great a mixture of Nations, & Englishmen leading, for forty nine years, we had in ye Late Kings crie reported hither in great numbers proportionally to 10 ye other Nations inhabitants, ye Dutch are generally ye most frugal & Laborious, & Consequently ye richest, whereas most of ye English are ye contrary especially ye trading parts: as to Religion, we run so high into all Opinions, that here is (I fear), but little real . . . . We are ye chief Grainary to most of ye West Indian Islands: . . . ." His further account relates to the cultivated products of the country,—horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, and goats; fruits and flowers; and the native products,—eel, deer, bear, beaver, otter, fox, racoon, mink, etc.; fish; trees and herbs; iron, marbles, etc.; the weather, tides, etc.

"The Country is generally healthy tho' 2 years ago ye small Pox which was very mortal especially to grown people, a sort of pleurisy (not cured but increasing by bleeding) & violent fevers took away a great many . . . . a hott sufferer sometimes caused by ye want of our usual sea breezes causes violent fevers, yet not generally mortal . . . . ye Ague has been lately rife amongst us, tho' with much less cold than in Europe, & ye most Colhon every day.

"The Natives were very numerous att the Christians first sitting down here tho' since, their number is much decreased, by report from one hundred to one: ye small pox took many of them away lately, & they yet daily decrease, some think by their taking to drink. The Iroquois we have from Bachushe distill'd off ye Sugar Cane[s] with they exceedingly covet & will not be satisfied till they are very drunk with it . . . . "

In a letter to Fletcher, who was appointed March 18, the proprietors of West Jersey congratulate him upon his "accession to the "honorable impoly" of governour of New York, adding that they account themselves happy in having so good a neighbour, whose prudence and integrity will, they believe, secure them from apprehension of those mean artifacts [that] have been employed by preceding Gouvernors or their ministers" to encroach upon their legal privileges. They offer to cooperate with him for the common defence and the administration of justice.—N. Y. Col. Dept., III: 549 ff.

The houses and barn at the ferry (on the Brooklyn side), and the "little house on this Side," are let to John Arientsen at 39 per annum.—M. C. C., I: 275. The ferry itself had been let to him previously (see Oct. 20, 1694) for 1147 annually, an agreement which he later called "Rash & unadvised."—Ibid., 1: 355.

Ingoldsby informs the Duke of Bolton of the "clamour and stir by the fugitive relations of Leister."—N. Y. Col. Dept., III: 845 ff.

The council directs that John Perry's post be paid for carrying dispatches to Virginia.—Cal. Coun. Min., 73.

"At a Court Marshall . . . at the house of Majr. Wm. Merritt," it is "Agreed that Capt. Shyler's Allarmed Post shall begin from the West end of the Pearl Street to the Battery before the Stade House Inclusive," and "that of Capt. Clarke to begin from the West End of the Pearl Street to the gate in the broad way."—Records of the Court of Lieutenant, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 410.

"At a Court of Lieutenant held . . . at the house of Major William Merritt," it is "ordered that there be an Artillery Compn. of the Train bands of this City consisting of the Commission Officers Staffe Officers and Corporals who are to meet every Saturday in the afternoon Completely armed as the K, or other directors by beat of the Drumme at the 30 to 40 part of the hoare, who are to be under the command of the officer of the Day,"—Records of the Court of Lieutenant, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 415. See also Mount Selandia in Landmark Map Ref. Key, Addenda, Vol. V.

"Evidently for the encouragement of the ferry enterprise, the common council orders "that no person besides the ferryman shall bring any passengers or any other charge of the Same to the Ferry by any means from any place between the red hooke and the Wall about." The offender is required to "forfeit for every Such offence the Sume of twenty Shillings one half to the use of the ferry man and the other to such officer of this City or others that shall Informe of the breach of this order." The new ferryman is John Arion.—M. C. C., I: 576.

The committee appointed May 6 (q. e.) to sell the lots "from the Blockhouse [Wall St. unto MF Beekman [Pearl and Fulton Sts.]," reports that it has done so on certain conditions; that there were 15 lots; that they were "Exposed to Sale by a publik auction to the highest Bidder" on May 27, that the purchaser was required to build a Wharffe or Street the Outer part whereof to be layd to low water mark of thirty foot broad to be layd in a frame with Stockdades as the Surveyours Shall direct which Said Wharffe the Purchaser shall be obliged to finish by the first of November" (1693). The names of the buyers of the lots, the prices paid, and the names of the surveyors were entered in the Minutes.—Ibid., I: 278-79.

"It was further agreed with the Purchasers of the Lots of the Smith fyl[e] that the City doe make the Several Wharffes following (Vizl)! That is to Say one Wharffe fronting to King Street which wharffe is to be thirty foot wide equal with all purchasers. As also two other Wharffes to be builded in the Said City, one on each side Maiden Slipp &[later known as the Fly Market Slipp—Landmark Map Ref. There is a record in the City Grants, Libei A, 91-142, showing the conveyance of nine lots, one to each of nine grantees, extending from Smith's ferry, and on both sides of Pearl St., between Fulton and Wall St.) to low-water marks, with the obligation that each of the grantees shall make a wharf or street (Water St.) 50 ft. in width along the outward end of his lot. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1826), 530.

The buyers of "in the Smith's flye," having applied to the common council for permission "to Digg the hill by MF Vreckman," to contain which, are permitted to "digg and Leuel [level] So much of the said hill as belongs to the City as the Cofton or high way as the Surveyors of the City Shall direct."—M. C. C., I: 250.

The common council orders that all former laws be confirmed regarding the restrictions on "the bringing in" of bread or flour for sale or transportation, unless it shall have been baked or baked elsewhere.—M. C. C., I: 282.

No orders to be issued for a day of thanksgiving for a naval victory (La Hogue) over the French and the discovery of a plot against the king and queen.—Col. Com. Coun., 75. Preston, Ashton, and Elliot, Jacobite conspirator, were arrested en route to France, Dec. 31, 1696.—Macaulay, Hist. of Eng., V: 545.

Governor Demories set on shore the "Wolf" at Sandy Hook on the 28th, and dropped anchor "under the Fort" on the 29th. He is conducted to the fort by the council, mayor, aldermen, and other magistrates, and by the militia under arms, with "Acclamations and Singing."—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 856. This reception is evidently part of the "Treaty" which, it was ordered by the common council, should be given, at an expense of £20, to welcome him.—M. C. C., I: 282. The council records show that all officers, civil and military, were continued in Office.—Col. Com. Coun., 75.

The proceedings of the governor's council of this date are entered in the Minutes of the Common Council, showing the enactment of the recommendation of the lords of trade that James Graham be made recorder of the city. Graham's commission, also dated Sept. 3d, and bearing the broad seal of the province, is entered in full. The council thus restores him to his former office, in spite of "his Discontinuance in Col. Slaughters time" (see Dec. 4, 1683).—M. C. C., I: 282-84. He was sworn in Sept. 12, 1692.—Col. Com. Coun., 76. See also Oct. 26, and Nov. 29, 1700.

10. Fletcher reports to the Earl of Nottingham that he has suspended Sheriff Encdecorde from the council, as they reside outside the province. One was judge and the other recorder. His opinion is that "those who bear no part burthen should eat no share of our bread." He purposes making Mr. Smith (of the council) judge, if Mr. Dudley of Boston will not reside here.

He also states: "The Shops of warr sent by Mr Slaughter are much Embazoned... The Fort decaying, the house out of Repair Scurrely habitable."—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 847-48.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for the restraining and punishing Praverters and Pirates." This refers to "any person who now doth or hereafter shall inhabit in or belong to this Province." It is made a felony for him "to serve in America in an hostile manner under any foraigne Prince State or Potentate in Amity with their Maties without Speciall lycence for so doing."—Col. Laws N. Gov. Fletcher, having proposed "y^e" building of A Brick att Spikeydervit, and having given to "this City y^e preference there of, for the better accommodation & advantage, which may Acren thereby to y^e Said City," the common council votes to accept the offer. C. C., I: 290. On Jan. 12, they presented an address to the governor, and stating him, and stating that it cannot be well Accomplished without A Great Charge, unto this City, which att present are not Soe Capable to Defray," and asking that Frederick Phillies be granted to build a permit in one year. "A good and Convenient draw bridge for the passage of all Travellers, Drovers of Cattle, &c." The year before the passage of Captain William Penn received tolls from all passengers and droves of cattle that shall pass thereon according to rates hereinafter mentioned. The patent further recites Phillips's willingness to build the bridge at his own expense (it being also referred to as "a dam bridge") and the schedule of tolls is given below. From the Minutes of the Town of New Amsterdam in the book of Walter Co, p. 160 e. See also Kingsbridge in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 326. Augustine Graham is sworn in as surveyor-general of the province. — Col. Coun. Min., 86. See July 4, 1691. On Oct. 19, 1700 (4 e.), he was replaced by Pieter Cortiule (Cortelou).

Feb.
It is ordered by the common council "that y^e Recorder draw up an Address to his Excellency to desire their Majesties grant of Confirmation of the Charter of this City, together with y^e Ancient privileges; That y^e Mayor for y^e time being may be Clerk of y^e Market, Water Bayly and Corner, & that Boulting of Bower, & baking of bread for transportation, may be Confedit to the City only as formerly." — M. C. C., I: 299. Application for confirmation of the charter was first made Feb. 23, 1687; — Ibid., I: 187. The common council was ready to present the new address to Fletcher on Feb. 8, and sent him word that they were at the city hall and waited for this Excellency's leisure for that purpose. — Ibid., I: 310. The next day, the mayor, recorder, and assessor went from the city hall to the fort and presented it to him, and it was entered in full in the Minutes. — Ibid., I: 311-12. Dunlap has called attention to the suppliant and slavish style of this address. — Hist. of the New York. (1840), II: Appendix, cxxii. A committee of the governor's council was appointed the same day (Feb. 9) to consider it. Their report, if any was made, does not appear of record. Over 30 years later, another petition for a confirmation of the charter was inaugurated by the common council when Montgomery was governor. — See March 21, 1730. The common council orders that "to Beef or pork be Shipped out of this port, but what Shall be repacked, by the Sworn Packers of this City." They shall "put their mark" to good and wholesome meat only. — M. C. C., I: 310. See Jan. 14, 1680. The regulations remained for decades the law of the city in the packing industry. — Ibid., I: 309, and Sept. 20, 1700, M. C. C., I: 311.

During the year 1692, considerable work of repairing was done at the fort, as appears by the records of payments in the transactions of the governor's council:

Feb. 9 — To Henry Ford for carpenter work and to Dirck van der Buur for work before Fletcher's arrival; to angular for work after his [see].

March 17 — " Col. Stephen Cortlandt for carpenter's services.

June 10 — John Cooley for blacksmith work.

July 27 — Henry Ford for carpenter work.

Aug. 17 — Wm. Nicolls for sodwark; and to Nicholas Bayard for iron to mount the great guns.

Sept. 1 — To Nicholas Bayard for wheels for the great guns; and Sept. 20 — To Wm. Beckley for horse shoes.

Oct. 5 — To Peter Melett for blacksmith work.

An ordinance for paving the streets is published at the city hall, "after y^e Ringing of three bells." It recites the fact that former orders for this purpose "both at home been much neglected, whereby the Citizens & Sojourners within the City are much Anoyed, and y^e Intercourse of trade amongst the Inhabitants, thereby much Lesned." All the freeholders and inhabitants living in the city, in the respective streets, lanes, and alleys named in the ordinance, shall, before August 1, cause as much of these streets, etc., to be paved as are in front of their respective buildings and lots, according to specified "Dimensions, quantity & Proportion," using "good & sufficient pible Stones," and at their own expense. The streets to be thus paved are: The street commonly called y^e bridge Street between the Corner house, of Lukas Kierens unto the house of Peter D. Lanoy, foot stone measure from y^e Front of each house into the street. The whole Street from Peter D. Lanoy, to the middle of the broad Street, by Farmers. From M\'t Cortlandts Corner house, to the City Hall ten foot. From the City Hall to Martin Clocks ten foot from D. Fletcher to the Mayors inclusive ten feet. From M\'t Lowes house to the City Gate, and Soe up to the Corner of the broad Street, and Soe down to the corner of Albert Rings ten foot. The whole Church Street, the west side of the broad Street from Jacob Mouneys up to Ben Devalls ten foot, that y^e broad way be paved on both sides ten feet, down to MS Smiths on one side, and to Lukas Kierens on the other, and that y^e beaver Street be put in good repair ten foot on both sides, that the Street going down from the Mayors to Walkington be wholly paved. That the Street going down to the french Church be wholly pav'd. That Pearl Street be put in good repair, and Soe pav'd down to white Hall ten foot, that the Street that Hall lives in be wholly pavd. And that Eight Jans, in the broad street pave wholly before her door, And that all y^e pav'd Streets, of this City be put in good and Sufficient repair." An alderman and an assistant in each ward are to supervise the work. — M. C. C., I: 314-16; and see April 9, 1700. See also the law of Nov. 18, 1751. — Ibid., IV: 102-5.

The Bridge Street mentioned in this ordinance was formerly called Brugh Street; it was called Bridge Street as early as 1680 (Liber Patents, V: 9, Albany), and Hall Street on the Miller Plan of 1695 (Pl. 23-a, Vol. 1). It was continued from Whitehall to the West End and called Town Street, 1708-179. — Ibid., XX: 178-79. See also May 2 and 8, 1808; June 26, 1809. Beaver Street is for the first time mentioned in this ordinance; it was the Bever or Beaver's Gracht (grait) of earlier references. — See Liber Deeds, A: 126 (New York); M. C. C., I: 58-59, 61, 112-13, 151.

The common council orders "that y^e Recorder draw up an Adress to their Majesties, Representing the Steps, His Excellency has made, for the quiet of this Government, Since his Arrival." — M. C. C., II: 314.

The city regiment volunteers to accompany Grr, Fletcher on his expedition to the frontiers, and 150 of the fittest men are select ed. The next day they embark on eight sloops near the fort, and set sail for Albany. The governor returned to New York on March 2. — N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 14-16.

The common council presents to Fletcher an address to the king, asking that it be rewarded as soon as convenient. It expresses gratitude to the king for the appointment of Col. Fletcher ("A Gen'l of pious life" when governor), and it praises the governor for restoring order. It reports that, more recently, "Cousl of Dissoion" have been "blown up by St William Phipps." The object of the address is to assure the king of the city's loyalty in spite of attempts to provoke rebellion. — M. C. C., I: 317-18.

A commission is issued to William Smith (see Nov. 11, 1692) to be chief-justice, to William Pinhorn to be second justice; and to Stephen van Cortland, Chilley Brooke, and John Lawrence to be justices of the supreme court. — Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 231.

In an address before a joint session of the council and the house, Fletcher says in part: "Their Maties have a Weighhouse in the city of New York which from time to time hath pay'd a rent unto their Maties. I would it settled upon the Maties by Act of Assembly.

He also states that the king and queen "have ordered a man of war to attend your Coast; sent over 20 ps of Ordinance, small arms and considerable stores of war, & maintain the two Companies of Granadeers, at the expense of their Coiffers in England."

Commissions are offered for a printer to come to New York.

The text of this resolution is as follows: It is resolved in Council that if a printer will come & settle in the City of New York for the making of Acts of Assembly & publick papers he shall be allowed the same of forty pounds Curr$ money of New York $ for annum for his salary & have the benefit of his printing besides what shall be made by the publick.---Coun. Min. (MS), VI: 182 (Albany).

William Bradford, a printer and bookseller of Philadelphia, was appointed.---See Apr. 10, 1693.

Complaints were made to the common council, on Feb. 1, that two inhabitants "were digging of Holes, and Setting up A Fence in the Road between Albany and Street door of Mr. Van Brugh, and a committee was then appointed "to Inquire of y^ Ancient Inhabitants of this City how long ye Said ground hath been Vacant & [deemed] Highways belonging to ye Said and by what right or pretence any person lays Claim to it."—M. C. C., I: 208. They were to make their report to Col. Nicholas Bayard, Van Cortlandt, and others declaring that for as many as 100 years the ground has been vacant and a highway use for the use of the city.----Ibid., I: 319. "Mr. Van Brugh was Johannes Pietersen van Brugh, whose house occupied the centre of the ground now covered by the Cotton Exchange building. The highway referred to was therefore Hanover Square.----See Castello Plan, II: 1391 Jan. 18, 1694.

The common council orders that James Evertts be city surveyor with Adolph Peterson, in place of Peter King.—M. C. C., I: 320.

"Payment is made for work done in the "Guard Room of this City."—M. C. C., I: 311, 315. This is possibly a room used by the night-watch (Ibid., I: 395), or the room in which the Leider was confined before being transferred to the "Common prison."----See Doc. Hist. N. T., (40 ed. I: 204. Reference has also been made to a guard-house in "Mount Hollandia."---See under May 11, 1692.

During Van Twiller's administration (1653-59), the "guard-house with English work and a roof" was built in Fort Amsterdum.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 16. When New Amsterdam became a municipality, the burglar prisoners were evidently kept at the city hall, and the military prisoners or provincial government criminals in the prison within the fort.

"At the house of Majt William Merritt," it is ordered "that every Capl of ye^ Redigent of Militia foot of this City do make A true Account of what powder, Ball, Sponges Ladles and what other things they have belonging to the several and Respective Platt Forms & Block houses they Command and likewise what is wanting and Necessary for ye Defence of ye Said Places and make return thereof to Major Merritt." It is also ordered "that an Address be drawn up to his Excellency ye Governor Representing the Conveniency of Repairing ye Fortifications round this City, And ye^ Income of the Weighhouse of ye Said City May be Appropiated towards Defraying ye Charge thereof, and that Coll. De Peyster take Care ye^ Address be According Drawn.----From Records of the Court of Lieutenancy, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1886), 419.

Bayard's account of "Disbursements towards the Repairing the Fortifications about the City N. York," shows a total expense of "£214.0s.11d." dating from Oct. 3, 1692, when an earlier account was rendered (Feb. 1692), to March 16, 1693.----From the original report in metal file labelled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room.

The legislature passes an act changing the name of Long Island to the Island of Nassau.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 321. Gov. Fletcher had introduced the proposal to make this change, in his message to the "House of Representatives" on March 23, giving as his purpose that the king's name "May live forever amongst you."----Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 35.

A warrant (dated Oct. 12, 1693, p.v.) for William Bradford's salary as public printer for six months recites that it was "due to the 100s proceeding."----Coun. Min., VII: 27 (Albany). See March 21.

Although his term of employment, or rather his salary, began on April 10, the facts at present available do not indicate the exact time when he took up his work in New York. The period begins on Aug. 15, 1692, when he was arrested in Philadelphia for publishing George Keith's Appeal from the Tenures of Feudal Lords to the Spirit of Truth and True Judgment in all faithful Friends called Quakers that met at this yearly meeting at Burlington, 7 mo. 1692, a controversial work, without a license, and April 28, 1693, when Gov. Fletcher finally ordered his release, he spent his time in the custody and house of the Philadelphia sheriff, John White, who, however, seems to have permitted him a considerable amount of freedom, at one time replying to an order to produce his prisoner in court that he was absent from town for a week on leave. Although some of Bradford's "tools" and "letters" had been seized at the time of his arrest, we know that his press continued operation during this period.

The fact that Bradford's salary began on April 10 has been held by most authorities to prove that he took up his work in New York as government printer on this date. On the other hand, it has been argued that he could hardly have assumed his new office in New York before his legal release in Pennsylvania, an argument which is strengthened by the fact that his name does not appear in "A List of all the Officers employed in Civil Offices in the Province of New-York in America the 20th of April 1693 [p.v.], and of their Salaries" (Doc. Hist. N. T., 410 ed., I: 199-200), which list, however, contains the item: "Allowed to a printer $p ann."----p. 420.

Gov. Fletcher undoubtedly instigated the passage of the resolution of March 21, 1693 (p.v.) by the New York executive council, with the knowledge that Bradford had cancelled his contract with the Quakers and that he intended to depart for England as soon as he was released.

For a further discussion of the facts relating to Bradford's first year's work, and the order of his known imprints, see Addenda.

"A provincial act is passed for raising £6,000 to pay 50 volunteers and their officers to be employed "in the Reinforcement of the frontiers of this Province At Albany," from May 1, 1693 to May 1, 1694. The amount to be raised by assessment in the city and county of New York is £4,150. The collectors in the various cities and counties of the province are to pay the amounts collected unto their Majesties Collector and Receiver General at the Majesties Custom house in the City of New York," one half (£2,500) on or before Sept. 29, 1693 (the last day of "St. Michael the Archangel"), and the other half on or before March 25, 1694 (the last day of "the Annunciation of the blessed Virgin Mary").----Col. Laws N. Y., I: 315-16.

"The provincial legislature passes an act requiring that all goods that shall be imported into or exported from this city "shall be first brought unto their Majesties Beam at the Weigh House." It establishes rates and duties upon such goods.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 321; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grolier Club reprint, 1894), p. xxvii, note.

"A List of all the Officers employed in Civil Offices in the Province of New York" is prepared, showing the salaries of a few. Regarding the city and county of New York, Abraham Depeyster is "Mayor & Clerk of the Mercate;" James Graham, the attorney-general, is recorder; Stanley Hancock is high sheriff; and William Bayard, the physicians, surgeons, consuls, and surveyors of highways are elective officers. The organization of the courts is shown. The mayor's court has the power of a court of common pleas. "In each County there is a Court of Common Pleas whered the first in the Commission of the Peace is Judge, between any two of the three next in the commision of the Peace: The Mayor and Aldermen are Justices of the Peace and have power to hold Quarter Sessions in the City of N. York & Albany." The militia of the city and county of New York and Orange, commanded by Col. Abraham Depeyster, consists of eight companies of foot-soldiers and one troop of horse, numbering 477 men.—N. Y. Col. Diet., IV: 25-29.

22 Sarah Burger, widow of John Shakerly (see Oct. 28, 1634), having petitioned the provincial council for land in the possession of the said Shakerly having ordered her to "go with her land or that the Enter into possession of her own land to her own use" (see Col. MSS., XXXIX: 147, Albany), the common council acts upon this order. It "Condemns leading to the Fortification Commonly Called Oyster Pasty, facing to y'th North River and Fronting to y'th Broadway of this City." A committee is appointed "to Enquire what Ground will be proper to be reserved for a Passage or Lane for the use of the City."—M. C. C., I: 321. This "Passage or Lane" became known as the Oyster Pasty Lane or Alley, and was the present Exchange Alley.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 100.

The common council orders the city surveyors, Evetts and Peterson, to lay out the lots bought from the city by the inhabitants of Dock St.—M. C. C., I: 321. On Aug. 11, the owners, in a petition, expressed surprise at finding that their lots were not to front their houses as agreed.—Ibid., I: 323. On Sept. 29, it was ordered that the surveyors lay out the lots "According to the Reciprocity Purchases Granted to them by this City."—Ibid., I: 333-34. On April 18, 1694, the committee of aldermen to whom the matter had been referred reported that this had been done.—Ibid., I: 333.

"Upon Reading y'th Patent of George Heathcoat for A Lot of Ground near the Slaughter house and Another on the East Side of Kings Street in this City, and Whereas his Patent extends but one hundred and forty four foot each Lott in length: Itt is Agreed that y'th Said George Heathcoat Shall have the Rest of y'th Land between the Said Lots and Low water Marke, to Range even with y'th Streets as they shall be Laid out by the Surveyors, and that y'th Said George Heathcoat is to Finish y'th Street or Wharfe Now next, under y'th like Penalties of the rest of ye Purchasers in ye Smiths Fly and with them to have equal Privilege."—M. C. C., I: 322. Heathcoat's patent was a grant from the mayor, etc., dated Sept. 5, 1692, for land bounded east by "Kings (Pine) Street," west, and south by the river at low-water.—Liber City Grants, A: 1:18-41. By this instrument, Heathrate agreed to make a street 30 feet wide, fronting the river. This is "ye street or wharfe" mentioned in the Minims. It was part of the present Water Street.

Gov. Fletcher is commissioned by the king to be commander-in-chief of the forces of Connecticut, with power to transfer them to the province of New York. Sir William Phipps is relieved of the command.—N. Y. Col. Diet., IV: 29-31. This commission reached Fletcher on Oct. 1.—Ibid., IV: 55.

8 Join in a petition to Fletcher, stating that the son of the former and the husband of the latter, both sailors, have been "taken Slaves until Sally [Sale, Morocco] by ye Infidels," and that Fletcher has granted these petitioners a "Briefe" (permit) "to collect and receive ye free & bountiful Charity of all good Christians within this Province for ye redemption of ye miserable Persons," but, as they are not competent to take up this collection, they have prevailed upon the church-warden and ministers of this city to do so, and they now ask Fletcher for a new "Brief" for this purpose, in form similar to one (which they annex to their petition) which was used in 1678, when a vessel was taken by the Turks. The sum required to redeem these captives is £100, as was the case in 1678; and the petitioners propose that if there is any surplus it be delivered as Fletcher shall see fit, and employed for "ys like pious uses." By the advice of his council, Fletcher grants the license (or "Brief") desired. It is announced in a proclamation printed by Bradford in the form of a broadside (one of the earliest dated examples of printing done in the state and city of New York), and addressed "To all Officers and Ministers Ecclesiastical and Civil throughout the Provinces and Territories under my Government." It requires that it be read and affixed to the doors of churches or meeting-houses, and the meeting that at the next meeting the collection will be received for this object. Accounts are to be kept, which are to be transmitted, with the money collected, to Stephen Cortland, Peter Jacobs Marius, John Kerbyll, and John Kipp, who shall "transmit the said Money, or so much as shall be requisite for the Redemption of Captives from the most convenient means and way," and account to Fletcher for the surplus. Fletcher gives the same license in behalf of three other captive sailors, taken in the same vessel.—Ibid. Hist. N. Y. June 8 (460 ed.) III: 226-23.

A memorandum of receipts from the collection to ransom these "slaves in Sale" has been published, without citation, in Eccl. Rec. Rev. 1678-79: 1:32-33. For more information, consult W. Bouvier, £1:145; and New Haven, £1363. Fred. "Philips" alone gave £1215. Towns around New York contributed various amounts. The total was £374-12s, subscribed by 4,932 persons. Regarding the use of the surplus, see Sept. 6, and Dec. 2, 1679. The council directed that William Kieft be "sent about the fort,—Col. Cun. Min., 85. He was paid for this service on Aug. 17.—Ibid., 90.

Fletcher sends Lieut. Col. Ludwick to England to describe to the lords of trade the condition of the province of New York. Ludwick is to explain, among other things, "That our neighbours governments are wholly exempted from any impositions or customs as are paid at New York; which greatly discourages the trade of this Province and apparently lessens the revenue for the support of their Majesties interest here; our merchants and traders removing thither."—N. Y. Col. Diet., IV: 31-33. See also Fletcher's report to the Lords of Trade on Oct. 15. Ludwick was the first agent of New York Province in England.—"See "Colonial Agencies in England," by E. P. Tanner, in Politi. Sci. Quatr., March, 1901.

In a royal grant or patent to Frederick Phillips, the manor of Phillipsburg is incorporated, and Phillips is given authority "to erect and Build a Draw-Bridge upon the said River called Spiten-Divel Ferry, and thereforward to be called Kings-Bridge."—Col. Laws N. Y., 1: 782. Rates are fixed, differing slightly from those recommended by the common council (see M. C. C., I: 506-7), together with a second schedule for passage after sunset.—"Manor Grants of Phillipsborough," in Sharp's Hist. of Westchester County, I: 690. See, further, July 1, 1713.

A committee of the common council is appointed "to Vieu ye Triple bush [swamp] adjoining to Mr Jacobus Cortlandt's Land."—M. C. C., I: 333.

Order'd ye Mayor doye provide A Coat of ye City Livery with A Bag of ye City Arms, shoes & Stockings for ye Bellman. And Charge it to ye Account of ye City."—M. C. C., I: 333. This is probably the earliest record of a city official of New York being uniformed, unless gowns for the mayor and aldermen (see Oct. 5, 1669) may be considered uniformed. See also Nov. 9, 1669.

Fletcher's patent for the "Great Green Brave" absolute, as he hath lately taken for ye Security of the Whole Province whereby this City hath receiued Small benefit & ye Mayor doye provide A Cup of Gold to ye Value of one hundred pounds to be presented unto his Excellency on ye behalf of the City as a Token of their Gratitude to ye above mentioned Majesties has been pleased to bestow by Appointing his Excellency, A person of ye great Vigilence Prowess & Conduct in Ruleing of us.—M. C. C., I: 337. The recorder submitted the address to the board at their next meeting (July 20) it was approved and entered in full in the Minutes. The mayor reported that he had bought 20 ounces of gold of Peter Jacobs Marius to be delivered to Cornelius Vanderburgh to be made into a cup; and he and "Some other Gentlemen" gave their bonds for the purchase price.—£66. He asked that the board order that a fund be raised for the payment, and it was ordered that the revenue of the ferry be converted to that purpose, to be paid quarterly.—Ibid., I: 336-38. The date of the presentation of the address and the cup does not appear in the Minutes. The address was printed and sold by Bradford as a broadside, a copy of which, in the archives of the public record-office, London, is endorsed in a contemporary hand "Rec'd 6 Sept. 1673 from Coll. Fletcher."—from Miss A. R. Hesse's "Materials for a Bibliography," in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1907), VII: 57.

Commissioners from all the English colonies are invited to come to New York and concert measures for the defence of the frontiers. The collection for the purchase of these captives furled that at the necessity of a court of exchanger.—Col. Cun. Min., 36. On July 27, it was decided that no such court was needed.—Ibid.

Gov. Fletcher suggests to the council the "danger of the falling of their Maties Chappell in the fort" (built by Kieft in 1642, p. 27), and the council, by the board, were requested to be called upon, and that it be recommended to the next assembly to provide for building another Chappell."—Ex. July 19: “to consider of the dimension[s] for a new Chappell in this flort of ye Towne, and also, what it may cost to Overseers of the building thereof.”—Ibid., VII: 3. (The words supplied are presumably those used in the original MS., which was partially destroyed in the Capitol fire.) The old chapel was demolished prior to Sept. 12 (q.v.).

Aug. 27: The court of mayor and aldermen instructs two aldermen to View the Highways between this City and King's brig. And ye' they summons the inhabitants of the Out Ward To represent their Highways and make them fitt for Travellers Waggon &c.—M. C. M. (MS.), Aug. 15, 1693.

Reports are received from Boston of the fear of attack from a French squadron. The council directs that the militia of New York be in readiness for a march to Boston, and that ten of the greatest guns be mounted at “Sandypoint” (Sandy Hook).—Cal. Coun. Min., 90.

A proclamation is issued forbidding the exportation of provisions until further orders, because they may be needed for the troops summoned to defend New York.—Cal. Coun. Min., 90. On Aug. 30, permission was granted to Samuel Burgess to export flour.—Ibid.

The common council gives Ebenezer Wilson the preference in the sale of the waste or spare ground “Ranging with the Gate Ground.”—Ibid., July 1: 170. The common council orders that “all Persons & all Indian & Negro Slaves” not listed among the militia of the city “Shall either Workes themselves or Appoint Some Others in their Place for ye Repairing the fortifications round the City.”—M. C. C., I: 330–31. It is also ordered that £100 be raised to supply the militia and to repair the fortifications, until another fund may be raised by act of assembly or otherwise.—Ibid., I: 330–31. On Aug. 25, the assembly agreed to raise such a fund.—Cal. Coun. Min., 90.

On Sept. 13, the common council ordered that the recorder draw up a petition to the assembly asking that the assembly allow “a Gen. Fund of ye whole Province,” inasmuch as the fortifications around the city are for the security of the whole province. They estimated that there were needed about £50.—M. C. C., I: 330.

Gov. Fletcher issues a proclamation requiring the erection of fire beacons to give warning of invasion by the French. The proclamation is printed as a broadside by William Bradford.—Bulfinch, N. Y. Pub. Library (1901), 51; citing Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., I: 587; Moore, Intro. of Printing into N. Y.; Wallace, Bradford, 69. See also Cal. Coun. Min., 90.

In an address to the provincial legislature, on the subject of “the settlement of their Mat’l Revenue in this Province,” Fletcher pleads, among other things, that this may be, not for two years only, but for “their Maties for lives,” adding: “lett not opportunity be lost . . .” Fletcher asks permission to asperse you with that new coin name of Jacobites . . .

Continuing, he says: “I have designed a platform on which I purpose to mount a battery for the defence of this City which is indeed the safety of the Province. I suppose you have all heard how we have here lately alarmed with the noise of a squadron of fire ships designed to attack this platform. I have viewed the river and sounded in several parts, in order to raise some fortifications to impede their access to the City, but at length concluded a good battery upon this platform would answer the end, I have by their Maties favour unto you guins for one teare; I have wrote for more.”

“There is likewise the Kings Chappell in the flort [see July 27] which being ready to fall down to the danger of many lives, it thought convenient to pull it down, and if you will give something towards the rebuilding of it we will all joye in see good a work. If his Maty were not engaged in an expensive war I should not doubt to have orders to rebuild it at his own charge . . .”—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 42. Evidently nothing was done toward rebuilding the chapel before Oct. 29, 1694 (q.v.).

On Sept. 15, the general assembly appointed a committee to inquire into the necessary fortifications recommended by the governor, etc., and make a report with all convenient speed.—Assemb. Jour., II: 32. Writing to the committee of trade (London) on Oct. 9, Fletcher said: “Our rivers are broad I have sounded in several places between the Fort at New York and Sandy hook, and design to make a Platform on the Outmost Rocks under the Fort and Erect a battery thereon, it is so designed that by the swiftness of the tide no ship can ride before the Towne, but must have her Stern or Stern-Curts in.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 157–58. See also Col. Coun. Min., 1: 557. On Sept. 29, the General said: “It may be of some importance to be informed what is the present state of ye Harbour of this City and ye necessity of building a Shipp on ye South side of it to defend the same.”—Ibid., I: 331–32.

Warrants are issued by order of the governor’s council to pay Miles Forster for glass, and Peter de Remier for glass, for the fort.—Cal. Coun. Min., 91.

Col. Andrew Hamilton, the postmaster-general, in a memorial to the governor and council, explains: “the great charge he is at in maintaining the Office being four times soe much as the profits arising therby.” He asks that, in view of its convenience to trade and correspondence, it may be supported the first three years by a salary of £100 a year, which request is recommended by the council to the assembly for consideration.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 43. The assembly referred it to a committee composed of one member from each county.—Assemb. Jour., II: 53; Hamilton received a salary payment on Nov. 29, 1694 (q.v.); see also Manning, N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 285–86. The first establishment of regular post routes, between New York and . . . Philadelphia, appears to have been about the year 1693.”—Man. Comm. Coun. (1855), 570. See also Smith, Hist. of the P. O. in British North Am. (Cambridge, 1920), 9.

The general assembly passes the “Ministry Act.” This is “An Act for Setting a Ministry & Raising a Maintenance for them in the City of New York County of Richmond Westchester and Queens County.” It states that “Prophaneness and Liscentiousness hath of late overspread this Province for want of a settled Ministry.” It provides that in certain cities and counties “there Shall be called inducted and established a good sufficient Protestant Minister to officiate and have the care of souls.” One of these is to be in the city of New York. For his maintenance the city and county are to provide £100 annually. The freeholders shall be summoned annually by the justices of each county to select ten vestrymen (see Nov. 29, 1745) and two churchwardens. The vestrymen in conjunction with the justices are empowered ”to lay a Reasonable Tax . . . for the Maintenance of the Minister and Poor of there respective Places,” said tax to be levied by the constable. The appointment of ministers in the future will be a responsibility of vestrymen and churchwardens.—Cal. Leg. Coun., I: 130–31. See also Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 48; Assemb. Jour., II: 341; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 57. For election of first vestry, see Jan. 9, 1694. On Feb. 5, 1694, the vestry at New York voted that £100 be levied upon the inhabitants in accordance with this act.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1095. The new ministry act was explained to the Provincial Assembly on Aug. 4, 1705 (p. 8), and remained in force until after the Revolu-

In an order to the common council, Gov. Fletcher informs them that “there is Actual War between our Sovereign Lord & Lady the King & Queen and ye French King;” and that he is “Informed of a Squadron of Ships and Land Forces Intended from France to Inva-dse this City and Province.” He finds it an “Absolute necessity to Make A Platform upon the Outmost Point of Rocks under the Fort,” on which “to build A Battery to Command both Rivers.”

He therefore requires the common council that they pass an order “that ye Inhabitants of ye Outward of ye City of New York & Manning & Barnes Islands doe Cutt Down Eighty Six Cord of Stockdades of twelve foot in length and to have them in readiness at ye water Side att ye Most Convenient place to be had for the New York att the Charge of the City & County of New York.”

The governor closes the order with the warning: “you are not to Faile upon your Perill.”—M. C. C., I: 335. On Oct. 28, the mayor, having called the recorder and aldermen together, issued a warrant, by order of the court of special sessions, directing Aldermen Merritt and Dow to see that the governor’s order was executed. These aldermen were thereby ordered to call together the inhabitants of the Out Ward and of Manning and Barnes Islands, and require them to cut the So cords of stockdades “within the City & County Ator-said,” and have them carried to some convenient place for trans-were to agree with the inhabitants on the price, and report the

The two aldermen reported on Oct. 30 that they had agreed with the people of Harlem, whose names and the number of cords each was to furnish were stated, to cut the "Stockades" at 15 shillings a cord, and that they were to give them notes in payment.—Ibid.,

"Gov. Fletcher writes to the lords of trade and plantations that the capture of "John Reaus," captain of a French privateer, has delayed his visit to Albany and Connecticut. This man, who was a royalist, had not been in the New World before, had sunk a vessel of which he was master and run away with £6,000 or £7,000. Captured and imprisioned, he had escaped to Canada, and finally reached France.

He is now back, claiming to have a commission from the French king. Having taken two boats on the way back, he is held prisoner till the king's will is known.—Col. State Papers, America and W.
Indies (1693-6), 176-77. In the following December, being fearful of death, "John La Roux" made confession to a French Protestant minister: "When I was in France in February last Monsieur Cabaret, the lieutenant-general of the French forces by sea, asked me if there were any easy method of attacking New York with the men-of-war and six fire ships commanded by Mons. de Pales. Having received the offer of conducting the squadron thither I pointed out the difficulties of the enterprise, the strength of the fort, the number of inhabitants in the adjacent country, and the danger of navigation at the entrance to New York. ..." The project was given up. La Roux concluded his confession by begging the governour and council to have compas-son on his family.—Ibid., p. 177. On Feb. 27, 1694, this petition was referred to the mayor and aldermen, with directions to "Supply the Necessity of ye Prisoners wife and children." In compl-ance with this order, the common council ordered that the "Oversers of the Poor doe put out the children of the Said Petitioner in Some Good Reputable Families for their Subsistance during his Imprisionment."—M. G. C., I: 348. On Aug. 8, 1695, the governour reported that John Le Roux had been tried and acquitted.—Col.
State Papers (op. cit.), 559. See Sept. 8, 1700.

A warrant is issued to William Bradford for salary.—Col. Coun-Min., II: 92. The text of the warrant shows that this payment was for salary for the "six months ended on the 10th preceding."—Intro-

A majority vote in the common council favours the opinion that "they have not power to raise A Tax for the Payment of the Sold Stockadon," for which a committee gave notes in payment on Oct. 30. —M. G. C., I: 337. At a meeting of the governour and his counsellors, on Jan. 14, 1695, it was passed requiring the mayor and common council to attend them the following day, "to be resolved on Some Scruples or Objects made by Some of them" against furnishing the number of stockades "Assigned to the Said City towards the Plottment designed for to Bradford continues the publication of a series of almanacs which he began in Philadelphia in 1686. The first New York issue bears the date 1694, although, if he pursued his usual practice, it was issued the year before. It is entitled An Almanack For the Year of Christian Account 1694. . . . Printed, and Sold by William Bradford at the Bible in New- York, 1694. In this he advertised the forthcoming laws of the province through "The Laws & Acts of the Province, New York will shortly be printed, whereeto every one may have recourse to know the exact Time of Markets, Fairs, Courts, Excise, Rates and Imports upon Goods, etc. and therefore may omit them here." He also advertises King's Thistle Advanced in the Correction of Many Gross & hurt ful Errors, which have been in appearance bearing the date 1694. The almanac is described in the Appendix (1907) of the library of E. D. Church, IV: 1625-28, as a small f5 volume of 12 unnumbered pages. The title-page is reproduced in ibid., IV: 1627. Only two copies of this almanac are known, one in the Huntington collection, and one in the Hist. Soc. of Penn. See also April 10, 1695, for a bill of William Bradford, Printer for the Majesties, King William & Queen Mary, 1694. It is the most valuable publication from this press. An account of the seven copies of this edition known to be in existence 200 years later is given in Facsimile of the Laws & Acts of the New York City (N. Y., 1914), p. 3.

The Dongan Charter (see April 27, 1696) was printed this year by Bradford, on ten leaves. He also printed the first book, the account for $310 to the common council "for Printing of the City Laws the City Charter &c.," and a warrant for payment was ordered.—
M. C. C., I: 374; and see Oct. 25, 1694. A copy of this printed edition of the charter was sent by Bellingfont to the lords of trade on Nov. 29, 1700, and it is still on file in the Public Record Office, London. A photostat of one of the two copies now known, that owned by Henry E. Huntington, Esq., is in the N. Y. Pub. Library.
It is without title-page or date (only the half-title appearing).
For reproduction (made from plate in Church Cat., No. 751), see PL 22, Vol. IV. A facsimile reproduction of the laws of the city of New York, issued this year by William Bradford (vide supra), no copy is known to be extant; but see Oct. 25 for its titles.

There were 40 ships, 62 boats, and 66 sloops whose owners resided in the city of New York this year.—Chalmers Papers relating to the city, in N. Y. Pub. Library, II: 3.

A new street at this time was about to be opened on the waterside, where the breast-wall and wharf had been erected.—From This alludes to the beginning of Water St.—See also June 16, 1696.
From this date, in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., MSS., 1997, we have a letter from William Tryon, Ships' Master, working in New York. For incidents of his life, and description of a cream jug made by him, see Met. Museum Catalogue of Exhibitions of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1911), xiii-xiv, 62.

The city's power to raise money by taxation is questioned. The common council orders that "A Committee of ye whole Bench be Appointed to Enquire into Such lawful ways & Methods as is Practiced by the Corporations in England for the raising of Money to Defray what they Shall think needful in their respective Corporations."—M. C. C., I: 339. The "Committee of the Whole House," having considered the request of the governour and council regarding the city's "Quotas & Proporrtions of Stockades and Other Services for ye Building the Battery that is Projected by his Excell be made at the point of Rocks under ye Fort," made their report on Jan. 12. They found that "the Easiest, Speediest and best way for Accomplishing the Same will be by raising A Tax upon the Respective Inhabitants of this City," and thus they were willing to do, "Provided his Excellency and Council doe declare in writing that the common Council of this City is Soe Enable to doe by the Powers Contained in their Charter." After this report had been read three times, the common council ordered that the recorder draw up an address to the government, coueying the readiness to Assist their Majesties in the Security & Defense of this Province & City with their lives & fortunes," and asking them to give their interpretation of the city's charter powers regarding raising money by taxation.—Ibid., I: 340. Such address was pre-scnted to the governour and council on Jan. 15, and entered in full in the Minutes of that day.—Ibid., I: 341-42. Answer was given at a council meeting in the fort on Jan. 18, stating that "it is A Power Nautural to Every body Politly by ye act of Incorporation to do all those reasonable Acts &c Necessary for the Continuance of that being & Accordingly to Impose A Tax or Other Levy on ye respective Members of Such a body for the Carring on & Effecting All such matters the Representatives of A Corporation Judge to the Senate for the Good Body Politly be it for its Civil Defense or Other ye like & That its Lawfull for any Private Corporation to raise Money upon its respective Members According to the Proporion of their Interest in the same for its Military Defence whenever the Government Act it has its being under ye Penal Law. And that its Lawfull for any Private Corporation to raise Money upon its respective Members According to the Proporion of their Interest in the same for its Military Defence whenever the Government Act it has its being under ye Penal Law.

The first election under the Ministry Act of Sept. 22, 1693 (p.5), is held, and the first city vestry is chosen as follows: churchwardens, Nicholas Bayard and John Kerby; vestrymen, Robert Dakin, Robert Walters, William Jackson, Jeremiah Thottill, John Crooke, John Spratt, Isaac van Elch, Matthew Clarkson, Isaac de Riemer, John de Peyster. Only Thottill, Crooke, and Clarkson were Episcopalians. The vestrymen and vestrymen were at first a civil body, in accordance with the "State-Church ideas."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1092.

Roger Baker petitions for the payment of $4, expended by him "for the use of this City which Sometime past was Allowed him but as yett not paid."—M. C. C., I: 344. Baker was a tavernkeeper at the south-west corner of Pearl Street and Maiden Lane. In 1714, the city held the position of minister of the conference committee of the legislature and was called the "King's Head."—Assemb. Jour., I: 120. Baker may have moved the sign to Smith (William) St. in 1702.—See July 23, 1702.

Fletcher informs the committee of trade that he has "projected the building a platform under where to raise a battery for the defence of New York from attempts by sea being the Key and Centre of the English Plantations on this main, the Inhabitants are now at work to gett Stockades to fill up the water, it will take some time to finish."—N. Y. Col. Docr., IV: 75. See also Sept. 1, Sept. 12, and Oct. 10, 1693; March 3, and 21, 1694.

On Jan. 22, the common council resolves that a tax be levied upon every freeholder, inhabitant, and sojourner within the city, "of three pence $3 Pound upon all their Real and Personal Estates within the Said City," etc.—Ibid., I: 344-45. The ordinance was passed on Jan. 25, the fund so raised "to be Employed for the Building the Batteries and platform to be Erected in the Said City &c." This provision of the amendment was made before Feb. 10. Half of the amount levied was to be paid on or before March 25, and the other half before July 25, 1694. The governor and council, the same day, on reading the city's ordinance, unanimously resolved that the platform and battery "Ought without delay to be built," and ordered the mayor and aldermen to "Examine into the said Bulletin, N. Y. Pub. Library (1907), VII: 54. For subsequent history of this battery, see "Whitehall" in Lindmark Map Ref. H, 946.

The governor's council orders that the well before the fort be repaired and a pump put in.—Col. Coun. Min., 94. During the winter of 1693-94, the following item of expense for work in the fort appear in the transactions of the governor's council: Jan. 25—To Henry Ford for carpenter work, and to Nicholas Bayard for gun-carriages. March 8—To Henry Ford for carpenter work. April 5—To Nicholas Bayard for gun-carriages. Aug. 3—To James Spencer for work. Aug. 3—To John Abeel for work on guns and the fort. Nov. 4—To John Crooke for coopering. Dec. 12—To James Spencer for carpenter work. —Col. Coun. Min., 92-97 pass. See also Feb. 9, 1693.

The city vestry (see Jan. 9) votes that a tax of $100 shall be Feb assessed, levied, collected and paid by all and every one of the Inhabitants and Residence within this City and County for ye maintenance of a good, sufficient Protestant minister, according to the directions of said Act.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1005.

The governor and council consider the question as to "what Persuasion" the minister shall be, and who shall be called in accordance with the act of Sept. 22, 1693. It is decided that he shall be "a dissenting Minister." The governor now presents the name of Col. John Miller, his chaplain, and the council has also March 7, 1692. On Feb. 15, Miller demanded, by virtue of his license from the Bishop of London, an introduction into the living established in September, 1693, for the maintenance of a Protestant minister in the city of New York. The council decided that Miller was not thereby entitled to this living.—N. Y. Col. Docr., IV: 182.

A warrant is issued to William Bradford for printing "mundy public papers" and the book entitled Seasonable considerations offered to the good people of Connecticut.—Col. Coun. Min., 95.

The governor's council directs Surveyor Graham to make a "plan of the proposed fortifications and of New York city." —Col. Coun. Min., 97. Unfortunately, no further reference to these plans appears of record.

Fletcher recommends to the council that they take the fort into Mar consideration, it being much out of repair, and provide for rebuilding the chapel, which has been pulled down to prevent its falling. They should also think of repairing the fortifications, and making a platform and battery, which he has projected to defend this city, which is "the key of the Province," from attempts by water.— Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 50. See March 21.

The governor's council orders that a proclamation be issued for a day of humiliation, fasting, and prayer.—Col. Coun. Min., 95.

A rule is adopted in the assembly "That whoever of this House, do not appear at this House, within half an Hour after the Ringing of the Bell, shall forfeit half a Piece of Eight."—Assemb. Jour., I: 36.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for settling Pylotage for all Vessels that shall come within sandy Hook." The act states that "by the late Easterly storm there was several sand banks thrown off at the south of the harbour at sandy hook whereby the Entry is rendred very difficult and dangerous to all vessels bound for this port." It provides that "there shall be four men appointed and commissioned by his Excellency the Governor who shall constantly attend at some convenient place near the Hook with a boat to give aid and assistance to all vessels bound for this Port which they are obliged to pilot up as far as the narrow." Fees for this service are prescribed.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 342. It became necessary in 1715, 1726, and 1731 again to pass act to establish pilotage at Sandy Hook.—Ibid., I: 1001; II: 502, 700, 949.

The common council orders that the mayor and Alderman Merrett "provide Such things as will be needful for Making the Carriages Mountings of ye Guns & repairing of ye Fortifications." The treasurer is required to keep account of all money spent for this purpose. The mayor's committee is to draw upon him also to pay what is due "for the last years Reparation of ye S9 Fortifications."—M. C. C., I: 350.

The committee of the common council appointed on Feb. 27 to "let all the Publick Stores and House of this City to the best Advantages Reserving a Sufficient place for the Sheltering Merchants Goods in Case of Raine or ill weather" reports that it has "let the Marlett house or storehouse at the Bridge foot with all the Apartments thereto belonging unto John Ellison," and that it has given him liberty to build a lean-to the length of the store-house on the south side, and to erect a chimney at the west end of it. He is to reshingle and repair the market-house, and is permitted to use the ground at the west end to put timber on.—M.C.G., I: 348–50.

On considering that part of a recent speech of the governor relating to building a platform at New York, the opinion is stated, by a vote of the Assembly, "that the Country are not able to do it." —Assemb. Jour., I: 79. See Jan. 22.

The monopoly which this city has enjoyed since Jan. 7, 1780 (p. v.), of bolting flour, is annull'd by "An Act against unlawful laws and Unreasonable forfeitures," which is signed this day by Gov. Fletche.—Journ. Leg. Coun., I: 55. It is known as the "Bolting Act." —M.C.G., II: 1. The bill was first introduced into the assembly on March 15 by Capt. Thomas Gorton, of Ulster and Dutchess Counties.—Assemb. Jour., I: 37. It was published on March 26.—Ibid., I: 41. Any "restraint of Bolting of bakery baking of bread or Importing of flour or bread to New York" is removed.

The passing of this act was ascribed by Livingston and Smith to 1693, and by Comanbury, in a report to the lords of trade on July 1, 1708 (p. xii), to the year 1691. It was confirmed by the king on May 11, 1697.—Order in council, in Fowler's Facsimile of Bradford's ed. of the Laws & Acts (1694), pubd. by the Grocer Club, 1894.

Four years later, Gov. Belmont charged that Fletcher had contracted, for £200, to pass this act.—N. T. Col. Doc., IV: 332; Col. Coun., Min. 193.

Commercial distiller and want of bread were the consequences of the Bolting Act in New York City. The flour, bread, and biscuit produced at New York had been of high grade and high priced; it became inferior and cheap. The price of New York flour, for example, at Barbados and the Sugar Islands, to which it was exported, fell; "five shillings in the hundred below the price of Pennsylvania and other flour." —N. T. Col. Doc., IV: 481. See, for other particulars, June 10-11, 1696; May 11, 1697; June 28-29, 1698.

Apr. In April or May of this year, William Bradford published George Keith's Truth Advanced in the Correction of many Gross & harful Errors, a quarto volume of about 225 pages, and the first real book from his press, all preceding publications having been broadsides or pamphlets, none containing as many as a hundred pages. The work of Keith was also the first printing done in New York in which Hebrew characters occurred. See also Hildeborn's "Bibliographical Note" in the Grocer Club ed. (1894) of Bradford's Laws & Acts, cliv.

Although the rates paid fruit companies in New York and England are the same, the difference in the rate of exchange between the two places is such that the amount paid four foot companies per load was a sum of £300, pay for a chaplain, surgeon, store-keeper, armourer, master gunner, and marines, and there be considerable amount to be used for coastguard expenses and fortifications. All other establishments relating to our Forces in New York are to cease from this time.—Blatchley's Jour., in Lib. of Congress, Vol. II: under April 1, 1694.

May A new method of raising revenue is employed for the first time by the municipal government, namely, mortgaging the ferry.—M. C. G., I: 15:4–55. The sum of £200 was needed "for the Defence and Security of the City." —Ibid., I: 234. The engrossed ferry lease for seven years had a face value of about £1,000, and this served as a security similarly to a deed of land. To obtain ready money, the city had to find some individual of means willing to advance the needed amount, holding the lease as security. In this case, the minutes tell us that the interest on the £200 for two years was £315—Ibid., I: 236. This reveals a rate of something over eight per cent. If the ferry-man lived up to his contract, enough money would be received in ferry tolls to pay principal and interest (£315:35) in the two years.—Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. V. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 128.

New York Conservatives from the execution of Leisler and Milbourne break out in an affair in the house of Edward Buckmaster, "Inhaber." Jarvis Marshall, the dock-master, in an affidavit, described this incident, wherein one John Winawer declared that "Leisler and Milbourne were murdered," and that "their should be hanged in a short time to Ballynce the said Leisler & Millbourne." —Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4th ed.), I: 237–38.

The "Sand Hills" are mentioned in a deed which conveys from Wolfert Wehber and wife to Gerard Dow, one-third part of 30 acres of land lying in the Out Ward, "between the Bowry & the Base Bowny," near the Sand Hills.—From the original deed filed with the De Peyster Papers, Vol. XIV (W-Y), 1691–1761, in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 967. "Sand Hill" is shown on John Ward, Vol. I, west of Broadway, between Stuyvesant's Estate and the Monument Lane. The "Sand Hills" were a range extending from Richmond Hill in a semi-circular course toward the Bowery road. In the Dutch vernacular, the locality was known as the 'Zanigberg,' land so named on some of the early maps. Along the western base of this range ran a brook called Minetta water, which took its rise at a point in the present Fifth avenue, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second street, and ran a little east of that avenue as far as Eighteenth street, when it turned westward, crossed Washington square, and emptied into the North river not far north of the old Richmond Hill. The road over the Zanigberg was also sometimes called the 'Fishkill road,' sometimes the "Monument road" [see June 16, 1707; Feb. 11, 1768], from the circumstance that [after 1761, 9. 81] it led past the obituary memorial erected in honor of General Wolfe, the hero of Quebec.

—Mon. Com. Coun. (1865), 653–58. The "Sand Hill Road" was Groverch Lane.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 117. See also Crehore's incision for making war on the Five Nations.—Col. Coun. Min., July 2, 1705.

A committee of the governor's council is appointed to view the governor's house in the fort regarding necessary repairs.—Col. Coun. Min., 2.

A court-martial is held at the city hall to try several cases of alleged mutiny against the command of Maj. Merritt. Most of the complaints are dismissed.—See the record of the trial in the "Court of Lieutenant" papers, N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 427–28. The provincial court orders that a warrant be issued for pay times the "Monument road" [see June 16, 1707; Feb. 11, 1768], from the circumstance that [after 1761, 9. 81] it led past the obituary memorial erected in honor of General Wolfe, the hero of Quebec.

—Mon. Com. Coun. (1865), 653–58. The "Sand Hill Road" was Groverch Lane.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 117. See also Crehore's incision for making war on the Five Nations.—Col. Coun. Min., July 2, 1705.

A warrant to pay Honan for materials for the barracks was issued on Feb. 28, 1695.—Ibid., 105. Spencer was paid for carpenter work on the barracks on May 2, and for materials, etc. on June 20, 1695.—Ibid., 105–6.

The governors of New York and Virginia are ordered each to Aug. furnish upon application a quota of men for New York, not exceeding 160, "for ye defence and Security of Our said Province of New York." —Blatchley's Jour., I: 69; 98.

Daniel Honan, clerk of the market, in a petition (to whom is not stated, but probably to the governor's council), complains of the inconvenience of the site of the market-place, and asks that the city market be fixed at the plain before the fort, which is the ancient market-place.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 124. The council orders the market be so moved.—Col. Coun. Min., 96. The location of the meat markets at that time may be "over the hill," and "under the trees by the Slipp" (Old Slip).—M.C.G., I: 217. There was also a miscellaneous market at the end of Broad St.—Ibid., I: 265.

Commissioners meet at Albany to frame a treaty with the Five Nations, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey being represented. It was one of the practical efforts to consolidate
THE LAWS & ACTS OF THE General Assembly for Their Majesties Province of NEW-YORK,
As they were Enacted in divers Sessions, the first of which began April, the 9th, Annoq; Domini, 1694.

At New-York,
Printed and Sold by William Bradford, Printer to their Majesties, King William & Queen Mary, 1694.

THE CHARTER OF THE City of New-York.

Thomas Dongan Lieutenant Governor & Vice Admiral of New-York and its Dependencies, under his Majesty James the second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France & Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, Suprem Lord & Proprietor of the Colony & Province of New-York, and its Dependencies in America, &c.

To all to whom this shall come, send be Greeting,

WHEREAS the City of New-York is an ancient City within the said Province, and the Citizens of the said City have always been a Body Politick and Corporate. And the Citizens of the said City have held and enjoyed, as well within the Time, as else wherein within the said Province, divers and sundry Rights, Liberties, Privileges, franchises, Free Citations, Pretenure, Advantages, Justifications, Enrollments and Indemnities, as well by Proclamation, as by Charter, Letters Patent, Grants and Confirmations, not only as divers Governors, Elders, Councils and Commanders in Chief of the said Province, but also of several Governors, Elders, Councils and Commanders in Chief of the Nation-Dutch Nation, whilst the same was or has been under their Power and Subjection. And whereas divers Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, Justifications, Liberties, Immunities and Privileges have heretofore been given and granted, or mentioned to be given & granted to the Citizens and Inhabitants of the said City, sometimes by the name of Schenectady or Schenckyon the City of New-Amsterdam, sometimes by the Name of New York, sometimes by the Name of the Mayor, Alderman & Sheriff of the City of New-York, sometimes by the Name of the Mayor & Alderman of the City of New-York, and by divers other Names, as by their several Letters Patent, Charters, Grants,

CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664-1763

The extensive patent to Evans was apparently never occupied by him, and was later revoked, like many of Fletcher's patents, as extraneous to the public interest.

The common council orders that "the Market house or Shed in the Broadway [see Aug. 3] be Lett to farmeunto Henry Crosby of this City Butcher for the Term of Seavve Years att one pound 12 Annun . . . ."—M. C. C., I: 362-63. City Clerk Sharps was paid on Nov. 5, 1695 for engraving this lease.—Ibid., I: 376. On Oct. 28, 1707 (f. 6.), the building ordered its demolition.

The conditions for leasing the dock are elaborated.

The term is extended to seven years, beginning Nov. 1, 1694. The lessee is required to give security for faithful performance. The covenant regarding the rates of docketage "for the slips in the Smiths Fly" (see Aug. 28) is included. New orders for "Dock Money" (docketage) are also adopted, including the provision that, hereafter, all vessels belonging to "Other parts of this Government," and to East Jersey and Connecticut (as far as the east end of Fisher's Island), shall pay yearly, like vessel belonging to this port. The dock is "demised" to Thomas Clarke, who bids £10 per annum rental.

For summary of transactions relating to the "farming" of the dock, see Oct. 19, 1683.

Colon. Charles Lodwick was appointed mayor of New York.—Col. Coun. Min., 101. He was sworn in on Oct. 15.—M. C. C., I: 371.

The common council approves the accounts of several inhabitants of Harlem who furnished stockades for the use of the city; and orders that the committee "for finishing the slips in the Smiths Fly" be called upon the treasurer to pay for this.—M. C. C., I: 367.

The common council grants to Robert Simkin, John Theobald, and Peter Adolph the ground fronting their houses, at 24 shillings per foot, on condition that they build a wharf 1 ft. wide, at their own expense, extending from Wall St. to "the Ground Accepted to be bought by the Aborementioned John Theobald," and that they shall make a slip, both wharf and slip to be between high and low-water mark.—M. C. C., I: 368.

A message to the council, Gov. Fletcher states that "Their Majesties have sent us over ammunition and stores with twenty great guns: it is our duty when the king is so graciously to send us them for our own defence, not to let them ly in the dirt; the least we can doe is to mount them: it will require money,"—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 58.

It is ordered by the common council that "the Street reaching from Burgers Path to the further end of the Smith fly by Alderman Beckman be called Queen Street," as suggested by the governor.

On Oct. 3, I: 370. Queen St. was regulated from Alderman Beckman's malthouse to Fresh Water St. on Sept. 1, 1733; carried forward through Cowfoot Hill, 1761 (Ibid., II: 259); and regulated 1764 (Ibid., IV: 406). It was called Pearl St., Feb. 24, 1794.—M. C. C. (MS.), XI: 106.

Mettye Cornelius is allowed the "Sum of Eight pounds two Shillings and Six pence" for being "Entertaining his Excellency the Governor in his Return from Connecticut."—M. C. C., I: 369.

Mettye Cornelius was the widow of Cornelis Jansen who established the famous Half Way House at Harlem.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 438-39, 594. See Apr. 36, 1683.

The provincial council, having received commands from their "Maties" regarding the ruined chapel in the fort (see July 27, and Sept. 13, 1691), recommends to the assembly that they "provide for the rebuilding the Chappell."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 65. The assembly votes on the same day that the chapel be built by free contributions from the various counties.—Ibid., IV: 459. On the 22d, the council replied that "the message sent on Satur- day last with his Maties Letter was not to entreat the advice of the Assembly . . . but to know of the Assembly what they will contribute."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 65. The assembly thereupon voted (Oct. 22) £500 for the rebuilding of the chapel.—Ibid., I: 459. On the following day a law was passed for "Changing the additional Duty for One Year longer, for the raising Six Hundred Pounds towards the Rebuilding the Chappell, and mounting of sixteen Great Guns see."—Laws of New York (Gaine ed.), Chap. 42.

The chapel must have been well under way early the following year (1692), for on Feb. 28, a warrant was issued to pay Dick van der Burgh for bricklayer's work on the building, and on March 14 he petitioned for his pay of about £50 for erecting a chapel and other buildings in and about Fort William Henry.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., III: 246-471 Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 244. See also Cal.

Coun. Min., 104 (March 14 and 21); and 113 (March 19, 1696). It Oct. was not finished, however, on April 7, 1696, when Gov. Fletcher urged the new assembly to "fulfill 22, 1694..."

Assem. Jour., 11, 22 and see Coll. Coun. Min., 113. Again, on April 20, 1696, a committee of the assembly refused to "treat of finishing the Chappell having no directions from their house to meddle any further than the accounts of the government."—Jour. LEG. Coun., 1: 93.

It is probable the building was completed in 1696, a warrant being issued on May 14 to pay for mason work.—Coll. Coun. Min., 114.

On Sept. 30, 1696, Dominick Selgas, writing to the classic at Amsterdam, referred to it as constructed of stone and a neat edifice.— Eccles. Rec., II: 1172. Warrants to pay for interior work were issued on June 24, Nov. 25, and Dec. 26, 1697 (p.v.).—Coll. Coun.
Min., 141, 258.

As late as Oct. 14, 1698, Peter Melett was paid for "ironwork in the chapel."—Ibid., 134. This is the last record found of work on the chapel during this period. That Fletcher's coat-of-arms was placed on the building appears in a petition for its removal, dated May 15, 1699 (p.v.).
The chapel is shown on Pls.
23-a, 23-b, 25, 26, 27-a, and 31. I, Vol. I. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 933; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

By act of the legislature, a former act "for the satisfying of the debts of the government" is continued; the revenue thereby raised is "to be employed for the Rebuilding of their Majesties Chapels on the Fort, the mounting of 16 Great Guns and defraying the Debts of the government."—Coll. Laws N. Y., I: 342. See Oct. 20.

A committee was appointed on March 15 to have the city laws "fairly drawn out in writing," with a view to having them published and printed (ibid., I: 359). The first draft of these laws was read in the com-mom council on April 18, and a committee was appointed to de-term what amendments and repeals were necessary (ibid., I: 355-54). They are now approved and published with the usual ceremony; and the common council orders that they be printed.
On May 9, 1698, the laws are entered in the Minutes. They are "for the Due Observance of the Lords day.

17 Orders and Regulations Concerning Carmens
18 No Timber, Stone, Bricks, Lumber &c to lie in ye streets
19 No Swine to be in the Streets
20 Officers to be Observant in ye Execution of these Laws."—
M. C. C., I: 371-72. These were the earliest printed ordinances of the city. Bradford was the printer. No copy of the text of this first issue of the city laws is known.—See 1694, and Jan. 16, 1695.

Nov. Capt. Thomas Tew, well known to be a pirate, comes to New York and is received by Col. Fletcher upon terms of intimate com-passionship. He was "invited to his table—rode abroad with him in a coach drawn by six horses (a very unusual display in those primitive times)—gave elegant presents of jewels to the governour and his family, and received in return a gold watch, upon his promise to discharge his cargo in this port."—"The Red Sea in Man. Coun. Coun. (1857), 46. Peter Delany, in a letter of Men, just as Fletcher was preparing to send with the first N.Y. fleet written, among other things: "one Capt. Twoo who is gone to the Red Sea upon the same errand was before his departure highly caressed by his Excellency in his coach and six horses and presented with a gold watch to encourage him to make New York his port at his return.
Twoo parlayed with the commander with a present of jewels.—

Bellomont, writing to the lords of trade on May 8, 1698, regarding Fletcher's protecting pirates, said:

"... I find that those Pyrates that have given the greatest disturbance in the East Indies and Red Sea, have been either fitted from New York or Rhode Island, and manned from New York. The ships commanded by Mason, Tew, Glover & Hore, had their commissions from the Govt. of New York..."—Ibid., IV: 308.

This is King William III's birthday. On Nov. 3, "His Excell did acquaint the Council that to-morrow being [the] Kings birthday and falling upon a sunday [he] desires their [opinion] concerning the Observation of it." It was "Resolved the day must be observed by hanging of Great Guns, burn Gunpowder, and illuminations, and that the City Regiment be under arms and that there be wine given them to drink the Kings health but that the solemnity begin after evening service."—Coll. Min. (MS.), VII: 101 (Albany). This is the earliest reference in the English annals of this province to the celebration of the birthday of a king. For later references, see M.C.C., 2, 1700; March 17, 1701; Feb. 6, 1703.

The council prepares an address to the lords of trade in behalf of
Col. Inglis's having the pay of lieutenant-governour—Coll. Coun. Min., 102. There is no evidence that he was granted such pay; and he was not made lieutenant-governour until March 23, 1704 (p.v.). In the interim he apparently continued as commander-in-chief.—See July 27, 1691.

Rev. Henry Selgas writes to the classic at Amsterdam: "Our court house in St. Peter's alley is finished up to the towers. On Sundays it is too small; on Wednesdays, too large. Our city of New York, with its suburbs, is constantly growing. But this growth is chiefly in houses and people and business, but not in piety and the conversion of sinners."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1106.—Cf. Chaplain John Sheep's statement on Gen. Van Houten's behalf in 1699.

Fletcher informs the lords of trade that he called the assembly's attention to the ruinous condition of the fort and the soldiers' quarters, but that they would take no notice of it. He states also that he sent the King's letter about rebuilding the chapel to the assembly; and declared that the money voted "considers the good fund for the mounting the great guns his Majesties lately sent." They passed a bill for £520 for the chapel, and £150 for the guns. The Jerseymen, he informs the lords, "are now making war upon us in point of Trade having prohibited by Act of their Assembly, the transportation of Pipe staves, shingles, or Plank to New York, by which they will draw the Shipping thither and Establish a free port to the great prejudice of this place and sink the Trade of it, they pay no duty to the King and all will flock to it."—N. Y. Col. Deocr., 113-14.

The common council orders that John Denier be "be one of the Surveyors of this City in the place of Adolph Pieters lately Deceased."—M. C. C., I: 372.

Fletcher, in a letter to Capt. Stuyvesant, asks the loan of the bell in the Bowery church for the use of the garrison, the one in the fort being cracked.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng, 243.

1695 is ordered by the governor of New York that Col. Nicholas Bayard have the flag mount, etc., paid.—Col. Coun. Min., 102. A warrant for part payment was issued March 27, 1695.—Ibid., 104.

A warrant is issued by the governor and council to pay Andrew Hamilton his salary as postmaster-general.—Col. Coun. Min., 102.

The plantation of Lewis Morris at Harlem is erected into a manor.—Col. Coun. Min., 102. The original entry of record, dated Dec. 6, is as follows: "The petition of Lewis Morris Gentl praying to have his Plantation at Harlem erected into a manarow was read and granted and ordered Warrants issue for the Patent accordingly the quirent to be six shillings Ordered."—Coll. Min. (MS.), V: 109 (Albany). In explanation of this reference to "Harlem," it should be noted that the "manor" referred to was the Manor of Morrisania, and was across the Harlem River, not on Manhattan Island. It included "Brooklynland" and a good deal more. The original grant was to the first Lewis Morris, by Andros, in 1676.— Hist. Patents, IV: 99 (Albany). Schuyler says (Hist. of Westchester Co., I: 779) that Fletcher confirmed to Lewis Morris, younger, nephew to the first Lewis Morris, the grant made by Andros, "and also erected the lands into a lordship or manor by the name and title of the Lordship or Manor of Morrisania," on May 6, 1697.

Queen Mary is dead. On Aug. 15, 1695, he petitioned for his pay (ibid, 246), and a warrant was issued (Col. Coun. Min., 108); another was issued on Nov. 21, 1695 (Ibid., 111).

"It is certain that the Jews had a synagogue as early as 1695 and may have [had it] in 1691, for La Matthee Cadillac, in his account of New York in 1694 [see 1692], enumerates the Jews as one of the sects and then says that each sect had its church and freedom of religion. It is inferred from The Settlement of the Jews in N. Am. (1895), by Dally and Kohler, 26, citing N. Y. Col. Doc., IX: 549. The synagogue referred to is supposed by these authors to have been the first on the continent of North America. Its existence and location are indicated by Rev. John Miller's description of New York City in 1695 (see June, 1695), as on the south side of the present Beaver Street, in the middle of the block, between Broadway and Broad St. —Ibid., 27. The location assigned by Miller, who wrote from memory, is questioned, however, by Dyer, in "Points in the First Chapter of New York Jewish History," printed in Publications of the Am. Jewish Hist. Society, No. 3 (1895), 46-60. Dyer calls attention to the deed, dated Oct. 30, 1706 (Libert Deeds, XXIII: 270), conveying property adjoining the house and ground of John Harpending, "now commonly known by the name of the Jews' Synagogue." —See also Key to Castello Plan, 350. In an interesting and important review of the records, Dyer concludes that this, the first synagogue in North America, was situated on or near what is now known 1645, No. 8 South William Street." —Ibid., 60. This early synagogue, it is observed, was a private house, so used. Regarding the first synagogue building erected, see 1729-30. The records of the Tithes Guaranty and Trust Co. as studied by Miss Jennie F. MacArthur, the company's historical expert, indicate the location to be the No. 16 So. William St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 929; Pl. 174.

In this year, Mayor Abraham de Peyster built a fine house on the Smith's Valley road (Queen, now Pearl St.), between Pine and Cedar Sts., facing to the west. It was 59 by 80 feet and three stories high, the grounds occupying the whole block to the river's edge, with coach-house and stable in the rear. At the time of Washington's inauguration (1789), it was the residence of Gov. George Clinton.—Mag. Am. Hist., XXII: 185. For more detailed description, see Mrs. Lamb's Hist. City of N. Y., I: 419. It is thus described by Valentine: "The dwelling of the eldest son of Col. de Peyster (the Abraham de Peyster who [in 1824] succeeded him as Treasurer), erected by him in 1695, stood in Queen, now Pearl street, nearly opposite Cedar. At the time of its demolition, in 1836, it was believed to be the oldest building in the city. It was subsequently the residence of Governor George Clinton, and General Washington occupied it as his head-quarters after he had assumed the command of the army in New York... [see view in Man. Com. Coun. (1854), opp. p. 446]. It was afterwards known as the Redmond Hotel."

"The main building was 79 feet front, and the principal rooms facing to the river at the back, the other rooms facing to the street. The whole depth was nearly if not 50 feet, and the edifice, by a rear building, extended nearly through to the present Water street with which it was connected by a carriage-way. The stable and coach house were in the centre of the block on the north side of the Yard. The main building was three stories high, having a double door, opening in the centre, according to the fashion of the day, and projecting over it was a cupboard balcony with a double arched window. From this balcony, on many a field day, the military reviews were held by the Colonial Governors."

"It was interesting to state that, as the property which extended from Water street, directly in the rear of the mansion of Abraham de Peyster, to the East river, belonged to him, he sold a part of it a street from the easterly side of Water street to the river, now known as De Peyster street. The carriage-way leading at present from Water street to the rear of the noble marble front stones, standing on the ground formerly fronting on Pearl street, covered by the Mansion House, and recently erected by one of our enterprising and successful merchants, Joseph Sampson, Esq., is shown upon the ancient map of this property, to have been the original carriage-way which led to the stables in the rear of the house adjacent to the grounds, then open country, which on that side extended to, and were bounded by the river." —Mon. Com. Coun. (1861), 365-467.

"The second city vestry is chosen. Gov. Fletcher threatened to prosecute them if they any longer refused to carry out his wishes regarding the settlement of the ministry.—Eccles. Ret., II: 1112. See Jan. 26, 1695.

The common council orders that the treasurer reimburse the mayor for his disbursement of 1609 for "fire wood Cartage Pitch Barrels & Cash paid to the Soldiery for making A Bonfire as Also for Glass lead & Workmanship for the Mending the Windows in the City Hall." —M. C. C., I: 374. The bonfire may have been on the occasion of the king's birthday. —See Nov. 4, 1694.

The first ordinance in the English city of New York concerning apprentices is passed by the common council. By this, four years is the minimum length of service; every apprentice must be "bound by indentures" before the mayor, recorder, or one of the aldermen, and must be registered in the clerk's office. At the end of his term, the apprentice "Shall be made Free of the Said City by his Said Master if he have well and truly Served him." —M. C. C., I: 373-74. On Oct. 30, 1714, seven years was made the minimum length of service. —Ibid., II: 454-55. Appeals to the mayor's court for the breaking of a contract were generally fruitless; a "rigid adherence to the terms" of the bond "was the rule." —Peyster and Edwards, in an 18th Century Municipalities, 69-74. For indentures of apprentices from 1694 to 1707, see N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1858), 565; and from 1718 to 1725, see ibid. (1909), 113.

Bradford presents his account, amounting to £1,010, for "Printing of the City Laws the City Charter &c," which, on Oct. 25, 1694 (p. v.), the common council ordered to be printed. An order is now given that the mayor sign a warrant to the treasurer to pay the account. —M. C. C., I: 374. No copy of this first published issue of the city ordinances is now known to be extant, the earliest known issue in existence being the second, which was printed by Bradford in 1707—See March 23, 1707; and Bibliography, Vol. IV.

The Two Brothers Islands near Hell Gate are granted to James Graham. —Cal. Com. Coun., 103.

The cellar under the custom-house is let to Michael Howdon. —Cal. Com. Coun., 105. Howdon's occupations were varied, it appears, for on July 16, 1665, he was a public porter's, and on June 17, 1667, he was a public porter's with fishing; and again on April 30, 1669, he was a public porter's with fishing. In regard to the latter part of his under consideration "for entertaining Capt. Paxton's picnic crew and for going express to Albany." —Ibid., 107. In 1702 and 1703, he rented his house (evidently a tavern) for the sitting of the assembly. —Ibid., 177, 186. In the latter year, he was made justice of the peace. —Ibid., 190. He was a part of the custom-house appears to have continued during these years, and later. —Ibid., 143; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 346.

The following items of expense for work in the fort this year, beginning at this date, appeared in the transactions of the government council:
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

Feb. 17—James Spicentre for carpenter work.
March 7—John Cooley for blacksmith work.
17—John Cockburn for paving flagmound.
April 25—Peter de Rynier for glass windows. Aug. 15—John Cockburn for paving bastions.
Sept. 5—Dirck Van der Burgh for bricklayers' work. [See also March 14, infra.]
Oct. 3—Edward Graham and James Wells for carpenter work.
10—Thomas Robinson for work.
17—James Wells for carpenter work.
18—Daniel Honan for furnishing officers' quarters.
Nov. 14—Daniel Honan for incidental charges.
22—Joseph Johnson for guo wheels, to James Wells and James Spencer for carpenter work; and to Jacob Moenen for gunsmith work. [See Feb. 9, 1695.]
—Cal. Min. Mem., 103-11, parasim. See also March 7, and June 13, infra, regarding work on the fort.
24—The council orders that the accounts for work in the fort be audited.—Cal. Min. Mem., 103.
26—In accordance with the "Ministry Act" of 1693 (Sept. 22), the churchwardens and vestrymen (comprising the city vestry) meet and invite William Vesey to officiate as minister at New York.—Exch. Rec., III, 137. The vestry renewed this invitation on Nov. 16, 1695. [See also Dec. 25, 1697.]
Feb. 7—Mayor Charles Lodwick petitions (presumably the governor's council) for the payment of innkeepers on whom soldiers have been quartered.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 243.
Mar. 21—Pinehorne's account for shingles for the fort is referred to a committee of the governor's council.—Cal. Min. Mem., 103.
Col. Andrew Hamilton having presented to the governor and council a memorial for an increased allowance for the post-office, it is referred to "the full board."—Cal. Min. Mem., 103. See July 1, and Sept. 15, 1695.
12—Ten assessors are sworn by the court of mayor and aldermen to make the necessary assessments in city and county. "Persuant to the Directions of two Acts of the Geoil Assembly."—M. G. M. (Ms.), March 12, 1695. One of these acts called for "the raising and paying one hundred and Seaventy men for the Securing the frontiers of this Province." These men were to serve for one year commencing May 1, 1695. The quota prescribed for the city and county of New York was "forty three effective men" and $1,051. The second and later act called for "the raising and paying one Hundred Men . . . for the Re-inforcing the Frontiers of this Province," and the quota for the city and county of New York was prescribed as "Twenty five effective men," and $1,971.10.—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 334-38, 339-42.
14—"Derek Van Burg," who has been employed in building "his Majesty Clipapell with several other buildings in and about his Majesty's Fort William Henry in New Yorke," petitions the governor and council for payment of "Nine Hundred and Odd pounds" due him for labor and materials.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 246-47; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 244 (March 5). See also Aug. 8.
25—The common council grants permission to Rip van Dam "to build A vessel upon the Cittys Land in the Rear of the Burial place of this City or thereabouts frouting to Hudson River."—M. G. M., II: 175-386.
Cap. Finklin introduces a bill in the assembly for "the Settling a Free-School, within the city of New York."—Assemb. Jour., I: 48. On April 4, this bill was read the second time and rejected.—Ibid., I: 49. Thus an effort toward popular education through the provincial legislature failed.—See also April 18, 1691. It was not until 1702 that such a measure was sanctioned by the governor and council.—See Nov. 27, 1702. See also July 25, 1696.
Apr. 24—A petition of Jasper Nesaspaa for the Confirmation of a Wind-mill in the Colony of the city of New York" (cf. Nov. 24, 1692), is read and granted. "provided he be obliged to grind for the governours family not exceeding four bushells weekly, and pay five shillings annual quitrent." A warrant is ordered "for the Patent accordingly."—N. Y. Cal. MSS., VII: 124 (Albany), quoted by O'Callaghan in Notes on Fujiimilli (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. For its more detailed history, see Landmark Map Ref. Apr. Key, III: 962.
Isaac Pfdlow (Bedlow) brings suit for trespass against several inhabitants for "pulling Down A Certain fence that was ran Cross the Street or Highway Leading to the Fortification Called Oyster Party. The common council decides to defend the action.—M. G. M., II: 376. Although this land was claimed by the inhabitants of the city of New York on a public street, the city lost the suit; for, on March 10, 1696, the common council agreed to pay £155.84, and the incidental expense of execution, two of the defendants, imprisoned for the trespass, being discharged.—Ibid., I: 399. The inhabitants of the street, some of whom had been implicated, complained on March 11, in a petition to the common council, that the street was again to be fenced, and that this would "obstruct them from going to their habita- tions." They asked the city to "take Some Care that they may have A Passage to their houses for the Relief of their families."—Ibid., I: 400. No action appears to have been taken on this petition.

The common council orders that the city clerk, William Sharps (see Oct. 14, 1692), be reimbursed for "Cash paid for the book of Records No. 21 as Appears by his Account."—M. G. M., II: 376. This entry in the Minutes is significant in its revelation that at least 20 copies of record had been necessary to record the proceedings of the city magistrates before this date. (The municipality was not yet 50 years old.) During the subsequent 35 years the minutes recorded the purchase of 28 additional record-books, costing from £2.10 to £3.10 each. Six of them were specified as for the mayor's council.—Petersen & Edwards, N. Y. at an 18th Cent. Municipality, 87, citing M. C. C., Vol. II and III.

"At a Meeting of ye Officers of the Regiment of Militia foot belonging to the said Cityt att ye City Hall," a letter from the governor addressed to Col. Abraham De Peyster is read, requiring that the Coll [Colonel] should forthwith upon Receipt thereof Cause to be drawn out of the Regiment of militia foot of New York twenty five men with arms and ammunition be [sic] the Quota of one hundred be ready to forthwith att New York in order to their Transportation to Alhany for the Defence and security of the frontiers of this Province.—Records of the Court of Lieutenancy, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 432.

A warrant is issued to Peter de Remier "for glass windows in the fort."—Cal. Min. Mem., 105. See summary under Jan. 17, supra.

A feud occurs at election time, when members of assembly are to be elected. It arises between the governor's party and the Leisler followers, particularly because the governor has not accounted for $1,500, said to be remaining in his hands, and because of fear of being impressed into service on the frontiers. The night before election, several "Freedoms" were seen at the mayor's house, made out to the pursuer, gunner, boatswain, and others of the king's ship. Summerers and sailors in the fort and the various clubs. Seamen were ordered ashore by masters of ships to vote.

Among the witnesses examined at the board of trade inquiry on Aug. 28 and Sept. 14, was Philip French of New York, who said he heard it said before the election that Fletcher had threatened to "pintill any man that should chuse Peter De La Ne" for assemblyman. Capt. William Kidd, master of the brigantine "Antego," testified that the sheriff of New York "spoke to him to get his people from on board his vessel they being inhabitants of New York to vote at the Election," but Kidd could not say this was by order of the governor. The same testimony was given by other masters, one of whom added that he was in the field at the time of the election, but did not see any of the seamen or others belonging to the men-of-war, except the captain. "But he saw the soldiers come into the field and they went into the Millyard, which is an enclosure not far from the place of Election where they remained till the election was over," etc.—N. Y. Cal. Doc., IV: 127-28, 129-30, 134-45. For other election contests, see Sept. 29, 1701; Nov. 4, 1702; Sept. 11, 1727.

The royal assent is given to an act of parliament reversing the attainder of Leisler, Milbourne, and Gouverneur, which had passed the third reading the day before.—Cal. of State Papers, 1693-4, 21, cited in the London Gazette of May 2 to 6. The text of the act is printed in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 249-50. It is cited "6 & 7 Will. III." It was previously printed by Hugh Gaine in 1764, as an appendix to the Jour. of the Votes and Proceedings of the General Assembly, Vol. 3, after p. 840, but was there subscribed to a parliament which 1862, May 3. Slaughter and his council (see under April 13, 1861), on the strength of the oath given, and the power of the lawyers, which Leister and Miller were executed. It states more specifically the circumstances regarding Leister's seizure of the government, and vindicates his conduct. In a footnote in the Doc. Hist. N. T., (40 ed.), II: 220, O'Callaghan quotes Chalmers, who states, with reference to the act of reversal, "One agent of Massa- chusetts framed the Bill (in England), while the other sat as chair- man of the Committee which reported it." See also N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 348; Winson, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., Vol. 240.

1862, June 6. John Vaandespiegel having proposed to the common council to supervise the cleaning of the streets from May 1, 1862, for the period of one year, for the sum of $30, he is authorized to do so. It represents a radical change of policy in street cleaning.——See Nov. 19, 1870; also Peterson & Edwards, N. Y., at an 18th Cent. Municipality, 99-101.

1862, June 13. There is an unofficial report of the death of the queen, and an order from the government and council is issued in consequence.——Cal. Coun. Min., 105. On May 20, the report was confirmed, and the council ordered that an address of condolence be sent by the governor and council to the king.——Ibid. This was signed and sent to Sec. Blitheway on May 30, —Ibid., 106.

In July, he was taken prisoner by a French privateer, and was impelled to throw all his papers overboard to prevent the informa- tion they contained, particularly the drawings of the fortifi- cations of this city, from falling into the enemy's hands. While imprisoned in France, he prepared from memory and sent to the Bishop of London, a description of the province and city of New York with plans of the city and of several forts as they existed in 1695. His manuscript and drawings were published in 1845, 1862, and 1903.——See Bibliography. The issue of 1903 bears the original title: New York Considered and Improved, 1695, by John Miller, and is published from the original MS. in the British Museum, With Introduction and Notes by Victor Hugo Palacky (see Bibliography). The following extracts, describing the city, are taken from this edition (pp. 35-37), the introduction to which contains an account of Miller's life, and a description of the various issues of the work.

"The City of New York more largely talm is the whole Island so called & is in length 16 miles in breadeth &c in circumfer- ence 42 but more strictly considered & as a place of strength is only the part thereof within the fortifications & so is not in length or breadeth above two furlongs & in circumference a mile. The form of it is triangular having for y' sides thereof the west & north lines & the East & South for its Arched basis the chief place of strength it boast of is its fort situated on the southwest Angle which is reasonably strong & well provided with Ammunition having in it about 38 Guns mounted, on the Basis likewise in con- venient places are three Batteries of Great Guns one of 15 cal'd Whips & two others of 24 cal'd Ports. the work is by the Brothers path. on the North-east Angle is a strong blockhouse & half moon wherein are 6 07 guns this part buts upon the River & is all along fortified with a sufficient bank of Earth. On the North side are two large stone Points & therein about 8 Guns some mounted & some unmounted. on the Northwest Angle is a Blockhouse & on the West side 2 Hornworks which are furnished with some Guns 6 or 7 in number, this side buts upon Hudsons River, has a bank in some places 20 fathom high from the water by reason whereof & a stockade strengthened with a bank of Earth on the Inside (which last is also on the North side to the landward) it is not Easily Assail- able." The work as a whole consists of an account of the physical, religious, social, and political features of the province. The author gives his view of the Leister troubles; a summary of the number of churches, ministers, and church members of all denominations in the different cities. By notes the State of the "Province of New York," and what his qualifications, status, and work should be; and the need of "forces & warlike provisions;" he also outlines the orders and instructions which might advantageously be given to the bishop and to the governour, and the plans which he approved for "the defence of this province." Miller's plan of the city of New York, and of the fort, are reproduced on Pl. 23a and b, with descriptions on pp. 234-36, Vol. I, where various important landmarks of the city, as listed by Miller, are mentioned. One of the most interesting of these, no- where else mentioned in the annals of the city, is (No. 30) the ground within one of the bastions of the wall, which Miller con- siders to be ground proper for ye building an English Church."

The final accounts of the builders of the Dutch Church in Gar- den St. are presented. The building of the tower is deferred until after the church is incorporated.—Ecles. Rev., II: 1127. The church officers petitioned for incorporation on June 19 (p. 5), and it was granted the following year.

Fletcher issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford "at the Bible in the City of New York," stating: "Whereas I am informed that there are French Privaters coming upon this Coast, I have ordered His Majesty's ship, the Richmond, to Cruise, for the De- fense of this Province."——From Miss Hasee's "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1905), 55.

The council orders that the carpenters' accounts for work done at the fort be examined.—Cal. Coun. Min., 106.

Peter Delaney, writing to England in relation to Gov. Fletcher's conduct, states that when Fletcher arrived here he "be insti- tuated into the inhabitants the great interest and credit he had at Whitehill, would haffle any complaints that could be made against his administration and this back'd with the grandeur of a Coach and six horses (a pomp this place had never seen in any former Governs' or more than himself being in his situation,) struck such a terr' into the people, as easily prepared 'em for the saddles he has laid upon 'em. To recount all his arts of squeezing money both out of the publick and private purses would make a volume instead of a letter." Delaney further states:

"He ordered two of the principal gates of the City where the Indians used to enter, to be shut up, cautiously alluring the danger of keeping open so many gates during the war; several poor traders who had built their houses near those gates purposely for the Indian trade would have been ruin'd if these gates had continued shut, and therefore rais'd a contribution of fifty or sixty of their best furs which they p'ented to his Excellency & likewise removed his Ex- lency apprehensions of the danger those gates exposed the City to; for at the request of the Mayor & Aldermen the gates were oped again & the City as safe as when they were shut."

Delaney also explains Fletcher's encouragement of pirates, who operate in the Red Sea to bring their Arabian gold to New York; he describes his irregular methods in the May election (p. 7), his affected or ostentatious piety, etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 242-54. Regarding Fletcher's answers to charges against him, see ibid., IV: 176-80.

Cal. Ind. says reports that the French are marching towards Albany; it is also reported from Maryland that a French fleet is coming to attack New York.—Cal. Coun. Min., 106.

The reformed Dutch Church petitions Fletcher for incorpora- tion as "The Ministers, Elders and Deacons of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of the City of New York."——Ecles. Rev., II: 1127- 1129. The petition was third read on June 19, 1862.—Cal. Coun. Min., 106. See May 11, 1696. For reproduction of charter, see Pl. 24, Vol. IV.

The council orders that an addition be made to the governor's lodging in the fort.—Cal. Coun. Min., 107. On July 11, the committee relative to this addition made its report.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 246.

At the request of the postmaster-general, it is moved in the July assembly that the "Act for the encouraging a Post-Officer" be continued for three years longer. This is approved by both assembly and council, and the bill is published on July 4.—Assemb. Jour., I: 57; Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 4.

The public buildings of the city being much out of repair, the poor in great distress, and the streets "so 'Mirely and foul that they are Noysome to the Inhabitants," the general assembly passes an act to enable the city to raise funds annually by taxation to de- MAY

The Chinese being all removed from the southern part of New York County, the Bishop of overseas of the poor and public works and buildings also the appointment of a "A scavenger Raker or other officer to be Employed in cleansing the streets, Lanes, Alleys and other places . . . and at least once in every week shall carry or cause to be carried the Ashes, dirt, filth and Soyle of the said Streets . . . unto such Place or Places where he shall think convenient."——Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 348.

"The House of Representatives, now convened in General Assembly," in an address to the governour and council, asks that
The provincial legislature passes "An Act for the Incurring of Seamen." It provides that any tavern-keeper, alehouse-keeper, or victualler of New York City, who shall trust or give credit to a seaman belonging to a vessel coming into this harbour for more than three months, shall lose the credit and one week's pay to a seaman out of service for more than twelve pence a day shall lose it. That is, no suit can be prosecuted against a seaman (except the master of a vessel) to recover more than the amounts mentioned.—Col. Laws N. Y.'s I: 345-348.

The governor having sent an order to the mayor and common council to summon all the Freemen of this City who by themselves or Servants are to be Immediately Injured in the Repair of ye Fortifications Bulwarks Flankers & Batteries thereof & that they are to see that all the Guns Mounted upon any of ye Fortifications be ready and fit for present Service Powder Ball and Gunpowder preserved & provision Occasion for the Defence and Security of this City, the common council now expresses the opinion that the fortifications should be repaired, and that the freemen should be required to labour on them; but they "are also humbly of Opinion that they have not power to Raise Money upon the Inhabitants for the Materials that will be wanting and Needfull for the Effectual doing thereof."—M. C. C. I: 379. This view of the corporation's limited power to raise money by taxation is the same as that expressed originally by the common council when the subject came up on Oct. 30, 1693 (ibid., I: 337), but which was overruled by the governor and council on Jan. 19, 1694 (ibid., I: 343).

The common council orders that a warrant from the mayor be issued to the sheriff to summon 12 men to determine "what Ground Shall be Necessary to be taken from Coll Cortlandt or any Other person or persons for ye Enlarging of ye New Street Adjacent to Malden Lane;" this is done that the persons at whose request the street is laid out, may "satisfie the Same" (i.e., double the pay the assessments) —M. C. C. I: 380. The "New Street" here alluded to is Crown (the present Liberty) Street.—See pl. 23-a, Vol. I.

The common council orders that the surveyors "lay out the Ground of Coll Stephanus V. Cortlandt fronting to the Deck," according to the title and he is required to "lay up the said seaman out in the Deck which belongs to the City," for which the city is to pay him.—M. C. C. I: 379-80.

The council directs the governor to grant commissions for holding courts of king's bench, common pleas, and exchequer, according to an act in ye common council.—Col. Coun. Min. I: 107.

The council also appoints Maj. William Merritt to be mayor.—M. C. C. I: 381. Merritt was sworn in on Oct. 14, and presided at the meeting of the common council on Oct. 16.—Ibid., I: 385. He was continued in office on Nov. 29, 1693 (ibid., I: 417), and on Sept. 29, 1694 (ibid., II: 15). For a brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 3945 Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 53.

The earliest publication of the journal of votes of an American legislature was printed soon after this date by Bradford. It is entitled A Journal of the House of Representatives For His Majesties Province of New-York in America Begun the 28th day of June, in the seventh year of His Majesties Reign, Anno Dom. 1695.—From Miss A. R. Hasse's facsimile reprint, pub. by Dodd, Mead & Co., 1903. This reprint of the "Votes" includes transactions through July 4. See Addenda, April 12, 1695.

8 The governor having sent an order to the mayor and common council to summon all the Freemen of this City who by themselves or Servants are to be Immediately Injured in the Repair of ye Fortifications Bulwarks Flankers & Batteries thereof & that they are to see that all the Guns Mounted upon any of ye Fortifications be ready and fit for present Service Powder Ball and Gunpowder preserved & provision Occasion for the Defence and Security of this City, the common council now expresses the opinion that the fortifications should be repaired, and that the freemen should be required to labour on them; but they "are also humbly of Opinion that they have not power to Raise Money upon the Inhabitants for the Materials that will be wanting and Needfull for the Effectual doing thereof."—M. This view of the corporation's limited power to raise money by taxation is the same as that expressed originally by the common council when the subject came up on Oct. 30, 1693 (ibid., I: 337), but which was overruled by the governor and council on Jan. 19, 1694 (ibid., I: 343).

Sept. 5 The council directs the governor to grant commissions for holding courts of king's bench, common pleas, and exchequer, according to an act in ye common council.—Col. Coun. Min. I: 107.

29 The council sends a bill for seamen's wages, to be paid to His Majesty—M. C. C. I: 381. Merritt was sworn in on Oct. 14, and presided at the meeting of the common council on Oct. 16.—Ibid., I: 385. He was continued in office on Nov. 29, 1693 (ibid., I: 417), and on Sept. 29, 1694 (ibid., II: 15). For a brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 3945 Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 53.

Bellewont undertakes 1 to procure from the king and commissioners of the admiralty one or more commissions to enable the said Kid to act as stated in the preamble; 2, to obtain from the king (three months after Kid departs) a grant, to "some indistinct and trusty Person," of the various things that shall be taken from the pirates by Kid and the ships under his command; 3, to pay four-fifths of the cost of the ship and its equipment, the other fifth to be paid by Livingston and Kid; 4, to advance £1,600 for this purpose before Nov. 6, 1665; 5, Livingston and Kid to advance £400, as part of their share, before that date; 6, Bellewont to pay the balance of his four-fifths to Livingston and Kid, and the latter to advance the balance of their fifth part within seven weeks of the date of this agreement; 7, Kid agreeing to take on board the ship about 100 "Mariners or Seamen," to set sail with all convenient speed, and "to sail to such parts or places where he may meet with the said Pirates, and to use his utmost Endeavours to meet with, subdue and conquer the said Pirates, or any other Pirates, and to take from them Money, Merchandizes and Treasures, also to take what Prizes he can from the King's Enemies, and forthwith to make the best of his way to Boston in New-England, and that without touching in any other port or harbour whatsoever, or without breaking Bulk, or diminishing any part of what he shall so take or obtain, on any pretence whatsoever, of which he shall make oath, in case the same be desired by the said Earl of Bellewont, and there to deliver the same into the hands and possession of the said Earl;" 8, Kid further agreeing that his contract or bargain with his ship's crew shall be "No Purchase no Pay," and that their share in the goods, etc., which shall be made, shall not be more than one-third from the Broadway to Harmon's Lane, and there shall be but in the fair market, but shall be less if that can reasonably and conveniently be agreed upon; 9, Livingston and Kid agreeing jointly and severally with Bellewont that, in case Kid does not meet the pirates mentioned, or does not take from other pirates or the enemies of the king such goods, etc., as, when divided, shall fully compensate Bellewont for his expenditures, they shall refund to him, before March 25, 1667, the amounts he has advanced ("the Danger of the Seas, and of the Enemies, and Mortality of the said Capt. Kid always excepted"), and in such case Livingston and Kid shall become the sole owners of the ship and its furniture; 10, the goods, etc., taken from pirates and the prices taken from the king's enemies to be divided into four parts, one-fourth or less (as Kid shall determine) to go to the ship's crew, and the other three-fourths to be divided into five equal parts, of which Bellewont shall retain four parts, and Livingston and Kid shall receive from him one part equally divided between them; 11, and, lastly, in case Kid brings to Boston and delivers to Bellewont goods, etc., so taken, to the value of £100,000 or more, the ship is to be given to Kid as a reward for his services.

The council directs the governor to grant commissions for holding courts of king's bench, common pleas, and exchequer, according to an act in ye common council.—Col. Coun. Min. I: 107.

A committee of the common council, together with "the Overseers of the Public buildings," is appointed "to examine what will be wanting for 36th Necessary Repairs of 38th City Hall."—M. C. C., I: 387. They reported on Nov. 13, that, after consulting carpenters and bricklayers, they found the building was not "Sufficient," and that £150 would be required to repair it and make "it fitt for use for 36th Five or Six Years."—Ibid., I: 390. On Nov. 25, the council ordered that the Overseers of Public buildings be ordered to examine what Needful Reparations is wanting for securing the City Hall this winter and that they Employ Persons for the doing thereof and Raise A fund for their Payment."—Ibid., I: 391. But see May 12, 1696; Oct. 5, and Nov. 13, 1697; May 25, Sept. 20, and Oct. 16, 1699.

By a provincial act, described in M. C. C., I: 396-97, the former officer of overseer of the poor is increased in scope to cover repairs of highways and public buildings, to pay the city's debts, and to raise taxes for such purposes. Such officials are here called "Overseers of the poor and Public works Act" their number includes the former overseer of the poor and work with the common council. They are ordered to "Visit the severall Wards of this City and Examine what poor there is that are fitt Objects of their Charity & make an Estimate what will be Necessary to be Raised for their Relief."—Ibid., I: 397. For this object, £100 will be needed for one year.—Ibid., I: 398. See Dec. 4, 1691; Nov. 19, 1695.

It is ordered by the common council "that Capt. Kip doe View what will be Needful for ye Necessary Mending or Repairing the bridge over the fresh water and make Reporte thereof this day forthwith."—M. C. C., I: 388. He reported on Nov. 19 that, in his commission would be sufficient for £4 Making a Bridge over the fresh water."—Ibid., I: 390. This bridge, afterwards called the "Kissing Bridge" (mentioned in Burnaby's Travels—see July, 1760), was across the Old Kill, or "Old Wreck Brook," the outlet of the Fresh Water Pond; it stood on the old Boston Post Road, now Park Row, at Roosevelt St.—See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 926, where, however, "Burnaby's Diary" is attributed erroneously to 1745 instead of 1706 (p. 908).

An Act against the Profanation of the Lord's Day, called Sunday, is passed by the provincial legislature. It provides that "there shall be no travelling, servile labouring and Working, shoot- ing, fishing, sporting, playing, Horse-racing, hunting, or frequenting of the Piping-Houses, or the using of any other unlawful Pastimes, by any of the Inhabitants or Sojourners within this Province, or by any of their Slaves or Servants, on the Lord's Day." Travel is limited to 20 miles, even for church-going, an exception being made in the case of the public post, a physician, or a midwife. The law does not apply to Indians not professing the Christian religion.—Laws of N. Y. (Gaine ed., 1774), Chap. 12. Cf. Pitard's recollections of the Huguenots of New Rochelle, in Man, Com. Coun. (1862), 755.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for the Raising One Thousand Pounds to be employed by an Agent for the Representation of the State of the Province." New York City and County's quota is £2891. William Nicolls, one of the governor's Council, is the agent named in the act. He is to show to the king the heavy burden that has been on the inhabitants of the province since the beginning of the war, and to ask relief.—Col. L. N. Y., I: 352. The common council resolves "that the Debts of the City be paid," and it is ordered that "the Overseers of the poor & Public works" agree upon the "most Easy and Requisite" methods "for the Raising A fund for the Payment thereof."—M. C. C., I: 350. They reported on Dec. 7 that the easiest method was "to Sell the land lying on the West side of the Custom house bridge." They thought it "Requisite his Excellency be Addressed for his Permission to Erect buildings thereon." It was ordered accordingly that the recorder draw up an address to him.—Ibid., I: 391. The recorder submitted the draft of a petition on Dec. 10; and it was ordered that it be engrossed, and that the mayor and recorder "doe waite on his Excellency to morrow morning."—Ibid., I: 392. The mayor and recorder reported on Dec. 12 that they had delivered the petition to the governor, who "Answered that he would view the Place and ADVISE with his Majesties Council what would be proper to be done in that matter."—Ibid., I: 393. There is no report of this proceeding in either the Jour. Lc. Com., or the Cal. Com. Min.

The overseers reported on Feb. 1, 1696, a plan for raising £655: 91½, to pay the city's debts, repair the city hall, and mend the bridge (which had been carried 50 ft. further into the dock). This was in accord with the act of 1691, "to Erect the City of New York to Defray their Public charges." On hearing this report, the council ordered that an assessment to the amount of £51714: 7½ be made upon all freeholders, inhabitants, and sojourners within the city, payable on or before March 25, the assessment roll to be made by the clerk's office on which the city's debt and all the expenditure for the year 1696, a copy of which is in the city hall. A warrant is issued to James Virtue "for cutting the kings armes in brass."—Cal. Com. Min., 111.

Dirck Vandenburgh, a bricklayer, is appointed overseer of Dec. beelands and chimneys, with the right of calling to his assistance the constable of each ward to inspect "the Keeping of the Same Clean Sweep & Repaired." He is required to provide six ladders, two of which are "to have hooks."—M. C. C., I: 391. These books and ladders were not paid for until Feb. 9, 1706, after Vandenburgh had become alderman and city surveyor.—Ibid., II: 292; see, also, Peterson & Edwards, N. T., as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 180.

 OWNERS of lots between low-water mark and the blockhouse by the east gate of the city, and along Queen St., petition for the removal of this blockhouse, as it obstructs the street and all improvements.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 428.

The common council orders that the commons of Van Cortlandt build at his own expense "A good and sufficient Wharf on the East side of the little bridge at the lower End of the broad Street & Keep and Maintain the same in good and sufficient Repair for Ever," a grant of ten feet of ground to be made to him at the rear of his lot near this bridge, with an outlet of the city "at foot feet in front of his lot."—M. C. C., I: 393. For fuller account of the little bridge, see Jan. 16, 1700.

The common council resolves "that all the Inhabitants of this 13 City their Apprentices and Children that were here att the time

The Charter was Granted be Allowed and Deemed Freemen of the City they registering their Names in the Town Clerks office for which Each Person Soe Registered Shall pay Nine pence.—M. G. C., I: 394. This order was retracted on June 28, 1698 (g.v.).

1696.—It is provided by the government's council that Stevanus van Cortlandt, with any two additional members of the council, shall be keepers of the great seal of the province during the governor's absence at Albany. He is authorized also to take probates and great letters of administration.—Cal. Hist. MSS. Eng., 283.

—The first hackney-coach in New York made its appearance this year. John Clapp stated in his Almanack for . . . 1697 (g.v.) that it was one year "since the first hackney Coach was made and kept in this city by John Clapp [himself], for the accommodation of all Persons desirous to hire the same."—From The Coaches of Colonial New York, by Geo. W. W. Houghton, a paper read March 4, 1890, before the N. Y. Hist. Soc.; Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 455; ibid. (1866), 578. This will correct the misinformation in Vol. I, p. 373, that the first hackney-coach was introduced in 1786.

—Land for a meeting-house for the Society of Friends (Quakers) was bought of David Lloyd for £25. It was 90 by 90 feet, bounded on the east by Little Liberty St. (Lanman Pl.), on the north by John Rodman, west by the land of Edward Buring, and north by a vacant lot. Previous to this, the congregation had met at private houses, notably at Robert Story's and Lewis Morris's (nephew of Col. Lewis Morris).—From the earliest manuscript records of the society (care of John Cox, Jr.), see also Onderdonk, Annals of Hempstead, 102. Little Green St., later named Liberty Place, extended from Crown (Liberty) St. north to Maiden Lane, about 75 ft. west of Nassau St. The ground for the meeting-house was in the rear of the present Chamber of Commerce building (65 Liberty St.). Here the first Friends' meeting-house in New York was erected about 1698 (g.v.), a date more authoritative than any of those suggested by Greenleaf (Hist. of the Churches in N. Y., 116). For further history of this church, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 928. See also May 5, 1774.

—The dwelling-house of Jacobus Kip, built on his plantation at Kip's Bay, on the East River, is destroyed. Another residence was erected on the site.—Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 472, with illustration of the second residence. This was destroyed when 33rd St. was opened, in 1856.—ibid. (1857), 535.

—At this period, Nassau St. was so called as far north as Maiden Lane.—See Pl. 24-a, Vol. I. See also May 25, 1889; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1006.

—The "Shoemakers Land," a tract of 17 acres lying east of Broadway, north of Maiden Lane, and extending to a point a little north of Fulton St., was in this year partitioned into 164 building lots—135 (Albany). For map and description of this land, see Pl. 23-a, Vol. I.

—Captain Kidd at this time was owner, by purchase, of a lot of ground in a part of the city then just being sold off in building lots, in a street called Tienhoven St. (now Liberty St.), near Nassau St. Here he erected a mansion, expecting, doubtless, to "pass the evening of his days in the city of his adoption."—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 515.

—In this year, the first French book printed in New York, entitled Le Traité des Constructions Devises et Humaines, was issued from the press of William Bradford, at the expense of Antoine Pintaard, a Huguenot settler, great grandfather of John Pintaard who founded the New York Historical Society.

During the year 1696, the following items of expense for work in the fort appeared in the transactions of the governor's council:

Jan. 9.—To Nicholas Bayard for freight of gun wheels.

Feb. 17.—To James Wells for carpenter work.

March 5.—Dividend on Van der Burgh for tenders; to Isaac Dechamps for ironwork; to Gerrit Duyckingh for painters work; and to Col. Cortlandt for timber.

April 23.—To Peter Mellett for blacksmith work.

May 11.—To James Wells for carpenter work.

1666

one of the north bastions of the city wall was considered "the ground proper for y^e building of an English Church." The location of the French and Lutheran Churches are also shown on this plan.

Feb.

One of the committees of the managers of the proposed new English church (see Jan. 27) reports that the Lutheran congregation has a clear title to part of the land desired for the new church (derived from Nicholls' patent to Pluvier), but that the Lutherans have agreed to assign their interest to them for £30. The Lutherans also make a voluntary gift of an additional piece of ground in the rear of the other, near the "Luctus Trees." They ask only the "Liberty of burying their Dead in the Church yard" at the regular rates to be charged by the English church.—From the original loose Trin. Min. (MS.).

Cornelius Quick and Isaac Anderson agree with the vestry of Trinity Church to cut and bring "Stones from Monniss Island," for the period of one month, beginning next week, at one shilling and three half-pence a load. They will continue as long as necessary "for y^e building of y^e Church." Mayor Merritt and Capt. Tothill are to go to "Monniss Island & Discourse Mr Blackwell relating to the Quarry of Stones on y^e Said Island." Mr. Blackwell has granted the stone without charge.—From the original loose Trin. Min. (MS.).

The island was probably Blackwell's.—See Mon. C. Coun. April 1733.

"Resolved that the Dementions of y^e Church propos'd to be 2 built be in manner following (that is to say) Seventy foot in Length from outside to outside & fifty foot in breadth from outside to outside.

Coll Heathcoat & Mr James Ewett docs report that 2 Capt Corlantil & Elia Parker will furnish the said Timber at easier Rates (& more Certains) then any others, it is therefore agreed that they forthwith Agree with the aforesaid parties upon the best Terms they Can, in Order the Said Timber may be ready for y^e Carrying on of y^e Said works with all Conveniency.

Capt Tothill docs report that he has Conditionally agreed with Adolph Meyer & John Kickhout & other Inhabitants of Harlem for the furnishing of stones for y^e Building of y^e Said Church (that is to say) that the said persons will undertake to Cut & break two thousand loads of Stones of Barnes Island (if so many be Conveniently to be got there) & be to brought down to a convenient landing place at the rate of seven hundred half pence £ losde Curf Money of New York; he furnishing the said parties with some tools (Vizt) two Craws, two Wedges A Pickax & a Maul, & an Eighteen Shillings to Drinkle & that they would proceed as soon as the weather would permit. . . . [This island was either Randle's or Monniss Island. —See Mon. C. Coun. (1833), 495–96. See also April 6.]

"M^r Emott Reports that he hath treated with Cornelius Plevier for y^e Land which he had Reserved out of his Grant to the Lutheran Congregation which Contains about Sixteen foot in the front but much more to the rear & which is high for his Church to be built for the same for y^e sum of fourteen pounds & that upon Demand & upon payment of y^e Said Sum will Execute Such Conveyance as in the Law shall be thought Needful to such person or Persons & to such use & uses as shall be Required which is Approved.

"Mr Morris does Report that he hath Agreed with Marquio [blank] at Staten Island for Six hundred Pounds of Oyster Shell Lime to be Delivered at New York Sometime in April next at the rate of twelve Shillings & Six pence £ Carre load Curel Money of New York & a Gratuity of five & twenty Shillings which is Approved.—From the original loose Trin. Min. (MS.).

[blank] a committee is appointed to see if the slaughter-house formerly used for the purpose is suitable for a storage, and if so to move the powder there.—M. G. C. L. 400. This was the slaughter-house built in 1675, "without the Gate at the Smiths Fly, near the Half Moone," which on April 6, 1683, was made a general store-house for powder.—Ibid., II: 150. On Aug. 3, 1696 (p. 267), a powder house was provided for at "point Holland," and on Aug. 9, payment was made "for boards, Nails, Iron works & Labour for fitting the Powder house."—Ibid., I: 417. It was further repaired in 1698.—Ibid., II: 30. For a later powder-house, situated elsewhere, see March 29, 1700.

The common council orders that a warrant be issued "for y^e paying the Acct of William Bradford Amounting to five pounds Nine Shillings its being for a Book of y^e Acts of Assembly," also for "Printing an Ordinance Printing y^e City Laws & Making up the Books of y^e Laws."—M. G. C. L. 400. See also the bibliography of official publications of the province, in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin, Feb.–April, 1933, pp. 4–7.

"It is agreed that the Persou Present doe meet on the Ground designed for y^e Building of y^e Church att three of y^e Clock to Morrow In the Afternoon. In order to See the Same Staked out According to the Purchase."—From the loose Trin. Min. (MS.).

The Members of the Church (especially the Slaughterer for license) "to purchase a small piece of Land Lying without the North gate of the said City between the Kings Garden and the barraking Place and to hold the same in mortmain and thereon to build the said Church," etc. Granted.—Dec. Hist. N. T. (180 ed.), III: 247. See also April 2. (Date seems to contradict that of preceding item.)

The council decides to ask the money to finish the church in the chapel.—Col. Coun. Min., 113. See Oct. 20, 1694.

"Resolved that Capt. Tothill Capt. Morris & Mr Lurtling doe provide Spades & Shovells & Other Necessarys for opening the Ground for y^e foundation of the new English church & also that they Provide boards Nails & Such other Materials as will be wanting for the building of a Shed to Secure the tools etc. & take Care the S^d Shed be forthwith built.

'Mr Mayor Mr Emott Capt. Tothill & Capt. Willson have each of them Sent a Negro to works on Wensday Next [March 23] for y^e opening the Ground for the foundation . . . . "Agreed Nemine Contra Diecte that y^e twelve Managers of the Church building doe each finde A Negro or Labourer to be employed on the S^d building for four wendays att their own proper Charge over & Above their Subscriptions."—From the original loose Trin. Min. (MS.).

On this day ground is to be broken, by order of the managers on March 23, for the new English church. There is no record of the laying of a corner-stone, but see under May 2, 1696. As appears by the records of subsequent events, the "first opening" of the church service was on March 15, 1698. The Bishop of London was present, and the church was consecrated. The recession was not completed, however, until 1711, owing to lack of funds. In 1715, the church was enlarged. It was destroyed by fire in 1776. The second Trinity Church was completed in 1790; this was torn down in 1839, and the present edifice was consecrated in 1846.—See Jan. 1790; July 19, 1839; May 21, 1845; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 938.

The Memorial of Coll Stephen V: Collardt is read in common council "Desiring the broad Street may be laid out straight or Even upon A Direct Line from the house of Jacob Melyea along the house where Mr Le Bayeaux lives in and see to the Dock and what it Curts of Friendly to be granted by the stockholders; Shop he is willing to loose for what it Shall take in from y^e City Ground at y^e Dock near y^e little Bridge and make the wharfe of Stone as is Ordered etc." A committee is appointed to examine the ground. At the next meeting, it was ordered "that the Surveyors of this City do lay out the Ground Desired by Coll Collardt in his Memorial . . . . And make a Draft thereof and Return the Same to the Clerks Office with all Convenient Expedition and that the said Coll Collardt have Liberty to Proceed in his building till the same is perfected and that the Committee Alfoeaid doe Dispose of the Shed Standing Upon the Said Ground that the same is Not patented and Make Return of y^e Conditions the S^d Coll Collardt is to perform in writing."—M. G. C. L. 401–2. It has not been possible to ascertain whether the street was ever straightened as here proposed.

The common council orders that the inhabitants of Beaver St. pave the street from side to side.—M. G. C. L. 402.
The inhabitants of Harlem are permitted by the common council to allow their horses to run at large within the said precincts, and also to make their fences six rails high, so that their "improved land may not be Damnedified thereby."—M. C. C., I. 402.

A patent to Caleb Heathcote (representing the managers of the new English Church)—see Jan. 27, conveys "a lot of ground situated south of the last treacle, and in the city of New York, laid out for Caleb Heathcote, by Aug: Graham, surveyor."—Land Papers (sec. of state's office), II. 232, as listed in Cal. Land Papers, 48.

This grant to Heathcote was considered one of the extravagant grants of Gov. Fletcher.—See Jan. 9, 1699.

"And yet Janse Rentz receives from the governour and council a confirmatory grant of the slaughthouse lands.—Cal. Coun. Min., 113.

"Cornelius Quick & Castleion Junf have agreed with the persons aforesaid [Trinity vestry] that they will Employ their Sloops or boats to fetch Stones from little Barnes Island for ye Building the Church aforesaid at the Rate of six pence (£. 0d., & the charge of one of them will be paved next & doe further Engage they will Employ their boats or sloops in other Service if they finde they have a Reasonable Benefitt thereby."

"Mr. Exects Reports that he has agreed with Elisha Parker of Woodbridge in the Province of East Jersey for ye Building of the Church aforesaid at the rate of six pence (£. 0d., & the charge of one of them will be paved next & doe do further Engage they will Employ their boats or sloops in other Service if they finde they have a Reasonable Benefitt thereby."

"From original loose Trin. Min. (MS.)."

The ground behind the windmill is granted to Capt. Kip.—Cal. Coun. Min., 125.

This the bill or charter of the building of a slaughter-house.—Sum June 1, 1680.

The grant was made by Gov. Fletcher to Johannis Kip, Lucas Kiersted, and William Teller, as trustees, in trust for the children and devisors of Sara Rodolf, and not in their own right.—Smith ex dem. Teller v. G. & P. Lorillard, Johnson's Reports (Supreme Court), Xi. 339.

The will of Cornelis van Borsum was dated June 16, 1680, making his widow, Sara, his universal heir; Sara's will was dated July 29, 1693, by which she devised her estate to her several children, by her deceased husband, Hans Kiersted; she appointed Johannis Kip, Lucas Kiersted, and William Teller her executors, etc.—Ibid., 339.

Jacobus Kip, the eldest son of Johannis Kip, was granted land in the City of New York, where his house, in 1725 (see under Dec. 17, 1737), prevailed upon the common council to appoint a committee to assist him in "surveying and laying out" this tract.—M. C. C., III. 335.

A descendant of Teller, later on, claimed the ground. See Smith ex dem. Teller v. Lorillard, op. cit, by which it appears that the tract was known commonly as the Negro's Burying-ground, and that in May, 1768, Teller "entered into possession of a house which he had built two or three years before on the Negroes' Burying-Ground and which had, previously to his entrance, been occupied by his tenant; that he had a fence enclosing the burying-ground, and claimed it as his property — and took payment for the use of the ground; that he continued in possession until his death in June, 1775, and his family continued in possession afterward until the British army took possession of the house and lot, and during the course of the war; and that while under the domination of the British, the house and fences were destroyed."—Johnson's Rep., X. 355.

A deed of partition of the Negroes' Burying Ground was made January 6, 1795, between Henry H. Kip, Abraham I. van Vleck, John and Samuel Kip, of the first part, Samuel Breese and Aaron Israel of the second part, and the Committee & Commissioners of the City & County of New York, for the purpose of dividing the said land, of the said Negroes' Burying-Ground, into lots for building purposes, and for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a burying-ground for the burial of persons of African descent, and the same was recorded in the books of the City Hall. See also the permits and patents mentioned in the preceding section of this report.

The above-named executors of Samuel Bayard to Peter Lorillard, as against the title of the heirs of Teller, who had been driven off by the British. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III. 927. Just why this tract should have become a negroes' burying-ground (which it did sometime prior to 1775), for it is so shown on a map of 1755—see Pl. 34, Vol. 1), and subsequently a common potter's field, and a burying-place for theotten of the Americans was abandoned at the time of the Revolutionary war, does not exactly appear. As shown by the grant to Van Borsum, Oct. 4, 1675 (q. v.), and the confirmatory patent by Fletcher in 1696, the heirs of Sara Roodol should always have had a good title here by descent.

Persons recently arrived in town are to be asked to subscribe to the building of Trinity Church.—Loose Trin. Min. (MS.), op. cit.

The "gate of the city" is still referred to in public documents as a familiar landmark.—Jour. Leg. Coun., 90. It is the well-known "land gate" of the walled city, situated at Broadway and the present Wall St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III. 945. There appears to be no record to show when the land gate itself was demolished; the bastions near this point were demolished in 1699, and the stone used building the city hall was removed. See M. C. C., II. 424.

The common council grants to Capt. Ebenezer Willson land "from the Street to Low Water Mrake on ye West Side of ye house of Thomas Hodee to the building of a Slaughter house," measuring about 24 ft. in depth and 100 ft. along the street.—M. C. C., I. 424.—See Oct. 15, 1691; Nov. 9, 1698.

The common council orders that "the Inhabitants fronting to "Burgers Path" make this street "Convenient for Carta to goe to and from the water Side," in accordance with the directions of the city surveyors.—M. C. C., I. 404. See also Sept. 23. On June 11, 1697 (q. v.), another order required "the Slip at Burgers path" to be paved. Some time later the inhabitants in a petition to the board declared that they had done so, but that Capt. Clock had now "be- come so strong to stop up this way." In reply it was said "Slip may not be spoyled it being the most Convenient place in all the City" to unload boat, canoes, and other vessels.—From original petition (with-out date) in metal file No. 1, city clerk's record-room. Burgers Path was paved in 1698.—See Jan. 11, 1699.

The common council grants the petition of Alderman Cortlandt who desires "that A Slip or Inlet may be made before the Citty Hall" at his own expense.—M. C. C., I. 404. Apparently this was the origin of what later became known as "Coenties Slip."—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III. 988; and Pl. 59, Vol. I. Also see Aug. 17, 1699.

Fletcher signs the charter of the Dutch Church (see Pl. 24, Vol. IV), giving it the corporate name of "The Minster, Elders, and Deacons of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of the City of New York."—Cal. Coun. Min., 114. For the full text, see Excels. Rec., III. 1165-65, where it is compared in parallel columns with the charter of Trinity Church (1697). The charter of the Dutch Church was the first church charter granted in the colony, and that of Trinity the second.—See Murphy's "Anthology of New Netherland" (1865), 124, where he states that the Dutch charter was on record (1686) in the office of the secretary of state in book of patents, VII. 25. The original is now in the church archives in New York. The charter describes five pieces of property belonging to the church. These include the church and cemetery in Garden St.; a lot on the west and north of the church lot; a lot on Beaver St.; and the manor of Freedam. Religious freedom is given to this church, and its property rights are confirmed. See Addenda.

The common council takes under consideration the subject of building a new city hall, and it is ordered "that Alderman Cortlandt Alderman Darkins & Alderman Boelen MF D: Peyster MF Rip Van Dam & MF Ewastie together with Capt. Clarke MF Lorilling & Capt. Kip be A Committee to make a Draft of ye Citty Hall & to compute & Estimate what the building thereof may Cost; and likewise how Much this Citty Hall and Ground & the land under the Trees by Burgers path will Sell for & make Report thereof in fourteen days to the Clerkes office."—M. C. C., I. 405. On June 26, 1696, "By Majority of Votes it was Agreed that a Citty Hall be Built," and a memorandum was entered in the Minutes that “It is Proposed that ye Easiest and best way for the building A New City Hall Powder house &c. is to Mortgage the Rent of ye Ferry for fifteen years to the Present Townshy and Ground Concluded to be Sold in the Rear of the Dock Street at Nine pence ² foot, for ye building the Same to the Value of three thousand Pounds the undertaker having ye Benefit of ye Rent for Powder and Other Conveniences all Publick Rooms and Offices Excepted and that the Said City Hall is to be built and Covered by the first day of November Come twelve Months.” Whereupon it was ordered “that Mr Mayor Calling to his Assistance such of ye Aldermen and Common Council As he shall think fit & the Surveyors of this City & such Carpenters and Bricklayers as may be Needfull doe take the Dimensions of the Several parts of the Said City Hall as will be Needfull to be laid for the Sum aforesaid.”—Ibid., I: 410. On July 2, 1696, it was ordered that a committee, including the surveyors, “make an Estimate what the building of A New City Hall will amount to & where it will be most Convenient to place the same and ye Others of ye Easiest and most proper Method for the Raising A Fund to build the same and that they Likewise made A Draught and Ascertaine ye Dimensions thereof.”—Ibid., I: 411.

A new committee was appointed for the same purpose on Nov. 11, 1696.—Ibid., I: 428. And again, after the board had reaffirmed the necessity of building a new hall, and had resolved that “this Lot of ye Bridge Shall not be Sold or Disposed of” for this purpose (ibid., II: 20-21), and after repairing the old city hall, which was in a dilapidated condition (ibid., II: 16, 17, 18, 20), another committee was appointed on Nov. 9, 1698, to determine where a new hall could be built most conveniently, what materials would be needed, and what the cost would be, and to “make Reporte with all Convenient Speed.”—Ibid., II: 66. On Jan. 11, 1699, “The Committee Appointed to View the City Hall &c.” reported that they had “viewed the present City Hall and finde itt insuficient and doe think the upper end of the broad Street A proper place for ye Building a new City Hall And believe the Sum of three Thousand pounds may be sufficient for the building the Same According to the former draft drawn by Mr James Evetts which Reporte is Approved.”—Ibid., II: 68. On May 25, 1699, the board “doe Unanimously Resolve (Almobern Cortlandt only dissenting) that A New City Hall be built with all Convenient Expedient And that the same be Erected And built at the upper end of the broad Street . . . and that the Mayor taking to his Assistance such of the Aldermen Assistants and Surveyors of the Said City as he shall think convenient doe lay out the Ground for the Building the Same.”—Ibid., II: 78.

After these preliminary arrangements, it was at length ordered, on Aug. 9, 1699, that the mayor, etc., employ workmen to lay the foundation of the new hall.—Ibid., II: 79. The procuring of stone was next considered. On Aug. 18, 1699, the board decided that a petition should be presented immediately to Nanfan, the lieutenant-governour, and his council, stating that the city was purposing to build a new hall “frothing the line of fortifications on Wall St., and asking him “to intercede with his Excellency the Capt. Gen. . . . that the Stones of ye &c Bastians with the Consent of the Owners thereof may be Appropriaed to the Building the said City Hall.”—Ibid., II: 82. Nanfan evidently referred the petition to the governor, for on Sept. 4, 1699, in a letter to Mayor De Peyster, Bellomonte stated: “I write to my cousin Nanfan last post To Let the City of N. york have ye Stones of the old bastions or batteries To build their Town-house.”—From the original letters, in De Peyster Papers, in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. On Sept. 7, the governor ordered the demolition of two bastions.—Col. Coun. Min., 142. Between that date and Sept. 20, we know the foundation of the new city hall was laid, for on the latter date the common council ordered the mayor to issue his warrant to the treasurer to pay “the Expenses which was made att the Laying ye Foundation of the City Hall.”—M. C. C., II: 86. Regarding the superstructure, see Oct. 16, 1699. A board of trade is established in England by the king, under a commission of this date, for promoting the trade of Great Britain, and improving the king’s plantations in America and elsewhere. High commissioners are appointed to meet at Whitehall to take according the superstructure and devise means of promoting the trade and manufacture of the provinces; to take “care of all Records, Grants and Papers remaining in the Plantation Office” to take account yearly “by way of Journals of the Administration of our Government,” etc., etc.—N. Y. Col. Docts., IV: 145-48. See also Dickenson, May. Am. Colonial Government, 1606-1676; A study of the British Board of Trade in its relation to the American Colonies, Political, Industrial, Administrative (1912). There is published by Bradford, as a 4-page broadside, an address signed “Chand. Brokke” and “W. Nicoll,” beginning: “To their Excellencys, the Lords Justice of England, the Humble Memorial of Chillery Brooke and William Nicoll, Sheweth that they were sent from the Governour, Council and General Assembly of His Majesties Province of New York about the month of November last, with an humble Address of thanks to His Sacred Majesty for his Royal Care of and Bounty to that Province, . . .”—See auction Catalogue of the library of George H. Moore, May 10, 1895. Fletcher issues a proclamation of thanksgiving on receiving “certain intelligence of a late horrid and detestable conspiracy, against the sacred life of Our Sovereign Lord King William.”—From Miss Hase’s “Biography” in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1905), 57. On the 26th a celebration was ordered.—Col. Coun. Min., 114, 115. He reported to Shrewsbury by letter on the 30th that he had appointed a day for this purpose.—N. Y. Col. Doc.t., IV: 149. Clap’s Almanac (1697, p.21) mentions the plot. “Associations” are formed to protect the king.—See Col. State Papers, Am. & W. I., 1696-1697, items Nos. 15, 16, 16, 16; see also Oct. 14, 1699.

In a report to the lords of trade, Fletcher stated that a band of pirates came recently into the province, shared their booty and departed. He adds: “Their Treasure was Spanish money, they enchain the Charter Governments.”—N. Y. Col. Doc.t., IV: 151. See also “Benjamin Fletcher and the Rise of Piracy” in Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., I: 489; and Lamb, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 427.

An alarming scarcity of bread begins to prevail.—Lamb, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 426. The common council orders an assize of bread, only the wheat loaf being permitted; also that “No Person or Persons Shall Presume to Bake bread Biskott or Coockees of Any Sorte or Kinde whatsoever within this City without Entering their Names with the Mayor.” All bakers “admitted by the mayor” are required “to keep bread in their Shops that the Inhabitants may be Supplied.”—M. C. C., I: 405-6, 418. On June 11, the freeholders and inhabitants of the city petitioned for an embargo on the exportation of grain, flour, and bread (Cal.Hist. MSS., Eng., 251), and the governor and council decided that no corvo should be exported.—Col. Coun. Min., 115. On the same day, Fletcher issued a proclamation, printed by Bradford, prohibiting the exportation of “Flower, Bread, or any other Grain, until the first of August next ensuing.”—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 251; Miss Hase’s “Biography” in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1905), 57. See also July 2, and Nov. 17, 1696.

Fletcher writes to the lords of trade that: “The town of Philadelph in fourteen years time is become equal to the City of New York in trade and riches, the hardships that this province and the Frontiers has undergone in the depopulation of them is that our people have drew many of them thither to enjoy their ease, and there being no duty upon trade in that Colony it is a discouragement to the trade of this province whose inhabitants are left wholly to bear the burden of the Warr, whilst they grow by the hardships of our circumstances and derive all their protection from our forces.”—N. Y. Col. Doc.t., IV: 155-56.

Fletcher further reports that “There are several Quakers in the City of New York who [from a pretence of tenderness of conscience and aversion to the armal weapon will not sign the Association nor take an oath. I have given orders to release them.”—Ibid., IV: 159.

He also reports: “I have transmitted to your Lordship a list of the Roman Catholics, and reputed Papiats in New York who are all disarmed and oblige to give bond with surety for their good behavoir or be confined in prison.”—Ibid., IV: 160. The governor and council issued an order the following day (June 11) that all Roman Catholics should be disarmed and imprisoned.—Col. Coun. Min., 115. Again, on June 13, Fletcher having referred this order to Maj. William Merritt, the mayor, to give a list of “all the Roman Catholics or such as are reputed Papists within the City of New York,” the mayor lists ten persons. See also June 16. The common council resolves that, “in Consideration that the Respective Inhabitants of Dock Street will build A Wharfe or Street of thirty foot wide at Low water Mark to Remain for A Publick Street, &c. that ye Vacant Ground between the Said Street of or whale, and their former Purchases from this City be Granted unto them at the Rate of Nine pence each Flatt foot, they being to have no buildings thereon. Otherwise, no such manner shall be at Large Mentioned in their Several Grants for y?e Same (that is to say) the Front of y?e houses Fronting the water Side to be of Brick or Stone & the Said houses to be two stories High at the least and that No buildings Shall be Erected before the Said Purchasers and or the Said Atlantic or Street Shall be repaired from a Certaine Knocth made upon the wharf fronting the City Hall to the whare in Queen Street."—M. C. C., I. 406. On Sept. 23, 1696, the petition of the freeholders of Dock St. was read "Desiring the Ground laid out in the Rear of their Lots Next the East River may be Granted them by the Governor and the Land in front of their Lots on Dock (later Pearl) St. with the obligation that each of them should have a wharf or street (Water St.) 30 ft. in width along his water front.—City Grants, Liber A: 205-30, 239-47. This was the beginning of Water Street.—See April 15, 1736.

A committee of the common council, which was appointed on May 12, on petition of the inhabitants of Broad Street, to make an estimation of the cost of building a common sewer through that street, reports "that they have taken the Dimensions of y?e Said Street and doe finde itt to be 100 Length from the Corner of Mt Le Boy- tleurs to the Upper Wall by M. Van Vlack 1,450 feet; "that Every foot shall Cost fifteen Shillings and that the Severall Streets running into the Said Street are 120 feet wide, and are included in the 1,170 feet above mentioned.—M. C. C., I: 405, 407. Evidently no action was taken at this time, for the subject was re-introduced June 25, 1793 (q.v.).

The common council orders "that the Surveyors of this City doe lay out the Ground belonging to the Land from the Corner of the Fortification att Burgers Path to the Lott of M. F. Graham Granted by this City, And from a Certaine Old Wall to the Line Run for y?e Placing the wharfs which are to Run from Queen Street, in Front of the Lots of M. H. Luke and M. Van Vlack selected to run, and to make a Draught of the same.—M. C. C., I: 407-8. The fortification referred to was a half-moon battery, at the present Hannover Sq., east of Old Slip, and was the successor to the one built before 1679 (q.v.), on the west side of Burger's Path (Old Slip). It was placed here prior to 1695, as it appears on the Miller Plan, Pl. 23-a, Vol. I. A battery was completed here in 1704.—M. C. C., I: 266. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

The common council orders that, after July 7 next, the "Slaughter houses in Queen Street near y?e Gate" having become a nuis- ance to the neighbourhoud, be no longer used.—M. C. C., I: 408. Soon after this, Johannes Beeckman's slaughter-house, near the present Water St., east of Beckman St., was probably erected.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 982; and Burrys View, I: 250.

"Resolved that a Petition be drawn to his Excellency to require that y?e Ministers of the Commonwealth of the State & Others for the Relief of Some Persons detain'd as slaves in Sally [Sabo], Morocco be applied towards the building of y?e English Church, their having been no Occasion to make use of the same for the Purposes aforesaid Some of the Said Persons being dead & the Rest having made their Skape. To be applied by M. Emmott to Draw the same y?e Next Council Day.—"From the original loose Trin. Min. (MS.). By resolution of the governor's council on July 16, the money collected for the redemption of slaves at Salee was to be applied as requested in this petition.—Cal. Coun. Min., I. 116. See also Sept. 6 and Dec. 2, 1697.

The proclamation of June 11, prohibiting the exportation of food-stuffs, is rescinded by another proclamation, which, however, continues the prohibition against the exportation of "Corned and course Bisket."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 252; Miss Hasse's "Bibli- ography," in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1952), 57.

The mayor and captains of the militia have viewed "his Majesties Fortifications about this City," by order of the governor, and found them machiny A Dit repair. They are informed that there is no money in the city treasury and no fund for repairing them. The governor has information regarding the "Designs of the Enemy upon this place," and it is "of Absolute Necessity that the same be forthwith Repaired And put in A Posture of Defence." The mayor therefore proposes "for each of the Inhabitants at this time of Exigency," that a tax be raised for that purpose, and the common council decides unanimously to raise $500 by taxation "for the Defraying the Charge of Repairing the Carriages of the Guns & Fortifications." This is not to establish a precedent, however, which the city shall be obliged to perform in any future case. The expense of buying materials and paying the men on the present occasion shall be paid on or before Sept. 5—M. C. C., I: 412-13. An ordinance was passed and published on Aug. 5 to raise the $500 for the repair of the fortifications, the full text of which was recorded on that day in the Minutes.—Ibid., I: 431. Trinity vestry requires that Mr. Ashfield provide 3,000 bricks; 6 that Mr. De Key send the 2,000 bricks which he has given, and that Capt. Clarke provide "footlocks" (?), for building the church. —From the original loose Trin. Min. (MS.).

A petition is granted by the governor and council, which was submitted to the inhabitants of the City, to incorporate us by patent under the great Seal, endowing us with much profit and especial privileges. Such is our Charter and so found in the front of this Record. The Consistory therefore resolved after consideration, to give thanks to his Excellency in recognition of all this, and besides, in place of the usual fee, to make him a present of Silver Plate to the value of £75 or 80, currency of this province. The Deacons are to provide this in the way of a loan, and shall be reimbursed in due time from the Manor or other Revenues of the Church. Messrs. Jacobus van Cortland and Brandt Schuyler are herewith requested to tender this compliment to his Excellency.—From the original Records of the Ref. Prov. Dutch Church (translation, 1864, by Rev. Talbot W. Chambers, D.D.), Liber A, p. 128. For Bellomont's opinion on this, see Nov. 12, 1698; Jan. 9, 1699.

Resolvd that Coll Heathcote Mf Mayor & Mf Emmott doe Consult with the Kings Attorney General about the taking out a Charter for y?e Church & Ground Convenient & make a Memorial of Such Articles as will be proper to be sett forth in the Petition to his Excell: &c for y?e Granting the same, and likewise to Conclude of A Convenient piece of Ground for the building of a Free School house &c. In Order A Petition may be prefer'd to his Excell: for his Majy's Grant thereof on this board. Also to the Governor, and the original loose Trin. Min. (MS.). See also Aug. 24 and Oct. 24, 1696.

Rev. John Miller, late chaplain to his majesty’s forces in New York (see under date of June, 1695), gives information to the board of trade at Whitehall respecting this province. He states among other things, that “there are about 3000 Families in New York and about 5000 Families in Connecticut.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV, 183; but see Sept. 16, 1696. “There is but one Minister of the Church of England and one School in the whole Colony of New York. A Dutch Minister there had instructed some Indian children. But the English of New York had not endeavoured it.”—Ibid.

“Resolved that Capt’ Thomas Clarke doe Purchase a thousand foot of Pine board for the Covering of ye Sth Church upon Reasonable terms.”—From original lease Trin. Min. (MS).

Judge Samuel Sewall, writing in his diary of the ordination of the Rev. Benjamin Wadsworth as pastor of the First Church in Boston, says that the Rev. Increase Mather, in giving the right hand of fellowship: “Spake notably of some young men who had apostatised from New England principles, contrary to the Light of their education.” Among the young men thus referred to was the Rev. William Vezzie or Vesey, who was graduated from Harvard College in 1693, and who on one occasion “preached at the Ch. of Engld” in Boston, where he “had many Auditors,” and afterward became the first rector of Trinity Church in New York.—Sewall’s Diary, ii, 143. See also Feb. 17, 1696.

Fletcher issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, prohibiting the transportation of Indian corn and peat from Albany, Ulster, and Dutchess Counties to points down the Hudson, until April 1, 1697. This was to enable the Indians of the Five Nations to replenish their corn supply, which had been destroyed by the French and Indians of Canada.—From an original broadside, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

“Resolved that Capt’ Clarke doe Purchase a Sufficient Quantity of Eight penny Nails for ye Shingling of ye Sth Church [Trinity]. — Resolved that Capt’ Clarke & Capt’ Morris doe Agree with Judge Pinhorse for twenty-four thousand of two foot Shingles.”—From original lease Trin. Min. (MS).

In a representation concerning the state of the province, presented to the board of trade at Whitehall by Jacob Leisler (ad) and Gouvernour, it is stated that there may be about 5000 or 9000 families in New York Province.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV, 217-218. It is also stated that there are “very great feuds in the Country ever since the Revolution. Those who joy’d with Governor Leisler in it are 19 to one; but now oppressed and kept out of all manner of place or employment in the Government but tho’ the Parliament here [in England] have reversed the Attendant, both MF Leisler and he are kept out of part of their Estate.”—Ibid., IV, 217-218. The report was continued on Sept. 28, 1696. It was intended to call attention to the misgovernment of the province, and particularly to accuse Fletcher of misappropriation or misuse of public revenues, and of attempting forcibly to prevent the election of Leisler’s followers to the general assembly in 1694 and 1695. Complaint was also made that the fortifications to New York City were also out of repair, that the bulwarks not regarded, one of them at the waterside disposed of to private service, great guns not erected, which were procured for the city, etc.—Ibid., IV, 212-214. Delaney’s letter of June 15, 1695 (p. v.), is also presented to the board at this time. See Sept. 21, 1696.

Fletcher reports to the board of trade that Capt. Kidd, “Commander of the adventure Gally,” sailed from New York 12 days ago with 150 men on board. He adds that “in his way hither he took a French Banker which was condemned here and appraised at 500£. I have the King’s tenth and shall account for it as the Lords of the Admiralty direct.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV, 199.

Gov. Fletcher embarks at Greenwich for Albany to renew the “Covenant Chain” with the Five Nations of Indians. For an account of the proceedings at the conferences, held there on Sept., Oct., 1, 2, and 3, see A Journal of what Passed in the Expedition of the Five Nations (1696) (New England, Col., 1847), in the British Museum. The work states that Fletcher returned to New York on Oct. 15; also that this was his second visit to Albany that summer.

in course of erection in the City. Both are constructed of stone and are neat edifices. All has been done since the building of our

The magistrates of Albany desiring Fletcher's presence there 16 during the coming winter, he sends the concurrence of the council and assembly, and a committee from each is appointed to consider the question "at Coll Cortlandts house" ("All correspondence between all and singely being shut up for some months")—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 96.
He resolved to take up his winter quarters there; he left New York at the close of the session, Nov. 30; and on his return reported on March 29, 1697, at a joint meeting of the council and house: "My passage met with some have been favourably considered, for the cartway here described became the southern portion of Nassau St. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1006; and under May 25, 1689. Regarding this

Mrs. Lamb states, in Mag. Am. Hist., XXII: 185-86:
"A cartway was opened from the head of Broad in Wall street to the street line of Nassau. It is interesting to note that Broadway, then called 'the wagon way,' above the city gate, bore no such relative importance to other streets as at present; indeed, the Smith's valley road (afterwards Queen street, now Pearl) from Wall street north was built up much earlier and with a far better class of buildings."

The inhabitants and poor of the city are without bread. None can be bought. The bakers complain that they have no corn, and cannot get any at a reasonable price. The common council orders that the alderman and assistant of each ward inquire what quantity of flour, wheat, and bread there is in each ward.—M. C. G., I: 446.
On Oct. 23, they appointed a committee to confer with the recorder about the proper and most effectual means for causing corn to be brought to the city.—Ibid., I: 427. See Nov. 17.

Col. Caleb Heathcoat and Mayor William Merrett present a memorial to the assembly relating to the building of a free school, a draft of a law being also brought.---Jour. Feb. I: 71.

The church-wardens and vestrymen (comprising the city vestry) again call Mr. William Vesey (24 years old) from Boston "to officiate and have the care of souls in this City of New York" (the earlier call having been on Jan. 26, 1695 g. 6.). They lend him money, and are to be ordained by the Bishop of London. Although they find him "Pious Sober," etc., they require him to give a bond to cover the loan of his travelling expenses. A graduate of Harvard, he was given the degree of master of arts by Oxford, in this visit to England, where he was ordained priest on Aug. 4, 1697.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1174-76; and authorities there cited. The original license to Mr. Vesey from the Right Rev. Henry Comyns, D.D., Bishop of London, to be rector of the church (Trinity) at New Nor. 2

This society has also faculties to those of the license, made by Bierstadt on octavo sheets. The Rev. Mr. Vesey was not induced to office as rector until Dec. 25, 1697 (g. 4.). He held the living till 1703. Writing in 1745 (the last year of his rectorate) to Dr. Philip Bear-croft, secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, Dr.
Vesey stated that in 1697, when he began his ministry, the only churches in North America from Maryland to Nova Scotia, erecting for worship according to the Liturgy of the Church of England, were Trinity Church and the church built in New York, one church in Philadelphia (Christ Church), and one in Boston (King's Chapel).
In 1745, most of the provinces or colonies had many Episcopal churches. Extract from documents in the office of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, London, made by Rev. Francis L. Hawks, D.D., in 1826, filed with Hawks MS. in Church Mission House, N.Y. City. For reproduction of Vesey's license, see Pl. 25, Vol. IV.

The common council orders that the alderman and assistants shall look after the repair of wells, and the regulating and paving of streets, in their respective wards, calling to their assistance the city surveyors and other officers "as often as they shall See Occasion."—

In a memorial to the British board of trade, Chidley Brooke and William Nicolls recommend:

"That the Fort at New York may be strengthened and enlarged, it being at present only a defence against Indians, and that an Engineer be sent over to that purpose ...

made sterling money, the value of money there is a full third less than here, two pence sterling is just in England for Clothes, and it costing six pence 6d dem New York money to sub sist them;
and men every day are brought in debt & the excessive price of Clothes & in those parts makes the hardship on the officers not less than the private men; for this reason the Assembly have found it necessary for the present subsistence of the men to grant them an allowance of

The committee appointed by the mayor on Oct. 17 (g. 7.) to investigate the scarcity of bread finds only 700 bu. of corn on hand, or enough to feed the 6,000 inhabitants of this city for a week. They report that "the true and Only Cause did Proceed from ye Liberty and Latitude that Every Planter had Lately taken of making his house or Farme A Markett for his wheat or Converting the same into Flower by Bolting of it And that under Pretence of A Privilege they Conceive they had Obtained by Vertue of A Law made in Gen l Assembly Entituled An Act Agd unlawful Bylaws and unreasonable forfeitures [the "Bolting Act" of March 24, 1694] by which this City which was formerly the only Markett for Corne and the Sole place for Bolting of flower has been very Much wrong'd & Injured not only to the Prefecture of Trade And the Increase of his Ye & also to the Expending the Inhabitants Travellers & Sojourners within the same to Penury and want of bread." The common council decides to appeal to "his Most sacred Majesty," and a committee is appointed to draw up an address to the king regarding "what have been 57 Rights & Privileges of this City And what may be Needed," etc.—M. C. G., I: 420-31; II: 1. They reported on May 29, 1697 (g. 4.).
Fletcher is praised for his "diligence in repairing to Albany upon advice of Mons' Frontenac's late expedition," resulting in the late-speedy retreat. He is advised to follow the example of the French "of instilling into the minds of the people and familiarity with the Indians."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 255-58. For Fletcher's answer regarding his entertaining of pirates, see ibid., IV: 274-75; but see

The court of general sessions orders that Elizabeth Moore and Mary Vincent, who have pleaded guilty to stealing "some Remnants of Sarge Scs: to the value of ten pence," be taken to the whippingpost and "thee and there be stripped from the waste upwards and Receive on their Nacked backs twenty One Lashes each with Burch Rodds." Any Carr's penalty, years later, for the theft of "two provinces, with power to regulate commerce," was the same, estimated she received six lashes less.—Minutes General Sessions of the Peace (MS.), Feb. 2, 1697; Feb. 17, 1701. A penalty of this sort was not infrequently inflicted on negro criminals, men and women, but the unfortunates above mentioned were whites, apparently. At the court session of Aug. 4, 1697, two negro women, Betty and Frank,
 "were tied to a Cart and whipped upon the Nacked back every forty lashes save one," and it was stipulated precisely how many of these lashes should be applied at each of several street corners as the cart made the circuit of the city.—Ibid., Aug. 4, 1719. For other cases of corporal punishment and the death penalty at this period, see Feb. 5, 1684; Aug. 28, 1685; and April 1, 1712.

The board of trade reports to the king the objections raised by each of the English colonies against a union either a civil or military governor, but it recommends the appointment of a governor or captain-general to serve for all or part of the colonies during the present war. Regarding New York's objection to a union with the province of Massachusetts Bay under one civil governor, it states that, "the towns of New York & Boston having been always rivals in trade, this Union would (in that respect) be very prejudicial to the former."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 259-61.

The Duke of Shrewsbury informs the lords of trade that "the Mar. 16 King has been pleased to appoint the Earl of Bellomont to be Governor of the Provinces of New York, Massachusetts Bay and New Hampshire, and to be Captain-General during the War, all His Majesty's forces both there and in Connecticut, Rhode Island and the Jerseys" in accordance with the report made by the lords to the king on Feb. 5.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 261.

It is resolved by Trinity vestry that "his Excellency the Governor be Addressed by some of the Members of this Church to the effect of continuing the Meeting of Trinity Church to Congratulate his Safe Return from Frontier att Albany & to Acknowledge his Excells many great & Charitable gifts for the Encouraging the Carrying on soe good a is the present Exchange Alley.

The lords of trade, having prepared drafts of commissions and instructions for the Earl of Bellomont, give to the king for his guidance a statement of the salaries paid to former governors, as follows: In 1686, Andros, then governor of all England but not New York, received £1,200 sterling for one year, payable by England until the revenue to New England should be settled. In 1687, the charter of New England having been surrendered to the crown, and the settled revenue there being continued by order from England, Andros was paid £1,200 sterling out of the revenue allowed by New York for the support of their governors, and the remaining £200 of the New England allowance was to be paid to the lieutenant-governor. After 1688, on the accession of William III to the crown (the two governments of New York and New England being divided), the governors of New York had their former salary of £600 sterling per annum allotted them out

Dongan resided, formerly known as Stuy- vesant's "Great House," is said to be "Commonly then Called & known by the Name of Whitehall."—Liber Deeds, XXI: 290 (New York). Dongan was the first to call the house "Whitehall," and the meaning of the street thus also took its name. See Castello Plan, II: 278.

3. Thomas Dongan mortgages "The Vineyard" (see under Feb. 10, 1697), by the following description: "North side of ye said city adjoining the Commons: of ye land called ye Vineyard, for 22 yeares next after time of ye said sale."—The said mortgage, executed by St. Michael the Archangel."—Liber Deeds, XXI: 290 (New York). The mortgage is Lancaster Symes. For "The Vineyard," see also June 10, 1685; 1759. Landmark Map Rel. Key, III: 1346: Pl. 30. May 29, 1697.

5. The "Management of the Affairs of the Church of England in the City of New-Yorke" petition Fletcher for a charter. They state, among other things, that they have "built a Church and Covered the same;" and they ask that the governor will grant the church to them "in trust for all those that now are or hereafter may be in the said Church of England as now established by law." They ask to be incorporated "by Name of the members in Communion of the Church of England Established by Law," to enjoy the "yearly Maintenance" (evidently meaning the £100 provided in 1693 by the "Act for settling a Ministry"), and to possess such quantity of land as the council shall think fit, near or adjoining the land of the governor. The petition is granted, and it is ordered that "a warrant issue for the drawing of their Charter of incorporation the quit-rent to be one pepper core as desire."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1178-79; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 245-49, citing "Council Minutes;" Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 2575; Cal. Coun. Min., II: 114.

6. The draft of the charter was approved by Trinity vestry on May 28 (q.v.), but was revised on May 31 (q.v.); it bore date of May 6. From the Catalogue of the New-York State Library: 1858, Maps, manuscripts . . . . Coll. Albany, 1857, 112, we learn that the State Library then had possession of a manuscript thus described: "Charter of Trinity Church, in the City of New-York, under the great seal of the Province: Benjamin Fletcher, Commander-in-Chief, May 6, 1697." This catalogue describes the "ancient MS." as "worn or eaten away at the corners." This was probably the copy used by Clerke and Jameson, clerks of the governor's council.—See June 23, 1697. It was burned in the fire which destroyed the State Library, March 29, 1911. The remains of this MS. which was on vellum—shapeless mass of water-soaked pulp—were removed from the debris during the fire by the author. The original charter (PL 24-A, Vol. IV) is still preserved in the archives of Trinity Corporation. This has been damaged by mice, and the seal is lacking. See also Addenda. A printed copy of this charter, published by Hugh Gaine in 1788 (now in the N. Y. Pub. Library), contains, among other provisions, the following statements: At the time the "Ministry Act of 1693" was passed "there was not erected any public Church or Building within our said City, whereunto such a good sufficient Protestant Minister might have been inducted for his orderly officiating of his Duty in the public Worship and Service of God." Fletcher is given credit for his "bountiful Donations" and "pious Endeavours." Others, likewise, have "religiously contributed according to their respective Abilities, several Sums of Money," which have been used "for the erecting and building a Church and laying the Foundation of a Steple." The charter refers to the petition of the church managers for a grant of the "Church and Steple that hath been lately built . . . . together with a certain Piece or Parcel of Ground therunto adjoining, situate, lying, and being in or near to a Street without the North Gate of our said City, commonly called and known by the Name of the Broadway; containing in Breadth on the East End, as the said Street of the Broadway reckned Northward, three Hundred and Forty Feet, until you come unto the Land lately in the Tenure and Occupation of Thomas Lloyd, deceased; and from thence towards the West, in Length by the said Land, until you come into Hudson's River and then southward along Hudson's river, three Hundred and Ninety-five Feet, all of English Measure; and from thence by the Line of our Garden Eastward, unto the Place of the said Street in the Broadway where first began." In view of the expense incurred by Fletcher and others in building the church, and also in erecting and providing a House for the said Church, for the Habitation of a Minister," the charter asserts, as the "Royal Will and Pleasure," that the church "and the Ground thereunto adjoining, included and used for a Cemetery or Church Yard, shall be the Parish Church, and Church Yard of the Parish of Trinity Church." The Right Rev. the Lord Compton, D.D., Bishop of London, is constituted "the first Rector thereof." See May 31. He, his successors, the rector of the parish, and the communicants of the church are incorporated as "The Rector and Inhabitants of our said City of New-York, in Communion of our Protestant Church of England as now established by our Laws." Many rights and privileges are stated in detail in the charter. The right to a seal is accorded. The first wardens and vestrymen are named, and their duties defined. They are required, among other things, within the next 300 [sic] days to obtain an estimate of the cost of erecting and finishing the said Church and Steple, and providing a Clock and one or more Bells for the same church, and other Works necessary and requisite in and about the said Church and Steple; and of building a convenient House for the said Rector. All the duties, Credits, Contracts, made, to be made, are "to be kept and recorded by any of those that shall be employed for any Work or Building" are to be entered and registered in one or more Books or Books to be kept for such purpose." The charter further declares "that the said Church and Cemetry, or Church Yard, . . . shall be the sole and only Parish Church and Church Yard of our said City of New-York." The charter contains many other provisions, too numerous to mention. For a more extended digest of its contents, see Eccles. Rec., II: 1156-65, where its provisions are compared, in parallel columns, with those of the charter of the Dutch Church, granted by Fletcher in 1696. An official, contemporary, MS. copy of this charter is preserved in the Boileau Library, Oxford. On account of imperfections in the original charter, Trinity Church was reincorporated June 27, 1704 (q.v.). An impression of the original (1697) seal of the corporation of Trinity Church can be seen in the John Paulding collection, presented to the N. Y. Hist. Soc. in 1844. This seal is still in use.

By an order in council at Whitehall, the lords justices (privy council) confirm the "Act against unlawfull By-Laws & unreasonable forfeitures" (the Boling Act of March 24, 1694, 9th.)—Laws and Acts, Bradford ed. Matthew Clarkson receives a patent for a lot in a street which leads from that part of Queen (Pearl) St. which is opposite to Maiden Lane. It measures in front by Fletcher's St., 30 ft.; in length on the north side, 85 ft.; on the south side, 85 ft., and in the rear, 50 ft. It is bounded on the north by Capt. John de Peyster's land; south by Thomas Pearsall's; east by Fletcher's St.; and west by the street which is "by the aforesaid slip." —Liber Patenti, VII: 72 (Albany). The slip here referred to was later called "The Fly Market Slip," and later still Maiden Lane.

Articles of Agreement,

Made the 10th Day of October, in the Year of our Lord 1695, Between the Right Honourable RICHARD Earle of BELLOMONT of the one part, and Robert Levington Esq. and Captain William Kidd, of the other part.

Whereas the Said Capt. William Kidd is desirous of obtaining a Commission as Captain of a Private Man of War in order to take Prizes from those who may be enemies, and to take up Sail from New-England, Rhode Island, New-York, and other parts in America and elsewhere, with an intention to become Pirates, and to commit Spoils and Depredations against the Laws of Nations, and in the Mid-Sea or elsewhere, and to return with such Goods and Riches as they should get, to certain places by them agreed upon; of which said Prizes and Places, the Said Capt. Kidd hath notice, and is desirous to fight with and to take such said Prizes, and also other Pirates with whom the Said Capt. Kidd shall meet at Sea, in such a manner as to be done; and wherein it is agreed between the Said Parties, That for the purpose aforesaid a good and sufficient Ship, to the Sizing of the Said Capt. Kidd, shall be forthwith built, whereas the said Capt. Kidd is to have the Command. Now these Parties do agree, and it is agreed between the said Parties,

1. That the Earl of Bellomont doth covenant and agree, in his proper Charge, to procure and to pay to the King's Majesty, or to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty for the Capeshall required and or more Commissions, empowering him the said Capt. Kidd, in Act against the King's Enemies, and to take Prizes from them, as a private Man of War in the usual manner, and also to fight with, conquer and rob the Pirates, and to take them and their Goods, with other large and beneficial Powers and Commissions in such Commissions as may be most proper and effectual to such End.

2. That the Earl of Bellomont doth covenant and agree, That within three months after the said Capt. Kidd's departure from England, for the purposes in their前面 mentioned, he will procure, at his proper Charge, a Grant from the King, to be made to some indifferent and trusty Person, of all such and Mechanic Goods, Treasures and other things, as shall be taken from the said Pirates, or any other Pirate whatsoever, by the said Capt. Kidd, or by the Said Ship, or any other Ship or Ships under his Command.

3. That the said Earl doth agree to pay five parts, the whole in Five parts to be divided, of all Money which shall be laid out, for the buying such Goods and Sufficient Ship for the purposes aforesaid, together with Rigging and other Appurtenances thereunto, and providing the same with Commissions and Vessels of the said Ship, to be approved of by the said Parties, and the said Earl doth also, agree and pay one Fifth part of the said Charges of the said Ship, to be paid for by the said Robert Levington and William Kidd.

4. That the said Earl doth agree, That in order to the speedy buying the said Ship, in part of the said Four parts of Five of the said Charges, he will pay down the sum of Twelve hundred Pounds, or any more of Advances, on or before the fifth day of November next ensuing.

5. The said Robert Levington and William Kidd do jointly and severally covenant and agree, to pay to and before the sixth day of November, when the said Earl of Bellomont is to pay the said sums of Twelve hundred pounds as aforesaid, they will advance and pay down the said Four parts of Five of the said Ship to the said Robert Levington and William Kidd, within Seven Weeks after the date of this Present, and in like manner the said Robert Levington and William Kidd do agree to pay to the said Earl of Bellomont and William Kidd, within Seven Weeks after the date of this Present, a Fifth part of the whole Charge of the said Ship within Seven Weeks after the date of this Present.
VII. The said Capt. John & every one of the said Ship's Crew one hundred Mariners of Narragansett do hereby most solemnly and conscientiously agree to procure and take with him on board of the said Ship, one hundred Maristers of Narragansett and such other armed and compeetent persons as he can go out to Sea with, the said Ship, and to sail to these parts where he may meet with the said or any other Prize or prizes there to be sailed of from them their Goods, Money, and goods. To the end to take what Prizes be thereon from the King's Enemies, and forthwith to make the best of his way to Sale in New England, and that without coming at any other ports or harbours whatsoever, or without doing any manner of thing amounting to, or whatever of, which the Earl may make Oath, in the time bounded by the said Earl of Belmarm, and thereby deliver the same into the hands and possession of the said Earl.

VIII. The said Capt. John & every one of the said Ship's Crew shall be no Purse of any other Art than the Minor or Middle proportion with his said Ship-Crew, shall be no Proportion to the said Prize, Goods, Merchandize, and Treasures, or be taken as prize, nor no other prize, shall not at the most exceed a fourth part of the same, and shall be less than a fourth part in case the same may reasonably and convently be agreed upon.

IX. The said John & every one of the said Ship's Crew, do jointly and severally agree with the said Earl of Belmarm, that in the said ship Captain & all do not meet with the said Prize or any other Prize, but the said William K., John & Capt. K., shall be divided in such Prizes as shall be taken from any of the King's Enemies, such Goods, Merchandize of other things of Value, as being divided, as hereafter is mentioned, shall fully recconpence the said Earl for the Money by him expended, in buying the said ships, in the charges of the said ship and provisions, that then the said Earl shall refund to the said Earl of Belmarm the whole Money by him to be advanced in Sterling Money or Sterling equivalent therewith, or before the five and twentieth day of March, which shall be no sooner than on good and sufficient Danger of the said ship, and Merchandize of the said ship, shall be retired upon payments whereas the said Robert Longfellow & William K., are to have the proportion in the said ship and provisions, and thence to be delivered up to the said Earl of Belmarm and the proportion belonging to the said Earl, between the said parties. That as well the said Earl, Merchandize, Treasure and all other things which shall be taken from the said Prize, or any of the said Ship's Crew, shall be divided in such Prizes as shall be taken from any of the King's Enemies, shall be divided by mutual pact, or by any other way. Such part as shall be for that part, and such part as shall be for the said Earl, shall be divided between the said Robert Longfellow & William K., and to be delivered by them to the said Earl of Belmarm, whilst and without Deduction of any particular whatever, but it is agreed to be divided and paid over to the said Earl, before any Divisor or other wise interfering with that, or giving the said Comission to be grantee or otherwise.

X. Lastly, it is over万达ed and agreed between the said parties to these presents, That if the said Capt. William K., do bring to Belmarm or shall be delivered to the Earl of Belmarm, Goods, Merchandize, Treasure, or Prizes to the value of one hundred thousand Pounds or upwards, which shall have been taken from the said Prize, or other Prizes, or from the King's Enemies, shall then the ship, which shall be speedily to be bought by the said Prize, shall be sold to the said Earl, and the said Captain William K, as a reward and gratification for his good Service thereto.

Memorand, Before the Sealing and Delvery of these Perpetua it was covenanted and agreed by the said Capt. & every one of the said Ship's Crew, and with the said Robert Longfellow Esq, and the ship's Crew, and with the person to whom the Grant above-mentioned is to be made, or Majesties, shall, within eight Days as the most after such Grant is passed the Great Seal of England, Affixed and the said Robert Longfellow, Capt. & Robert Longfellow, Capt. and Captain William K., as aforesaid, and Affixed our full tend part (the Ship-Crew's third proportion being full deducted) of all such Goods, Treasure, or other thing as shall be taken by the said Captain K. by virtue of such Commission, shall make full Affirmation as aforesaid, in such manner as by the said Robert Longfellow, Esq. and Capt. William K., or their Council Learned in the Law shall be reasonably advised and required. And that these Perpetua were sealed and delivered (the proper Stamp being full done) in the presence of The committee of the common council, appointed on Nov. 17 last (29), to prepare an address to the king regarding the need of repealing the “Bolting Act of 1644,” submits to the board a draft of the address. The committee states that the prosperous condition of the city would have continued had not the new assembly passed the “Bolting Act.” The committee explains that this act has given “Such A Scope and Latitude to all that has A Minde to Use that trade that Every Planters hutt throughout the Province is now become A Market for whate Flower and Biskett,” that “this Your Majestyes City hath been for Many Years the Only Granary of all Your Majestyes Plantations in America, ... but Now the Cry in the Streets is the want of bread.” They petition the king to “Repeale Abrogate Vacate and Annul this Act and to restore the Liberty of the Bolting of Flower And Baking of Biskett for Transportation as formerly Acustomed.”—M. C. C., II: 6-8.

In the preparation of this appeal to the king, the committee made extended extracts from the records of the secretary’s office relating to the privileges granted to the city of New York (ibid.); and in 1698, when the appeal was renewed, these extracts were entered in full in the minutes of the board.—Ibid., II: 36-54.

While the present appeal to the king was being prepared, he confirmed the Bolting Act.—See May 11, 1697. It was probably on this account that the intercession of Bellomont in behalf of another appeal was sought and obtained the next year, for which see June 28-29, 1698.

Fletcher issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, stating that, “Whereas there is of late great Scarcity of Bread in the City of New-York,” he prohibits “the Exportation of any Wheat in Grain throughout the whole Province, without limitation of time, and the Exportation of Corned and cured hog and sheep and milk for the first day of November next ensuing.”—From Miss Hassé’s “Bibliography” in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1905), 58: Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 257.

In a report to the lords of trade, Fletcher explains that he has issued a proclamation to make the Mayor’s Cap^ Kid lately arrived here, he continues (see Aug. 28, 1696), and has “produced a Commission under the great seal of England, for suppressing of Piracy.” When he was here, “many flocks to him from all parts men of desperate fortunes and necessitous in expectation of getting vast treasure.” He sailed “from hence” with 150 men, Fletcher says he is informed, many of them being of this province. “It is generally believed here, they will have money p^e fas aut nefas [by right or wrong means], that if be misuse of the design intended for which he has commission, ’twill not be in Kidd’s power to govern such a lord of men under no pay.” See Addenda.

Fletcher also that he cannot in these summer months leave this Garrison being the frontier to the sea. (He spent the previous winter in Albany—see Oct. 16, 1696.) He explains, further, that he has entertained the chief scabes of the Indian allies at his own table in New York; “some of the principal leading men of the Five Nations, came down the River last year to the house and there treated with all manner of kindness and Courtesy, I ordered them on board the greatest ships we have and the guns to be fired, the King’s birth day happening in that time; ... I caused some of them to be loaded with ball, to show how far they could carry upon the River, I caused Granada shells to be fired before them and let them all loose. And ordered six horses to be put into my coach and my coachman to drive them round the City and into the Country to take the air, by which they were extremely obliged, and dismissed them with considerable presents, at which they did express great satisfaction.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 275-76.
Resolved that the Board doe Address his Excellency the Gov. [Col. Benj. Fletcher] to return him their hearty thanks and due acknowledgments for his Excellency great Encouragement in Carrying on the building of Trinity Church witnessed by his many large & Generous Gifts to the Same & particularly for Ordering his Maj. Governours y° 2nd to be spent in carrying out the Intentions of this City of y° Communion of the Protestant Church of England as by Law Established ordered that Col. Heathcote doe take Care to get the Said Account Accordingly drawn."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

The first entry is made in the Vestry Book of Trinity Church: "At a meeting of the Magistrature of Trinity Church in the City of New York ye 23rd of June 1669 Mrs Jane Clapp. & M* Crooke doe make return that according to order they have spent a day in getting subscriptions & in Collecting money for Erecting Trinity-Church. Ordered, That Capt. Lawrence Read, Mr Sam: Burte, Mr John Crooke & Mr Tho: Burroughs do Collect the arrears of Subscriptions for the carrying on of Trinity Church & make their return on Monday next. Resolved, That the Minutes of this Board for the future be entered in the name of the Church Wardens & Vestry-Men of the English Protestant Church of the City of New York, Incorporated by the name of Trinity Church Parish."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

Capt. John Nunan is commissioned lieutenant-governour.—July 25, 1669.

"Ordered, That Mr. James Evets take care to speak for Timber for the Second floore of the Steeple."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

"Ordered, That the Church Wardens take care for scaffold Poles. Ordered, That noe Carmen shall after notice given, Dey or carry any ground or Earth from behind the English Church & burying ground."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See also June 3, 1709.

The bishop of London grants a license to preach to the Rev. William Vesey.—See Pl. 25, Vol. IV. For translation, see Addenda.

"Ordered, That Capt. Tothill & Mr Crooke doe take care to get a Kili of Stone Lime & thirty Carte Load of Oyster shell Lime with all expedition."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

"Ordered, That Capt. Wm. Morris, Mayor, Mr. Borroughs & Mr. Ludlow doe goe about with the List to get what new Subscriptions they can for the better carrying on of the Steeple for the week ensuing & also to Collect what Subscriptions they can that are in Arrear."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

"... Col. Peter Schuyler having subscribed five pounds to the Church to be paid in bords, it is ordered that Capt. Tho: Wenham do write to him to send the same in such boards as Mr. Evets shall desire.—Trin. Min. (MS.)."

The governor and council having decided, on July 8, to let the King's Farm for the benefit of Trinity Church, now decide that a lease of it shall be given to the church for seven years.—Col. Coun. Min., 115, 116. The consideration was 60 bu. of wheat rental.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV, 1112. For a brief historical account of this property, see Eccles., II, 179-80.

The original copy of the lease, to the church-wardens and vestry is filed with the Rawlinson MSS. (cited A, 274, f. 9) in the Bodleian Library, Oxford. This copy is signed by "T. Weaver" and is attested "A True Copy [signed] Bellomont." The lease includes "all that our aforesaid farme with all the houses, Erections and buildings, and stables and walks, and other appurtenances whatsoever of y° same relating. The seven-year term is one year longer than the usual, and probably this was to make up for the burnings of 1666. For the fire, see N. Y. Col. Docs., IV, 1112. The lease was signed on the 1st day of the 7th month, of the year 1669. On October 1, the mayor and aldermen issued a public notice that all property owners were ordered to remove their goods from the church. For the City of New York's property in the city, see N. Y. Col. Docs., IV, 1112. For the fire, see N. Y. Col. Docs., IV, 1112. For the fire, see N. Y. Col. Docs., IV, 1112.
"Capt. Clarke is hereby Commissioned to depute such proper persons on the Island of Nassaw [Long Island] as he shall see meet for the Securing, cutting up & Trying of all such drift Whales &c as shall come on shore on ye said Island, & that for their care & Labour therein he allow them reasonable Encouragement."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

"Ordered, That after the Expiration of four weeks from the date hereof no Negroes be buried within the bounds & Limits of the Church Yard of Trinity Church, that is to say, in the rear of the present burying place & that no person or Negro whatsoever, do presume after the term above Limited to break up any ground for the burying of his Negro, as they will answer it at their peril, & that this order be forthwith publish'd."—Ibid.

The city grants to Stephanus van Cortlandt a piece of ground at the Broad Street dock with the obligation that he shall build a wharf 25 ft. in width in front of it and protect it with piles, 5 ft. apart, bound together with a plate on top.—City Grant, Liber A, 232.

Fletcher issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, stating that "many of the Souleirs of his Majesties four Companies, apointed for the Security and Defence of this Province, have deserted His Majesties Service." The proclamation relates to their capture. —From Miss A. R. Hasse's "Bibliography," in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1907), 58.

Fletcher and many "gentlemens of the best quality" obtain a reprieve for four deserters condemned to death.—Cal. Coun. Min., 128.

"The present City Hall Seeming to be Defective [see Oct. 19, 1695; May 12, 1696; Oct. 5, 1697] whereby his Majesties subjects might be Endangered Should the Courts of Judicature be longer held there itt is therefore Resolved ye Courts of this City & Common Council doe sit att the house of George Resscarrick Adjoyning to ye City Hall until the 17th day of October Next." Resscarrick is allowed £12 for the period beginning Oct. 1 Ist.—M. C. C., II: 18. As early as June, 1698, however, another inn is being used for the temporary city hall, that of Joseph Davis, as appears by a quarter-year's rent paid to him for the period ending Aug. 1, 1698.—See under Oct. 13, 1698. In a report to the common council by the corporation counsel and street commissioner on Nov. 14, 1688, reviewing the history of the first and second city halls, it was noted that "the house of George Resscarrick, adjoining the City Hall," was still standing, being "probably that owned by the late Widow Lawrence deceased."—M. C. C. (1784-1811), V: 327.

"Mr David Jamison pursuant to the order of this board brought 15 copies of the inscription to be placed under his Excellencies Arms in Trinity Church was agreed & read & these words following viz . . . [Latin inscription] Which being English is

"This Trinity Church was founded in the Eighth year of the reign of the most Illustrious Sovereigne Lord William the third by the Grace of God King of England, Scotland, France & Ireland, Duke of Burgundy and in the year of our Lord 1696. And built by the Voluntary Contribution & Gifts of some persons & chiefly encouraged & promoted by the bounty of his Excellency Col Benjamin Fletcher Capt General & Gov't in chief of this Province, in the time of whose Government the Inhabitants of this City of the Protestant Religion of the Church of England as now Established by Law, were Incorporated by a Charter under the seal of the Province & many other valuable gifts he gave to it of his private Fortune."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

"Fletcher expects the Earl of Bellmorn to arrive with clothing for the soldiers.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 291.

The common council appoints a committee "to Lay out in Convenient Lots the Ground on ye West Side of the Custom House Bridge," and have a plan of it drawn.—M. C. C., II: 19. The plan was submitted to the board on Nov. 20, showing the ground "laid out in fourteen lots of 25 foot wide." This was approved.—Ibid., II: 20. See also Landmarks' Map Ref. Key, III: 60a, and Chronology, 1700.

About two months after the close of King William's war, the governor recommended the substitution of a civil watch for the existing military one. The common council thereupon arranges that the mayor shall engage "four sober men to keep a Watch in this City Every Night until the 25th day of March Next & that they hourly go through the several Wardes of this City during the Said time in Order to Prevent Irregularities &c."—M. C. C., II: 20. On Dec. 1, it was resolved that the bell-man and watch should give £500 security.—Ibid. II: 24. See also Nov. 20, Oct. 12, 1698.

23 "The Mayor having Acquainted the board of yr. Insufficiency of the City hall it is the Opinion of the whole board (ooeely one dissenting) that there is A Necessity of building A New City Hall for yr. publick Service."—M. C. C., II: 20. They decide that the new house shall be west side of the custom house building (see Nov. 17). "Shall not be Sold or Dispose for yr. building of A City Hall."—Ibid., II: 20-21. See also May 12, 1696.

24 David Villas petition the common council that "he may Keep School in the publick City Hall as has been formerly Granted to him by the succeeding Mayor & Aldermen." Referred to the mayor.—M. C. C., II: 21.

25 The common council having considered "the great inconvenience that Attends this City being A trading place for want of having lights in the Darke time of yr. moon in the winter season," it is ordered that "all and Every of the house Keepers within this City shall put out lights in their Windows frosting yr. Respective Streets."—M. C. C., II: 21. On Dec. 2, it was resolved that "Every Seaventh house in the Several Wards of this City doe Every Night in the Darke time of the Moon Untill the twenty-fifth day of March next Cause A Lantern or Candle to be hung out on A Pole."—Ibid., II: 22. This was the first attempt at lighting the city streets. The system continued for over 60 years.—See Nov. 23, 1761.

The petition of the church-wardens and vestrymen of Trinity Church, Sept. of 6 (p. o.), is considered by Fletcher and his council at the fort. They referred it to the "Council Book" that "Churches Captives [in Salee, Morocco], having escaped it come home, the others are dead only one, named Bartholomew Houston [Rush- ton] is removed up into the Country who by the report of him who is escaped from Salee cannot be redeemed; His Majestie Chappell [Rush] is almost finished and Trinity Church being a Publick structure erecting for the service of God by the Voluntary Contribution of some people, Which is a publick and pious use and much is wanted to finish it." It is agreed "that the money raised by virtue of the Lynceus bearing date the 8th day of June 1697 [p. o.] for the redemption of Captives in Saley shall be applied to the use of Trinity Church to finish the building thereof . . . Provided always that if it be possible to purchase the redemption of the said Bartholomew Rushton [that] . . . Trinity Church [will] be accountable for . . . the redemption." It is ordered that the trustees of the redemption fund deliver the papers, etc. relating to it to Thomas Wenham and Robert Lurting, the church-wardens.—Dec. Hist. N. Y., III: 254. It having been authoritatively reported on Feb. 1, 1700, from Cadiz, that Rushton and another had been Eberated, Amsterdam agents wrote to the trustees of the fund, on March 26, 1700, to ask how the money in their hands should be employed. —Ibid., III: 254-55. On April 10, 1707, Trinity Church acknowledged the receipts of certain wares from Holland, which represented the sum sent thither, for the redemption of the slaves out of Sally, and which when sold, amounted to £458.8.—Ibid. 8: 1065, citing Berrian's Hist. of Trin. Church. The vestry received word from London on Feb. 27, 1706, also, that the Amsterdam agents had remitted from Holland £190:2:12d. (originally intended to redeem the captives), and of this sum £170:2:13d. had been laid out in 38 "half pences of Stroud waters" and shipped to the church-wardens.—Trin. Min. (M.S.).

6 "Ordered, That Mr. Mayor & Mr. Erector do take Care that the Scaffold of the Steeple be strick & also such other things [done] as will be necessary & Convenient for the preservation of the Church."—Trin. Min. (M.S.).

20 "Gov. Fletcher surrenders the plate for Kings chapel to the clerk of the council."—Cal. Coun. Min., 1709, p. 422. The church was nearly completed at the rebuilt chapel in the fort.—See July 29, 1691. The building was destroyed by fire on March 18, 1741 (p. o.), and was not rebuilt.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 913.

25 The Rev. William Vesey, the first rector of Trinity church, is induced, says, in his office by Gov. Fletcher in the new Dutch Church in Garden St., as Trinity is not yet ready for use. The Episcopal congregation was given the use of the Dutch Church for about three months. In 1779, Trinity Church returned the courtesy by granting to the congregation of the Middle Dutch church (at Nassau and Liberty Sts.) the use of St. George's Church (on Berkman St.), when the Dutch Church was being used as a hospital for British troops.—Essex, Reg., II: 1218-19, and authorities there cited.—See Jan. 26, 1695.

7 It is ordered by the common council that "the Mayor Direct A Warrant to the Treasurer to Purchase four Barrels of Powder for yr. saluting the Earle of Bellomont on his Arrival."—M. C. G., II: 25. The council orders a warrant issued to Osmond Shefter for painting and glass in the chapel (in the fort).—Cal. Coun. Min., 125.

"The Town of New-York is well seated for Trade, security and pleasure, in a small Isle called Manhattan at the mouth of the great River Mohaun, commodious for Shipping, and 2 leagues broad; the Town large of Dutch Brick, with above 500 fair Houses, the meanest not valued under 120 pounds, to the Land it is incompassed with a Wall of good thickness, and fortified at the entrance of the River, to command any Ship which passes by James Fort; It hath a Mayor, Aldermen, a Sheriff and Justices of the Peace; the Inhabitants most English and Dutch who Trade with the Indians for Bever, Otter, Racoon skins, with other rich Furs; likewise for Bear, Deer and Elk skins and are supplied with Venison and Eowl [Fowl] in the Winter, & Fitch in the Summer by the Indians. . . . the Manhattan island so called by the Indians, lyeth within Land, bethwixt 41 and 42 degrees North, about 14 Miles long and broad. New-York is seated on the West-end and a small Arm of the sea divides it from Long Island on the South . . . Following this is a description of the life and habits of the Indians.—From The English Empire in America, by "R. B." (Robert Burton) (London, 1698), 76-81.

The colony of New York this year has one church with one minister in the fort, one church and one minister in the city (both organizations being of the Church of England), and six Dutch churches with two ministers, and one French church with one minister. The colony also has one library.—From Apostolick Charity, a discourse by Rev. Thomas Bray, D.D., delivered at St. Paul's, London, Dec. 19, 1697, and published in 1698 with a list of the churches, ministers, and libraries in America. There was already a small library in Remsenwyrck (Albany) as early as 1642.—O'Callaghan, Hist. N. Y., i: 454.

The library here mentioned was the first in New York. The manuscript catalogue of it is still in the possession of "Dr. Bray's Associates," of London, who were the trustees organized by Dr. Bray in 1723. This catalogue includes 157 titles, numbering 220 volumes, under the heading "A Register of Books Sent Towards Laying the Foundation of a Provincial Library in New York."—Keep, Hist. of the N. Y. Soc. Library, 12-13. A set of rules for the use of these books, written in 1697, is still in the collection of manuscripts left by Dr. Bray to Sion College, London. This list shows that the books were intended "for yr. Use of yr. Chaplains of English Ministers belonging to yr. Flott, & City of New York, & for yr. Chaplains of his Majestie's Ships during their Residence in yr. Port." It also states that it was "desir'd yr. Books may be fitt in some publick Room in yr. Flott, or in yr. Vestry of yr. Church at New-York."—Ibid., 16. It appears by the vestry minutes of Trinity Church, under date of June 5, 1698, that Gov. Bellomont delivered the books to the Mr. Vesey, and that they were "sent over by yr. right Reverend Henry [Compton], Lord Bishop of London for yr. Use of Trinity Church." The vestry ordered that the books "remain in the custody of Mr. Vesey until further order and that yr. Clerk do register the Catalogue of the books in the vestry book."—Ibid., 17. Probably it is this library which Oldmixon (in The British Empire in America, [1688], i: 125) states was "erected in" 1700. See Addenda.

Dr. Keep (cited above, 115-16) presents a summary of the early efforts to establish a public library in New York. The Trinity Parish Library (1698), which was increased later, was almost entirely destroyed in the fire of 1776. The books that survived are now in the library of the General Theological Seminary, except the Clarenceford history, which is in the Society Library.

The second library was the Sharpes Collection, given in 1715-16 by Chaplain John Sharpes (see March 11, 1715) for a "Publick Library." This remained in use as a public library until united with the Corporation Library in 1750. Most of its 318 volumes survived the Revolution and are now in the Society Library.

The third library was the Corporation Library (1750). This was the City's first real public circulating library. It was originally the private collection of the Rev. John Dust, an English clergyman, who bequeathed it to the Society for Propagating the 1698. Gospel, which gave it (1694 volumes) to New York. These books — also were scattered by the British in 1776.

New York City Library, founded in 1754, and was incorporated in 1772 as a public subscription circulating library. "Practically exterminated by the atrocious vandalism of the British soldiers," Dr. Keck states, "scarcely a volume of its pre-Revolutionary collection is known to have survived.

The New York City Library, which, as part of the Corporation Library, were formerly in its care.

The fifth library was that of King's College, the bequest in 1757 of the private library of Joseph Murray, Esq. It was removed in 1776 to the city hall, and there destroyed.

The sixth and last library mentioned by Keck as having been founded before the Revolution was that of the Union Library Society of New York, organized in 1771, and given space in the city hall in 1774. It did not survive the Revolution. — See Index of Keck's book for further details; see also June 27, 1795; Feb. 22, 1794; April 3, 1794; March 11, 1794, and Feb. 22, 1796.

A census of the province, "taken by the High Sheriffs and Justices of the Peace in each respective County," by order of the governor, shows that the city and county of New York have a population of 1,099 men, 1,057 women, 2,161 children, 700 negroes (total, 4,957). The population of the province is 18,067.— N. Y. City Libr. (Nov. 21, 1796).

About this year, the first Friends' Meeting House or Quaker place of worship (see 1696) was erected in New York, at what is now Liberty Pl. near Liberty St.— Liber Deed, XXHI: 14 (New York). The congregation rebuilt and removed from this site to Liberty Pl. in 1795. [Liber Deed, XXXI: 5, New York; Liber Deed, XXII: 171, Albany; cf. Pl. 34, Vol. 1, on which the new site is shown]. They continued here until 1802. See 1775, 1790, 1802. See Pls. 26, 27, 27-A, 30, and 31, Vol. 1.

The ship "Fortune," commanded by Thomas Mostons, returned to New York in the Summer of 1697, laden with booty which had been transferred to her at Madagascar from the pirate ship of one John Howe. "By hasty and secret efforts, in the night, the cargo of the Fortune was gotten on shore, and stored in the house of one Van Swieten, a merchant who was interested in the enterprise. Finding which, Bellomont commanded the civil officers to make seizure of the goods; the officers having the instructions made a formal seizure, and were about to take them from the premises for legal forfeiture, when nearly the whole body of merchants interfered, and proceeding to violence, they locked up the officers in the house, where, after being confined for three hours, they were only released by the approach of the Lieutenant Governor, with three files of men, who broke open the doors and set the officers at liberty. The ship Fortune was forfeited."— From "The Red Sea Men," in Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 464. For the official reports from New York regarding this episode, and the character of the vessel "Fortune," see N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 393, 394, 353, 354, 355, 377, 383, 397, 446, 460, 553.

Frederick Philipse, about this time, expected a ship from Madagascar carrying contraband goods, and to avoid forfeiture sent his son Adolphus in a vessel, ostensively bound for Virginia. This vessel met the expected ship, took her great quantities of East India goods, and sailed to the Delaware, leaving the Madagascar ship to enter the port of New York with only negroes on board. The East India goods were afterwards sent to Hamburg, where, however, the vessel was seized and the crew brought to trial.— Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 464-65. The defensive position taken by the merchants of New York against the charges in which they were implicated—of supporting piracy—is explained by various concrete examples in ibid., 464-65. Formidable opposition developed against Bellomont's administration throughout the mercantile classes. It was asserted that his rigorous policy had prevented $100,000 from being brought into the city since his arrival.— Ibid., 469. See Chronology, passim.

Jan. Bellomont writes to the lords of trade from Barbadoes, where his ship has been driven by storms, that he expects to start for New York by Feb. 7—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 396.

"His Excellency Benjamin Fletcher Capt General & Governor in Chief of this Province being the founder & Chief promoter of Trinity Church & being desirous at his charge to Erect a private Pew for the use of his family &c. This Board having a due Sense of all his Excellency's labours have ordered that Mr. James Evetts do lay the ground for the same in the same part of the Church near to the Chancel, to remain for ever to the aforesaid use, or the use of others as his Excellency shall think to direct."—Trin. Min. (May). Let the Church be cleared to morrow [Tuesday]. Divine Service being to be read therein the next Sunday." (Feb. 6.)—Ibid.

"Ordered, That Mr. Thomas Wenham & Mr. Robert Lurtting Church Wardens & MayФ William Merrett, Capt William Morris & Capt Thomas Clark be a Coffee for the procuring of plate & other materials for the finishing of the Windows of Trinity Church & also for the making of the Doors thereof & that they perform the same with all convenient Expedition."— Ibid.

Although divine service was to be read in Trinity Church on this Sunday (see Jan. 31), such service was either not held on this day, or, if held, was not treated as the first formal opening of the church—See March 13. Berrian failed to observe that Old Style was used in the dates of record, when he stated: "The new Rector first performed divine service in Trinity Church on the 6th of February, 1697."—See An Hist. Sketch of Trin. Church (1847), 25.

Ordered, That Mr. James Evetts & Mr. Jeremiah Tothill do take care to Level the ground in the Church & to provide such materials as will necessary for the setting up the Pulpit."— Trin. Min. (May).

The governor's council orders that a gallery for the governor and council be built in Trinity Church at the expense of the provincial government.— Col. Coun. Min., 129. See March 26.

Fletcher issues two proclamations, printed by Bradford, the first giving notice of the cessation of hostilities between the British and French, and the other appointing March 10 a day of thanksgiving for New York, Orange, Kings, Queens, Westchester, and Richmond Counties, and March 24, for Albany, Ulster, Dutchess, and Suffolk Counties—From Miss Haste's "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1905), 59.

The conflict of factions is opened anew by the appearance of an anonymous tract, dated Dec. 31, 1697, entitled A Letter From A Gentleman of the City of New York To Another. Concerning the Troubles which happened in that Province in the time of the late Happy Revolution. This tract, having been "found at the printer," is laid before the governor's council on March 4, 1698. They are "unanimously of opinion that it contains nothing but truth, and that it ought to be printed and published with the other papers aforesaid therein." — N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 315, footnotes, citing Col. Coun. Min., Albany. It was printed by Bradford (1697), ed. in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (5th ed.), II: 245-245 (and ibid., 400 ed., II: 243-243). This Letter, which is one of the most radical of the anti-Loyalist statements, gives a detailed summary of events into which the province was plunged by the Leisler rebellion, as viewed from one of his opponents. It contains, in addition to (a) the King's Letter to Nicholson, of July 30, 1699 (see under July 29, 1689); (b) The Resolves of the House of Representatives, of April 17, 1691; (c) An Address to his Excellency Coloniel Slaughter, of April 17, 1691; and (d) the Queen's Order of March 17 (March 11 in N. Y. Col. Docs.), 1692 (see Oct. 15, 1691), that the estates of Leisler and Milbourne be restored to their families "as objects of her Majesties mercy,"—for which see Chronology under these dates.

Another tract, answering this, was soon published in Boston, entitled Loyalists Vindicated, being an Answer to a Late Fable, Selec- tious and Scandalous Pamphlet entitled, "A Letter from a Gent., Et." Published for the sake of Truth and Justice, by a Hearted Lover of King William and the Protestant Religion. This tract was reprinted in 1688 in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 75-94. Regarding the consequences of this conflict of factions, see May 25 and June 14, 1698.

"Ordered, That Capt. Tho. Clarke, Mr. Wm. Huddleston & Mr. John Crooke do take care that the Church be Cleared & put into the best posture they can in order that Divine Service & the Communion be there Administered the next Sabbath day" (March 15).—Trin. Min. (May).

The ceremonies of the "first opening" of Trinity Church are held. A "Letter of Induction," written by Fletcher, dated March 25, certifies that, after the reading of the morning and evening service, the Rev. William Vesey declared "his unfeigned assent and 1698 consent "to the prayer-books, rites, and ceremonies of the Church Mar. of England," and also read a certificate from the Bishop of London to the effect that "he had subscribed the acknowledgement and Declaration according to the act of Uniformity."—Eccle. Reg., II: 1219.

14 "Ordered, That Mr Thomas Wenham do draw a note on Chil- ley Brooke Esq to pay to John Ellison Joyner the Sum of Thirty pounds Currens, for purchasing a part of the Pulpit & the same being money Subscribed by ye said Chilley Brooke for the better carrying on of the building of ye said Church.

15 "Resolved, That the Pulpit of Trinity Church be removed according to a draft this night produced and ordered that Capt. Thomas Nebeker & Capt. Jeremaih Toshill do take care the same be forthwith effected."—Trin. Min. (MS).

26 "Ordered, That the Gallery design'd be built on ye South side of Trinity Church & ye Charge of ye Governor for ye Use of ye Govt & Council of this province [see Feb. 78] have a part added to it at ye charge of this Corporation to run towards ye West end of ye Church & those persons that will have pews therein do in proportion pay ye Charge thereof."—Trin. Min. (MS).

2 He is received "magnificently,"—Diary of Samuel Sewall, 6th. Cit. p. 476. On the same day, his commission and that of Lieutenant John Nanfan are published at the city hall, "after ye Ringing of three Bells," the seals are delivered to Bellomont, and the oaths administered to him and Nanfan; the council is sworn in and the governor publishes a proclamation to continue all officers in their present offices until further order.—M. G. C., II: 26; Col. Coun. Min., 120.

27 Bellomont issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, prohibiting cursing, swearing, indiscriminate drinking, Sabbath breaking, and all sorts of lewdness and profane behaviour to word or action.—From the original broadside in N. Y. Pub. Library. See reproduction on p. 114.

4 An address, reciting the allegiance of "the Mayor Recorder Aldermen and Assistants" to the crown and the new governor, is read and approved by the common council, which orders that it be engrossed and recorded.—M. G. C., II: 26-27.

7 Bellomont issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, commanding that sheriffs, etc., "take effectual Care that there be a Free and Fair Election of Members for the ensuing Assembly."—From Miss Hasse's "Bibliography," N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1907) 59.

The common council resolves that "that Dinner be prepared" at the city's expense for the entertainment of the Earl of Bellomont, and a committee is appointed "to make A Bill of Fare," calling to their assistance "such Cooks as they Shall think Necessary to Advise them."—M. G. C., II: 28. On July 7, a warrant was issued to pay £175.6 to Joseph Davis, "for Several Charges made and paid by the Mayor Aldermen and Common Council on Several Publick Occasions & particularly on my Lord Bello- mont's Arrival."—Ibid, II: 35-36.

A committee of Trinity vestry, waiting upon Gov. Bellomont "with a draft of the Church in order for his Lordship to assign a place for ye building of a Pew, for himself & Family," is informed that he desires "a place on ye South side of ye Church fronting the pulpit for ye setting of this pew with is assigned to him accordingly."—Trin. Min. (MS). See also April 26.

18 (410) May 26, 1698, Bellomont, having been recalled, makes a gift of his pew at the east end of Trinity Church to Col. Nicholas Bayard, Col. Caleb Heathcoe, and such other members of the council "as are not Otherwise seated and Provided with pews in the Said Church & to such Persons of Quality & Gentility traveling to the said City," etc.—Dec. Hist. N. T., (40th ed.), III: 249. Will Sharpes, one of the witnesses to the deed of gift, made attestation on Oct. 25, 1711, that he saw Fletcher seal and deliver the deed as his voluntary act.

Bellomont, in his first report to the lords of trade, says: "I hope methods will be found for the quieting and uniting the minds of the people, who have been divided with great heats for these several May years, occasioned at first by the execution of those men who were most forward in the happy Revolution." He complains that the council has not yet informed him of the state of the province or offered to assist him in the government, although they know he comes as a stranger. He says that he "constantly advises clubs of officers" (whom he has as great reason to believe) false reports and rumors are spread about the City and province, whereby mens minds are disturbed, and an odium cast upon the Governs, and thus these Gentlemen of the Council by their drawing back endeavour to make this Governs['] unworthy to me." He mentions that "the late government; the corruption of the officers of the revenue, which has been great for years, although trade has increased and the city has been enlarged and enriched; the decrease in the revenue arising from the customs to one-half of what it was ten years ago; and the unwillingship of the collector, Chilley Brooke, to seize an "unfrec" ship, laden with rich East India goods (partly obtained as a pirate ship).

Bellomont promises to do his best to obtain observance of the "Acts of Trade," but as most of the council are illiterate traders he expects little help from them. He means to suspend several of them and try to find fitter persons for their places. "This city hath likewise been a nest of Pirates," he states, "and I already find that several of their ships have been (and now are) out, have their owners and were fitted from this Port, and have Commissions to act as privateers, from the West India Govt. here." He explains that "the cry of the people, is so great that Col: Fletcher hath imбедded and converted to his own use, great sums of their publick moneys," etc. He describes the methods of the pirates. No naval officer was appointed by Fletcher to be a check on the collector, but both officers were filled by Brooke himself. No care was taken for any register for ships in New York, but Bellomont states that he has appointed "a distinct Naval Officer and a Register according to the authority and intent of the act of Parliament." His reasons for this are given, and the method of remedying the situation. He has given orders for the numbering of the inhabitants of the province and of the Five Nations of Indians.

He also has given orders to Col. Romar, the king's chief engineer, to survey all the fortifications of the province. He found the soldiers "in a miserable condition, not half the number [called for] by the establishment, and almost starved, and many complaints of hardships done them." He sends to the lords of trade "a printed collection of all the Laws of New York together with prim[ed] proc[ed.] for suppressing of vice and to prevent corruptions in the Elections and returns of Representatives for the ensuing Assembly, a practice much complained of."—N. Y. Col. Dec., IV: 506-7.

An extraordinary meeting of the Council is called; an order of secrecy is administered to the lieutenant-governor, also to Edward Randolph and Thomas Weaver who are not members of the council, and an investigation is made into Gov. Fletcher's and William Nicoll's connection with pirates. Nicoll is suspended from the council, and Capt. Evans is put under bail.—Col. Coun. Min., 130-31. See also June 7 and 22, 1698. Bellomont's own account of this meeting may be thus summarized: Having summoned the council, he communicates to them his instructions regarding pirates and the evidence in relation to Fletcher and Nicoll. The council, expressing "abundance of these practices," agrees with Bellomont "that the whole evidence should have the seal of the province affixed, and be transmitted home to His Majesty, with Coll:Fletcher a prisoner." The council thinks Nicoll "ought to answer for this offence here where he committed it," because his estate and his ties by marriage are here; but Bellomont thinks he should be sent with Fletcher to answer to the king in England. Bellomont is prevailed upon to accept security for Nicoll's appearance, and dismisses him from the council until the king's pleasure is known.

The council joins with Bellomont in issuing a proclamation against pirates. Paid Court Taxer, Bellomont informs the lords of trade that he has "preempted not to deal harshly with one who had been honoured with His Maj[esty]s Commission," and simply sends them the proofs against him which they may offer to the king.—N. Y. Col. Dec., IV: 509.

In a second letter of this date to the lords of trade, Bellomont expresses in detail the encouragement and protection given by Fletcher to pirates. His disclosures involve Col. Bayard, Emoti, 1698 Weeks, and William Nicoll. In a postcript to this letter, dated May 18, he states: "I have just now found the records of the Court of Assizes and made discovery of the deeds by which the Pyrates entered into to Coll. Fletcher when he granted them Care and missions, and they appear so fraudulent that it is a manifestation that he was made acquainted with their design of Pyracy." He describes these documents.—Ibid., 306–9. See also May 25.

"Ordered, That either of the Church Wardens & M. Everts do take care, that ye Doore at ye 2d West End of the Church be with- held, and that M. Everts (M. O.)

In the postscript to a letter of this date, to Lord Summers, Lord Bellomont writes from New York: "St Edm's Andros had remov'd part of ye Records from hence to Boston, so y't I could not find ye collision of Coll. Nicholson for Lo' Govt of this province enter'd here, therefore sent to M' Addison secretary of ye council-cell at Boston, who found it there, and that's ye reason of its being attested by him."—From Clarendon MSS., 102, folio 20b, in Bodleian Library (transcript in Library of Congress). See May 9, 1691.

1692 A message to the provincial legislature, Bellomont says: "I cannot but observe to you what a legacy my predecessor has left me and what difficulties to struggle with a divided people, an empty Treasury, a few miserable naked half starv'd soldiers not half the number the King allowed for pay, the fortifications and even the Governour house very much out of repair and, in a word, Gentleman, the whole government out of frame; ... It has been represented to the government in England that this Province hath been a noted receptacle of Pyrates and the trade of it under no restriction but the Acts of Trade violated by the neglect and con- nivance of those whose duty it was to have prevented it. ..."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I, 111–12.

Bellomont suspects that one of the king's ships, the "Richmond," is to be used by her commander as a pirate ship. In a letter to the lords of the admiralty, he recommends that another vessel (a swift cutter with a brisk commander) be sent to the assistance of the ships of war already here, "which would discourage and destroy these vermine which have hitherto made New York their nest of safety."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV, 311–13.

The common council orders that "for ye time to Come No Free- men be admitted into this City but what shall Be Soe Allowed by the Mayor and three Aldermen pursuant to the directions of the Charter."—M. C. C., II, 29. See April 26, 1698. This order may be understood readily when it is noted that the charter provisions gave the making of freemen virtually into the hands of the mayor's court (where the assistant aldermen had no voice). "Freemoms" are regularly recorded, therefore, in the Mayor's Court Minutes (see also May 22, the Common Council Minutes). The common council, however, had, on Jan. 23, 1696 (p. 3), assumed such authority, and on at least one other occasion (see Dec. 13, 1695) had gone far in the same direction. It is such irregularity that the board appears now to recognize. In a subsequent order, of June 28 (p. 5), registration of freemen "in the presence of the Mayor and Aldermen" is specifically required. For a later irregularity, see Oct. 23, 1703. For the oath of a freeman, see Sept. 1, 1726.

In the postscript of a letter to Sec. Popple, Bellomont advises: "the way sure of conveying letters to me is by the way of Boston, where ye post comes every week to this place." He will send to the pay office to prevent Coll: Fletcher's receiving any part, for I shall prove great sums of money upon him which he has defrauded the Officers and Soldiers of here."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV, 317.

Bellomont writes to the lords of the treasury about the corrupt and negligent character of the revenue officers, stating that "there have been the greatest abuses committed in relation to Trade." The trade is double what it was ten years ago, and "the City grown vastly rich and populous and encreased to double the number of houses; and yet," he says, "by comparing the accounts of the cus- tomers with the Pyrants and made discoveries, stating that there "have been the greatest abuses committed in relation to Trade."

The trade is double what it was ten years ago, and "the City grown vastly rich and populous and encreased to double the number of houses; and yet," he says, "by comparing the accounts of the cus- tomers with the Pyrants and made discoveries, stating that there "have been the greatest abuses committed in relation to Trade."

"There was no Naval Officer distinct from the Collec- tor, nor any register appointed by the late Govt whereby inconveniences will arise to ships belonging to this Port." He has appointed Thomas Palmer naval officer and register of the province. May He further reports that he has "refused to permit Proclamations to be printed in this City by the Govt of the Jerseys publishing that Captain Amboy and Burlington are free ports."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV, 317–18.

Bellomont writes to the lords of trade regarding "the great pains Coll: Fletcher took to divide the people here and to foment the feud between Leisler's party and the opposite party." He states that Fletcher "went so far in it as to publish a book (and took the advice of Council in doing it) to revive the old controversy in England."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV, 315, citing Council Minutes. See also March 27.

Bellomont writes to the commissioners of the customs, as he has done to the lords of trade and the lords of the treasury, regarding the increase of customs revenues. He has already put a check upon illicit trade and on purchased protection; but, he says, "the observ- ance of the laws of trade was so great a Novelty that it gave as great discontent as if it had been an infringement of their char- ter."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV, 319.

A brick powder magazine was built this month by Col. Romer over the entrance gateway to the fort. The cost was $880.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV, 967, 969. The workmanship was condemned by Romer himself in a letter to Bellomont on Oct. 12 (p. 4), and by Cornbury in a report to the lords of trade in 1702.—Ibid. But see ibid., IV, 682. Regarding Romer's activities in the province gene- rally, see Oct. 12.

Bellomont, learning that East India goods, not legally imported, were at one of Mr. Van Sweete's house, sends the collector and searcher of the customs to seize them. They do so, but the mer- chants cause the officers to be locked up there, and Bellomont, hear- ing this and believing them in danger of being suspected, sends the lieutenant-governor and three files of men with his own servants, who break open Van Sweete's house, release the officers and assist them to take the goods to the custom-house. The next day, when Bellomont proposed making another seizure, Mr. Monsey, one of the two commissioners whom Bellomont had appointed in Brooke's place, and who had been chief searcher for six years, resigned with- out giving his reason. Bellomont thus missed making a seizure of £3,000 worth of goods for lack of a proper officer.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV, 323–24.

William Flitbourne is suspended from the council; Chidley Brooke, likewise, from the office of receiver-general, collector of customs, and judge, and from the council. Edward Randolph, the surveyor-general, signs the governor's order suspending Brooke as judge.—Col. Coun. Min., 131. See also June 22.

Ordered, That M'C. Wenham do use his endeavors with the Assembly to have the privileges & powers of the Charter of the Trinity Church Confirmed and Established by Act of Assembly.—Trim. Min. (M.S.).

The council approves Bellomont's proposal that the buildings in the fort made by Fletcher be finished; also that the gate-house be rebuilt and "made higher" (which Fletcher may be "made coyn to passe unseife").—Col. Coun. Min. (M.S.), VIII, 49 (Albany).

The common council appoints a committee to see that "the Publick house of Office on ye Dock" be cleaned and repaired, and someone appointed to keep it clean.—M. C. C., II, 30. On Oct. 17, the city treasurer was directed to have this house rebuilt so that it could be kept "Neat and Clean."—Ibid., II, 65.

The common council appoints a committee "to take A View of the City house at the Ferry" and employ workmen to repair it.—M. C. C., II, 29. See also Oct. 17.

A bill passes the provincial legislature for the reconciliation of the factions in the province. This became necessary when the act of parliament, passed on May 11, 1697, for the same purpose, had failed to produce the desired effect. The new bill provides that no supposed wrongful act done from April 18, 1689, to Aug. 30, 1692 (the period of the Leisler regime), "shall at any time here- after be brought in Question or enacted in any manner to be for- getten, remitted, indolged, Released and put in utter oblivion." All judgments in suits at law, already obtained in court on such ac- count, are discharged and annulled by this bill, except debts due under voluntary contract. The bill further declares that no one "is in any wise defamed or prejudiced... or... in the least injured by... Leislerite or the murdering or Killing of Leisler or any other opprobrious words or terms by which the peace of ye government may in any measure be disturbed." The punishment imposed for violation of this law is to be a fine, or, in the absence of payment

Bellomont had expected the assembly would raise money to correct various evils in the province, such as the empty treasury, the lack of food and clothing for the soldiers, and the need of repairs to the fortifications, governor's house, etc. Their failure is condemned in his address to them on this date: "You have now sat a whole month... and have done nothing, either for the service of his Majesty or the good of your country... Your proceedings have been so unwarrantable, wholly tending to strife and division, and indeed disloyal to his Majesty and his laws, and destructive to the rights and liberties of the people, that I do think fit to dissolve this present assembly, and it is dissolved accordingly." - Assemb. Jour., I: 91. As he told the council, "the heats and anxieties in the Assembly were so great they did altogether obstruct the Kings service." - Journ. Leg. Coun., II: 115. See also March 4 and May 25, 1698; and Winsor, N. & Q. Hist. & Art. of Am., V: 192.

Bellomont informs the lords of trade that Fletcher "managed the Council here by gratifications of grants of lands, connivance at their unlawful trade," etc. He says that since removing Nicolls (or his agent) at the matter of privateering, they have refused to act; that the council (see May 8) has evidence of his making a bargain for passing an act of assembly to the prejudice of the city of New York, that the act passed with Fletcher's consent, and part of the agreed price was paid to Nicolls, etc. William Pintohe has been suspended, but "it seems not as yet all the parts in the matter of the scandalous & reprehensible words of his Maj'H'S person;" and Bellomont explains Pintohe's previous character and misconduct. Bellomont has also suspended Chiltey Brooke (see June 7) "from the Council and from his Office of Collector of the Customs and Receiver Gen'l of New York," after consulting with Mr. Randolph, the surveyor-general of customs here.

He states that Fletcher's chief instruments have been Papists and Jacobites; also that those whom Fletcher appointed sheriffs of the counties have been "the scum of the people, Taylors, and other scandalous persons," who, notwithstanding Bellomont's proclamations strictly commanding all fairness at elections, made false returns at the last election for assembly, and great confusion resulted on the seating of members. Bellomont has dissolved the assembly "who have sat near a month and have done nothing but villainous tricks, to justify the falseness and unfairness of the Sheriffs returns." He intends to appoint better men sheriffs, and call another assembly. He mentions the miserable condition the king's forces are in; that Fletcher used them "so barbarously that they deserted," cheated them out of their pay, and sent home false musters and roll-books. Bellomont, by advice of the council, nominates Thomas Weaver as the agent of the province, that, according to the directions of the lords of trade, he shall act as the provincial agent, and give such time to time to be represented to them. - N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 320-26.

Henry Breckenmann is examined by the governor and council regarding his connection with the "Act against Unlawful By-laws" (the Bolling Act of 1693), for the signing of which Fletcher is reported to have received £400. - Col. Coun. Min., 151; and see July 1.

Bellomont sends Mr. Weaver to England as agent of the province, carrying "evidences and vouchers" regarding all of Bellomont's transactions since he came. He says in his letter of introduction of Weaver to Sec. Popele that the "merchants in this town" have "raised such Clamour" about his inspection into the methods and condition of trade, that he will be impatient to receive the support of the ministers. In a postscript to this letter, dated July 7, he desires the secretary to urge two things upon the lords of trade. One is that he may "have a power to vacate all Fletcher's grants, which are so extravagant that the province can never be peopled." Some of these grants he describes. "He has granted away and sold all the conveniences of a Gov't here (viz.) a Farm call'd the King's Farme, he has given to the Church here,..." Part of this farm, "sufficient for wheat and a good potato garden," Fletcher sold to Capt. Evans, commander of the frigate "Richmond." Part of the king's garden, too, he has "granted and sold to one Hathcock a Merch." Consequently Bellomont is deprived of "a place where to keep a horse or a cow for the use of my Family." He adds: "I shall think Fletcher has the best luck with his insolence and corrupting that ever any Gov't had." Also: "I have given all the discountance to Piracy that I am capable of doing, and that is one article which raises their curiosity more than any other thing. I have ruined the Town by hindering the Privaters (for so they call pirates) from bringing in a £1,000,000 since my coming." - N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 256-258.

The common council refers to its order of Dec. 13, 1695, in allowing "all the Inhabitants of this City their Apprentices and Children that were here the time the Charter was Granted" (see April 27, 1666) to be freemen. As they are required to register in the town clerk's office, and pay ninepence; but the former order is modified in that no one shall be registered under the age of 21 years, and a proviso is added that "the said act is affected before the Mayor and two Aldermen who are to sit every Tuesday morning at ye City Hall... till the same be perfected." The oath of a freeman is to be administered to all who come to be registered. - M. C. C., II: 31.

The common council again takes under consideration "the Grievance of being Deprived of the Sole Bolling of Flower & Baking of Biskett for Transportation from this Province." They pass an order for the recorder to prepare an address to Bellomont, to obtain his assistance in restoring the sole privilege to this city. - M. C. C., II: 31. The recorder's draft of such address was approved by the board the next day, with the addition that the Bolling and "Inspection," in the four years since its passing, has "taken away the livelihood of two thirds of the Inhabitants of this City... And Given the Same to About thirty persons in the Rest of the Government. And this City which was Accustomed to be the Granary of all New York and New Jersey and Never had less in Store then forty or fifty thousand Bushells of wheat for the Accommodation of his Majesties Subjects is now Reduced to Soe great want and Extremity that it cannot procure Corne Enough in Store to Supply its Inhabitants with their daily Necessaries of bread and what [it] in Town [i] att Such Extravagant Rates is now become very Oppressive to the poor." Further: "all the Trade on flower and Biskett Sent to the West Indies hath Since the passing of the Said Act fallen under Such Disrepution that it will not Yield soe much by four of [or] five Shillings $1 hundred as that Comes from Other ports And soe subject to Corruption for want of due Inspection which Cannot be Effecte whilst there is Soe great A Latitude Given for the Bollting that in Probability the whole Trade will fall in A few Years to the total Ruin of his Majesties Revenue And Decay of this City." They ask the governor, therefore, "to lay our Complaint before his Most Sacred Majesty," etc. and they decide to raise £50 to be used by an agent in England "for ye representing the State of this City unto his Majesty and the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations in Order to the having the Said Act Repealed." - Ibid., II: 32-34. This address was presented to Bellomont immediately, and he reported it to the lords of trade on July 1 (n.s.), with a letter from the Common council appoints a committee "to agree with Carpenter for the Building a Pew in Trinity Church for the use of ye Mayor Recorder Aldermen and Assistants of this City and for their Successors." - M. C. C., II: 34. See also Oct. 28, 1707.

Atty.-Gen. James Graham gives reasons to Bellomont why New York City, rather than Amboy, should be the principal port of entry on the Hudson, as London is on the Thames. Prefacing his observations with an historical review of the subject, he points out that the government of the province cannot continue to be largely supported by the duties on the customs revenues if Amboy is made a free port, as it was before the revolution (the accession of Wm. and Mary); that trade would be diverted from New York to Amboy because Amboy is nearer Sandy Hook. - N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 382-84; see also ibid., IV: 521. On July 22, New Jersey asserted her right to a free port at Amboy, and the governor's council ordered that New York customs officers go to Amboy and watch conditions. - Col. Coun. Min., 152.

The city of New York having addressed Bellomonte "in relation to an Act of Assembly passed by Col: Fletcher [the Bolling Act] which destroys their rights," Bellomonte informs the lords of trade that he referred the matter to the council, where it was referred to their agent, Mr. Weaver. He explains that "the said Act was not fairly obtained, there being a contract with Mr. Nicoll one of the Council for four hundred pounds for the passing of it." He adds that if the act is "to the injury of the Province," and "a reward was given for it," it may be worth the consideration of para-Bellomont also informs the lords regarding Fletcher's extravagant grants of land, adding: "His Maj'y Fort at New York being the house of the Gov't, had a large garden for pleasure, fruit, and herbage, and might be called the King's domain, Col: Fletcher hath granted away by patents great part of the said garden, the pleasantest part being next the sea, and expressed its name in the Patent (part of our Garden) and the remaining part being a Garden planted with herbs and Fruit trees, he permitted the Fences and Trees to be wholly destroyed by Cattle, after his knowledge of my being appointed a Gov't, which 14 years time will hardly repair. A small Farm, called the King's Farm, which usually supplied the Governors with bread, corn, some few months before my arrival, he made a lease of to the Church, and a small Island called nutten Island for the granting of a few coachorses and Cows for the Governors family he would likewise have leased out to one formely his footman but the Council were ashamed to consent to it, so that is only left undisposed of for the pleasure or conveniency of the King's Gov't."—Ibid.

In a postscript, dated July 6, Bellomont states that he has suspended the sheriff of New York from office and gives the cause.—Ibid., July 6, 1665.

What may be looked upon to-day as an historical survey of the beginnings of New York's commercial prosperity is comprised in several papers, transmitted by the mayor to the common council, as the report of the committee, appointed June 29, to convey reasons why the "Bolting Act of 1664" should be repealed. These are approved by the board, and it is ordered that "the same be Remitted into England by the Recorder" (James Graham).—M. C. C., II: 35.

These papers include transcripts of some of the most important records of the province (the articles of surrender of 1664, Nicolls's commission to the mayor and aldermen of 1664, and Andros's proclamation of 1673). They are entered in full in the Minutes under this date, followed by a list of all the papers relating to the privilege of bolting, with page references to the "old Common Council books," and to the "New Common Council Books."—Ibid., II: 36-54.

One of these papers, entitled "The Case of New York," is an historical summary. Some of the facts presented are as follows: When the city enjoyed the bolting monopoly several advantages accrued to this city and province. In 1678, when the bolting began, there were only 343 houses in New York. By 1686, 594 new buildings had been added. This increase is to be attributed to the bolting. The revenue in the years 1678, 79, and 80 did not exceed £2,000; but after that it increased annually until it amounted in 1687 to £5,000 (and if duly inspected would have amounted to £7,000 or £8,000). After 1684 (the year the sole bolting privilege was granted to the Province) there were three ships, eight sloops and seven boats belonging to this port; in 1694, there were 60 ships, 62 sloops, and 40 boats. Since 1694, navigation has decreased. In 1678, not over 400 beves were killed; in 1694, nearly 4,000. Land was low-priced during those years; since then they have advanced to ten times their value. Of the 981 houses in New York, 600 depend upon bolting. In the country, there are only three counties where bolting is done, Kings, Queens, and Ulster, and not over 300 bolters hold all the wheat of those counties; so that to feed these 30, 600 families must perish at New York if the Bolting Act continues in force. In those three counties there are only 6,000 families; in New York there are over 8,000 souls.—Ibid., II: 37-58.

Another document, in support of the appeal to the king and lords of trade for the repeal of the Bolting Act, is entitled "Reasons Humbly Offered in Defence of ye Rights & Privileges of his Majesties City of New York in America." It is the principal argument in favour of this city's securing the sole bolting privilege. It traces the early grants of special privileges to this city, which has been "always the Metropolis Staple Porte and the Only publick Mercate [market] of the whole Province."—Ibid., II: 43. The beginnings of New York's commercial prosperity are thus traced.

Glass and Stale Clay Commodity of the Province and the Citizens of the Said City No Sooner perceived that there were greater quantities of wheat Raised than Could be Consumed within the Said Province but they Contrived and Invented the Act for proceed of Bolting by which they Converted the Wheat into flour And made it A Manufacture not only profitable to all the Inhabitants of the Province by the Encouragement of Tillage and Navigation but likewise beneficial to Agriculture and Commerce in the Plantations, and the Improvements thereof in this City is the true and only Cause of the Growth Strength and Encrease of buildings within the Same and of the Riches Plenty of Money and the rise of the Value of Lands in the Other parts of the Province but the livelyhood of all the Inhabitants of this City doe Chiefly Depend thereon.

The governments which have had to Rule ye Said Plantation have made "the Said City the Only porte Prohibiting from time to time the Transportation of wheat and Appointing that No flour Should be Baked on the Island for Transportation but at this City . . . . Now the Reason why this City was Soe Incorporated & had Granted to them the aforesaid Rights and Priviledges is because the first founders of the Same were not Suffered by the then Government to Extend themselves into particular Settlements Untill first there should be Gathered together A Sufficient Number of People at this place that Might be of A Reasonable force for their Common Security & defence Whereupon they began to fortifie and finding this place of their situacion to be Very Barren and unfit for their Industry to make them Any Return for their Subsistence it was therefore Projected that all such as would fix themselves at this place Should only Adit themselves to the Foundation and disposition of those that Should goe settle in the Country y^t they might be plentifully Supplied with such things as was Necessary for Cultivation."—Ibid., II: 44.

"This City did Encrease in People Strength and Riches to such a Degree that itt become the Eady the Ease for Transportation but at this City . . . . while this Province was under the Dutch Government they were Soe Jealous of the Trade of this City that they would not permit any Settlement to be made in Any place within their Jurisdiction but under Such Restrictions as they thought Convenient for ye Security of their Trade and particularly did Restraint the Inhabitants of Hudsons River and Long Island that they Should not Plant nor Manage any part of Husbandry without paying the tenth part of what they Raised unto the Government and besides did Ollige the Planters that they Should not Apply themselves to Any Trade but Only to husbandry. And that the Inhabitants of Albany Should only Apply themselves unto the Indian Trade."—Ibid., II: 45.

"Nevertheless Soe great was the Clevency of the English Governour that they removed from the husbandman that Grievious yoke. And placed the burthens of the Province and the inhabitions of the small Quitt Rent Since which time by the providence of the Cityzens of the Said City in finding out foreign Markets, . . . the husband men are grown Rich and not only forgett thereby the former tasks and Obligations they lay under but also the Advantages they have and doe daily reap the providential Care and Industy of the Merchants of New York."—Ibid., II: 46.

There was "A Nessesity that the bolting of flour for Transportation to be Confined Unto one Certaine place that it might be Strictly Viewed and Examined that there might be no Mixture or Corruption therein."—Ibid.

"It is no Imposition nor Any Violence to property or Right of the Subject for his Majesty to Confine the Bolting of flour And Baking Biskett for Transportation to this City Only the Advantages Aforesaid being to the common wealth and the Same Justly warranted by reason Experience and the Laws of England which has Confined the making and sale of many Manufactures to one place only."—Ibid.

"Albeit itt be the least and most barren Spot of Ground in the whole Province Yett by the Intercourse of Trade itt payeth Annually within A Small matter one third parte of all the Taxes of the Province besides the whole Revenue Accommo-Whereas since that time they began to bolt at New York for transportation the Navigation is Considerably increased the Lands much more in Value the people better clothed the husband man much eased of his labour by the help of Slaves and a Considerable increase of the Stock of Cattle and Sould a doubling at ye Price of what they were formerly and for Instance about Fourteen years ago a man on the average of four hundred dollars a year for the Service of the inhabitants of this City and now near three thousand head besides Sheep and Other Small cattle which fully demonstrates that ye Trade of the Province was regulated and confined to the City all the inhabitants thereof was thereby Receive Considerable advantage if ye other wise inhabitants of this Province would be like their Neighbours in Plymouth & Connecticut Colonies Virgin and Maryland who for want of a Publick Mart like unto this City have very little Shaping belonging to them and their people meanly clothed and ill supplied with other Things Necessaries for Comfortable living."—[Ibid., II: 48.

"All which Reasons may be Sufficient to Convince Any man of Business that by the City holding and enjoying all their former Rights and Privileges and ESpecially ye Right of the Sole Boulter of Flower and Baking of Blakett for Transportation the King will have a certain Benefit by the Earning of his Revenue the husband man A Certaine Profit by having a Mercate for his Comme and the Province in Genl A great Advantage by Encouraging the City whereby it may Grow in Strength and Navigation."—[Ibid., III: 48.

13. Lord Bellomont sends private instructions to Thomas Weaver, the agent in London for the province of New York. One of these, numbered 14, is as follows: "You are to solicit ye getting a New Great Scale for this province, the present one having ye effegies of her late Maj^y as well as of his present Maj^y."—From transcript, Library of Congress, box 65, from the original with the Rawlinson MSS. (cited A, 273, fo. 26) in the Bodleian Library, Oxford.

Slave traffic at this time was a regular branch of the foreign trade of this port. John Cruger, then a young man (who became mayor of New York 40 years later) started on this day on a voyage to buy negroes as agent of New York merchants, and kept a journal of his adventures until his return in May, 1700. The journal is printed in full in Man. Com. Con. (1853), 456. See also "Slavery in New York," in ibid. (1861), 700; "Slaves and Slavery in New Amsterdam," in ibid. (1858), 506; and "Slaves and Slave Trade in New Netherland," in ibid. (1865), 581.

14. Ordered, That Bills be put [up] to give notice that ye Kings Farme is to be let, & that ye Church Wardens be a Committee to Farme the same, & report to this Board, what they do therein ye first Conveniency."—Trin. Min. (MS.). Gov. Cornbury, writing to the Lords of trade on June 5th, 1704, stated that Fletcher had informed the King's Farm to "the Church" for seven years (see Aug. 19, 1697), "under the rest of sixty Bushels of wheat," and that Bellomont "granted the same farm to a Duchess under the same rent."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 1112.

15. Ordered, That ye pew's of ye North side of ye Church be built with white Pine, if Wainscott cannot be got, & that ye Front of ye pew's next ye Isle the Rables will Wainscott."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

Benjamin Fletcher, in a letter from London to some person not named, says: "I find my self prosecuted by the Earl of Bellomont my Successor with that Implacable invertery and observe the great Credite his Lordship has with Persons in the chief Stations and trust hear that I am confounded at the design and meaning of it especially Lookiing backe at the five and Thirty years That I have born Commission under the Crowne of England without the least reproach or impeachme'n of my reputation and after ninetynine service in the war of Ireland and America to become A castaway in the Rease of my Days is noe Smal mortification to me his Majestys favor to mee is more valuable then Life and I am ready to submit to the most infamious death if the Things Alleaged against mee bee true."—From transcript, Library of Congress. An original letter in the British Museum, cited "Additional MSS., 574, fo. 57.

16. The transactions of Bellomont and his council with the Indians, in the conferences held in the fort at New York, up to this date, are published by Bradford (1649) in a tract entitled Propositions made by the Five Nations of Indians. This tract, now extremely scarce, has been translated by J. Tritton, in a work which appeared in Albany on July 20.—From Brinley Catalogue, item No. 3400.

In a letter to the board of trade, Bellomont states that he sees no reason why the Leisier party "should be any longer excluded from a share in the government." He adds that "they are reputed to be two thirds of the people of this Province, and why they should be crushed and oppressed so long as they are obedient to the laws and government of England, I see no reason in the world, and that they are people of a sober and quiet disposition and better affected to His Majesty's government than the other party, I aver it for a truth which I am able to justify."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 379-80.

Bellomont suspends Col. Bayard, Col. Miniville, Col. Willet, Col. Towsley, and Mr. Lawrence from the council. He explained, in his trade, on Oct. 22, 1704, that he found it "absolutely necessary for his Majesty's service to do; for too" they were such hypocrites as to comply with Colonel Fletcher in all the parts of his corrupt Administration, they were always ready and pervers in every thing that I proposed for the King's service in Council; and when they were out of Council they were always caballing and contriving to make the government uneasy for me."—[Ibid., IV: 398-99. See also Oct. 19 and Nov. 16, 1698.

David Provoost is elected "Chamberlain & Treasurer" by the common council.—M. C. C., II: 57. This is the first appearance of the term "Chamberlain" in the Minutes. When Provoost was named as mayor on Sept. 29, 1699 (q. v.), Isaac de Riemer was appointed treasurer.

The common council orders that "A Well be built att ye upper End of the New Street by the Inhabitants thereof According to their desire & that ye Aldermen and Assistant of ye Ward doe take Care the Same be placed in Such a manner that itt may Not stop up the Street or be A Nuisance to any of the Inhabitants therunto adjaacent."—M. C. C., II: 57. The locations of the many wells throughout the city during the English colonial period can best be ascertained by consulting the Index of the Minutes. See also "Wells" and "Wells of the Old Wells and Water Courses," by Hill and Waring, in Historic New York (1897), 227. The "New Street" mentioned here is the New Street of to-day, which was opened in 1679 (Col. Hist. MSS., Aug., 78).

Regarding the building of new fortifications at the frontiers, Col. Rramer writes to Bellomont that "When the Archives under the walls are to be made, it will be necessary to employ persons more skillful than those that made the House over the Gate of New York Fort."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 682. See also ibid., IV: 967, 969. Valentine thus describes Rramer's activities in this province: "Ramer, Wolfgang William, a British Colonel of Engineers, was dispatched to America towards the close of the seventeenth century, to superintend the engineering affairs of the government. He was engaged, in and about New York, and on the frontiers, in his professional pursuits; and also as a member of the New York Council, until 1710, when he left the province. It is believed returned to England about 1705 [see under date of Feb. 4, 1706]. Among the other labors of Colonel Ramer was a survey of the harbor of New York [see infra, 1700], executed in 1700-1. The sheets called "Ramo Shools" received their name from this survey."—Man. Com. Con. (1884), 609. See also Col. Count. Con., 134, 155, 130, 155, 157, 166, 169, 175; and see an order of the council at Whitehall (regarding Rramer's stay for repairing and building fortifications on the frontier until Christmas, 1699), a transcript of which is in Library of Congress, box 65, from the original order, with the Rawlinson MSS. (cited A, 274, fo. 30) in the Bodleian Library, Oxford.

It is ordered by the council of sessions was ordered by a Warrant to ye Treasurer to pay to Joseph Davis the Sum of three pounds Currant Money of New York itt being for One Quarters Rent for the Present City Hall due & Ending the first of August...—Ibid., V: 175.

13 The ordinance of Oct. 19, 1664, was for the perpetuity of the Court House, on April 22, 1669, Davis was paid £11 “for three Quarters of A Year’s Rent for the Courte Room due the first of May Next Ensuing and for firewood Expended for y’use of the City”—Ibid., II: 76-77, and on Oct. 16, 1699, an order was issued to pay his widow £31 “for Candles and Expenes with Mr. Rodman about the Sale of the Old City Hall and A half yeares Rent for the Courte Room due and Ending the first day of November Next.”—Ibid., II: 95-97.

14 This is the day each year appointed by the city charter for swearing in the new aldermen. The mayor, attended by the mayor elect, the recorder, aldermen, high sheriff, assistants, constables, and others, was called to attend in council at the fort. The oaths appointed, instead of the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, are administered to the mayor and high sheriff elect. They subscribe the “Test and Association,” are sworn to the due execution of their respective offices, and receive their commissions. This year, for the first time, following these ceremonies, the mayor, together with the other newly installed officials, attended Trinity Church, where the rector, the Rev. William Vesey, preached a sermon suited to the occasion. The “distribution sermon” as a regular feature of the day’s events. After this service, all returned to the city hall “where after the Ringing of the Bell the Mayors & Sheriffs Commissions were published upon Which the New Mayor Resumed the Chair & caused the Aforesaid Appointed as Aforesaid to be Administered to the Respective Aldermen and Assistants Who Subscribed the Test and Association and Were Sworne to the due Execution of Their respective Offices & Accordingly took their places.”—M. C., II: 61.

15 Theunis de Key, Johannes Kip, and Brandt Schuyler make the following statement in writing (Dutch) concerning the removal of the bodies of Leisler and Milborne to their church: “We the churchwardens having been requested by Isaac de Riemer in the name of Mr. Jacob Leisler to bury the corpse of his father and Milborne, in our Nether-Dutch Church—give for answer, because we are pressed by both parties in the Congregation and very much desire to preserve peace and quiet in our Church, that we cannot consent thereto, but also that we shall not hinder it.”—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1883), 397-98. See Oct. 20.

16 The common council appoints another committee (see June 14) “to Examine into the State of the ferry.” Besides agreeing upon the best terms for “farming” it, they are required to “take to their Assistance A Bricklayer and A Carpenter and Examine What may be Conveinient for the Rebuilding or Repairing of the ferry house.”—M. C., II: 63. They reported Nov. 2, that the ferry-house was “So far gone to decay that it is not worth Repairing”—Ibid., II: 64. This evidently refers to the ferry-house on the Bloomsbury Side, 1669.

17 The common council again orders (see Nov. 20, 1697) that the mayor hire four night watchmen. Their duties are defined on this occasion as follows: They are to be “honest Inhabitants house-holders of this City.” They are “to Watch to the Night time from y’t hour of Nine of ye Clock att Night till break of day Each Morn- ing Until ye 25th day of March Next Ensuing And to goe round the City Each hour in the Night with A Bell and there to proclaim the season of the weather and the hour of the Night and if they Meet in their Rounds Any people disturbing the peace or lurking about Any persons house or Committing any theft they take the respective A Bricklayer and A Carpenter and Examine What may be Conveinient for the Rebuilding or Repairing of the ferry house.”—M. C., II: 63. The mayor reported on Nov. 2 that he had hired the four “Bellmen.”—Ibid., II: 64. See also Dec. 1, 1702. The duty of the watchman to carry a bell, and ring it at the most public corners and places of the streets, and also give notice of the time of night, became thereafter a settled custom.—See (1795) Ibid., V: 319.

18 In a report to “the Lords Justices” on the affairs of the province of New York (including Fletcher’s encouragement of pirates and his extravagant grants of lands) the lords of trade commend Bellomont, and propose the remitting of Aforesaid their places in the council and all other places of trust in the government. They recommend that pirates be prosecuted, and that the exorbitant grants of land be annulled; also that no future grants be made except under certain conditions.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 385-95. An order in council confirmed this report at Whitehall on Oct. 25, and instructions were issued to Bellomont accordingly.—Ibid., IV: 414-15. See also Sept. 18 and Nov. 10.

19 The remains of Leisler and Milborne were also “removed with great pomp under our Dutch Church.” This was eight years and five months after their execution and burial. Members of the Dutch Church (of the Leisler party) inform the classis of Amsterdam: “Their weapons and ornamental signs of honor were hang up, and thus far as possible, their house was restored to them. Special permission to do this had been received by his Honor’s son, Jacob Leisler, from his Majesty. This gave unavailing joy to their families and to those people who, under him, had taken up arms for our blessed King William. With this circumstance, though we in the midst of the most revolting events have long harassed us, will also be buried. To end this our Right Honorable Governor, my lord the Earl of Bellomont, . . . is exercising his good offices.”—Eclers. Rec., II: 1261; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1883), 411.

20 There was a great concourse of people at the funeral (1200 ‘tis said) and would ‘tis thought have been as many more, but that it blew a strong storm for two or three days together, that hindered people from coming down or crossing the rivers.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 401.

21 In a report to the lords of trade, Bellomont states that, about three weeks before this date (about Oct. 1), “the relations of Mr. Leisler and Mr. Milborne desired leave to go to London which had been buried near the gallows and give them Christian burial in the Dutch Church.” He deemed the request so reasonable that he gave consent, “partly out of a principal of compassion, but chiefly out of a respect to the Act of Parliament for reverting the attainted of those two men; which Act does also legitimate Captain Leisler’s assuming the government of this Province and puts a censure upon the illegality of his execution.” See also May 3, 1695. Bellomont adds a third reason for consenting: that Fletcher’s refusal to obey this act of parliament brought the law into contempt. “My design,” he states, “is chiefly to give the people here a just idea of English laws, that they bear the stamp of the highest authority of the King and Nation of England, and ought to be respected as sacred.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 400-1, 522. See also Oct. 14 and 20.

22 Bellomont sends to the lords of trade “a certificate under the hand of the Surveyor General of this Province of several most extravagant grants of land by Colonel Fletcher,” also, by one Lieut. Hunt, who goes to England in the man-of-war “Deptford” from Boston, he sends “a new Map of this Province (it being too bulky to make up in this packet) made by the said Surveyor General the exactest, I believe, that has yet been made, wherein he has described the several large tracts of land granted, with the granters’ names; so that your Lords will see that this whole Province is given away to about thirty persons in effect, to the great prejudice of the Crown, because at that rate this province, which by its situation is the most considerable of all the Provinces on the Continent and ought to be under the special regular and proper arrangements, for men not to care to become base tenants to proprietors of land in this Province, when they can buy the fee-simple of land in the Jerseys for five pounds p’ hundred acres, and I believe as cheaply in Pennsylvania.”—See Oct. 22.

Continuing, Bellomont asserts: “I do not find that Colonel Fletcher had any power by his Commission to sell the lands in this Province, and yet ‘tis certain he took money for all the grants he made, except that of the Mohacks land, which I cannot yet find out.” He recommends the “voiding these extravagant grants and limiting all Governors to a certain number of acres in their grants, obliging them to reserve a Quit Rent of half a Crown per hundred Acres, to the Crown, and restraining them from selling the lands to the person they grant them to. I should think a thousand acres were a sufficient quantity of land to grant to any man, for the clearing of land from wood costs £4-10s. p’ acre all this country over, so that it would require a good part of the Mohacks and the Tradesmen of all sorts, must come to the number of a thousand acres, this country being all under great woods, and yet Mr. Delius the Minister at Albany, besides his share in the Mohacks land, has in another grant which your Lords will see be the Map at least seveneens hundred thousand acres of land.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 404-10.
The common council limits the slaughtering of cattle to the publick Slaughter houses by the water side. Cattle may not be landed "but at the Nearest Conveni ent place to the slaughter house."—M. G. C., II, 65. See also Dec. 15, 1614; Nov. 27, 1725.

Mayor De Peyster appoints Enoch Hill to be his marshal and makes a petition to the common council that "for his Encour agement" he desires that Hill be allowed "A Coate Breeches Hatt Shoes Stockings and A Cloake of 6th City Livery And A Beadles Staff" at the city's expense. It is ordered that the mayor purchase these, and that the livery "be blew with An Orange List."—M. G. C., II, 65-66. After some delay provision for such a uniform was made by the common council.—Ibid, II, 97. See July 8, 1693.

The common council is appointed "to View ye 9th Nov. Condition of the present City Hall And where it will be most Convenient for ye building of a New One And what Materials will be Necessary for ye Same together with an Estimate of ye Cost thereof."—M. G. C., II, 66. They reported at the next meeting, Jan. 11, 1699 (q. 7).

The lords justices of England issue instructions to Bellomont commending him for his diligence. They confirm his removal of William Nicolls, Chaffey Brooke, and William Pintoorne; they order the removal of Col. Nicholas Bayard and Frederick Philips, and appoint in their places Col. Abraham Depyster, James Graham, Dr. Samuel Skarea, Robert Livingston, and Dr. John Corbile. They direct him to punish pirates and discount age illegal trade. They also direct him to use all methods that the law allows to annul the exorbitant grants of land.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV, 472-25. See Sept. 25, and Oct. 19.

Bellomont sends to the lords of trade a copy of the charter granted by Fletcher to the Dutch Church, which he thinks "very extraordinary, for it is setting up a petty jurisdiction to fly in the face of the government." Being told that Fletcher "had a bire for passing this charter," Bellomont states: "I sent to the Church-Masters (so called by the Dutch) which I suppose are equivalent to our Church Wardens here. The charter I had sent was told I should find an entry made of the said bire." The "Church-Masters" referred Bellomont to Mr. Selwyn, and the latter said he could not show it "till he had called a Conistory," but "by speaking him fair" Bellomont succeeded, and copied the entry referred to, and sent it to the lords of trade.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV, 426-27. This "bire" consisted of "a considerable present of plate...as appears by their Church Books."—Ibid, IV, 469. See also Jan. 9, 1699. For the record of this present to Fletcher, see July 28, 1696.

On the advice of Ducie Hungerford, surveyor of customs, the council decrees that the jurisdiction of the mayor's court does not extend beyond low-water mark.—Col. Cun. Min., 135.

Bellomont issues a proclamation (printed by Bradford) directing that all male inhabitants, excepting Indians and slaves, take the oath established by law in England, instead of the oath of allegiance and supremacy.—Miss Haste's "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Libr. Bulletin (1901), 60.

"This Day the board accounted with Mr. Derrick Vanderburgh & there appeared due to him by balance the Sum of £294 97 Current money of New York for workmen Labourers & money &c. by him expended for the building of Trinity Church & the Steeple, & in Consideration that he hath been long out of his money and no Interest for the same. It is Resolved & ordered by this board Nemine Contradicente, that a Silver Tankard of ye value of Twelve pounds be presented unto him & to be paid out of the public Stock of Trinity Church and that the said sum of £294 97 be paid him be allowed from this day Interest for such sum as shall be kept & not paid at ye Rate of Seven pounds...Cent...Ann."—Tris. Min. (M.S.).

Complaints against Fletcher concerning his conduct of the government at New York are delivered to him "at the Board." (Whitehall). These he answered at length on Dec. 24 (q. 2).—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV, 433-34, 45-51.

Advice reach England from Bellomont that "he has caused several persons to be arrested there [in New England and New York provinces], accused for corresponding and trading with the pyrates of Madagascar, by which means they have got great riches." From Diary of Narcissus Luttrell, in Hist. Mag. (1868), 4th ser., III: 292.

Fletcher answers the complaints against him regarding fortifica tions (see Nov. 28): "For at New York I made up all the soldi ers away, the two bastions towards the sea I flagged with free stone, the rai le between those two bastions I built up new from the ground, the well new made, and a very large cistern for receiving water, half the soldiers barracks pull'd down and rebuilt, new carriages for thirty six guns, a paint [pent] house upon collums for securing the field pieces and their carriages from the weather, the chapel new built on the present foundations for the Papists, and other buildings dispensed to pews. As to the Government's house it was all new shingled by me, two rooms wainscoted, an addition thereto built from the ground with brick and shingled and secured from the weather, tho' not finished within; a new pump made without the Fort Gate and one thousand and fifty tons of lime paid for and lodged in the new house, for the painting and refit ting the Forts."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV, 450. See also Ibid, IV, 513.

In this year, an interesting coloured map was drawn, entitled "A Map of the English Possessions in North America and New Newfoundland." It is owned by the Library of Congress, and is reproduced and described in Addenda Pl. 2-a, Vol. III.

The Bishop of Bristol sent over, this year, enough "stones as did pave the Isles of our Church" (Trinity).—From letter of the vestry to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in Eccl. Rec. III: 1768.

About this time, the Three Cornish Daws was erected and opened as a tavern at what is now 47 Wall St.—Liber Wilts, V: 117; Liber Deeds, XXXII: 194-96; XXXVI: 165 (New York). The United States Trust Co. building now covers the site. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981; Pl. 175, Vol. III.

Some time during his administration of the government, probably this year, Nanfan issued a license for theatrical performances in New York City.—See Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 254. The original record was destroyed in the Capitol fire at Albany; but, fortunately, it had been printed. It was a petition, without date, from one Richard Hunter, an actor-manager (not Gov. Hunter as stated in Vol. I, p. 265), to Nanfan, and read as follows:

"To the Honorable John Nanfan, Esqre. his Majesty's Governor and Commander in Chief of the province of New York and territories Depending thereon in America and Vice Admirall of the same, the humble petition of Richard Hunter Sherwet, that your honor's Petitioner having been at great charge and expence in providing persons and necessary in order to the acting of Play's in this City; Humbly prays your Honor will please to grant him a Lycence for so doing.

"And your honor's petitioner shall ever pray,  "Richard Hunter"

[Indentured]

"Petition of Richard Hunter, for a License Issued and Rotated." As Lieut.-Gov. Nanfan administered the government from May 16, 1699, to July 25, 1700, in the absence of the Earl of Bellomont at Boston, and again after Bellomont's death, from May 19, 1701, to May 3, 1702, the date may be easily approximated. The endorsement is in the handwriting of Barne Cosens, clerk of the council. "Preliminary letter came to New York from the West Indies with Nanfan. Be this as it may, his petition conclusively establishes the fact that theatricals were introduced into New York half a century, if not more, before the period fixed by Duval.—Hist. Mag. (1865), IX: 118.

Thomas Weaver, the agent for the province of New York in England, replies to Fletcher's answer to the charges against him. He points out, regarding Fletcher's extravagant grants, that it is "incredible that Colonel Fletcher did not know that the grant to Colonel Heathcote was part of the King's garden; for that the words of the grant are, Part of Our Garden." He continues:

"The King's farm was leased out by Colonel Fletcher, even when my Lord Bellomont was known to be on his voyage for New York; as most of the other great grants were, after the Earl's designation to the Government. Colonel Fletcher assumes the glory of building churches, which never was imputed to him as a crime, if it was true; but the Church of New Yorkers [Trinity] was not built by him, but by a contribution of several, even of the French and Dutch churches as well as English; and an allowance of one hundred pounds per annum given to an English Minister by an act of the country, which is levied, a greater part of it, on Dutch and French inhabi-

"Besides Colonel Fletcher accepted a considerable present of plate for granting a Charter to the Dutch Church of that City, as appears by their Church Books."—N. Y. Col. Docs, IV: 456-66.

For the record of this present, see under July 26, 1699. For the further proceedings of the Lords of trade in this cause, see 466-74, 479-86. On March 9, 1699, they made representations to the king concerning the charges against Fletcher.—Ibid., IV: 479-86.

The common council orders that the ferry between this city and Nassau Island be "Let to farms" on Feb. 2 (p. 94), for a term of seven years beginning March 25; and that "the money thereby be Appropriated to No Other use then to the building of A New City Hall."—M. C. C., II: 57. See March 9, 1703.

The committee, appointed on Nov. 9 last to examine the city hall, reports that "they . . . find it insufficient and do think the Upper end of the broad Street A proper place for ye Building A new City Hall And believe that the Sum of three Thousand pounds may be sufficient for the building the same According to the former draft drawn by Mr James Evetts." The report is approved by the board.—M. C. C., II: 68. Regarding the tale of the old city hall and the building of the new, see summaries under May 12, 1699, and Oct. 16, 1699. See also M. C. C. (MS), XIX: 240-54 (1808), where the history of the first and second city halls is briefly reviewed.

The common council orders that the mayor issue a warrant to the treasurer to pay £15512s. for making And paving the Street Burgers path."—M. C. C., II: 68. See May 11, 1696.

John Peter Melett's account for ironwork in the fort is reported as extravagant; and Thomas Parnyre, master-gunner and supervisor of buildings, is suspended for having certified it as correct. John Ashton, the store-keeper, is appointed supervisor of buildings.—Cal. Conn. Minis., 176.

Pursuant to an order of the common council of Jan. 23 (M. C. C., II: 69), directing a committee "to Examine into the Ancient Rights and Privileidges of this City and what Additions will be Needfull to be added thereto for ye Well Rule And Government of the Inhabitants," they prepare the following recommendations:

 industrious and a merchant against the importation of the same; the committee of town clerk, water-bailiff, and clerk of the market, and the appointment of coroner should be vested in the Corporation; the extension of the jurisdiction of the water-bailiff "Upon all the Rivers Roads Coves Harbours Inlets and waters Surrounding the said City Manning Island Ile and Great Barns Islands and from ye Bounds of the said City Upon Hudson River Soe far as the Mouth of ye River Satttering Att Sandy hooke;" the receipt as formerly of "ye Anchorage of all Shiping Riding in this Harbour;" jurisdiction of the landing at the ferry on Nassau Island; the incorporation under the city's jurisdiction of all the Land from ye Eastern End of Nanfan Island for half A Mile deep to ye West point of ye Wallabout . . . Saving to every person there, their freehold. And all the Land from High water Marke to Low water Markye fronting ye Same."—From the original report preserved in the metal file labelled "Filed papers, 1700-1706," city clerk's record-room. It can be found in the common council on Feb. 27; no action is reported on that day. —M. C. C. I: 73-74.

Conditions are published for leasing the ferry between this city and Nassau Island for seven years from March 25. Rip van Dam is the successful bidder, at £165 per annum. Among the conditions prescribed are the following provisions: The lessee (or "farmer") shall pay to the treasurer in quarterly payments "what he shall farme the above Revenue att." He shall give security for faithful performance of duty (cf. provisions of Dec. 27, 1700). He shall provide and maintain two great boats or scows for transporting cattle, corn, etc., and two small boats sufficient for passengers.

One great boat and one small boat shall be on each side of the river, and shall go to and fro without either the two great boats or the two small boats being on the same side of the river at the same time. Able men are to be kept to row the boats, and give constant attendance.

The "farmer" shall maintain a pound for the security of cattle to be transported to and from this city. All corn, as well as cattle, brought in the ferry-boats, is to be landed "within the Dock" slips or Burgers path." Within the first year of the lease, the common council shall cause to be Erected & Built at the ferry on Nassaun A great Barn and sufficient boathouse for a large part of the publick Accommodation and Conveniency of the person that farmeth ye said Ferry." Here the "farmer" shall keep a publick house of Entertainment in Order that Strangers and Travellers & their horses may have good Accommodation at Reasonable Rates. This he shall keep in repair. The city agrees to repair "the Barn att ye Ferry" (see Feb. 27), and the farmer is to maintain it. Fare rate tickets are prescribed for persons, horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, barrels of rum, sugar, molasses, oil, pork, tubs of butter, bushels of corn and salt, hogheads of tobacco, etc. "Every single person to pay for going Over Eight Stivers in Wampum or A Silver two pence." The rate is half of this if the person is in company. The rates are double after sunset.—M. C. C., II: 70-72. The original manuscript of these "Conditions for farming the Ferry," and another of Dec. 27, 1700 (q.v.), are filed in metal Ele No. 1, city clerk's record-room. Several merchants and others concerned in the province of New York have written to the lords of trade expressing their uneasiness regarding the changes Bellomont has made in the government, pretending that the preference he has shown to those of the Lower party has given them "great reason to apprehend lest that party prevailing in the elections of the next Assembly, should aim at reparations for damages suffered in the time of the disorders . . . upon occasion of the late happy Revolution, to the great hazard of their effects and estates." The lords of trade so inform Bellomont, and advise him that no act of assembly be passed by his consent "whereby any retroact be had to the quarrels or differences between any parties during the aforementioned disorders or for the reparations of damages then suffered on either side, without his Majestys express pleasure first had therein."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 474. For Bellomont's answer, see May 15.

The ship "Hester" with cargo having attempted to escape customs by landing goods at Perth Amboy is condemned by the court of mayor and aldermen.—M. C. M. (M.S.), Feb. 21, 1689. See Apr. 16, 1691.

The common council appoints a committee to determine, in connection with the corporation's ferry property at Nassau Island, the necessary materials for repairing the barn, and to arrange for workmen to execute such repairs; also to make an estimate of the cost of building the ferry-house (see Feb. 2)—M. C. C., II: 73. On March 31, another committee was appointed to manage the building of the house (ibid., II: 75), and it was reported, April 24, that Peter Willeme Roome had agreed to build it according to detailed specifications, which were entered under that date in the Minutes.—Ibid., II: 76. The house and pound are seen in the right foreground of the Burgis View (Pl. 25, Vol. I). Roome received his final payment as builder on Jan. 16, 1700, the total for materials and labour being £455.—Ibid., II: 97.

grants made by Fletcher. He needs this assistance to meet the opposition against his purpose.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 514.

In May, Bellomont narrates the following reasons for discontinuing Col. Fletcher's officers and appointing new ones: "The country was very uneasy under the authority of Fletcher's Officers, and I was mightily importuned to change the officers. As an instance of the people's aversion to their late officers on the 4th of last November I had the City regiment drawn out among other respects to the King's birthday: the regiment consisted that day but of 200 men besides officers, and on the 13th of last February the anniversary of the King's being proclaimed King, I had the regiment drawn out under the new Officers and they were then 500 men. I also had 'em out on the 17th of April the day of his Majesty's Coronation. The Officers behaved as I desired, but the Soldiers at the King's. I do not find Colonel Fletcher left me a president [precedent] for this but I think it a useful piece of ceremony because it helps to affect the people to the King, and puts 'em in mind of his duty to him; for before they had no idea of any thing greater on earth then Colonel Fletcher, and he seemed to be of that mind himself."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 515.

Gov. Bellomont "produced his Instructions from the Lords Justices of England Dated the tenth day of November, 1698, whereby he is directed to use all legal means for the Breaking of England's Laws of Land (made by Gov. Fletcher)." In response to the governor's wishes, the council joined in ordering that the attorney-general draw a bill for this purpose. Such bill is to contain a clause "to prevent the Governor or Commander in Chief of this province for the time being from Alienating Nutten Island, the Kings furns, the Kings Garden, and the swamp at fresh Water as being the Demence belonging to the Kings Governor for the time being."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 127. Such bill, having passed the house of representatives, was confirmed by the council on May 13 (Ibid., I: 141; N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 516) and signed May 16 (v. q.). Thereafter, Nutten Island was known as Governors Island.—Smith, Hist. of the Province of N. Y. (1756); Mem. Coun. (1855), 497.

It is ordered by the governor and council that all persons importing or exporting goods into or out of the province shall use the "Slip at the mouth of Maiden Lane in Queen's Street," this being "the most convenient place at that end of the said City." They are to ship goods at this slip "in like manner as they formerly have done at the Custom house what." It is ordered that "a patent issue for the same."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 138.

13

Bellomont again entreats the lords of trade to send over "a good Judge or two to sit in Council, and a good Attorney General to advise me in behalf of the King." He desires them to be present at the session of the assembly on Sept. 20. He states: "There is not a day that I do not find the want of an honest able lawyer." He points out where smuggling by way of Nassau Island is carried on, one place of landing goods being Oyster Bay; and explains the reason given to serve as inspectors and collectors there.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 516-17. He repeated his plea in a letter from Boston on July 22: "The people there [i.e., New York] are so impudent in abetting and sheltering pirates and their goods, that without such assistance as I have now proposed, I can never expect to check that vile practice of theirs."—Ibid., IV: 512.

In a report to the lords of trade, before he goes to Boston (on May 16), Bellomont writes, among other things, that "the English here are so profligate he "can not find a man fitt to be trusted, that's capable of business." He refers to the new clerk of the council and the clerk of the assembly, the latter, named Ludlow, having become too large for the province, then gave them a seat that are honest of the Dutch . . . are very ignorant, and can neither speak nor write proper English." "I am in hopes the several reports we have here of Captain Kidd's being forced by his men against his will to plunder two Moonth ships may prove true, and 'tis said that near one hundred of his men revolted from him at Madagascar and were about to kill him, because he absolutely refused to turne pirate." He sends to the lords of trade a copy of the Duke of York's letter to Gov. Dongan, to confirm them in "the maintenance of the Port of New York against the pretentions of the Proprietors of East Jersey, and for much upstairs as Brooks writes from England to his friends here very confidently that I shall not be long lived in this government, and he uses this expression,—That if villany and falsehood do not prevail, they shall be rid of their Tyrant very soon. My honest endeavours to serve the King are ill rewarded, and treated as they must the more disgracefully, for much upstairs as Brooks writes from England to let fly their insolence and scourility at me, a fellow that was bred up in my Uncle family as his dogs were, with kicking the dishes and eating the scraps from his table; and what advancement he has had in the world is owing to my your Lordships pleasures you. But as for a more correct book of the laws which you order me to send, 'tis not to be had. I sent for the printer and spoke to him about it, and he told me there was no more ready for it because he had not the paper when he printed it." (In this connection see May, 1697.)

He complains: "I think we have been barbarously used by the Pay Office. I am forced to lend £20 a piece to the Lieutenants and Chaplains out of my salary, or they must downright starve, and at the same time I am put to borrow money for my own use and am above four hundred pounds in debt in this town, my salary being so mean and insufficient and the perquisites so very inconsiderable." Replying to the letter of Feb. 2 (q. 8) from the lords of trade, regarding the allegation that he was giving too much favour to the Leisler party, Bellomont says, among other things: "I would be glad to know wherein I favour them beyond the rules of justice. I suffered them indeed to take up the bodesies of Captain Leisler & Mr. Milburn and give them Christian burial, and I do not repeat my doing so since no manner of ill consequence ensued, and if it were in my power I would restore them to life again, for I am most confidant and dare undertake to prove it that the execution of those men was as violent cruel and arbitrary a proceeding as ever was done upon the lives of men in any age under an English government and it will be proved undeniably that Fletcher hath declared the same dislike and abhorrence of that proceeding that I now do, notwithstanding his dealings in disposing of the justice of it and shreken his sycophants Councillors Nicholls, Bayard, Brooks and the rest of the bloodhounds. . . . Mr. Bayard has sent over hither the copy of a petition of some few merchants of London complaining of me for favouring the Leisler party. I have not been able to get a sight of it, but some that have read it tell me it is very spiteful, and that it much applauds the justice of all the proceedings against Leisler and Milburn; which I can not but think an insolence of a high nature in those merchants when the Act of Parliament, that reverses the Artandi of those men, does plainly condemn and explode that whole proceeding against them." He then reviews his relations with the Leisler faction since his arrival in New York. "I have made all the court that a man could do that [has] the soul of a gentleman, to those angry merchants. I have invited them to my table and treated them with all the kindness I was capable of and encouraged their coming often to dine with me, but they would never come near me of their own accord. I can not imagine the meaning of it unless my drinking King William's health (which is a custome with me allways after dinner) frightened them." He relates incidents showing that the factional opposition to the Leisler party (called "Disaffected persons") is still active; that bribery with large sums is attempted both in the council at New York and through Bayard, the New York provincial agent at Whitehall. Bellomont calls attention to the fact "that their Majestys King William [and] Queen Mary were never yet proclaimed King and Queen in this Province by the Civil Magistrate." He explains that his attempt in Leisler was there. He adds: "I suppose that he was in possession of the Fort when the Proclamation came hither from the Secretary of State & he immediately ordered it to be read at the Fort with all solemnity [see June 32, 1699] and then carried it to a person who was of his Majestys Council at my coming and still is so, who was then Mayor of this City Stephen Van Cortlandt, and desired him to publish it; but he refused . . . Bayard too, I am told, indevoured to hinder Their Majesties being proclaimed at Albany, in opposition to Captain Leisler's order to the Mayor of that town to do it.

Some friends write me word from England that Colonel Fletcher and his party is supposed to me the most abstray [aby] Governor that ever was known . . . I challenge all the people of New York to shew where I have punished or personally ill treated any man, notwithstanding I have been libelled and reflected on at their clubs and other publick meetings. But I thought their abuses fitted to be laughed at, the better to show that Brooks writes [from England] to his friends here very confidently that I shall not be long lived in this government, and he uses this expression,—That if villany and falsehood do not prevail, they shall be rid of their Tyrant very soon. My honest endeavours to serve the King are ill rewarded, and treated as they must the more disgracefully, for much upstairs as Brooks writes from England to let fly their insolence and sourility at me, a fellow that was bred up in my Uncle family as his dogs were, with kicking the dishes and eating the scraps from his table; and what advancement he has had in the world is owing to my

The "House of Representatives" (general assembly) of the province, of which Abraham Gounever is speaker, addresses an eloquent petition and remonstrance to Bellomont, recting the main facts concerning the Leisler rebellion; representing the weak character of the fort, the hot-headed spirit of Ingoldesby, and the corruption of Fletcher; expressing praise for the crown and constitution of England, particularly for King William and parliament, and asking Bellomont to intercede for the benefit of the families of Leisler and Milbourne, in applying for reimbursement from the king for money expended by them from their own estates for the public benefit when they had charge of the government at New York.

They ask also "That for ye better Administracion of Justice five able Judges be sent from England & two or three able Council, who have acquired to that noble profession by study, & by Usurpation." They further ask "That Col. Fletcher's Coat of Arms may be pulled down from ye Kings Chappell in ye Fort, & Trinity Church in this City; that since he left no monument of Virtue & a Just Administration, those of his Naucious & Insupportable Pride & Vanity may not remain to Posterity, especially his own seat in the Fort, which was so meanly covered as that he was not entitled to wear a Coat of Arms."—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 269; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1866), 412-16.

This petition is followed by a deposition of Gounever's, dated Aug. 21, that Leisler kept his accounts in a certain book, which he left in the fort and with other books and papers when he delivered the fort to Col. Slaughter; but that the book has not been found or heard of since theo.—Ibid., 416-17.

Jacob Leisler, 2d, makes his petition, individually, direct to the king, for the reimbursement.—Ibid., 418-19. On Feb. 6, 1700, the Earl of Jersey wrote to Bellomont from Whitehall that the king directed that this petition be transmitted to the assembly by Bellomont with a recommendation that the relief be granted.—Ibid., 419. In 1701, the assembly passed an act "for paying the debts of the government made in ye 3d ye of ye late happy revolution, and Leisler (f.) petitioned Naucian to assent to it."—Ibid., 421-22. At least as late as 1714, however, this account had not been settled.—Ibid., 422-25.

"The governor and council publish an ordinance, "For the Establishing Courts of Judicature. For the Ease and Benefit of each respective City, Town and County within this Province of New York."—From one of these printed ordinances bound with a copy of Bradford's Laws (1710), in the N. Y. Pub. Library. In 1824, an ordinance was published for "further establishing the Supreme Court." A copy of this also is bound with the above.

Gov. Bellomont gives instructions to Lient.-Gov. Naucian, to be observed by the county Nine Yolomont's absentees. They solicit to relate to the discouragement of unlawful trade, pirates, payments out of the public revenue, etc. Among other things he says: "You are not yourself nor any body else whatsoever to lodge in the New Appointments in the King's house within the Fort."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 557-58. See May 19.

Gov. Bellomont signs the bill "for vacating breaking and Annulling several Extravagant Grants of Land made by Collo. Fletcher."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 143; Laws of N. Y. (Gaine ed.), Chap. 79; N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 510, also see May 6. Extravagant grants on Manhattan Island are mentioned as follows: The grant to John Evans of land containing the Fresh Water Pond (which is described); the grant of the King's Farm to Trinity Church; the grant to Caleb Heathcote of land in the King's Garden "lying without the Stockades of the City of New York; near adjoining to the Locust Treery"; and a grant to Heathcote of another piece of the King's Garden, which lies vacant and unimproved, but bounded by the Stockadoes or Fence of the said garden, so far as the said garden in the Rear does extend, and from the said Fence of Stockades, so far into Hudson's-River as Low-Water Mark.

The law enacts that the record of these grants in the secretary's office be recorded, razed, defaced, and the Memory or Record of all and every of the aforesaid Grants be "reduced into Oblivion and Forgetfulness, as if no such Grants had ever been made, or registered in the said Office."—Laws of N. Y. (Gaine ed.), Chap. 79. This act was repealed by Chap. 126 on Nov. 27, 1703 (see Col. Laws N. Y., I: 523); but was reaffirmed by Queen Anne, June 26, 1708 (p. 2). For a history of this act, see a manuscript in the Moore Collection, in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

On account of the "sumult & Decent" during the recent election of representatives, the general assembly passes a bill to regulate elections, requiring, among other things, that each elector shall have property, improved and unimumbered, to the value of £20.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 405.

The bill is passed to permit a provincial legislature to enable the city to pay its debts, erect a new city hall, rebuild the ferry-house, build other necessary public buildings, and defray contingent expenses. It provides for the appointing of overseers of public works and buildings, and for raising money by taxation.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 427.

The provincial legislature passes a bill allowing £5,000 to Bellomont and £500 to Nanfan, as an expression of their appreciation of Bellomont's "Exterordinary Diligence" in suppressing piracy and unlawful trade, and as acknowledgment to the king for sending him as governor. The quota to be paid by the city and county of New York is £571.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 396.

Another act is passed by the general assembly for restraining and punishing pirates and pirates.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 389.

The act of the legislature of Sept. 30, 1691, (q.v.), entitled "An Act for ye regulating Damages done in ye time of ye late disorders," is repealed (Col. Laws N. Y., I: 386), and the legislature now passes "A Bill for preventing vexatious Suits," etc.—Ibid., I: 392. They also pass a bill for amending the estate of Jacob Milbourne, who was executed with Leisler, and whose attainer was reversed by parliament.—Ibid., I: 395.

Gov. Bellomont is absent on his way to Boston.—Col. Coun. Min., 120. He arrived in Boston on May 26.—See July 24, 1700. Lieut.-Gov. Nanfan is now acting-governor.—See May 15.

The wardees and vestrymen of Trinity Church write to Archbishop Tenison, giving credit to Fletcher for establishing Trinity Church, and to Mr. Vesey for largely aiding its growth. They express the fear that Bellomont's opposition to Fletcher aims at the destruction of "this fair beginning," and give their reasons for this belief. They add that the archbishop take measures for the church's good.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 527-28. The Bishop of London wrote letters of reconciliation, asking Mr. Vesey to submit himself to Bellomont, and asking Bellomont to accept Vesey's submission. Bellomont promised to Vesey's friend, "provided he demean himself peaceably and discreetly for the future."—Ibid., IV: 766.

The common council resolves "that for the better Carrying On of the building of the New City Hall [see May 12, 1696] that the Materials of the Old City Hall be Exposed to sale And that the Ground belonging to the same be Let to farne for the term of five years hee Nine Yolomont is appointed "To see the same is farmed the same Upon the Most Advantageous Terms . . . & that ye Clerk doe put up publick placards therefor."—M. G. C., II: 78. This committee reported on Aug. 9 (q.v.).

John Rodman, William Hudlifletton, and John Hutchins petition the common council for a strip of land "lying on ye North River fronting their Respective purchases between them & Low water Mark."—M. G. C., II: 78. Such a grant is made to Rodman.—Ibid., I: 131, 139. It is the beginning of the grants of water lots on the Hudson River.—See Peter Mesier in 1701.—Ibid., I: 91, 127, 134, 135. See also July 24, 1723.

Thomas Story, an English Quaker missionary, who travelled through the colonies from the end of 1688 until the beginning of 1691, writes in his journal: "Samuel Jenings and I lodged with Robert Field, and Roger Gill and John Rodman returned to New-York where, next Day, we had a Meeting, and each of us a good Opportunity therein among the People; who seemed to have good Understandings generally as Men and Friends were well satisfied, there being pretty many from the Island.

Considerable sum of Money which would be A Great Assistance to wards the building the New City Hall." The common council orders that it "be sold for Ever by Publick Ottery," and a committee is appointed to sell the same. On such Conditions as they Shall think most Requisite & most Beneficial for the City."—

The common council grants the petition of Ellice Leisler (widow of Capt. Jacob Leisler) for "Land fronting the Petitioners Group house Widow's house, or a slip att Burgers path without the City to low water marke." A committee is appointed to lay out, with the aid of the surveyors, and make A Draft of what Group is desired to be Granted to the Petitioner to Range with the Other wharfs," and also to determine what compensation she shall make.
—M. C. C., II: 86. On Sept. 6, this committee, "Appointed to Agree with Mr. Leisler for the Ground between Burgers path [later called Old Ship] & Running up Queen Street [Pearl St. etc.]," reported that "in Consideration of the two Streets Allowed to the City out of 4th Land of the said Widow Leisler that she have A Grant from High water to low water Marke fronting her Patent," except what lies before the houses of Leonard Huygen and Jacob Teller.
It is ordered that "the Mayor Execute A Grant Accordingly."—

The companions of Capt. Kidd offer to turn informers if assured of their own safety; but, on Aug. 23, a letter received from Sec.
Vernoos does not instigate them to do so. Capt. Kidd and his crew.—Col. Coun. Min., 142. News had reached England that Kidd "was lately at Nassau Island, near New York, and sent for Mr. Lillington [Livingston], one of the council there, to come on board; accordingly he went to him, and he profered 50,000l., to give the owners who first fitted out the Adventure galleon, and zoogers for his share of the prize, which was all to be acccepted." Also, the same authority in England stated: "There are letters which say, the famous pyrate captain Kidd has surrendered himself to the lord Bellomont."—"Diary of Narcissus Luttrel," in

The ship fronting the city hall (see May 11, 1696) "Shall Re-maine Continue & Abide for Ever a Publick Slip for ye Publick use & Benefit of the City."—M. C. C., II: 81. This was a part of the agreement when the City Hall (see Pl. 26, Vol. I) was sold.— See Aug. 17.

The committee of the common council (see Aug. 9) meets to sell the old ball, "with all and singular ye Apparances belonging thereunto (the Bell King Mews & Iron works belonging to the prison Except)." It was "Exposed to Sayle by the Warden or Vendue to the highest bidder." Among the conditions of the sale were the following: "That the Cage Pillory and Stocks Standing before ye Same be Removed within the Space of twelve Months Next Erext, and ye Space of ye said City Hall Shall Remaine Continue & Abide for Ever A Publick Slip for ye Publick use & Benefit of the City;" and that "the City have the Liberty and Benefit of the Goal in the said City Hall for ye Space of One Month Next Ensuing." The hall is purchased by John Rodman, in fee simple, "with the Ground & all the Apparances thereunto belonging According to the Draft thereto," for £500.— Ibid., II: 81-83; City Grants, Liber A, 254. Although the Minutes show the sale took place on Aug. 17, Ledger No. 1 of the chamberlain's office (pub. in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 1909, p. 104) shows credit to Rodman for payment of the purchase price on Aug. 9.

The sale was at 91 St. Ciilt St. (N. W. corner of Coenties Alley). The building was demolished in 1700.—Liber City Grants, At 254, 537 (commissioner's office).

For the date of the original building (the City Tavern), see 1642; and for its occupation as a city hall, see Feb. 6, 1653.—Landmark

"Mary D: Lanoy petitions the common council to be paid £170 which her husband (deceased) expended for the use of the city while he was mayor.—M. C. C., II: 83. The original petition is Municipality, 50-51.

In a petition of the common council to Nanfan, the lieutenant-governor, regarding the appropriation of stone to build the new city hall on Wall St. (see May 12, 1696), it is stated that "The former line of fortifications that did Range Along the Wall Street from the East to the North River together with the Bastians that were thereon Erected are fallen to decay and the Incroachment of Buildings which have been made Adjacent thereunto wilt Render ye Same Useless for ye time to Come."—M. C. C., I: 82.

The common council orders that "the Coll of the Millin Regiment of this City or Any Other persons Authorized by him do hire some Convenient Room or Storehouse for ye securing the Carriages of the Great Guns belonging to this City & that the great Guns be forthwith determined in Order for the preserving the same."—M. C. C., II: 83.

In a private letter from Boston to Abraham de Peyster, Bell-omont expresses willingness to send a pipe of wine to England. "My Cousin, Nanfan, has the key to the Cellar where the pipe of wine is; it was left by John, my butler, with Robert [Roba] the Coachman's Wife." He asks "whether the battery which Coll. Fletcher sold, or granted away to Ebenezer Wilson, be entirely built up in N. York, and whose land it was he made batteries on in the war time." He adds: "Mr. Leisler I believe was one, and I think a quaker another—George Heathcote is the Quaker's name, as I think.
New York is an unhappy place, that there is not better choice of men to serve the King and their country."—De Peyster, Life and Administration of Richard, Earl of Bellomont (1793), Animals, vii.

The original letter is preserved with the De Peyster Papers, 1695-1710 (red ball morocco), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. The reference to his coachman implies that Bellomont kept a coach, and helps to confirm the opinion "that all the Governors [since Calve] were thus provided,"—"Coaches of the Lords of..." (q.v.)

Bellomont writes to the lords of trade: "Piracy does and will prevail in the Province of New York in spite of my endeavours unless three things be done out of hand, viz good Judges and an honest and able Attorney General from England, a man of War commanded by an honest straight captain, and proper pay and provisions for the four companies. Captain Giles Shelly who came lately from Madagascar with 50 or 60 Pirates has so bushed them at New York with Arabian Gold and East India goods, that they set the government at defiance."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 539-541.

Bellomont informs the lords of trade that "the King had but one piece of ground in the City of New York, whereon there was a Battery of Cannon and a strong Blockhouse which defeated both the Town and River on the East Side, and that ground Colonel Fletcher granted away to the late Knash Sherriff of New York Ebenezer Wilson, and that in the very heat of the War. And Wilson sold it for fifty to persons that had the expense built it up, and said Fletcher had the greatest part of the money. . . . As that Battery and Blockhouse have been described to me, they were a better security to that Town than the Fort is; for the Cannon lay level with the water and pointed horizontally, whereas all the guns in the Fort lie about forty feet above high-water mark, and so are capable of little affection."—N. Y. Col. Diest, IV: 555.

25 "The Lieutenant Governor in Council producing two several depositions against Cornelius Quick of this city Marriner setting forth that he had been on board Captain Kidd's sloop and had loaded and taken from thence into his own sloop several Bale of Goods and merchandise with Several Bags of money and that he put the same on shore on the Island Nassau. It is therefore ordered that the said Cornelius Quick be committed to the custody of the high sheriff of the city of New York for his offense aforesaid."—Council Minutes (M.), VIII: 130 (Albany). See further Sept. 16.

4 Abraham de Peyster, he says: "I write to my Cousin Nanfan last post To Let the City of N. yorke have ye' Stones of the old bastions or batteries To build their Town-house."—Manuscript letter with De Peyster Papers, preserved in N. Y. Hist. Soc. For the beginning of the letter, see May 15, 1696, for the superstructure, see Oct. 16, 1699. Regarding the bastions, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 944.

6 William Beckman applies to the common council for the grant of a piece of ground "between ye' land of Stuyvesant Bowlly and Kip's Bay"—M. C. C., II: 84.

The common council orders that the mayor issue his warrant to the treasurer to pay Matthew Clarkson £5:8 for "two Books of Records One for A Tax Bookle & the Other for ye' Mayors Countre."—M. C. C., II: 84. See April 5, 1695.

8 The mayor reports to the common council that "he that has Agreed with Mr. Tennin Dolyce to fill up King Street [Pike St.] for ye' Sum of Sixty pounds & A Silver Cup Not exceeding five pounds."—M. C. C., II: 84.

10 It is ordered that "the Mayor doe take Effectual Care forthwith to have the Streets of this City Cleaned & Paved & put into Good Order."—M. C. C., II: 84.

The common council appoints a committee "to take Such proper Methods for ye' Removing the Incumbrance of the Ground belonging to the City Hall for which Clause Burger has A Grant."—M. C. C., II: 84.

One of the council orders that "What Money Shall be Disbursed by Mr. John Ewatske for ye' Necessary Repair of ye' Barne and bridge att ye' Ferry be Allowed to him On Acc & that A Well be made and the Ground belonging to the City be Inclosed within fence."—M. C. C., II: 84.

The common council orders that "the Mayor Agree with Some person for the Keeping of An Hospital for the Maintenance of the poor of this City Upon ye' most Easy Terms that may be and also that he hire A House suitable for That occasion."—M. C. C., II: 85.

After securing the landing-place granted by the legislature on May 8, the inhabitants of Queen Street obtain from the common council permission to build a market-house at Countess Key, at their own expense, "for the Conveniency and Ornament of the City."—M. C. C., II: 84. It was not built, however, until nearly seven years later; for, on June 20, 1706 (q. v.), pursuant to this permit of 1699 (as explained in the Minutes), the common council ordered that the "market house as said inhabanits shall Erect and build att their Own Charge beittest the houses of Capt. John D; Peyster and Bernardus Smith att the North End of the Slip in Countess Key Aforesaid [later known as the Fly Market slip—see Landmark List, III: 569] be Appropriated and Continued A public Market for the sale of goods in this City for Ever."—Ibid., II: 502-3. It was first called the "Market-House at Countess Key;" but in the Bradford Map of 1770 (Pl. 27, Vol. I), it is called "Fly Market." It stood near the present intersection of Maiden Lane and Pearl St., in the section of the city known as Smith's Fly (or Flie). After being enlarged, then torn down in 1796, and rebuilt in 1797, it was called the "Fly Market Building," 125-241.

7 An order is issued, on the petition of the mayor, for the demolition of two bastions of the old wall.—Col. Coun. Min., 142. See Sept. May 12, 1696, regarding the building of the city hall; also, Aug. 18, 1699.

The news reaches England that, after examination, Capt. Kidd was committed to prison, and commissioners appointed by his former ship, the Dolphin, to examine him on board, to the end there might be a true inventory taken thereof; and his lordship sent to the said commissioners the present of jewels which Kidd had caused to be given to his lady, estimated at 10,000£, an account of which his lordship has dispatched letter to the commissioners of trade, and to know how [he [Kidd] shall be disposed of." Soon after in September, "His majesties ship the Rochester, captain Ellis commander, sailed to New York, "to bring over captain Kidd the pyrate and his crew," to be tried in England.—"Diary of Narcissus Luttrell," cited in N. Y. Hist. Soc., 2d ser., III: 293. See further, Nov. 2.

Bellomont informs the lords of the treasury: "The Collector of N. Yorke writes to me that this proves the worst year that ever was known for the Customes . . . the Acts of Assembly with grant a Revenue to the King so are lame and weakly pen'd y' ye merchants & others elude them upon all occasions & the Revenue Les's than it is and the Savings by it, and to the good many of ships and goods are for the most part lost, by the want of honest Judges and Council for the King, there is not such a parcel of vile Knaves and Jacobites as those that practice the Law in the province of New York, not one of them a Barrister but so far from that, that one of 'em was a pyrate, and the Governor & company of England sold one another and debauching them from their duty and affection to his Maj: there is not a man in the province professing the Law that I have not proofs of their being Jacobites, and sinister practices, a sober word my Lord Bacon uses for knavish Lawyers. I should not be thus particular in my Character of the Lawyers in N. York, but in order to prevail with your Lordships to promote with the rest of the ministers [for I have represented this mischief to 'em all] an effectual cure, an honest understanding Lawyer (well vers'd in Exchequer practice Especially) would deserve a 1000 £ a Year to be made Chief Justice of that province, and another good Lawyer to be Attorney Generall there, would deserve 1000 £ a year salary, the assembly of N. York are so sensible what a pest the present Lawyers are to the province, that this last session they delivered me a petition, and Remonstrance, wherein among other grievances, they Complain of the Lawyers as one grievance, and desire that the Administration of the publick Business in that province be put into better hands and they will be at the Charge of it."—From transcript in Library of Congress, box 63, of the original letter which is with the Rawlison MSS. (cited A, 274, fo. 65b) in the Bodleian Library, Oxford.

The governor's council orders that Thomas Clarke be arrest ed for his connection with Capt. Kidd.—Col. Coun. Min., 142. On Oct. 18, he denied having received goods from Capt. Kidd's sloop, but admitted that Cornelius Quick delivered to him, such goods from Mrs. Kidd.—Ibid., 144. On Feb. 28, he swore that everything on board Kidd's sloop had been delivered to the govern or with an inventory.—Ibid., 164.

John Champante, of London, is commissioned by Bellomont to be agent for the province of New York at the court at Whitehall and elsewhere.—N. Y. Col. Diest, IV: 587.

The common council grants a petition of the inhabitants of Bellomont that they "may Actually Choose three persons of the said Town to have the Determination of all petit Trespasses Under ye' Value of forty Shillings According to former Custom." Their complaint is that "Coming to New York Upon Every frivolous Occasion is A Grievous Prejudice to them." The election shall be on September 10 (the feast-day of St. Michael the Archangel), and the successful candidates shall come to New York on October 14 to be sworn in by the mayor.—M. C. C., II: 86-87. The original of this petition is filed in the city clerk's record-room. The document states that the inhabitants of Harlem are "Chiefly Adicted to ye' Improvement of Husbandry and had by their Practice 400 £ of goods in the Privy" of the Board of Trade and for determining by ye' Determining of Petit Prossesses [small law cases] which might arise Among them
“A Publick Markett house for the Ornament and Benefit of ye City on the Ground whereoe the Old Markett house stands on in which John Ellison lives, he the said John Ellison having Relinquished his Agreement (see the Minutes) with ye City and the Council...”, p. 119, 1699.

The common council appoints a committee the same day to consult with the inhabitants of the said South Ward what building they propose to make on the premises and what yearly rent they will pay for the same.”—M. G. C., II: 95.

The common council granted permission to erect a convenient place for the meeting of Merchants on their own costs and charges, it being a very convenient place for the same

The foundation of the new city hall having been laid in September, 1699 (see Sept. 20), the common council appoints a committee to make an estimate, with the help of carpenters and bricklayers, of “what Stone Brick Lime Timber and Other Materials will be Necessary to be provided & Employed for ye building of the New City Hall the next summer and also what will be the Charge thereof.”—M. G. C., II: 92. Nov. 11, 1700, the committee reported their estimate as £1,17118s., and it was ordered that they “doe agree with Persons for the performance of the same Workmanship with such terms as shall be thought fit” and that all manner of materials be “ordered to be furnished and the said Structure shall be erected by the Great or by the day the building and the said Structure shall be erected by the Great or by the day ye building and the said Structure shall be erected by the Great or by the day ye building and the said Structure shall be erected by the Great or by the day ye building and the said Structure shall be erected by the Great or by the day ye building and the said Structure shall be erected by the Great or by the day ye building and the said Structure shall be erected by the Great or by the day ye building and the said Structure shall be erected by the Great or by the day ye building and the said Structure shall be erected by the Great or by the day ye building and the said Structure shall be erected by the Great or by the day ye building and

A merchants’ exchange, or a building having that character, is for the first time proposed for this city.

The governor’s council takes under consideration the accounts of Capt. Kidd’s ship “Adventure,” and an inventory is ordered to be made of the seized goods in the custom-house.— Cal. G. Min., 1701.
Money was raised by the sale and renting of land, as well as by taxation, to pay the debts due to building the hall—M. C. G., II: 122, 125 (Nov. 7 and 10, 1700); II: 126 (Dec. 3, 1700). From time to time the accounts were ordered to be issued to the treasurer to pay various persons for materials and services.—Ibid., II: 150, 155; and "Ledger No. 1" (op. cit.), 101, 103, 105, 106, 110. One of these items, paid Oct. 13, 1701, was "for bear [beer] delivered at the building the New City Hall."—M. C. G., III: 155.

On the court of general sessions, the court was ordered to have the Court Room to the City Hall made convenient for the Court to sit in this winter and that he issue his warrant to the treasurer for the payment of the charge thereof."—Ibid., II: 185.

It was nearly two years, however, before this could be accomplished. On Oct. 26, 1703, the court resolved to petition the general assembly "That A Law be made for the finishing the City Hall to be fit for the General Assembly to sit in."—Ibid., II: 206. It does not appear in the Assembly Journal or the Minutes of the Common Council that such a law was made; but, on Feb. 26, 1713, in the Minutes: "Whereas the City Hall of this City is not yet Com- pletly finished whereby the Common Council thereof were Obliged to assemble together to do the publick business of this Corporation all this winter past at the house of William Davis for the Common Council fire Room and Office which the said William Davis furnished and Provided by Order of this Court as well as for the Conveniency of the Common Council as of several Committes: by this Court Appointed for the better Expediting the publick Affairs of this City," it was ordered that the mayor issue his warrant to the treasurer to pay Davis the sum of two pounds.—Ibid., III: 239. Also, on March 9, 1705, the common council ordered that "A Committee of this Court" be appointed "for the Employing able workmen for the laying of the floors in the two Chambers in the City Hall for the making the Stair Case & Petition Walls Making Doors to the Court Room Wooden Shutters to all the Windows Making tite the Cupulas Glazing the Oval Windows and laying the floor Over the Court Room."—Ibid., III: 270.

The common council occupied the new hall Oct. 14, 1703.—Ibid., III: 240. As further evidence of the time taken to build the hall, a committee of the assembly reported on May 13, 1704, on the subject of "fitting up the Room where the General Assembly sits. . . That they had examined and considered the Workmen's Bills for the same Room; and what Work is to be done in the Lobby, and the Furniture of the Assembly chamber and Lobby," and the payment of £900, and the payment of £1,800 for materials and workmen (ibid., III: 243). On March 17, 1704, the same, "Pursuant to an Order made the Ninth day of March, 1702" (ibid., III: 257).

On April 11, 1704, the common council ordered that "M. F. Johannes Provoost doe deliver unto the Treasurer of this City all Books Act[s] papers and writings belonging to or relating to the building of the City Hall and that his Receipt be a sufficient discharge unto him for the same."—Ibid., III: 261 (and see 269-70). This date fits approximately the date of finishing the building. That it was occupied then, or soon thereafter, appears from the Assembly Journal entry of May 12, 1704, above cited; or possibly as early as Oct., 1703.—See M. C. G., III: 240.

There were later payments for materials and labour used in constructing the building.—Ibid., III: 299, 300, 313, 325, 329, 348. On Dec. 31, 1709, the common council ordered that "the Act[s] of the City Hall" for £3,647:10:11 "be Ballanced by the Act[s] of the City of New York."—Ibid., III: 391. Many repairs and alterations in the building were recorded in the Minutes in later years, a new cupola was added in 1735 (p. 6).—M. C. G., IV: 457.

For plan of the building as it was in 1735, see fig. 1.

In 1767, the hall was described as a brick building, oval, and two stories high, with two wings, at right angles with the center; the "floor below" was "an open walk, except two Goals, and the Governor's apartments;" the cellar underneath was a dungeon, and the parapet a prison; the street in front, where "four" (should be three) streets met, and fronted to the "southwest" one of the most spacious streets in the town (Broad St.), the eastern wing contained, in the second story, the assembly room, a lobby, and the speaker's chamber; the west wing, on the same floor, formed the council room and a library. In the middle space the supreme court was usually held.—London Mag., Aug., 1761. In 1765, a story was added.—M. C. G., VI: 571.

During the Rev. War it was occupied by British soldiers.—Pattison Letters in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1785), 305. In 1788, it was rebuilt for the use of the Congress of the United States.—M. C. G. (M.S.), IX: 125, 188, 331, 365, 372; XIII: 150. For description after these alterations, see March 26, 1789. On May 15, 1813, the marble columns were set up for the Commissioners of the Hall in the new City (Commons Acts, May 15, 1812), and it was forthwith demolished, some of its stones being used for a footwalk on the south side of Market St. along the Battery.—M. C. G. (M.S.), XXV: 120-21, 180. A portion of the balcony ironwork is now (1916) in use on the porch of the courtyard entrance of the main building of the old Bellevue Hospital group (see Kelly, Hist. Guide, 1912 ed., p. 113), and another portion is in the collections of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 973-74.

The common council appoints a committee to "View the Blockhouse by the Green and it was recommended that it be immediately and conveniently fitted for a Prison."—M. C. G., II: 92. On May 17, 1700, payment of £20 shillings was made to Isaac de Milt "for Work done at the Block house."—Ibid., II: 107. See Peterson & Edwards, op. cit., 192.

Bellomont, having previously sent to the lords of trade the "written Laws of New Yorke passed the last Session of Assembly," now sends them printed, "because M. Parmiter [the naval officer at New York] has made some little marks on the Margin of the Revenue Act, which stands first in the Book of Laws." Parmyter complains of the insufficiency of an act, "which gave the Merchants advantages against the King."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 590.

Bellomont gives evidence to the lords of trade showing, as he states, "that it would be good husbandry to allow £500 or £1,500 a year to a good Judge from England, and £500 or £1,500 a year to a good Attorney General, if peace and good order in a Country are to be valued, and if piracy and outlaw trade are to be effectually suppressed; And lastly if an Improvement of the Revenue to £2,500 a year more than it has ever yielded yet, be arguments worth the King's consideration."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 591.

"Bellomont prevails on Gov. Whipple to "sete and send Thomas Clarke of New Yorke prisoner thither;" and he orders that Clarke be "safely kept prisoner in the Port, because the King of England is weak and insufficient." Clarke is then offered immunity from prosecution on his pledging to surrender all the goods and treasure (valued at about £6,000) which he took to Connecticut.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 595.

A pound is established at Harlem. On Nov. 2, 1704, it was let for one year to John van Bleeke, who was to pay one-third of the receipts for the benefit of the poor.—Harlem Recs., 687.

The common council votes in favour of raising £1,600 in 1700, by taxation or assessment, £1,600 to be used to build the city hall, and £55 to build the ferry-house.—M. C. G., III: 96.

It is learned in England that Capt. Kidd's effects were valued at £200,000.—"Diary of Narcissus Luttrell," in Hist. Mag. (1868), 2d ser., III: 295. See, further, April 16, 1700.

Thomas Story, the Quaker (see July 5), records in his Jour: Dec. 13: "I went to New York, and lodged with Dr. John Rodman; and, the day following I was at the Meeting there, which was indifferent large, though the Testimony of Truth hath seldom any great prevalence in that Place: Yet, at the Conclusion of the Meeting, I appointed another, to be held there the next Day in the Evening, at the House of Mr. John Roberts; where I had been disappointed of my proper Time when last there [see July 5] and my concern remaining in secret till now. This Meeting being large, I had a full and open Time therein, and then was fully and easily: And, intending to go from thence toward East Jersey the next Day, we were block'd up, and detained by an exceedingly hard Frost; but took occasion that night to go see Mr. Rodman's, on the 7th; which was also large and open." He left the city on Dec. 9.—Jour. of the Life of Thomas Story, 243.

The lords of trade make representations to the king regarding the need of a chief-justice and attorney-general for the province, suitable pay being promised; and the right ability will accept the service.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 598-99.

"New York is built most of Brick and Stone, and covered with red and Black Tile, and the Land being high, it gives at a distance a pleasing Aspect to the Spectators. The Inhabitants consist most of English and Dutch and have a considerable Trade with the Indians for Beavers, Otters, Beaver Skins, and other Furs; as also for Bear, Deer and Elk Skins; and are supplied with Venison and Fowl in the Winter and Fish in the Summer by the Indians, which they buy at an easy rate; and having the Country round about them, they are continually furnished with all such provisions, as are needful for the life of Man, not only by the English and Dutch, but likewise by the Proprietors of the Jagged Colonies."

"The Commodities vented from thence are Furs and Skins before mentioned; as likewise Tobacco made within the Colony, as good as it usually made in Maryland. Also Horses, Bed, Pork, Oyl, Pease, Wheat, and the like."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., v. 24:44-45; Glogir Morison, Geography Revised (London, 1700).

A survey of New York harbour is made by Col. W. W. Römer, with the title "A new Mappe of a part of Hutchins or the North River, Raritan River which have there alet [let] in to the Sea by Sandy bouches where the coming in is from Sea to go up to New York North throw the Narrows between Staten Island and Long Island and West up towards Amboyte." It is preserved in the British Museum, and is reproduced in The Crown Collection of Photographs of American Maps, selected and edited by A. B. Hulbert (1964), I. Pl. 1. Romer Skoals were named from this survey, Oct, 1629.

In this year, ten Congregational ministers assembled at Bradford, Conn., and donated books "for the founding of a College" in that colony. The Connecticut legislature, on Oct. 9, 1704, passed "An Act for liberty to erect a Collegiate School," the school was established at Saybrook, July 1706. In 1714, the trustees decided to move the school to New Haven, and, at the first commencement there, on Sept. 12, 1718, the name was changed to "Yale College."—Baldwin, Annals of Yale College, 1701-1831, 10-35.

"the small bays" (city hall), erected in 1663 (see Feb. 6, 1653), was partially demolished.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 977, citing Libr City Grnts, A: 254, 358. See March 14.

About 1700, or later, Etienne de Lancy erected a dwelling-house on the site of the present 115 Broadway.— Cf. date of his marriage, Jan. 1694, to Anne van Corlandt (E. F. De Lancy, in Schraier's Hist. of Westchester Co., 1: 864;) Libr deeds, XXI: 125 (New York); M. C. C., II: 163; ibid., III: 44. It became, by devise, the property of John Peter de Lancy, in 1741.—Libr Wills, XIV: 91 (New York). In 1754, it became a tavern, called the Province Arms, or City Tavern. See April 11, 1754; June 10, 1754; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 977.

Printed in the year 1700, this is a facsimile of a small 40-page volume of 52 pages, bearing the long title Gospel Order Received, Being an Answer to a Book lately set forth by the Reverend Mr. Increase Mather, President of Harvard College, Esq. entitled, The Order of the Gospel, &c. Dedicated to the Churches of Christ in New-England. By sundry Ministers of the Gospel in England. A copy is preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library; it is not mentioned by Evans in his Am. Bibliography. As in the case of so earlier book of religious controversy (New England's Spirit of Persecution Transmitted to Pennsylvania), with similar imprint, a careful comparison of text and press-works, however, shows that Brander was the printer. Such a view is conclusively made by the declaration of Bartholomew Green, the Boston printer of that day (who had declined to publish it himself, because it was a work of controversy, and he had no license from the governor of Mass. Bay to do so), that it was "printed at New York."—See Green's handbill, reproduced by Thomas in Hist. of Printing (1816), II: 458. Thomas found special interest in this item because, as he stated (p. 91), it was, with the exception of the laws, "the only book printed in New York as early as 1700, which I have seen, that contains more than twenty pages." We know one of which he was mistaken. Cf. Truth Advanced, published by Bradford in 1644 (see p. 91). For the earliest product of Bradford's press, see April 10, 1651.

Cane-seated chairs were first used in New York about this year. —See "Hist. of the Domestic Affairs of the Inhabitants of N. Y." (Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 500. For an authoritative account of early colonial furniture, see Loundock, Colonial Furniture in Am., 139-40.

The names of many of the common articles of dry-goods of this period have a strange sound to-day, as, for example: blue and red penzatone, hale-tyle, sarge, frye, caruy, druggets, mopingcel, camarchce, canting, calks, glare, Hollands, Otemgens, fauster, epps, silver-handled knives, a Dutch Bible, with silver, and a chair, etc. The inventory included also a full variety of furniture.—Ibid., 516. See also Abstracts of Wills (1842), 314, 324, 355. Valentine also describes, under this date, the style of life of William Smith, giving an inventory of his household goods (presumably in New York), and the stock on his Long Island farm. These included "a coach with cushions and harness."—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 516-17.

Bellomont informs the lords of trade that the collector reports that "this has been the worst year that ever was known in New York for the Revenue by reason of the great scarcity of Sugar, Rum and Modasses at Barbadoes, and the other Islands and of Wines at the Madera's; for from those Articles the Customs of New York do chiefly arise."—N. Y. Col. Des., IV: 600. See Dec. 25, 1701.

The common council orders "that the Mayor Alderman D: Peyster Alderman D: Riemer M[ss] Peter Willenius and Mr Brasier Be a Committee of this board for the Managing & Supervising the building of the New City Hall for the publick Service of this City (see summary for Oct. 16, 1699) who are hereby Empowred to treat with Any person or persons who will undertake Either by the Great or by the day the building and finishing of the said Structure at such Reasonable and Easy Terms as may be most beneficial and Profitable for the Said City. and to the End that all things and Materials Needfull for the said Work may be duly Satisfied and paid to such as are Employed therein"
Ordered that the Mayor doe Issue his Warrants from time to time as there shall be Occasion on the Treasurer of the said City for the payment of the Respective sums which Shall become due for ye Service aforesaid. And that A true and distinct Account of the Materialls and several Payments be kept by the said Committee. —M. C. C. II: 97.

The city treasurer is ordered to pay Alderman Schuyler six shillings "for Mending the Wall of the little bridge" (see Oct. 12, 1695).—M. C. C., II: 97. The "little bridge" was apparently the name given to the plank covering over the outlet of the ditch or sewer (see Ref., III: 279) at the foot of the Dock. On April 21, 1700 (q.v.), it is mentioned as being "by the house of Capt Cornelius D Peyster,"—that is, near the corner of Water and Broad Sts. (see Feb. 19, 1700). The common council, on March 23, 1705 (q.v.), ordered that stairs be built "in the Dock on each Side of the little bridge." Gradually the dock was filled in on both sides of the little bridge to a point considerably beyond the outlet of the sewer, leaving a stagnant slip (see May 4 and June 14, 1688), which became a public nuisance. On Aug. 20, 1705 (q.v.), the common council ordered that this space be filled in and the sewer extended to the "entering of the dock" (that is, even with the wall or wharf), and it was ordered that the bridge itself be replaced with boards "A little higher than the Street." This spot was referred to as the "little bridge" as late as Nov. 11, 1713 (q.v.). On June 18, 1717 (q.v.), the city council ordered, among other repairs, to the dock and bridge, the extension of the sewer through the dock into the opeo river, and the erection over it (as a protection) of "A Good and substantial Bridge from the Market house fronting the Dock to the Dock's mouth." This bridge, usually referred to as the "Long Bridge," is shown in the Burgis View (Pl. 25, Vol. I). On Sept. 22, 1773 (q.v.), the common council ordered that 20 feet of the long bridge south of the exchange he arched, and the remainder boarded and "a Number of Posts ... fixed at such places near the said Bridge ... sufficient to prevent Carts from passing over & injuring the same." —Ibid., VIII: 445. See 1790.

The common council appoints a committee "to View the place on which Jasper Nesseppent intends to build a Mill at Kings Bridge and make Report to this Board whether the Erecting the said Mill will hinder the passage of Boats & Sheep Round this Island."—M. C. C., II: 97. See Nov. 24, 1693. For the committee's report, see Feb. 19. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961.

Lenoine d'Iberville takes possession of the Mississippi River for France, planting his colony at Poverty Point. He had entered the river on March 2, 1699. His colony did not thrive. French misadventures. Examin year, occupied various points on the river. In 1701, Iberville was in command of the French settlements in Louisiana. See July 9.

In the general accounts of the province is a payment of £6:10 "for making coats for the Bagmen," and one of £13:10 for "making the Burning for the Bagmen." On Oct. 15, there was another of £19, for sundries in the fort and Custom House Baggage; also payments "for sailors" and for "painting" of this barge.—Entered in Conversanye, Liber XXX (register's office, New York). The expenses of Oct. 15 are detailed in the Council Minutes, which refer to warrants issued to pay Francis Vincent for sail, Cornelius Lodge for paint, John Latham for carpenter work, Jean le Chevalier for earing work, John Coolley for blacksmith work, and John Owen for joiner's work—all on the custom-house barge; while Robert Crennell is paid for rum for the "pinnacle" workmen.—Cal. Counc. Min., 190-51. There was another payment April 20, 1701, "for charting for the barge crew."—Conversanye, op. cit. See also Nov. 10, 1702.

"At a Meeting of the Justices & Vestry men of the said City on Wednesday ye 24th Jan. 1699," a committee is appointed "to Enquire for a Convenient house to serve this City for a house of Correction, see Ref., III: 279."

At a Meeting of the Justices & Vestry men of the said City on Wednesday ye 24th Jan. 1699," a committee is appointed "to Enquire for a Convenient house to serve this City for a house of Correction, see Ref., III: 279."

In a petition to the common council, Cornelius de Peyster, John Jones, Francis Van Cortlandt, and Francis Vincent state: "That there is a Certain Place within this City nigh the Little Bridge which contrary to the design in laying out the said slip is become very nauseous & a Cotten receptacle of dung & filth to the annoyance & infection of the inhabitants & whereby the dock of this City is filled with a great deal of mud to the prejudice of this City." They therefore "Pray that the said Place may be filled up by the City & made even with the Street & a Gutter & grates laid under it for the conveying of the Water thro' that comes down the great Street."—From the original petition in "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room. Peyster's house, which he had built in 1699, "to be ye ornament of ye sayde City" (see Pl. 25, Vol. I, and description, 1: 246), stood at the foot of Broad St. facing the dock (Water St.), while Van Cortlandt's house stood on the opposite corner of Broad and Water Sts.; that is, it was the next house east, with Broad St. separating them (cf. Dec. 10, 1693). The council appointed a committee, on Nov. 10, 1695, to decide whether the Dockage is farmed for and take Care that the farmers doe forthwith performe the Conditions they are Obliged to. — "M. C. C., II: 100. Apparently, favourable action was not taken until Aug. 20, 1709 (q.v.)." The common council orders "that the sessions of the Mayor Courte & Common Council be held for the City at the house of Gabriel Tompson in the single [Cingel] Street [Wall St.] And that the Bell be hung there."—M. C. C., II: 99. At the same house "the Court of Common Council" met, on Dec. 27, following, to lease the ferry.—Ibid., II: 115. This was while the new city hall was under construction. Tompson was paid for rental on Oct. 13, 1701.—Ibid., II: 115.

The house of Gabriel Thompson was a tavern at the sign of the White Lion, at the north-west corner of William and Wall Sts.—Liber Deeds, XXX: 184 (New York). Here Thompson kept his inn until his death in 1720.—See Nov. 19, 1720. The Bank of America now occupies the site. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981; Pl. 174, Vol. III. Thompson had evidently been a tavern-keeper since 1683, and perhaps earlier.—See March 15, 1684.

"The Committee Appointed to View the place Whereas Jasper Nesseppent Intendeth to Build a Mill with a Person of the Said City is now in possession of it, to take out of the way the Stones and Rocks On the Other Side thereof that the same may not hinder the Passage of Boats and Canows and when Any is to pass att their Reasonable Request he is [to] shut this Slues
The petition of John Marsh was read praying the Grant of the Mill to be built att Kings bridge be made to him and Jasper Nessgpe he the said Marsh being the first Projector thereof."—M. C. C., II: 98. See, further, Jan. 25, 1701.

Bellomont informs the lords of trade that the soldiers at New York &c. are "in Rags."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 612. See also, June, 1700.

Mar. Merchants of New York petition the king, accusing Bellomont of being the cause of the "decey of Trade," etc. They ask the king to bring back the province "to its former manner of Administracion uncorrected with the Governor of any other place, to rectify its Inhabitants in their pristine peace, safety & prosperity."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 624. Bellomont wrote to the lords of trade on Oct. 17, opposing their proposal to have the provinces of New York and Massachusetts Bay put under different governors. He also stated that he had "no advances to make to the merchants" unless it could be proved that he had governed "arbitrarily & oppress'd them in their trade, contrary to law," etc.—Ibid., IV: 725.

11 The merchants of London make accusations against Bellomont, the Leitelengy in New York, and various acts of an extra-judicial character.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 620-23. On Oct. 17, Bellomont wrote to the lords of trade regarding reference to these accusations, which he treated as "trash."—Ibid., IV: 725-26.

12 A leaflet is issued, on the complaint of Mrs. Davis, against John Rodman for intending to pull down a party wall between her house and the old city hall which he bought on Aug. 17, 1699.—Cal. C. M. N. Y., 1: 1691; also see May 25, and Aug. 17, 1699; May 9, 1700; Feb. 11, 1701.

We find various later references to the altered condition and ownership of the building. Du Simiatre wrote, about 1770: "Environ 1694 la ville maison de ville estoit de pierre a l'endroit ou est present Brinkerhoff & vanwyck le coin de la petite rue qui va dans Bayard Street, derriere il y avoit une petite etection en forme de colline."—From vol. lettered "Papers relating to N. England, New York," etc., formerly belonging to Du Simiatre, now in Ridgeway Branch of the Library Co. of Philadelphia.

Again, in a report to the common council by the corporation counsel and the street commissioner, on Nov. 14, 1808, regarding title to certain lands in Wall St., it was stated that "the first Building occupied as a House by the City was situated in Pearl Street at the corner of Coenties (Countees) lane opposite Coenties Slip at present in part owned by Mr. Abraham Brinkerbough, the premises being divided after it was sold into two dwellings."—M. C. C. (M5), XII: 249.

As late as 1837 it was observed that "In the vaults and cellars of the buildings of the Brinkerhoffs, its [the first city hall's] ruins may yet be easily traced."—Fay, Views in New York, 13. And in 1833, likewise, it was said that the first building used as a jail and court-house in New York "was the house of A. Brinkerhoff, corner of Dock and Coenties streets, the dangerous [of which] are still to be seen in the cellar."—T. R. De Forest, Olden Time in New York, 38. The author examined the cellar in 1909, when some of the masonry, especially in the walls on the south side, appeared to date from the period of its erection.

29 The common council appoints a committee "to Enquire for A Convenient house to make A Powder house till such one [time] as the City Can Provide one."—M. C. C., II: 101. On April 9, the committee was given power to hire a building and fit it as a powder-house.—Ibid., II: 102. See further April 13.

The previous repository for powder had been Point Hollandia, a basement of the wall (see March 12, and Aug. 5, 1698). The several bastions had been demolished or were undergoing demolition (see Sept. 4, 1699), making a new repository necessary.

Apr. Bellomont examines the registers of all the vessels in the three provinces within his government, and finds that Boston has 25 ships of between 100 and 500 tons, and 39 ships of under 100 tons burden; New-Hampshire, 13 ketches, 22 briggantes, and 8 sloops. New Hampshire has 11 ships of good burden, 5 brigantes, 4 ketches, and 4 sloops. He reported on Nov. 28, 1700: "I believe one may venture to say there are more good vessels belonging to the town of Boston than to all Scotland and Ireland, unless one should reckon the small craft such as herring boats."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 790, 791. Cf. July 7, 1698.

Abraham de Peyster conveys to John Ellison "All that piece and parcel of ground Sciraut lying and being within the dock was ... Adjoining and fronting to the bridge by the Custom house [Moore St.] at the south end of the warehouses of him the said Coll Abraham D'Peyster ... contiguous and adjoining thereto which ... is in breadth fronting the aforesaid bridge twenty-nine foot six inches and in the rear 97 4" breadth and is in depth at ye North End by the warehouse aforesaid sixteen foot four inches and at ye south end fronting the wharfe or Street which faces the great dock of ye said City & which leads to the little bridge [see Jan. 16, 1700] by the house of Capt Cornelius D'Peyster sixteen foot. ... Liber Deeds, XXIII: 142-44 (New York). For location of the custom-house bridge, the little bridge, etc., see diagram under year 1700.

The owners of Indian and negro slaves have neglected to restrain them "from Associating together on the holy Sabbath in time of Divine Service to the Great Scandal of the Christian Profession and Religion" of the New York merchants. The common council orders that if more than three congregate such slaves are to be punished as the law directs.—M. C. C., II: 102-3.

The common council revives the order that persons who neglect or refuse to pave before their houses shall be fined.—M. C. C., III: 779. See also Feb. 11, 1699.

The corner lot on the south-east corner of Broad and Pearl Sts., later the site of Fraunces Tavern, is conveyed by "Coll Stephens Von Cortlandt" and "Getterys," his wife, to their 100-in-law, Stephen de Lancey. It is thus described: "All that certain corner lot or part of ground lying and being in the dock ward of the city of New York. ... bounded on the north by the dock street on the east by the house and ground of Philip French on the south by the ground of Samuell Bayard and on the west by ye said Broad Street."—Liber Deeds, XXIII: 147-49 (New York). Stephen, or Ettiene, de Lancey, built a large brick house on this lot at some time subsequent to April 14, 1719 (p. 9), when he petitioned for a small piece of ground on the corner of Broad and Dock Sts., and stated that he was "now going to build" upon his lot. Before July 25, 1716 (p. 3), Col. Joseph Robinson, one of the firm of De Lancey, Robinson & Co. was occupying the house as a residence, remaining until his death, Mar. 16, 1772.—N. Y. Merc., May 28, 1759. On May 28, 1760, the firm of De Lancey, Robinson & Co. gave notice that they had "removed their Store to the House wherein the late Col. Joseph Robinson lived being the Corner House next the Royal Exchange."—Ibid., May 28, 1760. By a conveyance dated 1762, Oliver de Lancey, Beverly Robinson, and James Parker, the heirs of Stephen de Lancey, sold this house and lot to Samuel Fraunces.—Liber Deeds, XXXVI: 62 (New York). Here Fraunces opened the famous Queen's Head Tavern, probably before April 19, 1762, by which time John Jones had taken over the Mansion's Arms on Broadway, formerly kept by Fraunces.—N. Y. Merc., Apr. 19, 1762.

The first notice, however, of Fraunces's occupancy of the house was contained in an advertisement of July 26, 1762 (p. 9). See also Landmark Map Rel. Key, III: 978. For the earliest history of this site, see Castello Plan, I: 134-15.

The conveyance of April 11 to Stephen de Lancey came just after his marriage, on Jan. 23, to Anne, the daughter of Stephen van Cortlandt. It was, therefore, a conveyance from his father-in-law and mother-in-law.—See 1700.

Ettiene (Stephen) de Lancey arrived in New York on March 20, 1691, when he was elected alderman in 1695. The city is indebted to him and John Moore for its first fire-engines.—See May 6, 1711.

The common council orders "that the bridge be Run Over 13 to the Wharfe Cross the Dock And that the Dock on the West side of the Bridge be filled up Provided it be no Charge to the City."—M. C. C., II: 105. The bridge called the "Grey Bridge," and also the "Custom House Bridge," is shown on the views and maps of the city made after the Dutch period (see Pls. 106 et seq., Vol. I). It was built in 1659, and extended in 1661. Landmark Map Rel. Key, III: 925. On the Labadist View of 1679-86 (Pl. 17, Vol. I), it appears for the last time on a view. The above order of
The "Market house at the bridge" is leased by the city to May Schuyler, De Riemer, and Jellicoe for £1 per annum.—M. C. C., II: 107. Cf. "Market-house at Custom house bridge," and "Market-house by the bridge" in M. C. C., VIII: 348 (Index). See also Oct. 5, 1704, March 23, 1705, Jan. 3, 1706, and July 28, 1706, for Liberty to Build a Mill at Cophee was read and granted.—M. C. C., II: 107. "Cophee" here means Capekie, the rocks just off the Battery.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965. No mill appears of record as having been erected there, however. For Marsh's various mills, see Feb. 19 and Sept. 19, 1709; Feb. 11, 1710, Sept. 4, 1712.

Dirck Vanclandenburgh submits his account "for building the new house in Fort William Henry"—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 275. He was paid £100 on Aug. 3 (q. v.), "for building his Majesties fort."—Corryvrecky, Liber XXX, unnumbered page 30. Apparently both these items refer to the addition that had been made to the governor's house. This house was reported in need of repair, July 5, 1694.—Cal. Coun. Min., 97. On June 28, 1695 (q. v.), an addition to the governor's "lodgings" was ordered; and on June 9, 1698 (q. v.), the "buildings in the Fort" were ordered to be finished.

Three companies of Sir Charles Hare's [Harra's] regiment are to be sent from Guernsey to New York, for 100 dollars, 1696, and 1698—Burgis View, of 1718 (Pl. 25, Vol. 1), shows the dock west of the custom-house bridge entirely filled in. Regarding the proposed market-house, see Oct. 16, 1699. See also 1700, Addenda.

The common council orders "that A Powder house be forthwith built within this City." The mayor proposes to build one at his own expense, 90 by 24 ft. and storey, high, enclosed, and fenced; his proposal is accepted and it is ordered that he "have ye' Stones left of the Bastians to build ye' Same." He is to have the use of it for 31 years, to charge 25 sh. for each barrel stored there and the fines imposed for keeping in each private house over 50 pounds' worth. The city council allowed the mayor Provost to decide not to undertake the building, and on Nov. 11 following, by public notice, he sought proposals, on terms similar to the former ones (including the use of "the stones which are not used for building the City Hall"), for the construction of a powder-house before May 1, 1701.—Ibid., II: 134. No such structure appears to have been built until the governor took up the matter with his council the next year. See May 28, 1702.

New Conditions for Farming ye' Dock & Slips of ye' City of New York" are framed by the common council.—M. C. C., II: 104-5. See Sept. 28, 1694, and the following year. The foolishness of the dock during the term of Thomas Clarck as dock-master had been a matter of concern to the common council several times.—Ibid., II: 80, 97, 100, 101-2. It is, therefore, now stipulated that the new lessee "Shall att his own proper Cost and charge well and Sufficiently Clean the said Dock & Slip in the Dock of all the Mud & filth therein Soe deep as till they finde A sandy Bottom and . . . Keep the same Clean." He is, furthermore, to keep the wharves enclosing the dock in good repair to the expiration of his lease.

Towards the Cleaning" the lessee is to receive the next six quarters from the custom-house, and, if he is "to charge for the same," six sh. for every 250 tons (q. v.), which was equivalent to "a tax of £5 per quarter." The dock was divided into parts by wooden girders, and the lessee was paid for cleaning and repairing each. See Cal. Coun. Min., 147 (which gives July 25, as the day of his return). He left Boston July 17.—Thomas, Hist. of Printing in Am. (1810), II: 466, citing the printer Green's statement.

A conference committee of the two houses of the legislature is appointed to meet in the afternoon "at the house of Mr. Davies."—Jour. Leg. Coun., 145. This refers to the tavern adjoining the old Stadt Herbergh on Pearl St., granted to Gov. Lovelace before Jan. 25, 1697 (q. v.), and which was referred to, in 1699, as "The King's House now in the tenure of Joseph Davids."—See plate description, I: 228. The tavern was also used as a temporary city hall from 1698 to 1700 to which we may refer "Joseph Davids" was allowed a rental of £5 for that year.—M. C. C., II: 60. On Feb. 5, 1701, "Ruth Davies Widower," having lost a warrant dated Oct. 16, 1699, for one-half year's rent for the "Court Room Candles &c," amounting to 40s., was given another to take its place.—Ibid., II: 217. In 1703, the tavern was referred to as the "house of William Davis."—Ibid., II: 239.

The general assembly passes "An act against Jesuits & popish priests." The act recites that Roman Catholic missionaries have for some time resided in the remote parts of this province and adjacent colonies, and have stirred up the Indians to sedition. The law therefore requires that "all and every Jesuit and Seminary Freint missionary or other Spiritual or Ecclesiastical person made or ordained by any Authority power or Jurisdiction derived Challenged or p'tended from the Pope or See of Rome residing with in this province or any part thereof shall depart from and out of the Same at or before the first day of November next in this present year seventeenth hundred." The penalty for failure to obey was personal imprisonment, in the case of priests, or £50, in case of nonpriests, and the court was death, in case of itolyo. Lesser penalties were prescribed for persons who should knowingly conceal and succor any of the Roman Catholic clergy.—Cal. Laws N. Y., 1: 428; Eccles. Hist., II: 1768-70. "This represented the culmination of the anti-Catholic feeling of both parties. Promptness and decision were the aims of both James as both byd and king — . . . The Roman Catholic Church was extinct in New York from 1700 until the close of the 29 At a conference between Bellomont and sachems of the Five Nations at Albany, Bellomont says: "I wish you would send two or three Sachems some out of each Nation to be kept at School at New York, where I desire to have them taught to write and read both English and Indian, and they shall be well clothed and dyedet at the King's charge and after three or four years that they are perfect in their writing & reading they shall return home to you and other bayes shall come in their places."

—N. Y. Col. Deec. IV: 73. The sachems replied the next day, "that is a matter that relates to our wives, who are the sole disposers of their children while they are under age."—Ibid., IV: 738.

9 Nicholas Burger agree to release to John Rodman, in fee simple, a piece of ground "in the Rear of the late City Hall," which was granted to him on June 23, 1690. The consideration was that the city pay Burger £15.—M. C. C., II: 110.

9 A committee of the common council is appointed to make an exchange of "some land lying near Inclamberg."—M. C. C., II: 110. This is the first mention of this place in the Minutes. It is variously spelled: Inclam Bergh, Inclamberg, Inclambehr, Inklamberg.—See Index to the printed Minutes. Valentine defines it as "Fire beacon hill, a name of Dutch origin, and of very ancient date," from which he concludes it "would seem to denote a signal post serving as a guide to the people of New Amsterdam the approach of savage foes . . ." This hill was "situated near the present Thirty-sixth street and Fourth avenue; it was formerly a part of the common lands of the city, and was sold by the corporation in 1806, for sixty-two thousand dollars; the property embraced thirty-two acres of land."—Man. Com. Curr. (1855), 468. See also Landmark Map Rep. Key, III: 966.

19 A petition from John Marsh is read in the common council, praying leave "to build a Mill on flowing Island Near Hell Gate." It is ordered "that he have Liberty to build the said Mill on the said Island Provided the same belong to the City."—M. C. C., II: 112. John Marsh subsequently built his mill at Flushing Island, in the East River, at Hell Gate, and it thereafter became known as Mill Rock. The island was fortified by the erection of a blockhouse upon it in 1814. This is shown on Pl. 82-B-a, Vol. III, and described, III: 554. Mill Rock has also been variously known as "Gibbon's" and "Leland's" Island.—Liber Deed, MDCCCXLIV: 27-70 (New York).

23 The rector of Trinity Church informs the vestry "that his Excel the Govr did send him for last night & desire him to call together the vestry thereunto the eighteenth day of this instant June, he have Liberty to set benches in the Isles of the Church for the Conveniency of the Soldiers there being no Chaplin at present to the garrison." Granted, provided "the Church Wardens be Consulted in the ordering & placing of said Benches."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

The vestry makes an agreement with John Ellis, a joiner, to build "a handsome gallery in the West end of the Church from the South door to the North according to a Draft thereof made by Mr. Erics;" also to "build the pews therein, to make a pair of stairs in the Steeple . . . to make the door from the Bellfrie into the Gallery & to finish this work against April or May next."—Ibid.

The common council orders that the mayor's warrant be issued to Michael Hawdon for "Such sum of Money as was Expended in liquors in Making his Majesties forces drank on their Arrival bere from England."—M. C. C., II: 113. It does not appear that the warrant took effect in this time, however, and on Feb. 1, 1709, Hawdon was paid £419 "for Strong Liquors delivered to several soldiers on their Arrival bere from England . . . in the year 1700."—Ibid., II: 760. See Dec. 1, 1702.

The common council appoints Isaac de Riemer mayor.—M. C. C., II: 116. The mayor was not sworn in until Oct. 14, 1703. For a brief sketch of his life see Man. Com. Curr. (1855), 597; Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 54.

Alderman Evert Beyvanke succeeds Isaac de Riemer (see Sept. 26, 1699) as treasurer of the city.—M. C. C., II: 117. Beyvanke was replaced by Nicholas Roosevelt on Sept. 29, 1701 (9 1/2) he refused to render an accounting for his term of office (see Nov. 4, 1702).

An account is due the estate of Peter de la Noy, deceased, for lumber for the house (probably the powder magazine) above the gate.—Cal. Hist. MSS, Eng., 278. See also June 1, 1688.

The following declaration of loyalty to the crown is made by members of the common council: "Whereas there has been a horrid and Detestable Conspiracy . . . and Caviled on by Papists and Other Wicked and Trayterous Persons for Assassinating his Majesties Royall person in Order to Encourage an Invasion from France to Subvert our Religion Laws and Liberties, Whoe Whose Names are hereunder written doe heartily sincerely and solemnly Protest Testifie and Declare that his present Majesty King William in Rightfull and Lawfull King of these Realms and West doe Mutually promise and Engage to Stand by and Assist Each to the utmost of Our power in the Support and Defence of his Majesties Most Sacred person & Government Against the Late King James the pretended Prince of Wales and all their Adherents, and in Case his Excellency Come to any Violent or unviewly death which God forbid wee doe hereby freely and Unanimously Oblige Our Selves Mutually to Associate and Stand by Each other in Revenging the same upon his Enemies and their Adherents and in Supporting and Defending the Succession of the Crown Made to the Commonwealth by the late King William and Queen Mary Entituled An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subjects and Settling the Succession of the Crown. Dated at New York the fourteenth day of October in the twelfth year of his Majesties Reign Anno Dom. 1700. Members are signed by the name of J D Peyster."—From the original document, in metal file lettered "Fixed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room. After Barclay's plot of 1696 (Macaulay, Hist. of England, VIII: 309-15), "associations" were formed in England and her plantations, subscribed to by officials and prominent inhabitants and called "Thadieu's Associations Oath Rolls (London, 1721); also May 21, 1696.

About this date, William Penn suggested to Bellomont that "It would be much for the dispatch for trade and business, if a mint for small silver to the value of 6d were allowed in the City of New York for prevention of clipping and filing as well as waruing." (Nothing ever came of this proposal.) He also suggests that there be a common standard of value for all the northern colonies.—N. Y. Col. Deec. IV: 757.

In the expense accounts of the province is an item for carpenter work done in the custom-house.—Conveyances, Liber XX.

Warrants are issued to various workmen and tradesmen for materials and labour in making the custom-house barge.—Col. Curr. Min., 149-50. See March 16, 1699.

Bellomont writes to the lords of trade of the difficulty he has in borrowing money to pay for "subsisting the soldiers," saying "While merchants and able men here have let me have money, I should have been undone."—N. Y. Col. Deec. IV: 730. See also Dally, Settlement of the Jews in No. Am., 28.

As Augustine Graham (see Jan. 19, 1691) is found to be "a man not to be depended upon," Peter Corticall (Corey) is appointed surveyor of the province.—Col. Curr. Min., 150. Cadwalader Colton was the next to hold this office (see April 21, 1720). The governor appoints Samuel Clowes a surveyor, he having studied many years under John Flamstead, his majesty's mathematician in England.—Cal. Hist. MSS, Eng., 277. He was sworn in next day.—Col. Curr. Min., 150.

The provincial council issues a warrant to pay Francis Chappell for rent of a committee-room at his tavern.—Col. Curr. Min., 150.

The common council orders that the mayor appoint "A Constable Watch to Consist of A Constable and twelve able men to be the Watch of this City to take Care to Keep and Preserve the peace: And that the Constable and each of his respective Ward do take their Turnes and that the High Constable take Care the said Watch be duly set and kept And that the Mayor Provide fire wood for the same."—M. C. C., II: 120. No watch was established for the summer season until 1714. Five months of service in the winter, from about Nov. 1 to April 1, were regularly arranged for.—Ibid., II: 207, 243, 281, 364, 454.

Abraham Gouveneur is appointed recorder of the city by Gov. Bellomont, and his commission entered on the minutes.—M. C. C., II: 119. The appointee was a prominent Leidseidian, and was elected clerk at the time of the rebellion in 1659.—See Oct. 7, 1689.
The iconography of Manhattan island

In Cal. Conc. Min., 150, Gouverneur is spoken of as being appointed Oct. 26, 1700, recorder "vice Graham illegally acting as such." James Graham is mentioned, who had been appointed by Fletcher as an anti-Leislerian (see Sept. 1, 1692), and, therefore, was not in Bellomont's favour.—See also Sept. 1, and Nov. 2, 1699.

The records from Ireland, where Bellomont describes as a "parcel of the vilest fellows that ever wore the King's livery, the very scum of the army in Ireland," arrive at New York, and mutiny, demanding "full sterling pay, and sea pay during their voyage," is not suppresssed. The burgage lots are offered for sale without arms and a few at a time. When he has 500, he arms them and then the soldiers submit. He reports to the Lords of Trade that "all the Townsmen and Merchants of all parties have been very unanimous this day in showing their zeal to suppress the mutiny."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 570. A court-martial condemned four of the mutineers and two were shot.—Ibid., IV: 781.

A deed of this date indicates the location of the early synagogue. It is a conveyance from Jacob "Melyen" of Boston to Katharine Kerbyly, widow, of "a house and lot on the north side of the street, bounded south by hill street [66.8 ft.], west [116.6 ft.], and north [78 ft.], by the house and ground of David Provost, Esq., and Lawrence Van Hoole, east [97.4 ft.] by the house and ground of John Harpending, now commonly known by the name of the Jews' Synagogue."—Liber Deeds, XXII: 230; "Points in . . . N. Y. Jewish Hist." by Dyer, in Publications, Am. Ass. for the Advancement of Sci., III: 49. See also Dec. 1729-1730; Castello Plan, in Vol. II. From this deed it appears that "Harpending's lot was on the north side of Mill street and that the Melyn lot joined it on the west. The Harpending lot was 28 feet front, and Melyn's lot . . . was 76.6 feet." Dyer, op. cit., III: 51; Dyer locates this first Jewish synagogue of North America, and probably of the Western Hemisphere, at No. 8 So. William St.—Ibid., III: 520. Miss Jennie F. Macarthy, historical expert of the Title Guarantee and Trust Co., traces its location by title search to No. 16 So. William St. This was the first synagogue of the Congregation Shearith-Israel.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 929.

William Bradford is displaced as government printer.—Cal. Conc. Min., 150. His name appears again on official publications in January, 1701.—Bail. New Yb. Library (1903), 61. He continued to be public printer thereafter until succeeded by Zenger in 1737.—See June 15, 1737.

The militia of the province of New York numbers 5,182 men, of whom the city and county of New York supply 684. For master-rolls of the officers, see N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 807-11.

The new city hall on Wall St. is in process of construction, the common council orders "That for the future this Court of Common Council doe sit at the City Hall the last saturday in every month in order to hear any publick business that may be brought before them."—M. C. C., II: 122. This reference probably means that meetings of the common council are to be held only once a month, not weekly. (See Feb. 1, 1700, which refers to the mayor's court, however, as the sessions of the common council were not always held on Saturdays. It should also be observed that the tavern or other place where the common council met, while the new city hall was being constructed, received the title "City Hall" in the Minutes. The occupation of the new hall began late in 1703 or early in 1704.—See summary, Oct. 16, 1699.

The common council orders that "the Mayor Provide firewood for Bonfires" on Nov. 4 and 5, the former date "being the birth day of our sovereign Lord King William" and the latter being "the thanksgiving day."—M. C. C., II: 122.

The first record in these Minutes of the bonfire being used to celebrate these other stated events. There are, however, earlier references to bonfires, one, on May 6, 1692, being a payment for wood for a bonfire, and the other, on Jan. 16, 1695, for "fire wood Cost James Barrell & Cuthbert Beekman £1 10s. for making A Bonfire."—Ibid., I: 375, 374. After 1700, annual celebrations became more and more a feature of the city's life, on the birthday anniversary of the English sovereign, the accession to the throne, the coronation, and the discovery of the "Gunpowder Treason plan" by the government for other events. The place where the bonfire was held is almost invariably referred to as "the usual place." The exceptions are as follows: On Aug. 18, 1714, it was mentioned as "the Green before the Fort." On Feb. 6, 1714, it was "the usual place in this City before the Fort." On Oct. 20, 1719, the celebration of the king's coronation, evidently without a bonfire, was at the house of "Mr. Esquire Post Widdow;" from 1724 to 1729, inclusive, the bonfire was at "the usual Publick Place;" on July 16, 1745, it was "without Spring Garden;" and on Oct. 5, 1774, it was "in the Common Place in the Works House."—See under these dates; also Nov. 4, 1694; March 17, 1723; Feb. 6, 1703.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for the Encouraging the brewing of Beer and making of Malt within this province." The act states that this industry has been discouraged by "the great Quantity of Malt duty, a tax upon the beer hogs, and the frequent and continued efforts of the owners of malt to prevent this an important duty of nine shillings per barrel of beer and one shilling per bushel of malt is imposed."—Cal. Laws N. Y., II: 439.

It is ordered by the common council that three parcels of land sold to the debtors due for the new city hall and ferry-house, and to meet other public charges. One parcel is near William Beckman's & Mr. Sydeneham's land at the "Bowery;" another lies on the north side of Tennis Iles; and the third is near Henry Cordaz's, "by Incloudberg."—M. C. C., III: 123, 124, 128.

At a town meeting in Harlem two superintendents of highways are chosen.—Harlem Rest., (MS.), 648.

The governor's council orders that barracks be erected outside the fort.—Cal. Conc. Min., 151. On Nov. 27, it was ordered that beddin' be provided for the soldiers.—Ibid. It is probable that the governor chooses the fort, and not the "recruits from Ireland" who arrived on Oct. 28 (q.v.), and whom he described as "the vilest fellows that ever wore the King's livery."

Capt. Benjamin Faneuil sells oak plank, lathe, etc., to the city for use in the new city hall. His account for £31.51. was paid Nov. 21, 1707.—M. C. C., III: 339.

In the city's general account is a payment (no day or amount given) for building "his Maji[esty's] Ship fortune," and, on Nov. 27, a payment of £6.6 for Rigging &c. for the ship fortune."—Entered in Conveyances, Liber XXX (register's office, New York).

In a letter to the lords of trade, Bellomont reviews the case against the mutineers of whom he wrote on Oct. 28 (q.v.). His leader, Corporal Morris, and one Robert Cotterell, "an Ensign in the late King James's Popish Army in Ireland," have been shot for the mutiny. He reports that "some of the lawyers here had put it in their heads that in time of peace it was against the law of England to exercise martial law," also that he told the mutineers that they knew very well that the lawyers here "broke English laws every day, and were disaffected to the present Government of England and therefore they ought not to give credit to them."

Bellomont accuses Attorney-General Graham of trickery, falsehood, and "doing no manner of service in his post for more than a year."

He writes regarding soldiers' pay, their organization, discipline, and officers; and of the need of parliament's breaking all of Fletcher's grants—particularly to facilitate the making of tar and cutting of timber for the British government. He has made contracts to sell tar at 6 shillings per barrel, which would make him £15,000 a year. He writes to the Board of Trade that he will sell the fortune for £15,000 a year. He sends a list of the militia of the province. (This is published in Man. Conc. Coun., 1871, 475-80.) He explains the promising character of the province as a wine-growing country, and otherwise productive.

He reports on the comparative number of vessels in the three provinces under his jurisdiction (see April, 1700); but is unable to do so in regard to imports and exports. "Colonnell Courtland tells me there was this last year imported at 23, p' Cents (which is the duty on English goods) here to New York at the value of £1500, the said duty having amounted to £1200 this money. Boston merchants "computed that Boston had four times the trade of New York, and New York four times the trade of New Hampshire; but I afterwards examined the entries and clearing of all the three Custom Houses and found that the trade of New York was almost as much as that of Boston, and the trade of New Hampshire (except for lumber and about 1500 quintals of fish) not the tenth part of New York, from the 25th of December .98 (1698) to the 25th of December .99 (1699)."

He blames Fletcher's extravagant grants of land for the backw- ardness in trade of the province, and says, that he and his friends would have been there for want of land that several families within my own knowledge and observation are remov'd to the new country (a name they give to Pennsylvania and the Jerseys); for, to use Mr. Graham's expression to me and that often repeated too, what man will be Bellomont informs the lords of trade that "it appears plainly the [Dongan] Charter of New York is not a legal Charter, for the original I have lately seen; 'tis sealed with the Duke of York's seal, and neither the Great Seal of England nor Seal of the Province, yet it bears date the 24th year of King James, so that the whole foundation is wrong. In strictness this is no City, and all the judgments that have been pass'd in their Mayor's Court are void; yet Colonel Danggan I am told, and Mr. Graham, got a good sum of money for this Charter. I send you the printed Copy of the said Charter."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 912. The same objection was made in a later letter which Bellomont sent to Governor Carteret as sought in the time of Gov. Montgomerie.—See Feb. 14, 1711.

The common council appoints a committee "to Demise the ferry," this afternoon, together with "the New brick house Barne and Pen thereunto belonging," for seven years beginning March 25. The conditions of the lease are similar to those of Feb. 2, 1699 (q.v.). Instead of "security," as provided for in that lease, however, the former shall "Give Bond with such sufficient surety" as the common council shall approve. Instead of the indefinite proviso of that year regarding his quarterly payments, this lease requires that he "Shall be Obliged to Pay the Rent of the Ferry by house etc."

(see description of Burgis View, I: 245-46) to the treasurer in quarterly payments. The provisions are renewed for maintaining boats for cattle, etc., and passengers; also regarding the pound, place of landing, public house, repairs, and the scale of ferryage tolls. The ferry is accordingly leased to Dereck Bencos, boatman, for £15.4 per annum.—M. C. II, 130-32.

It was ordered on Jan. 20, 1701, that Benson give a bond for £500. At the same time the mayor reported that he had executed a lease on Jan. 3, and demanded that Benson execute his counterpart and give bond, but that Benson had refused and demanded in addition "the old house." This, the mayor told him, he could not include in the prescribed conditions. The common council then demanded that Benson execute the lease, but he again refused, unless the house was added in the lease, or the rent reduced £50 per annum. It was therefore ordered that the ferry be again demised, on Jan. 27, and that action be taken against Benson for damages.—Ibid., II: 112-13. On Jan. 27, however, to prevent a law-suit or the continuance of further differences, the common council decided to let the ferry to Benson for £250, and it was also ordered that he be allowed "the Breadth of the City ferry house in which Thomas Hooke now dwelleth if this City have Any Right thereto During the Term of the said Lease Although the same be not Mentioned in the Lease thereof."—Ibid., II: 135.

The European "War of the Spanish Succession" brings the French and English colonies of America into conflict. It was known in America as Queen Anne's war, and ended with the Treaties of Utrecht and Rastadt in 1713—4.—Winston, op. cit., V: 420.

About this date, it is ordered that the ferry be again demised, to Richard Sackett, a malster, kept his brew-house, and also a pleasure resort, garden, tavern, and bowling-green on the shore of the East River, commonly known as the Cherry Garden or Sackett's Orchard.—See Liber City Grants, B: 1 (compt. office): cf. Liber Deeds, XXVII: 344 and see June 4, infra. On the modern map, this garden would be bounded west by a line running between Nos. 22 and 24 Cherry St., north by the line of Batavia St., if extended; south by Cherry St.; and east by a curving line from the corner of Roosevelt and Batavia Sts. to the corner of James and New Chambers Sts. See description of Burgis View, I: 250. For other references to Cherry Garden, see Feb. 26, 1703; May 2, 1749.

Bellomont writes to the lords of trade: "'Tis great pity this town should be exposed to the mercy of an enemy, 'tis the growdest town in America. Since my coming hither there are not fewer than 100 fair brick houses built, and a very noble Townhouse."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 126.

Thomas Weaver (see July 15, 1698) is sworn in as collector and receiver-general.—Col. Coun. Min., 152. Weaver's accounts are recorded in a portion of volume XXX of Correspondence in the register's office, hall of records.—See under Feb. 11 and Sept. 25, 1701.

The crown not yet having approved the Vacating Act, passed by the New York legislature a year and a half before, for vacating some of Fletcher's extravagant grants of land, including the King's Garden and the King's Farm, Bellomont writes fresh arguments to the lords of trade urging action.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 815, 820-27.

Bellomont writes to the lords of the treasury: "The Kings house in the Fort here is ready to fall on my head, the sollidiers barracks much out of repair, and the fort in an ill condition, one of the Bastions ready to fall, and the greatest part of the Pallisadoes wanting."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 829. See also Nov. 28, 1700. Col. Homer makes a report to Bellomont on his survey of the harbour of New York, and recommends locations for fortifications at the Narrows and "the Colle" (now known as Arthur Kill, between Staten Island and East Jersey), and at Sandy Hook and Hellgate.—Col. Coun. Min., 857-58 in 15, 152. This was a few days before his death. Mr. Weaver, one of the council, was sworn in by Bellomont in his place on Jan. 27.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 847.

The committee of the common council appointed to adjust the difference between Jasper Neepept and John Marsh regarding
The mill at Kingsbridge (see Sept. 19, 1700), finds and reports January 25, that John Marsh ought to receive from "the Said Jasper" the sum of £12 (provincial), and that the mill should then be granted to Nesepott and his assigns.—M. C. C. II, 134. This report is adopted by the order of the council, forming a grant for the mill to Nesepott and his heirs and assigns, on Nesepott giving a bond to Marshall for the payment of the £12 awarded to the latter.—Ibid., II: 134. On Jan. 29, the city conveyed to Jasper Nesepott the grist-mill at Kingsbridge "together with the ground wherein the mill stands and also all toll, benefit and custom for grinding corn and grain."—City Grants, Liber A: 388 (in real estate bureau, comptroller's office). See also the summary of Sept. 20, 1699, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961.

The ferry to Brooklyn is leased to Dirck Benson for seven years, beginning March 25, at £50 per year.—M. C. C. II, 135. The first agreement with Benson called for a payment of £35 annually (see Dec. 27, 1700); cf. Peterson & Edwards, N. T. at an 18th Century Municipality, 133-37.

Henry Coleman and wife convey to Roger Baker ("Vintner") a "Certaine Message or dwelling house and ground with... the fortifications of the said City in a certain Street called... Queen[Peal] Street upon the North side thereof and fronting the said street..." The property is bounded on the east by the street which leads from Queen St. to Green Lane (Malien Lane), and on the south by Queen St.—Liber Deeds, XXV: 35 (No. 86). Baker's Baker's tavern, which stood at Pearl Street and Liberty St., was distinguished by the sign of the "King's Head." By July 25, 1702 (q.v.), Baker had purchased a new site for a tavern, on William St. He died in 1702, and his widow was soon thereafter married to another tavern-keeper named Richard Harris (see Dec. 22, 1704). Before Sept. 19, 1715 (q.v.), the house had been turned over to Thomas Cockes, son-in-law of Mrs. Harris.

The court of general sessions convenes at the new city hall (see Oct. 16, 1699), but is compelled on the following day to "Adjourn to the house of Gabriel Tomson" because of the "Insufficiency of the present City Hall and the Extremse Severity Snow that has and is now falling."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (M.C.), 59. See, further, Oct. 13, 1701.

In the court of general sessions, three persons are fined six shillings each for "using false weights and Measures."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (M.C.), 60-61.

A warrant is issued to pay John Rotman "for building a wall to the kings house."—Col. Coun. Min., 152. This item of expense (£25) also appears, dated 1701, in the "General Accounts" of collector Weaver (see Jan. 2, 1662), as follows: "for building a Petition Wall to a Tenant [nomenclature belonging to his Majesty]." See also May 22, 1700.

The governor's council approves of a tide-mill to be set up by John Marsh.—Col. Coun. Min., 152. See also May 17 and Sept. 19, 1700.

The common council orders that Bellonmont and his council be petitioned to consider the"case for the King and fitting of Goals for holding & Keeping several Soldiers Upon the Late Great Mutiny."—M. C. C. II: 136.

It is agreed by the vestry of Trinity Church "that the Gallery be divided into four pews by the Length, with two Alleys each pew 9 foot & 3/4 long."—Trin. Min. (M.C.).

The consistory of the Dutch Church in Garden St. reports that the house and lot of Jan Pietersen Meet (later Jan Tawbour) have been bought for £140, to be used for an alms-house. It is "bordering on the Wall, to the east of the house of Jacoby de Draaijer; to the west of that of Jan Otto van Tull, and to the north of the ground of the church." To help pay for this property, the consistory resolves to sell the present poorhouse, which has become dilapidated.—Eccles. Rec., III: 1461-62. This house and lot have been identified as the site of the present No. 37 Wall St. The deed is not of record, but the location is established by recitals in neighbor- ing Deeds, XXV: 45: 57: 59: XXXII: 100. This was apparently the third alms-house of this church. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 955. On March 17, sale was made to Franz van Dyck, the highest bidder, of the property described as the "so-called Poor house and Ground in "Schippe Wyte," between Jesse Kip and Adrian ver Peyster and on a street in the City Hall and on a street in the City Hall and on a street..." (an advantageous deed of it).—Ibid., III: 1514. This was the second alms-house of the Dutch Church. It was situated on Broad St., south of Exchange Pl.—See Castellano Plan, Block C, No. 37, Vol. II. February

This deed to Van Dyck was probably not given, however, as it does not appear of record; and there is a later memorandum in the church minutes (without date, but placed within the year 1700) of the Eccles. Rec. 13, 1700: "A Poor House to the School. Whereof the said house was sold to Isaac Kip, was deeded to him."—Ibid., III: 1802. These recitals in the church minutes, printed in the Eccles. Rec., are the only records we have of these deeds to Van Dyck and Kip; such deeds were never filed in New York or Albany. Bellonmont died. The continual worry and annoyance to which he was subjected by his numerous enemies, both in America and England, had a bad effect on his general health; and, in consequence, the gout, which had lately begun to give him serious trouble, made rapid headway. His death produced "a profound feeling of grief in the provinces."—De Peyster, Life and Administration of Richard, Earl of Bellonmont (1789), 57. For brief sketch of Bellonmont's life, see also N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 851, citing "Sketch of the Earl of Bellonmont," by Jacob B. Moore, in Stryker's Am. Quarterly Register, I: 413.

The council orders that a proclamation be issued announcing his death. Lieut.-Gov. Nanfan being absent at the Barbadoes, the council assumes the administration of the government. Absent members are called to town. Col. Abraham de Peyster, an elder member, is to act as president of the council until the return of Lieut.-Gov. Nanfan or the council, Col. William Smith—Col. Coun. Min., May 22, 1700; Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 283. See March 27.

Immediately, accusations of oppression spring up against Bellonmont on the part of Nicholas Bayard, who desires that the next governor may be a "worthy person of honour probity and justice by whose sedate and peaceable temper and disposition our breaches and divisions may be healed."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 850. Regarding the state of affairs throughout British America at this time, see Winson, Narr. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 102.

In the absence of Lieut.-Gov. Nanfan, four members of the council, "A. D. Peyster," "S. Staats," "R. Walters," and "T. Peyster," write to the lords of trade, that the administration of the government is at present in themselves, as the other three members of the council have not yet returned to the city on being summoned. The letter reviews briefly the state of the province.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV, 850-51. On April 30, the other three members, "Wm Smith," "P. Schuyler," and "R. Livingston," wrote separately to the lords, stating that Smith, the eldest member and president of the council, having arrived on March 11, claimed acknowledged by the four already in town that he had the powers and prerogatives of president, including the "Negative Voice" ( veto). This the four refused to grant. Smith also claimed in the absence of the captain-general and commander-in-chief, the assembly could not sit. These three members of the council transacted affairs of government without the concurrence of the other four, and reported independently to the lords regarding the state of the province.—Ibid., IV: 857-58.

The clerk of the city was ordered "to send two or several sheriffs inviting the inhabitants of the province to attend the funeral of the late governor on March 27.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 280. See March 17 and 27.

The council requests Col. Beekman of Kings County to attend the funeral of Lord Bellonmont with his regiment, as there is to be a funeral procession along the city streets to the interment.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 281. See March 14 and 27.

The consistory of the Dutch Church in Garden St. resolves "That so much of the ground around the church as is necessary shall be used for burying the dead" also that the charge for burial shall be half that paid for a grave in the church. Permission is to be asked of the city.—Eccles. Rec., III: 1462. The city's permission does not appear in the M. C. C., but that the ground was appropriated as a burial-place appears from the petition of this church for a new burying-ground, Jan. 31, 1766 (p. 615).

A Memorandum is entered in the Minutes of the Common Council of an agreement, made this day "with William Mumford Stone Cutter to finde Stones and to Carve therupon the Kings Arms, the Earl of Bellomonts Arms and the Lieut Gouvernours Arms According to the Dimensions of the several Squares Left Respective ly for the putting up of the same." The work is to be done "within the space of Six Months Next Ensuing the Date hereof." He is to "make Moldings of Stone Round Each Respective Coate of Arms," and each is to be put.
upon a single stone if possible or otherwise on two. The city in Mar. 1701 to pay him £14 at the rate of eight shillings per week until the failure of the business, and on the conclusion of the work. On failure to perform the work as agreed he is to forfeit £5.—M. C. C., II: 137. But see Dec. 1, 1702.

The commissioners of the treasury direct Lord Bellomont to withhold the salary of Mr. Weaver, collector of revenue, during an interval of a half year. They should continue to receive the same or part of such salary which may have been received by him is to be taken from the profits of his position until the amount has been made good.—Blathwayt's Jour. (transcript), II: 73-77, in Lib. of Cong.

Lord Bellomont is buried with military honours, in the chapel in the fort.—Cal. H. Pape's List, Apr. 17, 1701. Mayor De Riemer took special care that the city streets should be made clean for the occasion.—M. C. C., II: 154-55.

When the fort was taken down and the battery levelled, in 1790, the leaden coffin was removed and finally deposited in St. Paul's churchyard.—"Sketch of the Earl of Bellomont," by Moore, in Streyker's Am. Quar. Register, I: 434; and see June 18, 1790.

The granting of water lots on North River, begun in 1699, continues. A committee of the common council, appointed Jan. 25 (M. C. C., II: 134) "to Measure the Ground from High water to low water Markie fronting to Hudson River doe Reporte that they have Measured the same ground lately Granted to John Rodman and Runs Along the Strand towards the fort to the Ground of Direcke Vanderburgh" 1,060 ft., 110 ft. deep at the north end and about 80 ft. deep at the south end to low-water mark. It is ordered that the committee "doe Cause the said Grant to be laid out in Lots..." and that the Grant be for 150 ft. along such Wharfs or Streets as they shall think fit in Order the same be Granted to the Respective Proprietors of the Land fronting the same or if they Refuse to Such Other person as are willing to make A Purchase thereof in Order that the West side of the City may be made more Regular and More Commerce for the Inhabitants therein." They are required to make a report of their proceedings, "and upon what Terms & Conditions the same Ought to be Granted."—Ibid., II: 159. It is ordered also that a plan be drawn of the land belonging to the adjoining owners....—Ibid., II: 140. See also May 25, 1699, and July 23, 1723.

The common council's committee, appointed Jan. 25 (M. C. C., II: 134) "to Agree with Peter Jansen Mesier what he shall pay for A Grant of the Land from high water to low water Markie fronting his house and Ground where he now dwellth by Hudson River," reports an agreement with him as follows: that this piece of ground, "Containing in Breadth Along the Strand the ground laid out to A Publick place for firing..." and that "the same be Continued A Publick place for firing or passing through the same as it is att present that whenever he Shall doke the same he Shall make A Street or wharfe of forty foot wide at low water Markie fronting to Hudson River in such Manner as the Street is to be made on the south side of the same by John Hutchins his Heirs or assigns which shall Remaine for A Publick Street or Highway for Ever." The report is approved, and it is ordered that the mayor execute the grant.—Ibid., II: 138.

This grant is recorded in City Grants, Liber A: 391 (comptroller's office), under date of April 15, 1701. These water lots were between the present Dey and Cortlandt Sts. The street he was required to make was part of the present Greenwich St. John Hutchins and others had a similar grant, Sept. 30, 1699 (q.v.), between Cedar and Cortlandt Sts. See also Feb. 15, 1723.

Roger Baker (see Feb. 3, 1701) is allowed £4,100 6s., "for his wages and expenses att his house in making of Rules for the Mayors Court."—M. C. C., III: 125.

The judge and attorney-general, whom Bellomont had requested to be sent from England, are now on their way to New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 853.

The lords of trade write to Bellomont (having out yet heard of his death in New York) that the balance of New York ought "to take care of their fortifications which are the main thing necessary for their security."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 856.

The governor's council orders "that the collector do pay Anthony Rogers Chéregone [surgeon] of his Majesties Garrison Fort William Henry three pounds for a quarters reet of the house hired by him for an hospital for the sick soldiers due the first inst."—Coun. Min. (M.S.), VIII: 245 (Albany). See also Jan. 8, 1702.

The assistants of each ward are required by the common council to go with two freeholders of the ward, promptly, "to the several houses in the same and Know of the Inhabitants what they severally are doing to clear and lay bare the Cleaning of the Streets and Carrying Away the Dirt thereof."—M. C. C., II: 141.

Rev. Peter Brisac is installed as chaplain of the fort.—Col. Min., 176.

Robert Livingston, writing to the lords of trade (in the absence of Lieut.-Gov. Nanfo) regarding the affairs of the province, reports, among other things: "A labouring man at New York has 3½ days and a soldier's weekly subsistence is but 3½ d. which with ease they consume in two days, and this is a great cause of their desertion...."

"Two Companies lay in provisions in the fort at New York, which is of very little strength, or use, more than a convenient Judgment for the King's Government, and a few to keep century at his door may do more well enough in time of peace at New York." Regarding the character of the soldierly, he states: "Idleness is the great motive of many of them, which makes them leave their trades and enter in the King's service; and they are generally willing to go when they please and can have liberty, yet will not like to be compelled thereunto, especially for one third part of the wages which a Negro slave receives every day in New York for splitting of fire wood and carrying the hold." He further states: "They all go to sea, and the trade of the work of that in New York is all to pieces and the walls want new pointing, the pallissadoes round the fort (last winter) were cut down and burnt for firewood and new carriages are wanted to the guns, some of them being dismantled, others scarce able to abide once firstrate."—"To the Proprietors of the Province of New-England, Lying in the New River, which is of New York is all to pieces and the walls want new pointing, the pallissadoes round the fort (last winter) were cut down and burnt for firewood and new carriages are wanted to the guns, some of them being dismantled, others scarce able to abide once firstrate.

"There are two platforms before the City with fifteen guns each, to defend the town against the water. One of which is washed away by the South East storms and high tides, and the other the Magistrates of our City saw cause to give away to the lower Leyser as a present, the ground between high and low water mark, to the value of about 2100 pounds, which is since laid out in lots, and some part of it built upon.

"The breastwork and pallissadoes which were round the town and the two stone bastions on the land side, are quite demolished. They were never well built nor of any great service, and were first erected by the Dutch Government when the Dutch took this Fort, as a defence against the English from Connecticut and New England," Livingston recommends what he thinks "may be necessary in this juncture for the defence and preservation of this Province in time of war..."

That a Governor be appointed who is a soldier, a man fearing God & hating covetousness, and who will administer impartially without siding with any faction.

That two large platforms be erected, one on each side of the river at the place called the Narrows, three leagues from the City, to consist of fifty cannon each, the Channelling there being upwards of one male broad."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 877-78.

The well in Wall St. was probably that on which the statue of William Pitt was erected in 1790. This was placed midway of the street of William St.—See July 24, 1877; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 964. Dock St. was called Water St. as early as 1735—Pl. 50, Vol. I.

For a list of the vessels arriving at this port from this time until May, 1702, see Valentine, Hist. City of N. Y. (1853, 277-18.

Explaining this to the lords of trade by his letter of June 9, he said it was done because he found "so great heats and animosities in the House of Representatives, between the two different parties, in relation to the legality or illegality of their Sessions."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 88. Nanfan served until May 3, 1702 (q. n.).

The city grants to Richard Sackett, for 500, the ground extending southward from his house and lot, "commonly called the Bowling Green" (not the present Bowling Green, for which see March 15, 1733), to low-water mark in the East River, with the observance whenever he shall enclose or build upon the same he shall make a wharf or street 60 ft. in width along entire his water front, a distance of 560 ft.—City Grants, Liber B: 1. This grant extended from the present James Slip to Pellic Slip and from Cherry St. to Water St.—Index of Water Grants. Numerous other grants of lots between high-water and low-water mark in this vicinity were made in July and August of the same year, with the obligation that the grantees should build wharfs within three years.—City Grants, Liber B: 4, 10, 16, 23, and 33; M. C. C., II: 145. See also Feb. 16, 1703.

The king, having appointed "the Lord Viscount Cornbury to be Governor of New York," the lords of trade are directed by the secretary of state to prepare a commission and instructions for him. One clause of the commission is to contain a revocation of the commission of the present "Lieutenant Governor of that Colony" (Nanfan).—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 88. On June 26, the king signed the last of the letters prepared for the commission. This, like Bellomont's, included the command of the militia of East and West New Jersey. Although Cornbury is not to be governor of Massachusetts Bay, as Bellomont was, yet command of the militia of Connecticut is given him, because such control "as we humbly conceive, is necessary in the hands of the Governor of New York."—Ibid., IV: 88.

Cornbury's commission was signed by the king Nov. 16, 1701. It has never been printed.—See "List of Commissions, Instructions, and Additional Instructions, Issued to the Royal Governors and Others in Am.," ed. by Prof. Charles M. Andrews, in Am. Rep., Am. Hist. Attm. (1911), I: 405. Cornbury, however, stated, in a letter of July 5, 1705: "The late King was pleased to grant me a Commission under the great Seal of England bearing date the 9th day of July 1701."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1152. For his second commission, under Queen Anne, see Dec. 5, 1704, and Jan. 7, 1705—Vol. V.

David Jamison is sworn in as deputy surveyor-general.—Col. Coun. Min., 157.

The lords of trade recommend to the king that Col. Rorer, the engineer who has been employed about the fortifications of New York, be directed by the orders given by Lord Cornbury, report to him, and continue as long as Cornbury thinks necessary.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 885.

John Bacham is paid £50 "for finishing ye' work over the fort gate in his majesties Fort Wm. Henry in this city."—Governesses, Liber XXX, unnumbered p. 30 (register's office), July 24, 1702 (q. n.). This is the "Magazen of the Fort" was made by Bellomont under the immediate direction of Col. Rorer, and cost £500. It should be distinguished from the "Vault under one of the Bastions for the security of the powder," the construction of which was started the following year (see May 25, 1702).

The common council orders "that the Old market house near the Custom house be ever hereafter Appointed a publick Market house for the Benefit and Convenience of all persons that shall Resorte thereunto in as full and Ample manner as any Other Market house or market place within this City is or Lawfully Ought to be."—M. C. C., II: 146. For previous history of this market, see Jan. 29, 1677; and "Custom House Bridge Market," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 978.

The common council orders "that the inhabitants of the neighbourhood of Burgers path have Liberty to Erect A Market house att their Own Charge on the Vacant Lotts of Ground fronting to the houses of Leonard Huygen and that Late of Jacob Teller." The title to the land shall be "defended" by the city. Damages that may accrue "by the Cutting or pulling down of the Said Marette house" shall be the Loss of the Neighbourhood that build the same.—M. C. C., II: 147. A market was first established in this locality ("under the Trees by the Slip") on April 18, 1691 (p. 56). The new market-house was mentioned in a petition of April 13, 1708.—M. C. C., II: 352. In 1711 (see June 27), all the markets except this were appropriated for building batteaux. It stood until 1779-80.—See "Old Slip Market," Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 959.

The city grants to Jacob Dekey, for 253, a farm of about 355 acres, embracing a portion of the present Morrisania Park and Morrisania Heights (formerly Van de Water Heights), on which Columbia University now stands, and extending from the present 107th to 114th St. and from Morrisania Park to the Hudson River. As described in the grant, it is situated in the Out Ward, on the north side of the land of Tunes Ides, and bounded as follows: Beginning at a certain old black oak tree, marked with three notches, which stands on the south-east corner of the fence of Tunes Ides; ranging along the fence of Ides north-west 60 chains to the river; thence along the river northeasterly to 70 chains; southeasterly to that the line of Harlem 10 chains; thence south along the line of Harlem Commons 88 chains to the place of beginning. —City Grants, Liber B: 28-31; Mott, N. Y. of Yesterday, 42-43. On Nov. 21, Dekey petitioned the governor and council for a patent of confirmation for this land, described as lying between the land of Thomas Turnour and Hudson's River, and containing in all 253 acres, 3 rods and 18 perches. The petition was granted the same day, and was recorded in Liber Patents, VIII: 252 (Albany); Cal. Land Patents, 55.

The common council orders that the mayor be reimbursed $23 3, 12o, which he paid for posts for the Church Yard."—M. C. C., II: 149. See Oct. 11.

Sampson Shelton Broughton, sent at Bellomont's request to serve as attorney-general, arrives in New York. On Sept. 3, he wrote to the lords of trade for permission to be "admitted to dwell in the City of Kifado, which is conveniently in the hands of the Governor of New York."—Letter to the Lords of Trade, Bellomont, Aug. 23, 1702.

William Atwood is sworn in as member of the council and judge of the court of admiralty, and Sampson Shelton Broughton as attorney-general of the court of admiralty. On the 4th, Atwood and Broughton were sworn in as chief-justice and attorney-general, respectively, of the province.—Cal. Coun. Min., 158. They were prominent figures in the famous Bayard trial, soon to be held.—See Feb. 11, 1702.

The lords of trade make a representation to the lords justices, accompanying drafts of Lord Cornbury's instructions, which are similar to those formerly given to Lord Bellomont, with a few alterations rendered necessary by the king's additional directions given from time to time to Bellomont.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 855; cab. New-York} until the arrival of Lord Cornbury, report to him, and continue as long as Cornbury thinks necessary.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 855.

Abraham de Peyster is appointed deputy auditor-general.—Col. Coun. Min., 158.

Atwood, the first chief-justice of the province to receive his commission and salary direct from the crown, writes to the lords of trade that he has been "properly appointed for the Office of Inhabitant and Circuit." He has also been aiding in "setting a Court of Chancery."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 855. Regarding his judicial conduct in America, see articles by C. P. Daly in The Green Bag.
CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664-1763

1703 March, April and May, 1895. The court of chancery which was inaugurated Nov. 1, 1683, was abolished the first Monday in July. Sept. and recorder to swear into office the opposing candidates. In reply, the common council (hosting at a court, evidently) ordered that the writs be returned with protest of "Wrongful Confinement," and that the mayor employ such counsel as he should think fit.—ibid., II: 153-54. The mayor and common council thus directly opposed the lieutenant-governour and the Lesquier party.—Dunlap, Hist. of New Neth., etc., II (1840): Appendix T, XLIX (footnotes).

The situation was reversed when Thomas Thompson, new mayor, was sworn in on Oct. 14. He stated at the next meeting of the common council, on Nov. 11, that from the day of his appointment, in the absence of a "settled Magnicry" (or common council), he had kept a journal of the public events transpiring in the city. This, at his request, was read and entered in full in the Minute-book. It reviewed the whole problem and some dramatic scenes regarding the establishment of a common council during the past month, resulting in a changed composition of that body, which now consisted of members named in writs of mandamus issued by the governor on Oct. 14.—ibid., II: 157-58. See Dec. 5. For the charter prescription regarding swearing in new officials and its bearing in this controversy, see Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. at an 18th Cent., Municipality, 13-34. See also the transcription of the original records of the transactions in the controversy, printed in Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 211 et seq. The controversy of this factional strife was felt in the election of the next year (see Nov. 4 and Dec. 1, 1703).

Several inhabitants having petitioned the governor that the Oct. wharf between Wall St. and Burgers' Path may be ordered "a common and public Place," they are required to show the proof of that claim and that they have given cause to be heard in the same matter. At this meeting was also heard, what was "not finished," was valued at £280.—Abstracts of Wills, II: 311, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1892). The common council orders that the mayor be paid £644.6 for boards and labour "for the making the fence about the Burial Place."—ibid., II: 152.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for Encouraging the City of New York." The treasury of the city is exhausted, and large sums are required to build and maintain public buildings, particularly the city hall. A fund for this is to be raised by import duties on barrels of flour, cider, beer of any kind; also the city ferry of the island of Nassau shall have the benefit of its old standard of "Rates and prices."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 449. The governor's council issues a warrant to Robert Walters for firewood for the fort. Another warrant followed under date of May 1, 1702.—Col. Coun. Min., 160, 168. There are preserved in the State Library at Albany some "Observations on the New York Accr" which are to be Rectified," from which we know that the first warrant was for £3283; "In part of £29-83 for 3 months firewood," and the second, £31941. "For one months firewood," which charges, says the auditor-general, "are so Excessive, as not the Same will not be allowed by the 1st Treasurer."—Col. MSS., XLIX: 16 (Albany). An account for candles for the fort, of later date (see April 1, 1703), met the same criticism.

Resolved, That application be made to our most gracious Sovereigne Lord the King for a new Charter to our Church under the Great Seal of England, and letters be sent to him, and to your Grace the Arch Bishop of Canterbury the Bishop of London & to Col Robt Quaray who is to be desired to solicit this matter, that a Copy of our present Charter be sent to Col Quaray & that a Constitute be appointed to Consider of what alterations may be proper [see to be made in our Charter, and what Additions may be proper to be desired in the new Charter.]

Ordered, That the Reverend Mr Vesey, the present Church Wardens Mr Enot Mr Jamison and Mr Anderson be a Committee to consider of what alterations & amendment may be of Advantage in this new Royal Charter.—Trin. Min. (MS.)

8 governor and council for compensation for damages done to his house, which has been used as a hospital for soldiers.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 289.

The general accounts of the province show a payment of $153.7.0 for hatters and plasterers' work done in the Majesties fort.—Construe, Liber XXX (register's office).

The lieutenant-governor and council take up consideration of certain papers reflecting on the government, which are being circulated. On Jan. 17, Nicholas and Samuel Bayard were put under bonds and John Hutchinson is ordered to produce the papers. An examination of the charges was held on Jan. 19. This was continued on Jan. 21, and Col. Nicholas Bayard was committed to prison, charged with sedition. On Jan. 24, a proclamation was issued concerning the disaffection expressed in these inflammatory papers.—Cal. Coun. Min., 162. The N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1894), err as to this date; see N. Y. Coun. Min., 161, 1, 2.

The lieutenant-governor writes to the lords of trade that there is "a conspiracy to raise sedition and mutiny here and to defame the Administration of the Government of this Province under his Majesty which appears to have been carried on by a factious party, the head of which is one Coll Bayard," etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 942-43.

Adolph Meyer, Isaac de la Metie, and Johannes Waldron take the oath of office as overseers of Harlem.—M. C. G., III: 186.

Nanfan issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, against Col. Nicholas Bayard, Alderman John, and others, who are "disaffected to this his Majesties Government," and "have in contempt of his Majesties Laws, and to the manifest Disturbance of the Peace, conspired to defame the past & present Administration."—From N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1901), 61. He issued another, of similar import, on March 10—ibid., 62.

20 The anti-Bayard outbreak develops, the Leisler faction being in control. Samuel Bayard (son of Nicholas) writes to Adderly and Ludwick, their agents in London, that he and his father have been "bound over in 1500 pounds Recognition" each, for being subscribers to treasonable papers. He states that these papers were intended "to set us to Rights in the eyes of the Court, that we are no Jacobites Pyrats or Ill men as represented." The crime for which they are put under bonds is that they "were present at the Coffee house" when the petition to the king of Dec. 30, 1701 (q.v.), and other addresses were signed. Nicholas Bayard is in prison. He wrote on Jan. 18 to the council, "all agents that the recent outbreak was occasioned by three addresses, one to the king, one to parliament, and one to Cornbury. Although the attorney-general gives his opinion that Bayard has been committed to jail without cause, a company of militia guards the jail as if to prevent rescue.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 944-48. See further March 2.

Although the attorney-general gives his opinion that Bayard has been committed to jail without cause, a company of militia guards the jail as if to prevent rescue.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 944-48. See further March 2.

22 The anti-Bayard outbreak develops, the Leisler faction being in control. Samuel Bayard (son of Nicholas) writes to Adderly and Ludwick, their agents in London, that he and his father have been "bound over in 1500 pounds Recognition" each, for being subscribers to treasonable papers. He states that these papers were intended "to set us to Rights in the eyes of the Court, that we are no Jacobites Pyrats or Ill men as represented." The crime for which they are put under bonds is that they "were present at the Coffee house" when the petition to the king of Dec. 30, 1701 (q.v.), and other addresses were signed. Nicholas Bayard is in prison. He wrote on Jan. 18 to the council, "all agents that the recent outbreak was occasioned by three addresses, one to the king, one to parliament, and one to Cornbury. Although the attorney-general gives his opinion that Bayard has been committed to jail without cause, a company of militia guards the jail as if to prevent rescue.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 944-48. See further March 2.

Bayard, to save his life, signs a confession that the evidence against him at his trial was true,—namely, that he endeavored to subvert the government of the province by certain addresses to the king, parliament, and the governor.—An Account of the Commitment of Nicholas Bayard (N. Y., 1707), 32. He thus acknowledged himself guilty in the seventh of the several humble petitions which he had made, after he had been for days "loaden with iron," and after the day of his execution had been appointed and he had been notified of it. He thereby obtained a reprieve.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 955, 956.

Bayard’s Account, &c., written and published by himself, closes with the statement that Atwood and Weaver, apprehensive that Cornbury would call them to account "for their illegal Proceedings," made their escape to Virginia, and sailed for England under assumed names.—Ibid., 33. This was in Sept., 1702. See also The Case of William Atwood, Eng. (London, 1701). Bayard wrote to the lords of trade on April 24, reviewing his case.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 951–53; see also Howell, State Trials, XIV: 471–516; Chandler, Am. Criminal Trials, I: 375. His death sentence was confirmed by the U. S. Supreme Court. The Bayard trial involved the question of liberty of speech and opinion.

George Clarke, destined to become secretary of the province (see July 30, 1703) and lieutenant-governor (see Oct. 30, 1716), declares that John Burroughs (a 13-year-old boy) wrote the insulting words on the governor’s proclamation (see March 29). This dispute is the subject of the charge which Clarke has been preparing covering the writer.—Col. Curn. Min., 165, 167. See May 13.

The council orders that wine and beer be laid in for Lord Cornbury, and that the house in the fort be put in order for him.—Col. Curn. Min., 166.

The proprietors of East and West Jersey draw up a deed surrendering "their Power of the Government of those Plantations" to Queen Anne. This was presented to the queen on April 17.—N. J. Archives, 1st ser., II: 432–62. Under Cornbury (after May 3, 5, 9), New York and New Jersey were united under one government. The union continued 36 years, with a single executive, but two separate assemblies.

In a memorial to the lords of trade, Adlerly and Lodwick (merchants in London) review the circumstances leading up to the arrest of the two Bayards on the charge of treason. Nicholas Bayard is threatened with execution, until the arrival of a ship at New York bearing news of Cornbury’s coming. This memorial asks that the lords will put a stop to these "vindictive and unaccountable Proceedings which are carried on purely to gratify the Revenge of a relentless faction in the Province."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 949–51.

May

The governor signs a bill for declaring Confirming and Executing the Election of the Mayor of New York relating to the Electing of their Magistrates.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 174.

It is ordered by Liet.-Gov. Nanfan and the council that "Abraham Gouverneur who have been appointed by the Liet-Governor to be Corrector of the press in this province have and receive a salary for his charge in the said office of Thirty pounds 38 annus from the date of his commission or warrant."—From the Colonial State Papers, series 5, vol. 184, Public Record Office, London. The original MS. Council Minutes containing this entry (see Col. Curn. Min., 168) were destroyed in the Capitol fire at Albany. For a list of the burned council minutes, which at their various times were sent to the home government, and are now preserved in the Public Record Office, see the Report of the Am. Hist. Assn. (1908), I: 478.

The published Colonial State Papers (America and West Indies), for this period contain a number of references to Gouverneur, whose appointment as speaker, notwithstanding the fact that he was an alien, led to much controversy. There is no reference in the indexes of the published volumes, to any "Corrector of the press." From its apparent meaning, the duties of the position seem to have been to handle government documents in their course through Bradford’s press, and to see that the laws were made, and that the printer from Bellonnet’s report to the lords of trade on May 15, 1699 (p. x), that a correct copy of the provincial laws could not be sent to England because the printer "bad nobody to correct the press at the time he printed them." The phrase is also used in modern times, as, for example, in A Treatise on English Punctuation; designed for letter-writers, authors, printers, and correctors of the press, by John Wilson (Boston, 1859).

Edward Lord Cornbury, having published his commission at the fort and city hall as captain-general, governor-in-chief, and vice admiral, he is sworn in at the house of the sick chief-justice, Atwood.—Col. Curn. Min., 168. He writes to the lords of trade the same day reporting these facts, and that he has authorized Bayard in his instructions to the lords Cornbury and Bayard under sentence of death for treason: many eminent merchants who fled "into the Jersey’s" have returned on his coming.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 955, 1152; Diary of Samuel Sewall, II: 55–56.

Cornbury is met on his arrival by the rector of Trinity Church.

The wardens and vestrymen welcome him with an address, referring to him as a "healer & restorer amongst us."—Dix, Hist. of Trin. Church, I: 155–56.

The common council orders that the soldiers of the garrison at Fort William Henry in New York be made freemen of the city, gratis.—M. C. C., II: 190. The next day (q. v.), Abraham Gouverneur, the recorder, who belonged to an opposite faction from that of the mayor, petitioned the governor "against the usurpations of Thomas Noel," the mayor.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 293. At the next meeting of the common council, however, the order was reiterated and the reasons recorded. The ordinance provides that "all the Officers and soldiers (who are his Majesties Natural born subjects) be made freemen of the corporation, gratis. These forces had been sent over by the king "during the Late War" to protect and secure the province "from the Insults of our Enemies the French of Canada and their Indians." The cost of "all manner of Provisions and Apparel" is "much dearer in this City in England whereby the said soldiers Cannot Conveniently subsist of their pay only," but most of them being "Trade men" they would be enabled to live comfortably if they could exercise their trade. Desertions would be less frequent; they would be encouraged in their duty, and others would be led to enlist. At present, "by the Laws of this Corporation No person Whatsoever Can Keep Shop or Exercise Any handy Craft Trade or Occupation but such as are Freemen thereof under the penalty of five pounds for each offence." Also, by this ordinance, the common council aims to repay the many "piously favours" of the king.—M. C. C., III: 193–94. See also July 11.

An address to Cornbury, prepared by order of the common council, is approved, and is ordered to be engraved and presented. It congratulates him on his safe arrival, and expresses gratitude "A person of so great and Noble birth Skilled in the Art of War and Acquainted with the English Laws and Government to heal our Divisions to secure us from the danger of the Enemy Abroad and Cause us to flourish with peace plenty and Tranquility att home," etc.—M. C. C., II: 189. It was presented on May 14.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 293. All news of the king’s death, on March 8 (q. v.), did not reach New York until June 18 (q. v.).

Mary Burroughs petitions the governor in behalf of her 13-year-old son Eden. Because he appended the words "and hang John Nanfan" to a proclamation (see March 29), he was taken into custody on April 10, and still remains in the custody of the sheriff. By such confinement the child’s health has been impaired and he is now dangerously ill and “likely to turn to the Smallpox." She adds that the boy is too young to be "capable of any evil Intention against the Government" that he "att pls. 5d Subscribe the said words," and, perhaps, "by Encouragm’t of Some other Children, and that surely it was not by any instigation Encourag’d or direction" of the petitioner or her husband. She seeks his discharge and release from all “prosecution & punishment for the Said Offence.”—Col. MSS., XLVIII (Albany).

The recorder and five members of the common council petition the governor, stating that Mayor Noel, in his desire to make "free Citizens" of the soldiers of the garrison, intends to make a by-law to set aside the charter provision in that regard. They put before him the language of the charter involving the granting of civil liberties and also that he disapprove any such measure.—Col. MSS., XLVI: 115 (Albany).

Cornbury writes the lords of trade that "the small Poxt is very much here, but except that the Province is very healthy."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 955.

The city having paid £5 to Phillip French on May 12, to re-1702 muzzle his lease of the dock (M. C. C., II: 190), the dock and slips of the city are now "farmed" (leased), "att the sign of the"

20 Kings Arms Near the Custom house," to James Spencer, see June 27, who secures them for £25 per annum for the term of seven years. Besides cleaning the dock, which Frenchmen had apparently failed to do—see April 13, 1700), Spencer is required to build, within the next 18 months, at his own expense, "the Wharf Next the River Inclosing the said Dock." That is, he is to make them "one foot and a halfe English Measure higher then they now are in the highest place thereof with good and sufficient timber." This reconstruction is "to begin at the Privy house and from thence the whole length of the said Wharfs to White hall," and "after the said Whars are made soe much higher with Stockades &c the said purchaser Shall Cause the same to be well Loaded with Ballast Gravel or Stones," and upon this the wharfs are "to be well Covered Over with the Dock Mudd to secure the said Wharfs from being broken or Damni 1705 fyed by the Violence of any Storme or sea." The other part of the wharfs, "Inclosing the said Dock Next to the River," the lessee shall repair; and he "Shall Cause Eight substantial posts to be fixed on the said Wharfs," thirty or forty feet apart, "convenient for the haling [aulding] Down Vessells thereby to Creew" (to career there).—Ibid., II: 191-92. For the construction and location of the great dock, see Nov. 10, 1676. The custom-house (near which was the King's Arms tavern, as above stated) stood at the present 33-39 St. Landmark Map, 1732. 24

The consistory and church-masters of the Dutch Church, finding that 'the Arms' of the late Jacob Lydser and Jacob Milsborne are now placed in our church, and have been there for four years past, retalve that these insignia shall remain as long as the friends of the deceased shall think proper. It is also judged expedient that, so long as the customary fees are paid and the bodies of these men are buried in the church, their bodies shall remain undisturbed.—Ecles. Rec., III: 1490.

In a letter to the governor and council of Connecticut, Col. Nicholas Bayard wrote: "Since it has pleased Gods Infinite Goodness, With I must ever Adore, to rescue my life out of the hands of bloodthirsty men, by the happy arrival of his Excellly Our Gover'n my Lord Viscount Cornbury by Whose Imperatial Justice, I hope to obtain such release as the Innocency of my Case Deserves; I am now to return my Grateful acknowledgment for ye charitable Intercourses towards my release, by ye recomendatory Lett's to ye late L: Govr and the same did not meet with ye Candl Complanyse & Successe, as ye Christian endeavors deserved, yet I am noe lesse sensible of y're Sincerity & favour therein, wch I shall ever retayne with a dutiful regard, until I can be apt to make some Suitable returnes."—Winthrop Papers, XI: 152, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

26 Thomas Weaver, the collector and receiver-general, and William Carter, the comptroller of the customs, memorialize the governor and council regarding the custom-house boats and the bad condition of the wharves, whose roof and walls are so decayed as to render it "unfit" for the receipt of custom.—Col. MSS., XLV: 126 (Albany).

27 The provincial council resolves to build a powder-vault.—Col. Coun. Min., 170. On June 15, William Hodgson (Hudson) was named as the builder—ibid., 171. The general accounts of the province, under date of June 7, show a payment of £100 "towards the building of a Vault in the Fort Wm Henry for Powder."—Consequences, Liber XXX, unnumbered page 86 (register's office). On Dec. 18, there was another payment of £60 "for Bricklayers work into the fort for a Vault under one of the Barracks for the security of the People,"—Ibid., Capt. Map, 177. Another warrant was issued to Rip van Dam, on March 6, 1703, undoubtedly for work on the vault, then referred to as in Fort Anne.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 328; Col. Coun. Min., 320. See also April 13, 1700; June 16, 1703. Apparently this vault was supplemented by a "cistern for Powder", under the fort, a task which work of his predecessor the new governor speaks of so disparagingly in his report to the lords of trade on Sept. 24 (q.v.). There does not appear to have been any depository for powder outside the fort until Nov. 24, 1728 (q.v.), when a new powder-house was completed on the hill near the Fort. In some "Observations on the New York Accts." (accounts which are to be Rectified), between June 10, 1703, and March 25, 1705, made by Wm. Blathwayt, auditor-general, the changes 1725 "for finishing the work over the fort Gate" and "for making a May Vault for powder," he says, "ought to be more particularly made out".—Col. MSS., XLIX: 16 (Albany).

The governor and council allow house rent to Rev. July 23, 1704, Col. Coun. Min. (a task which Frenchmen had apparently failed to do—see April 13, 1700), Spencer is required to build, within the next 18 months, at his own expense, "the Wharf Next the River Inclosing the said Dock." That is, he is to make them "one foot and a halfe English Measure higher then they now are in the highest place thereof with good and sufficient timber." Gold Box. — Alderman Boelen is directed to "make the said Box convenient for the use," and the mayor is required to issue his warrant to the treasurer to pay for it—M. C. C., II: 197. On Dec. 1, it was ordered that "this Court forthwith waite upon" the governor to make the presentation, Mr. Broughton, the recorder, being appointed to "make A speech to his Excellency suitable to the Occasion."—Ibid., II: 197.

It is also resolved that John Bridge, L.L.D., Robert Willward, Charles Congreve, Edward Rich, Phillip Rookebey, William Lovell, John Freeman, John Pierson, Peter Fauconniert, Henry Swift, Mr. May Bickley, William Carter, Mr. Mott, and "such Others of the household as Came into this Province with his Excellency the Lord-Mayor of London," and all the freemen of that Corporation to the Contrary Notwithstanding Provided they be all her Majesties Natural borne subjects or Naturalized or Denizens as by the Charter of this City is Required."—Ibid., II: 197.

It is resolved further "that all persons that are now dwellers within this City that are his Majesties Natural borne subjects or Naturalized or Denizens that are not and cannot purchase their Freedom be made Freemen of this Citygratis." The mayor, recorder, and aldermen are required to "Admit under such the Office of A Freeman," and the mayor to "Execute Certificates thereof under the seal of the said City."—Ibid., II: 197.

These transactions show whatever difference existed in the substance of the gift to Cornbury on the one hand, and to the poor of the city on the other. Apparently, the same gift was conditioned upon both, but in a different form and by a different method.

The power of the city magistrates to make free citizens, conferred by the Dongan Charter and continued by the Montegomery Charter, "has ceased to be of any importance, and is used only as a testimonial of respect or gratitude, on the part of the corporation, towards persons in high stations, or who may have entitled themselves to the honor by personal merit, or some distinguished service."—The Charter of the City of New York, with notes by Chancellor Kent (1836), 152. For further account of the proceedings of conferring the "freedom of the city," historically considered by Chancellor Kent, as well as the records of such events in New York, see N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1883), 410, passim.

The old English custom is thus described: "In exercise of their power to admit burgesses by election, it is the custom for the magistrates of the more important cities and towns of the United Kingdom . . . to admit persons of distinction, whether resident or strangers, to the position of honorary burgesses. This is popularly known as 'presenting the freedom of the city.' The names of such honorary burgesses are entered in the burgess list or register of municipal electors, but they are not entitled, nor do they hold any municipal business in the particular city or town, to exercise the municipal franchise, or be inducted to the town-council."—Chambers's Encyclopaedia (London, 1888), II: 554 (title "Burgess"). The following is an American account of the same subject: "The practice of conferring the freedom of the city, which at present amounts to little more than an expression of esteem on the part of the public magistrates, may be traced back to mediæval times, when the principle of freedom of domicile was by no means universally recognized, and cities parlied almost entirely of the nature of private corporations, admission into which was hampered by many restrictions. . . . the New York national Encyclopaedia (N. Y., 1915), IX: 219-20 (title "Freedom of the City").

Thomas Weaver, collector of the royal revenue in New York, is suspended from office by Lord Cornbury. Wm. Blathwayt, the auditor-general of accounts (see Sept. 29, 1704), presents an "Abstract of Mr. Weaver's Accounts" from Jan. 6, 1700, "when he enter'd upon his Office of Rec't Genl," to the date of his suspension. The total amount received from "Customs, Excise, Quit Rents & Casual Revenues" was $60,345,411.—Blathwayt, Fourth. (transcript), II: 122-24.

July 27. The common council orders the repeal of "the Third Printed Law of this Corporation Called (Concerning Freeman)."—M. C. C., II: 198. The text of this law is not available at the present day, no copy of the city ordinances printed by Bradford in 1694-5 (see Oct. 25, 1694, and Jan. 16, 1695) being now (1823) extant. A new and brief statement of the law or regulation on the subject of freemen is supplied by the common council. No person or persons whatever, in the city or its "Liberties," shall engage in retail trade, or exercise any craft without the City of London, or "be Admitted by the Mayor Recorder & Aldermen or by the Mayor or any three or more of the Aldermen." As before, there is the penalty of £5 for each violation after a warning; but there is a new scale of charges for being made a freeman, every merchant, trader, or shopkeeper being required to pay five shillings, and every "handy Craft Tradesman" six shillings "with Customary fees on being made free," and those not able to pay "Shall be made free Grâtz."—Ibid., II: 198-9. The soldiers of the fort, who were "Natural born," had been made freemen gratis on May 12 (p. 8). Orders, as freemen by ordinances ordered on Feb. 15, 1703, and Dec. 21, 1706, to be continued in force, there are five separate regulations relating to freemen: "Freemen to be Inrolled," "Oath of Freeman," "Who are to be deemed Freeman," "Freemen made by the Mayor and Aldermen," and "Law concerning Freeman" (the last named evidently being the one enacted July 11, 1702).—Ibid., II: 223, 174-15. When the city laws and ordinances were again ordered to be printed, March 28, 1707 (p. 9), these various regulations relating to freemen were combined into one, entitled "Freemen and Apprentices."—Ibid., II: 319.

It is ordered that "the Front of the City Hall be forthwith 23d pay'd."—M. C. C., II: 200. This work was paid for Nov. 2, 1708, more than six years later.—Ibid., II: 365.

Roger Baker, vintner, in a petition to the common council, represents that he is about to build in the Smith's (William) St. (where he lives) a large house of brick and stone, "which will be of great beauty And an Ornament to this City," as well as a standing and permanent strip of ground at the north-west corner of his house.—M. C. C., II: 199. Baker was a tavern-keeper, who kept a public-house known as the King's Head, at the south-west corner of Pearl St. and Maiden Lane (see Feb. 5, 1701). It is not certain that he finished the house on Smith's St. or took the sign there, as he died in the same year, 1702.—Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., 84. See Jan. 18, 1694.

The common council appoints a committee "to Let to farme the Old Market house in the broad way" for not more than five years.—M. C. C., II: 226-27. See Sept. 25, 1694.

Mr. Vesey & Mr. Wenham reported that Mr. [Matthew] Clarkson Deed one of the Tewants of the Kings Farme before his Death & after the granting of a new Lease from the Right Honble Edward Viscount Cornbury did relinquish his right & Interest in the Lease thereof to the Church. Capt Wilson in Consideration of a peace of Plate to be given him by the Corporation of Trinity Church within twelve months next ensuing, doth Surrender his Interest & right in the said Lease for the term to come to the Church & bears the Charges he has been at in defending & maintaining the Churches right hitherto.

"We do not consent, that Gwy & Ryse have the Farme the remaining part of the year till the first of May next that he shall have Liberty to take off his Winter & Summer grain, provided he plant no Indian Corne next Spring therein that he Sew no more Summer Grain next Spring than Winter grain that he Coffitt not any waste, leave the Fences in repair & good order he paying for the same the Sum of Thirty five pounds to the Church Wardens for the use of the Church in manner following that is to say Twenty pounds the first of November and fifteen pounds the first of May next ensuing."—Trin. Min. (MS.). The governor's council orders that a proclamation be issued for a day of fasting and public prayer on account of sickness in the city.—Cal. Colon. Min., 171. The governor and council, meeting at "Cheer Hall," Orange Co., consider England's declaration of war upon France and Spain. —Cal. Colon. Min., 173; N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1902), 65. The meeting out of town was undoubtedly due to the sickness in New York.—See Aug. 27, and Sept. 17.

The governor and council hold their meeting at Kingsbridge, westchester Co.—Cal. Colon. Min., 173. The governor and council, at Kingsbridge, order a proclamation to be issued convening an assembly to meet at Jamaica, and L. I., on account of the sickness in New York, and adjourning the supreme court to the same place. A proclamation is to be issued regarding the quick burial of persons dying from the "malignant distemper," and concerning other sanitary measures; also appointing a weekly day of fast and humiliation.—Cal. Colon. Min., 174; Bulletin, N. Y. Pub. Library (1902), 63. See Sept. 27.
27 Cornbury informs the lords of trade that Thomas Weaver, the collector and receiver-general, who served as solicitor-general in the trial of Bayard, took the account books when he ran away (Oct. 27, 1702). He丛 cannot make no return of them. — Ibid., IV: 1004.

30 More than 360 inhabitants of New York City were transported to the house of representatives, acquainting them of the usage and custom of parliament to appoint a chaplain to read prayers to them every morning before they proceed to business, and desiring them to do likewise. — Ibid., 1: 145.

The common council orders that there shall be "three market days in the week," one to be kept on Monday, one on Wednesday, and one on Saturday. — Ibid., IV: 1004.
CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664–1763

1702. \footnotetext{No. \textit{Vites Hiberniae}}, the utter Overflow of the Liberties & Privileges of the City. —Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 72. The factional strife so apparent in the election of the year before (see Sept. 29, 1701), and again in the recent election (see Dec. 1, 1702), creeps thus unexpectedly into the proceedings of the general sessions court. In the election returns, as given in the Minutes, the name of the candidate Provost appears as an alternative in the North Ward, but, on Oct. 14, when other officers were sworn in, there is recorded a "Caveat Agd the Swearing David Provost Elected Alderman of the North Ward as not being duly qualified to serve in that Station for sundry reasons." —M. C. C., II: 201–2, 204. Provost and Roosevelt were remembered by their enemies for their "Very Violent and Expressionate" against Mayor Noel (ibid., II: 180), and their indictment by a grand jury may be readily understood. Provost did not presume to be sworn or take his seat during the year, and he was discharged by the court at the August sessions, in 1703.—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 84. The North Ward does not appear to have had an aldermanic representative on the bench during the year, but the confidence in Provost on the part of his fellow citizens is shown by his election as alderman for six terms in succession beginning in 1703.—M. C. C., II: 253, 271, 286, 306. He died, however, before his term of office (South Ward) in 1704, it is not his name, but that of John Corbett, which appears on the list of elected officials (M. C. C., II: 202).

Evert Beyvanske (see Sept. 29, 1702) having refused to render "an Account of the Receipts and the public Moneys of the same by him Received during the time he was Treasurer thereof together with the Books Accounts and other papers and writings," the common council orders that a lawsuit be commenced against him "to Oblige him to Accr for the same." —M. C. C., II: 208–9. See Jan. 15, 1703.

The general accounts of the province show a payment of £110 to "Rob Cunnock Cockswhaine of her Majesties Barge for ye Salaries for him self & the rest of the Barge crew." —Entered in Conveyances, Liber XXX (register's office).

Rev. George Keith preaches again at the request of Rev. Mr. Verey of Trinity Church (see Sept. 30), and dines with Cornbury at Fort Henry.—From Keith's letter of Nov. 29 to the Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts, in \textit{Doc. Hist. N. Y.} (410 ed.), III: 251. Keith was the second minister of the Church of England sent over by this society, the first having been Rev. Patrick Gordon, who, earlier in 1703, went to Jamaica, L. L., and died there soon afterward.—\textit{Ecles. Rec.}, III: 1452.

Rev. John Talbot writes from New York that a convention of seven clergymen has been held "at the instance and charge of Gov. Nicholson of Virginia, to consider ways and means to propagate the Gospel. He has some of the present State and the Church in these parts" has been drawn upon. He states "We have great need of a bishop here to visit all the Churches, to ordain some, to confirm others, and bless all." —\textit{Doc. Hist. N. Y.} (410 ed.), III: 251; \textit{Ecles. Rec.}, III: 1507.

William Carter and James Evetts petition the governor and council that a chimney be erected on the custom-house.—\textit{Col. Hist. MSs., Eng.}, 301. On Dec. 24, Mr. Evetts presented his account for the work.—\textit{Ibid.}, 305.

The queen signs a commission to Richard Jugoldyke to be lieutenant-governor of New York.—\textit{N. Y. Col. Docs., IV:} 1002. Regarding its reception, from him, and the queen's revocation of it, see March, 1704; Apr. 11, 1705; Sept. 17, 1706.

The legislature passes "An Act for the better Setting the Militia of this Province and making it more useful for the Security and Defence thereof and for the Repealing of all former Acts heretofore made in this Province Respecting to the Same." Its preamble is the same as that of the last Militia Act, of May 6, 1691 (p.v). Although the act of 1691 is repealed, most of its provisions are reaffirmed in nearly the same language. The draft age is fixed between 16 and 60 years inclusive, and the new law supplies regulations for listing the youth as they come to the age of 16 years. This law specifically asserts that it is not to be construed "to allow of a Negro, or to any Indian Slave or Servant to be Listed or to do duty in the Militia of this Province." It provides also that three clubs shall elapse after any offence before suit or seizure of the offender's goods. When the legislature passes an act to raise and pay men for the defence of the frontier, the captains shall detach as many men of their companies as required by the captains-general and other superior officers to leave "a Note in writing at their respective Houses or last place of abode Signifying when & where they shall appear ten days Inclusive . . .," under penalty of $6 for failure so to appear, which shall be recovered by court proceedings and given to the person summarily served in pursuance of the offender.—\textit{Col. Laws N. Y.}, I: 500–7. This law was extended by successive recurrences, until repealed by a new Militia Act on July 27, 1721 (q.v.).

The common council having represented to the general assembly that, in the recent "Calamities Distemper," the number and needs of the poor have greatly increased, an act is passed for their better support.—\textit{Col. Laws N. Y.}, I: 507.

Four "bellmen" or watchmen are appointed, whose duty is to go "Every hour in the Night through the several Streets of this City, and publish the time of Night and also to Apprehend all disturbers of the peace Felons &c also to take Care that No Damage be done in the City by fire or other Casualties." They are to be paid £44 for their services from Nov. 1, 1702, to April 1, 1703, and are to be provided with "A Lanthorn Bell and Hour Glass" in the city's expense.—M. C. C., II: 299–10. See Oct. 17, 1706.

The governor's council issues a warrant to pay Michael Hawdoun, a tavern-keeper (see Sept. 24, 1700), for the rent of his house by the assembly.—\textit{Cal. Coun. Min.}, 177. Another warrant was issued for the same purpose on July 11, 1703.—\textit{Ibid.}, 186. The occasional occupation of taverns for the regular meetings of the assembly was the practice until 1704.—See June 27, 1704.

The common council orders "that the Arms of the Late Earl of Bellmorom and Capt. Nauniff which are fastened in the Wall of the City Hall be by the Marshall of this City forthwith pulled down and broken that the Wall be filled up," etc.—M. C. C., II: 212—See March 17, 1701.

The officials of the East Ward who were returned as elected (M. C. C., II: 202) are declared by the common council irregularly chosen and a different set "sworne into the respective Offices." This action was taken in consequence of the report, rendered by a committee that "Inspected and scrutiny'd the Voices," to the effect that Isaac de Riemer and the other officials returned as elected received the votes of 19 persons whose dwellings were in the North Ward, but who voted in the East.—M. C. C., II: 211–12. The evidence Anne Westminister a name of the Charter's clerk &c fails to be in any other charter.—\textit{Col. Laws N. Y.}, I: 516. See also \textit{Hist. of Trin. Church}, I: 137. The commission of this date, elaborately engrossed on two large sheets of parchment, its ornamental border having in the upper left-hand corner a beautifully drawn portrait of Queen Anne (see PI. 27, Vol. IV), is now owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. It was purchased on Nov. 1, 1706 (for $500), and presented to the society by six of its members, together with Cornbury's instructions (two documents, both dated Jan. 29, 1705, q.v.), and the original box which contained them (a wooden box, about 11 in. long, 8 in. wide, and 2 in. deep, covered with old tacked calf-skin, and lined with red-and-white figured paper).

Although no attempt has hitherto been made in this Chronology to give more than a very brief reference to governors' commissions or instructions, a fuller digest of the contents of this hitherto unpublished document and the accompanying "Institution" might be found interesting. As Prof. Andrews, op. cit., observes: "The commissions and instructions issued not only to the royal governors, but to the proprietary governors also, are among the most important constitutional documents of the colonial history. In the case of the two province especially they formed the chief constitutional basis of the Government and became "The governor's commission was issued under the great seal. It is a long document couched in general phrases, and it under- went several changes during the month of December."

"The instructions are more important than the commissions, for they are specific and not general, and contain, when studied chronologically, a complete exposition ofBritish policy. They were prepared in the plantation office, as a rule, but frequently under the direction of other hands of the council and the secretary of state. They were customarily submitted to the attorney general, and certain parts of them went to the treasury, the admiralty, the commissioners of customs, and the Bishop of London for inspection and criticism. Frequently these same boards and individuals were invited to make suggestions, and did so, particularly the commissioners of customs and the bishop, and they and others were in the habit also of making proposals on their own account, which were submitted in the form of drafts. Most of the trade instructions were drawn up by the treasury or the customs commissioners, and many additional instructions originated with the privy council or the secretary of state.

"An interesting feature of this early process of drawing up the governor's instructions is the advice obtained from unofficial sources. A rough draft of the instrument was generally submitted to the appointee, if in England, and he was invited to send in recommendations and to suggest changes and improvements. In one case a prospective governor was allowed to search the files of the plantation office that he might post himself on the affairs of the colony...

"The governor generally took his instructions with him when he sailed for the colony. The governor did not publish the instructions as he did the commission, and as a rule did not make them known even to his council. He might read one or more clauses in his address to the assembly, and such would be printed in the sessional papers or, may be, found in the proceedings of the assembly as kept by the clerk. In fact, the instructions were secret orders, intended only for the governor's use as the guide to his administration..."

Queen Anne's commission to Cornbury, written without paragraphs or punctuation, and in the old English style of en-grossed lettering, difficult to decipher, has been skillfully transcribed by an expert on colonial land grants, Mr. Aloys Maier, for the purpose of establishing in court that Cornbury had power to grant land with whatever quit-rents he saw fit, not being limited in any way, as has been claimed; also for the purpose of establishing the fact that patents for these bonds were required by the Law. From the typewritten carbon-copy of this transcription, owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc., the following digest of the commission has been prepared. Separating the various subjects into paragraphs, for clearness, the document begins...

"Anne by the Grace of God of England Scotland France and Ireland Queen of the Faith &c To Our right Tributary and Wee beloved Edward Hyde Comonely called Lord Cornbury Greet-

"Wee reposing especiall trust and Confidence in the prudence Courage and loyalty of you the said Lord Comonby of our especial Grace certain knowledge and meer moose have thought fit to Constitute and appoint and by these presents doe Constitut and appoint you the said Lord Comonby to be Our Captain General and Governor in Cheife in and over our Province of New York and the Territories depending therin in America

"And Wee do hereby require and command you to doe and execute all things in due manner that shall belong unto your said Command and the trust Wee have reposed in you according to the severall powers and directions granted or appointed you by this present Commission and the Instructions and Authorities herein given you..."

"These are: 1, "the oaths appointed by Act of Parliament to be taken instead of the Oathes of Allegiance and Supremacy"; 2, "the Oath mentioned in the Act entitled an Act to declare the alteration in the Oath appointed to be taken by the Act entitled "An Act for the further security of his Majesty's forts and places, and the Crown and the Succession of the Crown in the protestant line and for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales and all other pretendors and their open and secret abettors and for declaring the association to be determined," also, 3, "the Test mentioned in the Act of Parliament of the 21st of the reign of King Charles the Second entitled an Act for preventing dangers which may happen from Popish recusants;" together with, 4, "an Oath for the due execution of the Office and Trust of our Captain General and Governor in Cheife in and over our said Province of New York and the Territories depending theron as well with regard to the equal and impartial Administration of Justice in all Causes that shall come before you as otherwise;" and likewise, 5, "the Oath required to be taken by Governors of plantations to doe their utmost that the laws relating to the plantations be observed." All these oaths "our Council of our said Province or any three of the members thereof have hereby full power and authority and are required to administer unto you and in absence of our Lieutenant Governor if there be any upon the Place. Cornbury is required to administer the same to each member of the house of burgesses, and to the Governor the oaths numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4 in the above summary.

The queen gives Cornbury "full Power and Authority to Suspend any of the members of our said Council from sitting, voicing and assisting therein," if he finds just cause for so doing.

Three councillors shall constitute a quorum. In case of a vacancy in the council, due to death, departure from the province, suspension, or otherwise, Cornbury is required to "signify the same unto us by the first opportunity that We may under our Signet and Signo Manuall constitute and appoint others in their Sted."

But that our affairs at that distance may not suffer for want of a number of Councillors if ever it shall happen that there be less than seven of them residing in our said Province, authority is given to him "to choose as many persons out of the Privycall Freetholders Inhabitants thereof as will make up the full number of our said Council to be seven and noe more." Such appointees shall be councillors until confirmed by the queen or others are appointed "under our Signe manuall and Signett.

"Power and authority are given to Cornbury, "with the advice and Consent of our said Council from time to time as need shall require to summon and call general assemblies of the said freetholders and Planters" with all the power of the lieutenant governor and the governor in chief, for the governance of this province. The persons, "thereupon duly elected by the major part of the freetholders of the respective Counties and Places and so returned," having taken the oaths before sitting (those numbered 1, 2, and 3 in the enumeration given above), "shall be called and held the General Assembly of that our Province and Territories depending thererin in America.

In order that he, with the advice of the council and assembly (or the majority of each), shall have full power and authority "to make constitute and ordaine Laws Statutes and ordinances for the Publick welfare and good Government of our said Province... and for the benefit of us our Heires and Successors" (which laws are not to be repugnant but agreeable to the laws of England), it is provided that such laws, statutes, and ordinances shall be transmitted to the queen ("under our Seale of New York"), within three months after they are made, for her approbation or disallowance, and the approbation of them shall be by the advice of the general assembly. To case any of them are "disallowed and not approved," and Cornbury or the commander-in-chief of the province, is so informed by "us our Heires or Successors under our or their Signe Manuall and Signett or by order of our or their Privy Council, those so disallowed shall be the power and Authority of us our Heires and Successors... void and of none effect," that "nothing may be passed or done by our said Council or assembly to the prejudice of us our Heires or Successors," Cornbury is allowed "a negative voice" in the making and passing of all laws, statutes, and ordinances; and he may likewise, from time to time, as be shall judge necessary, "adjoin prorogue and dissolve all General Assemblies of the Generall Assembly..."

Dec. 5

He is empowered, as is also anyone authorized by him, to administer "the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy" to residents of the province.

He is authorized, with the advice and consent of the council, to establish "Courts of Judicature and publick Justice," both criminal and civil, according to law and equity; also to appoint fit persons to be Justices of the Peace for the several parts of his government to administer the said justice; numbered 1, 2, and 3 in the above enumeration; to appoint judges, and, in requisite cases, "Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, Justices of the Peace and other necessary officers and ministers in our said Province for the better administration of Justice and putting the Laws into execution," and to administer or cause to be administered any and all lawful and proper orders, records, and laws, and to give pardoning power in criminal cases, and power to remit fines and forfeitures, "in all cases in which he may grant reprieves "until and to the intent our Royal pleasure may be known therein."

And Wee doe by these presents authorize and empower you to collate any person or persons to any Churches, Chappells or other Ecclesiastical Benefits within our province and territory asforesaid as often as any of them shall happen to be void." He and the "Captaine Commanders" authorized by him are given full power and authority "to levy Armes muster command and employ all persons whatsoever residing within our said province of New Yorke and other the territories under your Government and as occasion shall serve them to transfer from one place to another for the resisting and withstanding of all Enemies Pirates and Revolters of your said Land and to employ them to any of our plantations in America if necessity shall require for the defence of the same against the invasion or attempts of any of our Enemies and such Enemies Pirates and Rebels if there shall be occasion to pursue and prosecute in or out of the limits of our said province or plantations or any of them and if it shall please God to vanquish apprehend and take and being taken either according to law to put to death or keep and preserve alive at your discreet and to execute Martial Law in time of invasion insurrection or war and to doe and execute all and every other thing and things which to our Captaine Generall and Governor in Chief doth or ought of right to belong.

He is also given full power and authority "to erect raise and build . . . such and so many fortres and platforms castles cities borough towns and fortifications" as he, with the council's advice and consent, shall judge necessary; and to fortify and furnish them with "Ordinance Ammunition and all sorts of arms fitt and necessary" for the security and defence of the provinces also "to demolish or dismantle" any of them as may be most convenient.

Inasmuch as "divers mutinies and disorders may happen by persons shipped and employed at Sea during the me of warr," Cornbury is authorized "to constitute and appoint Captaine Lieutenant and other Comander in chief of the Hundred Shore Townes and other cities which shall be or may be considered as places of great danger and necessary" to the security and safety of the province for the execution of his office. And to grant them commissions "to execute the law martial during the time of Warr and to use such proceedings authorities punishment coercen and execucion upon any offender or offenders which shall be manifestly seditious disorderly or any way unruly either at Sea or during the time of their abode or residence in any of the Ports harbours or bayes of our said province," excepting "any Captaine Comander Lieutenant Master officer seaman sol-"dier or person whatever who shall be in actual service and pay in or on board any of our ships of Warr or other vessels acting by immediate commission or warrant from our High Admirall of England under the Seal of our Admiralty;" such captain, command-er, etc., so offending, "to be proceeded against and tried as the merits of their offences shall require either by commission under our great seal of England as the Statute of the Twenty eighth of Henry the Eighth directes or by commission from our High Admirall of England or from our Commissors for executing the office of our High Admirall of England for the time being according to the Act of Parliament passed in the thirteenth year of the reign of the late king Charles the Second enstituted an Act for establishing articles and orders for the regulating and better government of his majesties Navy's Ship of War and forces by sea;" provided, nevertheless, that when disorders and misdemeanours are committed on shore by any such captain, etc., the offender "may be tried and punished according to the laws of the place where any such dis- orders offences and misdemeanors shall be so committed;" notwithstanding such offender is in actual service on a ship of war, or other vessel, by commission of the high admiral, and he "shall not receive any protection for the avoiding of Justice for such offences com-mitted on shore from pretence of his being employed in our service at Sea."

All "publick moneys" raised in the province and the territories depending upon it shall "be issued out by Warrant" from Gov. Cornbury with the advice and consent of the council, and disposed of by him "for the support of the Government and not otherwise."

He is given power and authority, with the advice and consent of the council, "to settle and agree with the inhabitants of our province and territories aforesaid for such lands tenements and hereditaments as now are or hereafter shall be in our power to dis- pose of, and to grant them to any persons for such terms and under such moderate quit-rents, services, etc., to be reserved unto us" as Cornbury (with the council's consent) shall think fit. Such grants shall be sealed with "our Seale of New Yorke," and when recorded "shall be good and effectual in law against us our heires and successors."

He is given power, with the advice and consent of the council, to appoint "faires marts and markets;" also ports, harbours, bays, havens, etc. for the convenience and security of shipping.

All officers, etc., both civil and military, and all inhabitants, are commanded "to be obedient aiding and assisting" to Lord Cornbury in the execution of this commission. In case of his death or absence from the province, they are to be likewise obedient to "our Lieutenant governor or Comander in chief," and to him is given, "by these presents," all the powers and authorities granted, "to be performed and enjoyed during our pleasure or until your arrival within our said province and territories." If, in the event of Cornbury's death or absence "out of our City Province and Territories," there is no person "upon the place" commissioned or appointed "by us" to be lieutenant-governour or commander-in-chief, "the then present Council of our said Province do take upon them the administration of the government and execute this commission . . . ," and such councillor who, at the time of Cornbury's death or absence, shall be residing within the province ("and nominated by our instruc- tions to you"); before any other at that time residing there, "doe preside in our said Council with such powers and preeminences as may be necessary in these circumstances for the due and orderly carrying on the publick Service to the administration of the government as aforesaid until our pleasure be further known or unto your arrival."

Lastly, Cornbury is to execute and enjoy the office of "Cap- taine Generall and Governor in Chief in and over our Province of New York and the Territories depending thereon . . . ." As there are "divers colonies adjoyning to our Province of New York for the defence and security whereof it is requisite that due care be taken in the time of war," Lord Cornbury is appointed "Captaine Generall and Commander in Chief of the Militia and of all the forces by sea and land within our colonies of Connecticut and of East and West New Jersey and of all our foarts and places of strength within the same;" and, for this purpose, he is given (or, in his absence, the commander-in-chief of the province is given) "all and every the like powers as in these presents are before granted and recited for the ruling governing and ordering our Militia and all our foarts and places of strength within our province of New York . . . ."

"In Witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made Patents Witness our Selfe at Westminster the 7th day of December in the first year of our reign." (The great seal of England attached.)

For Cornbury's instructions, see Jan. 29, 1703.

The aged Peter Peirce, minister of the French congregation, is granted a pension of £6o by Cornbury and council, in response to his petition, in which he recites that Bellomont ordered a yearly pension to be given to Vesey and himself, to May 1, 1699, out of the revenues of the province.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4th ed.), II: 250. See Sept. 2, 1704. Dec. 13, 1709.

Cornbury describes, in a letter to the lords of trade, the difficulty of communication with England: "I intrest your Lordship to consider that but few ships goe directly from this port to Eng- land, So that I must depend upon the Boston and Philadelphia Posts for conveying my letters to such ships as may be going to England; And some times both those Courreys fail." N. Y.; Col. Docs., IV: 1057.
The council orders that a proclamation issue forbidding the distilling of rum in New York City, or within a mile of the city hall.—Cal. Coun. Min., 177. See Dec. 24, 1703, and June 19, 1703.

The chaplain and surgeon (probably of the troops) reside in the fort, as appears from a council order of this day to supply furniture for their lodgings there.—Cal. Coun. Min., 177.

The common council resolves to petition Gov. Carbury to recommend to the Bishop of London, in behalf of the city, "to send Over Sider Lith a person of good learning of plious life and Venial Conversation of English Extract and of good and mild temper" to be schoolmaster. There is no person in the present qualified and available to take the position. The governor is also to be requested "to Recommend the further Encouragement of the said free school to the society for propagating the Gospel in foreign parts;" and likewise to recommend to the queen to "Appropriate A parte of the . . . Kings farme lying within this City for the further Encouragement of the said free school."—M. C. C., II: 215. This address, duly drafted and approved by the common council on Jan. 15, 1703, received the act of Nov. 27 (for this purpose), and stated that it was doubtful whether either this or "the Neighbouring Countries" could supply New York with the desired person for schoolmaster.—Ibid., II: 215-16.

Benjamin Faneuil, in a petition to the governor and council, states that he has purchased a building for distilling rum from molasses, on the marsh of the Fresh Water, and asks permission to continue this business, notwithstanding the recent proclamation (see Dec. 18, 1702), and to erect a wharf on the waterside.—Cal. Hist., MSS., Eng., 704.

"Christian Design" (a carpenter) is paid £100 "for work done and materials provided by him for the Publicke Building in her Majesties Fort at New York."—Conveyances, Liber XXX, unnumbered p. 92.

In the same general accounts of the province, is a payment of £35912s.2d. "for y° making of a chimney in the Custom house where there was none before."—Ibid., 1703

A census of the city of New York was taken "about the year 1705." It shows the names of 818 "Masters of Families," by city wards; and the number of "Males from 16 to 60," of "females," of male children and of female children, respectively, of male and female negroes, and male and female negro children, respectively, and "all above 60." The total number of these inhabitants was 4,456. This number is computed; 800 of the totals for the different family enumerations appear in the record.—Dec. Hist. N. Y., 410 ed. I: 395-97. The same figure for the total population is given in A Century of Population, 11. See also the same or a similar census list in Valentine's Hist. City of N. Y. (1833), 344-95. This census shows an apparent loss in population since that of 1690 (p. 7). The census of 1690 (p. 7-xii) shows 7.578 people in the province.

Elias Neau calls the attention of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts to the great number of slaves in New York who are "without God in the world," and of whose souls there is "no manner of care taken." He proposes the appointment of a catechist to undertake their instruction. "He himself finally being prevailed upon to accept this position obtained a license from the Governor [see Aug. 4, 1704], resigned his position as elder in the French church and confirmed to the Established Church of England, . . . He was later licensed by the Bishop of London."—Jour. of Negro History, ed. by Carter G. Woodson (1916), I: 276, citing Passmore's The Records of the S. P. G., 55-57. For earlier references to Elias Neau, see the order of the provincial council on Sept. 7, 1699 (Cal. Coun. Min., 142), and his enrollment as a voter on Sept. 29, 1701 (M. C. C., II: 174, 177). See also An Account of the Emissaries Used by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts to Propagate the Negro Slaves in New York. Together with Two of Bp. Gibson's Letters on that Subject (n. d.), an extract, now very scarce, from Dr. Humphrey's Historical Account of the Incorporated Society from its foundation to 1718 (London, 1730).

At this time, Benjamin Wynkoop, silversmith, was living in the city. Between 1700 and 1713, he served as collector and assessor at various times. For information regarding his life, and descriptions and illustrations of his work, see Met. Museum of Art Catalogue of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South, with note on early New York silversmiths by R. T. Haines Halsey (1911), 65-67.

Inventories of this year mention "8 leather chairs very old," and "a large elbow leather chair £24." The high value placed on these latter leads authorities to think that they were of the fine Spanish leather variety.—Lockwood, Colonial Furniture in Am. (1901), 134, 146. Leather chairs, as first used in Europe, were really of Italian design, coming to England through Holland during the Commonwealth. The colonists were unable to Holland may have used them even before this time.—Ibid., 134.

The consistency of the Dutch Church agrees to sell the poorhouse (which stood at the present No. 34 Broad St.) to Frantz van Dyck. This purchase seems not to have been completed, for, in Sept. 1709 (?), the consistory record reads: "The Poor House in the Schape Wyts, which was sold to Isaac Kip was deeded to him."—Church Records, Liber 41. See *Eccles. Rec., III.: 1820; Castello Plan, II: 249-57; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 953.

The common council orders that, "for the better Encouragement of the Ferry of this City," a petition he made to the governor and council for a grant of "all the Vacant Land from High water to Low water Markie fronting the harbour of this City from the Red hooke upon Nassaw Island to the Wallaought . . . for the better and more convenient taking in and conveying people to and from the Lading Passenger's Cargo's" be considered. This petition was passed upon by "this Court" on Feb. 15, and entered in the minutes.—Ibid., II: 221-22. An order was issued on it by the governor and council on March 11.—Cal. Coun. Min., 180; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 306. But a caveat of the town of Brooklyn against a patent to the city of New York was discussed in the council on Mar. 25, special attorneys appearing for each side.—Cal. Coun. Min., 181. There were other hearings on April 17 and 22 (ibid., 182, 183); and evidently the patent did not issue at that time.—See Jan. 23, and March 5, 1708.

The common council orders the clerk to deliver to William Armstrong (see Oct. 14) —clerk of the committee of the public accounts—the "Booke of Accr of Mr. Evert Beyevanke late Treasurer of this City" (see Sept. 29, 1700).—M. C. C., II: 247.

George Clarke's deputation and instructions as deputy auditor of revenues in New York are signed and sealed. On March 29, further instructions were issued to him, and Abraham Depuyaster's commission as such officer is revoked.—Biblioway's Jour. (transcript), I: 119.

Queen Anne signs "Instructions for Edward Hyde Esq" commonly called Lord Corshury (Sea and Heir apparent to y° Marquess of Clarendon) on his appointment as Governor and in Chief of Our Province of New York and the Territories depending thereon in America." The original document, comprising 28 pages, legibly written, signed, as usual, at the top of the first page, "Anne K," and on the last page, "AR," and sealed with the royal seal, is owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. These instructions, in 100 paragraphs, briefly stated are:

With the instructions Corshury will receive "Our Commision under Our Great Seal of England" (see Dec. 5, 1702). He is to take upon himself "the execution of the place and Trust" reposed in him, and "forthwith to call together the Members of our Council for that Province."

He is, "with all due and usual Solemity to cause Our said Commission under Our Great Seal of England . . . to be read and published at the Said meeting of Our Council."

After this, the governor shall himself take, and administer to each of the council members, "the Oaths appointed by act of Parliament to be taken instead of the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy . . . as also the Test . . . together with an Oath for the due execution of your and their places and Trusts, as well with regard to the equal and impartial Administration of Justice in all causes relating to the Colonists."

As the inhabitants of the province "have of late years been unapplably divided, and by their Emnity to each other Our Service
1664-1763

The governor is ordered to examine the "capacity and behaviour" of officers "granted under the great seal of England," and to report thereon to the crown.

All the goods and money taken from pirates are to be safely secured, until he has received instructions for their disposal.

The laws of England regarding pirates and trials for piracy are to be strictly enforced.

Cornbury is to send a detailed account of all courts, their officers, powers, fees, etc.

A court of exchequer is to be called, in order that the queen's "rights and dues be preserved and recovered, and that speedy and effectual justice be administered in all cases relating to our revenue."

All the inhabitants, "except papists," are to be permitted liberty of conscience.

An annual report of the population is to be sent to England, together with an account of the number "fitt to bear Arms in the Militia."

All "Planters & Christian Servants" are to be provided with arms, and trained in the use of them, so that they may be ready to defend the province in case of need.

Military law is not to be established without permission from England.

The colonists are ordered to draw up a law for punishing mutiny and desertion and for "the better preserving of good Discipline amongst . . . Soldiers."

Upon application made by ships of war for additional seamen, the governor is to see that such ships be furnished with the number necessary for good service.

Cornbury is warned not to exercise, too extensively, his power of suspending commanders of warships.

He is to demand an account of all the arms, ammunition, and stores received or bought at New York, and to send a report of the disposition of them, together with an inventory of all such stores now in the garrisons of the province.

He is likewise to send an exact account of all the goods and ships that enter the port.

The parliamentary acts concerning trade and navigation are to be put into execution in order that all illegal trade may be stopped.

Cornbury is to take special care "that God Almighty be devoutly and duly Served . . . the Book of Common prayer, as by Law established, read each Sunday & Holyday, and the blessed Sacrament administered according to the rites of the Church of England . . . that the Churches already built there be well and orderly kept, and that more be built as the Colony shall by God's blessing be improved, and that besides a Competent maintenance to be assigned to the Minister of each Orthodox Church, a convenient house be built at the Common charge for each Minister, and a competent proportion of Land assigned him for a Glebe, and exercise of his Industry."

No minister is to be assigned to an ecclesiastical benefice unless he has "a certificate from . . . the Bishop of Lond n, of his being conformable to the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church of England, and of a good life and conversation."

A schoolmaster without a license from the Bishop of London is not to be allowed to teach in the province.

A "Table of Marriages, established by the Canons of the Church of England," is to be hung up in every church and duly observed.

"Drunkenness and debauchery Swearing and blasphemy" are to be "discountenanced & punished."

Merchants, who bring trade to the province, or in any way "contribute to the advantage thereof, and in particular to the Royall African Company of England," are to be invited to settle at New York.

An annual account of the number of negroes shipped, and of the rates of shipping is to be made to England.

The governor is also to give, from time to time, a general report of the province, its products, needs, improvements, etc.

A law "for the restraining of any inhumanity, and cruelty, which by ill masters or Overseers may be used towards their Christian 1703 Servants and their Slaves, and that the willfull killing of Indians and Negroes may be punished with death," is recommended to be passed.

Cornbury is directed to use every means "to facilitate and encourage the conversion of Negroes and Indians to the Christian Religion." He is "to provide for the raising of Stocks and building of publick warehouses in convenient places for the employing of poor and indigent people." He is to call upon the neighbouring provinces for the money which the King, in William III ordered them to raise to help build forts on the frontiers of New York, and also to recommend to the New York assembly that provision be made for "what further shall be requisite for repairing erecting and maintaining of such Forts." In case the frontiers should ever be in danger, the neighbouring provinces are to be called upon for specified numbers of men to help in their defence.

The forts at Albany and Schenectady are to be kept in good repair, as well as new ones built.

Cornbury is to transmit, as soon as possible, a report of all the forts and fortifications in Connecticut as well as in New York. He is "not to suffer any Innovation within the River of New York, nor any goods to pass up the Same, but what Shall have paid the duties at New York, to the end the chief benefit of that Trade shall be preserved to the Inhabitants and Traders of New York and Albany." He is to call upon the Five Nations to renew "their Submission to Our Government," and to assure them "that wee will protect them as Our Subjects against the French King and his Subjects." He is to prepare an account "of what goods, Arms and other stores &c have been Sent from hence to the last two Governors to be distributed as presents to the five Nations of Indians aforesaid, and how the Same have been distributed." As the queen has been informed that New York "dos abound with Vast Numbers of Pine trees proper for the production of pitch and Tarr . . . and that there are likewise great Numbers of Oaks and other Timber Trees fit for Beams, planks and other uses in Our Navy Royal and it being highly for Our Service and the advantage of this Kingdom that all Sorts of Naval Stores be as much as possible produced in Our Plantations in America, and from thence imported hither," Cornbury is directed to apply his "utmost care and diligence towards the promoting of So necessary a work." He is to see that no person keep any press for printing nor that any books or pamphlet or other matters whatsoever be printed without a license, as "great inconveniences may arise by the liberty of printing."

The queen ends by saying that she considers "the good of Our plantations and the improvement of the Trade thereof, by a Strict and punctual observance of the Several Laws in force concerning the Same, to be of So great importance to the benefit of this Our Kingdom and to the advancing of the duties of Our Custome," any failure in the observance of those laws within New York, due to Cornbury's neglect, will be looked upon as a breach of the trust reposed in him and be punished "with the loss of your place in that Government, and Such further marks of Our displeasure as Wee Shall judge reasonable to be inflicted upon you."

Additional orders and instructions to Cornbury, bearing the same date as the foregoing, and forming a separate document of 50 pages of manuscript (64 leaves), accompany the "Instruc- tions" that is part of the Cornbury items purchased and presented to the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (see Dec. 5, 1702). This document, in the same handwriting as the "Instructions," begins, likewise, with the royal seal and signature, and bears the title: "Orders and Instructions to Edward Hyde Esq' commonly called Lord Cornbury, and his Appear to the Earle of Clarendon) Our Captain General and Governor in Chief of Our Province of New York in America; And in his Absence to the commander in Chief of the Said Province for the time being, in pursuance of Several Laws relating to the Trade and Navigation of this Our Kingdom of England, and Our Colonies and Plantations in America." He was director on the 26th day of January, 1702 [5]. In the first year of Our Reign." These provisions are as follows:

1. Gov. Cornbury shall inform himself of "the Principal Laws relating to the Plantation Trade." These laws are enumerated by titles. He is required to "take a Solemn Oath" to do his utmost to cause these acts of parliament to be observed.

2. He shall take care that no person "be appointed by him under the "Act for the Encouragement of Trade," shall give security for faithful performance of their duty.

3. 4. 5. and 6. He shall see that the "Act of Navigation," which restricts shipping to British-bred vessels, with certain exceptions, and requires bonds of shippers, is enforced in this province in certain details, for the regulation of plantation trade and the prevention of frauds.

7. He shall, "every three Months or oftener, or otherwise as there shall be opportunity of Conveyance to England, transmit to the Commissioner of the Customs in England a List of all Ships and Vessels Trading in Our Said Province of New York according to the form and Specimen herewith Sent to you;" and he shall cause demand to be made of every Master at his Clearing of an Invoice of the Contents & Quality of his Lading . . . .

8 and 9. Whereas by the aforesaid Act for the Encouragement of Trade, no Commodity of the Growth, production or Manufacture of Europe, except Salt for the Fishery of New England and Newfound land, Wines of the Growth of 6th Maderas or Western Islands or Azores, Servants and Horses from Scotland or Ireland, and all Sorts of Virtuables of the Growth and production of Scot- land and Ireland, shall be imported into any of Our Colonies or Plantations, but what shall be Bona fide and without fraud Laden and Shipped in England, Wales or at Berwick and in Ships duly qualified; You shall use your utmost Endeavours for the due observance thereof . . . .

9. This order provides against forged certificates of English lading.

10. He shall "not make nor allow of any By Laws, Usages, or Customs in Our Said Province of New York, which are repug- nant to any of the Laws herein before mentioned, . . . .

11. He shall "be aiding and Assisting to the Collector and our Officers appointed, or that shall hereafter be appointed by the Commissioners of the Customs in England, by and under the Authority and direction of the Lord high Treasurer of England or Commissioners of the Treasury in England . . . in putting in Execution the Several Acts of Parliament be fore mentioned . . . .

12. In case of actions at law, on any law or statute "concerning Our Duties, or Ships or Goods to be forfeited, by reason of any unlawful Importations or exportations," the jury shall be com- posed of natives of England, Ireland, or the plantations.

13. If he shall "discover that any persons or their Assigns claiming any right or Property in the Island of New York, or any Island or Islands upon the Continent of America, by Charter or Letters Patents, shall at any time hereafter Alien, Sell or dispose of any of the Said Islands Tracts of Land or Properties, other than to the Natural born Subjects of England, Ireland Wales or Berwick without the License and consent of Us, Our Heirs and Successors, Signed by Our or their Order in Council first had and obtained," he is commanded to "give Notice thereof to Us, Our heirs and Suc- cessors or to the Lord high Treasurer of England or Commissioners of the Treasury in England . . . .

14. He shall "take care that all places of Trust in the Courts of Law or what relates to the Treasury of Our Said Province of New York to be in the hands of the Native born Subjects of England or Ireland or the Plantations.

15. Persons of "known Loyalty, Experience, Diligence, and Fidelity" shall be appointed to fill vacancies in office.

16. He shall "from time to time to recommend to the Com- missioners of Our Customs in England," and advise them regarding negligence of customs officials, etc.

17. He shall enforce certain provisions of the "Act for pre- venting frauds and regulating abuses in the Plantation Trade," particularly with reference to the registry of ships, prize ships etc.

18. He shall also enforce certain provisions of an "Act to prevent the exportation of Wool out of Our Kingdoms of Ireland and England into foreign parts, and for the encouragement of the Wool Manufactures in Our Kingdom of England . . . .

19. Likewise, he shall put his care into duties upon sweets, vinegar, wines, etc. and the shipment of tobacco in casks (the full text of which forms part of this instruction).
Gerardus Beeckman petitions the common council "for A Feb. Grant of A slip of Ground in Queen Street in Order to make A Publick Slip," and a committee is appointed to examine the subject.—M. C. C., II: 220. What appears to be the original MS. of this petition, although not dated, is filed with the "Misc. MSS." in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. It shows: "That adjoining to his Land fronting to Queen-street there lyes A small slip of Land belonging to the City thereto whereof the aforesaid petition would be sufficient in breadth for A street or slip but at the south end thereof it Comes to nothing abutting upon the Land of Coull. Courtland as by A small draft thereof hereto annexed will appear. See that to make A Convenient Slip there must be Added as much of the adjoyning citizens land as the City hath there vacant, which your petition would be very willing to Comply with on Condition that the City would ley yr slip at their own Charge and grant him the Land before his Lott to Lowwater mark if any belonging to yr City." Only a fragment of the draft of the land is enclosed with the petition. The common council rejected the petition on April 22 (M. C. C., II: 253), but it was renewed with modifications on May 26 (ibid., II: 255), and granted on July 16. With this decision, the common council made an order appropriating a slip of ground "between the two Slaughter houses in Queen Street" for a public slip "for the use of the Corporation for Ever."—Ibid., III: 237. The grant was not executed, however, at this time, and on April 17, 1719, Beeckman made application again.—Ibid., III: 200-1. The committee, then appointed to survey and lay out the land, made its report on April 24, 1723, when, again, the Mayor was directed to execute the grant under the seal of the city.—Ibid., III: 255-6. The ground between "Fence and Deacons of the Dutch Church in this City, before the date of the said Charter, having kitherto been Contained, to yr use of yr Said Dutch Church" the petition being lately incorporated by charter, for yr Worship of God according to the Church of England, as by Law Established, the principal inhabitants having Contributed largely towards the Erecting of yr Said Church and the assembly having provided for yr minister thereof 100 lb. & ann. towards his maintenance Levied by tax upon the inhabitants thereof as parochial Minister, they therefore humbly pray, that towards keeping yr Church yard, and fences, in repair, and other incidental Charges.

"The Mayor, Recorder, Aldermen & Common council of the Said City, will be pleas'd to grant unto the said petitioners for yr use of Trinity Church the said burial place for Ever, under such regulations, as to them in their prudence shall seem meet and yr petition, as in duty bound Shall Ever pray &c." The petition bears 13 signatures, including "Willm Veseey Rector," "Tho: Weoham," etc.—From the original MS. preserved in metal file labelled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's card-room

It is endorsed "Grant'd Feb. 1709." The order of the common council concerning this grant stated that the burial-place was to be by them [the Rector, etc. Appointed for the publick Church yard and burial place of this City for Ever they & their successors always Keeping the same in good fence well Reverend and taking only for breaking of the ground for Each person from twelve years of Age and Upwards three Shillings and for each Child under twelve years of Age One Shilling and six pence And No other or greater duty Whatsoever for breaking the said ground And that Mr. Mayor Execute A Grant for the same Accordingly,—M. C. C., II: 221. The grant bears the date of Nov. 17, 1708, and conveys "the burying place of the said city Neer and Adjoining to the Government of Trinity Church on the West side of the broadway as it Now standeth in fence."—Ibid., II: 253; City Grants, Liber B: 47 (comptroller's office). There was a further grant in 1711.—See March 19, 1711. See also Loudmack Map Ref. Key, III: 927; and Pl. 174, Vol. III.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

The governor having received advices from England of the victory of the British fleet and forces against the French and Spanish at Vigo, Spain (in taking and destroying 17 French men-of-war, 17 Spanish galleons, and also in taking the town and castles of Vigo), as well as the success attending the Confederate arms in Flanders against the French and Spanish, the common council orders "that A publick bonfire be made this Night within this City att the usual place that ten Gallons of wine And A Barrell of Beer be also provided," at the city's expense, "to Drink to her Majesties health, the Prince's and success to her Majesties Arms." It was also ordered that notice be given to all the housekeepers of the city "that they make publick illuminations this Night as a further demonstration of their Joy for the said Victory.

—M. C., II: 231.

The cost of the bonfire, beer, and wine was $1015— Ibid., II: 231.

Sir Jeffrey Jeffreys, in England, proposes that packet-boats be established between the Isle of Wight and New York. He offers to furnish two ships, each of 150 tons, carrying 14 guns and 40 men, and all necessary orders that this article may be attended with. He also proposes that they make regular trips, carrying packets, passengers, and freight.

The charge for the undertaking is left for the consideration of "the Officers of the Navy and Post Office." The proposal has the queen's approval. — N.Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1030-31.

The lords of trade, however, see no benefit to the public unless the stay at New York is limited to five days. — Ibid., IV: 1031-32.

There is no record in these documents or elsewhere that this proposal was put into effect, even experimentally. We find, that, on July 17, 1708 (v.p.), Cornwall wrote to the board of trade: "I wish with all my heart that Packet Boats be Establisht to some part of this Continent." He described at that time the only ways then open for communication.

Francis Darwall petitions the common council for "A Grant of Confirmation of A Parcel of Land lying Near Mf. sacketts formerly Called the Cherry Garden which was bequeathed to her by her Grandfather Thomas Delavall merch'd deceased." A committee is appointed to have the land surveyed and a draught made. — M. C., II: 228. Cf. 1701; and June 4, 1701.

The new city hall not being completed, the common council meets during the winter "at the house of William Davis for the Common Council and Room and Fire which the said William Davis furnished .... A warrant for $20 to pay for the room and firewood is accordingly issued. — M. C., II: 229.

The tavern of William Davis (see July 31, 1700) stood at the present 65 Pearl St., next to the old Stadtherrgebe. The revenue of the ferry is appropriated toward finishing the city hall. — M. C., II: 230. See Jan. 11, 1699.

The common council orders "that Elias Desgrange moker who Came hither with his Excellency the Governor be made a Freeman of this Corporation Grant." — M. C., II: 231.

The tavern-keepers of the city of New York petition for compensation having had soldiers billeted on them. — Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 208.

The queen, at Westminster, gives a commission to George Clarke to be secretary of New York Province, in the place of Matthew Clarkson, deceased. — See Pages of George Clarke, Esq., to me, "well built for sailing and provided with such and such." He also proposed, and at the common council of his "Observations" previously referred to (see Nov. 6, 1701), showed that these charges were "after the Rate of" £500 per year, and "will not be allowed by my Lord Treasurer." — Col. Mss., XXII, 16 (Albany). The aud Duncan is the cause of his "Observations" generally referred to (see Nov. 6, 1701), showed that these charges were "after the Rate of" £500 per year, and "will not be allowed by my Lord Treasurer." — Col. Mss., XXII, 16 (Albany).

News is received that Mr. Bridges, the second justice (see June 11, 1703), is appointed to be chief justice now vacated. He was appointed in the month of April. — Col. Min., 181. See further, July 6, 1704.

The council meets at "Fort Anne." This is the first mention in the Journal of the change of name from Fort William to Henry to Fort Anne. — Jour. Leg. Coun., 1: 158-89.

Cornbury informs the members of his council: "since your Adjournment, I have received Information, that the French intend to attack this Place, by Sea this Summer." The best way to prevent this, he thinks, is to give two Electors of Guns at the Narrows, one on each Side. — Jour. Leg. Coun., 1: 190. After due consideration of the proposal by both the house of representatives and the council (Jour. Coun., 1: 163, 164-65, 170; Jour. Leg. Coun., 1: 185. Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 312), no act of the general assembly was passed on June 19 (p. 2), to raise money for this purpose.

The minister and elders of the French Protestant Church present a petition to the assembly "praying Leave, to bring in a Bill, for enabling them to sell their present Meeting-House [see 1663], and Lot of Ground, and to purchase a larger Tract of Ground, to build a larger Meeting-House." — Jour. Coun., 1: 159. A bill for this purpose was passed by the legislature on June 19 (p. 2).

Because "several inconveniences have arisen" to the government in the colonies, by gifts made to governors by the general assemblies, the queen orders that neither the governor, the lieutenant-governor, the commandant-in-chief, nor the president of the council of New York, shall give consent to the passing of any law for any gift to be made to any of them by the assembly, and that none of them shall receive any gift, "from the Assembly or others on any account or in any manner whatsoever." The queen also orders the governor's salary of 6000, which is paid out of the provincial revenue, be increased by an additional £500 from the same source. This, the states, will enable the general assembly to apply to the defence of the province the sums which it is customary to give in presents. — N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 109-41.

This letter was read by Cornbury to his council on Sept. 2 (Col. Coun. Min., 188), and to the house of representatives on Oct. 14. — Jour. Coun., 1: 175-74. See, however, Oct. 28, 1710.

This is the anniversary of the queen's coronation, for which, the day before, the common council ordered that there be a bonfire, "two Barrells of Beer & A Barrell of Wine to be given to her Majesty." — M. C., II: 235. It cost the city £1611/22/4 for Wood Wine & beer acc. for A Bonfire. — Ibid., II: 234. See April 23, 1705.

Major (John H.) de Bruyn promises to obtain a conveyance of "a certain lot belonging to the Lutheran Church from the widow Pluvier." — MS. Records of Lutheran Church, (Prayed Book), vol. for 1703-1750. See also Graeber, Hist. of the Lutheran Church (1815); Castello Plan, II: 225; C. Pl. 52, Vol. II; and Chroolology, Feb. 19, 1703; Feb. 3, 1708.

It is readed that the Choir (Trin. ch.) shall be decrly furnished in Lutheran with the "Prayed Bach" of the Lutheran Church. This refers to the Lutheran "Trinity Church;" see 1749.

The general assembly presents an address to Cornwall, defining the boundaries of the province and explaining how the natural features of this territory contribute to "our Calamities." The Hudson and St. Lawrence Rivers afford an easy passage for the French of Canada; and the Five Nations of Indians, who live "contiguous, compell an "extreme Charge" (great expense) to gain their friendship. "The late War, drained us of the greatest Part of our Youths, who want to be detached to serve on the Frontiers forsake their native Soil, to settle in the neighbouring Colonies."

The address pointedly states that, "Since the Peace" (which was obtained Sept. 10/20, 1697, g. 9), the province has raised over £12,000 in public monies, "a great Part of which has been lavished so profusely, misapplied contrary to the Ends for which it was given, and against the express Letter, of both the Letters Patentes and Instructions of the late Governor [Bellomont]; That it must be no Wonder, if the People (were they able) should be averse to giving, having fresh before their Eyes, such apparent Examples, of the unjust and unaccountable disposition of their Monies."

Attention is made of the "sale of the Gunns of the Trades," due possibly to duties laid on goods here while "our Neighbours are Free," and possibly to the unlimited fees taken by the customs officers. Under these circumstances, the address says, the governor is "a most competent Judge ... how capable we are to contribute of our surplus Riches." The address also points out "the Exellency intends for our Defence ... ." The address then makes a plea for Cornbury's "Intercession with her most Sacred
The provincial legislature passes "An Act for the Laying out Regulating Clearing and preserving Publick Comon highways throughout this Colony." Among the roads mentioned, it is directed that there be laid out preserved and kept for a new and sufficient repair one Publick Comon & General highway to extend from the new Seat of the City of New York thro' the City and County of New York and the County of Westchester of the length of four Rod English Measure at the least, to be continued and remain for ever the Publick Comon General Road and highway from the said City of New York to the adjacent Colony of Connecticut. The act also applies to the preservation of trees along highways; against encroachments, and to the repair of highways by the townships and masoons through which they pass. Commissioners are named to carry out the various provisions of the act. Those for the city and county of New York are William Anderson, Clement Elsworth, and Peter Oplenour (Oblinson).—Col. Laws N. T., 1: 532. The survey made by these commissioners was filed on June 16, 1707 (q. c.). The act of 1703 was explained by Hoffman, another act, passed Oct. 30, 1706.—Ibid., I: 612. See also Treatise upon the Estate and Rights of the Corporation, II: 249 et seq.

The legislature passes "An Act Declaring the illegality of the Proceedings agst Coll Nichols Bayard & Alderman John Hutchins for pretended High Treason, and for Reversing and making null and void the said Jewell," and all other proceedings thereon. This act refers to this prosecution (see Dec. 30, 1701; Jan., Feb., March, and Apr., 1702) as "Crafty and Malitious," and states that the case was examined by the queen in council at St. James's on Jan. 21, 1703 (see N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1021), when it was ordered that the defendant, &c. should consent to a reversal of the sentence against them and to their reinstatement in their honours and property. The act carries this order into effect.—Col. Laws N. T., 1: 531, 590.

The legislature passes a bill for raising $1,500 toward erecting two batteries at the passages of Narrows, the Narrows, and Long Island "leading from the main Sea into the bay or harbour of the City of New York." The object is to gain security for the city. The open passage "hath some time since given Incouragement to Strangers in a bold and warlike manner to enter our port and sound out Channels to the Surprize and Terror of this City." The money is to be raised by special levy upon the following classes of inhabitations. For example, members of council shall pay 40 shillings, but representatives only 20 shillings; lawyers, 20 shillings, but "Every person wearing a Perwug" only 5 shillings; 6 pence; a bachelor who is a freeman of 25 years or over, 3 shillings, but if only 16 years or over, 9 pence; and the master or mistress of every slave of the age of 16 years and under, one shilling for each slave. Also a tax is laid of three pence per gallon of liquor, distilled during the next year.—Col. Laws N. T., 1: 550. By July, 1704 (p. 9), the erection of the batteries had begun, but two years later the money had not been collected, and the batteries had not been completed.—See May 29, 1706.

The legislature passes an act to enable the minister (Pieter Piere or Peiuet) and elders of the French Protestant Church to erect a larger building. The act describes the church lot (see 1688) as follows: It is situated on the south side of Petticoat Lane,—that is, "butting northerly to the street. It is bounded on the south by the ground of Jaspar Nisepat, deceased; on the west by that of Isaac de Forest, deceased, and on the east by that of Henry van Feurden. It is 46 ft., 9 in. broad: has a street frontage of 29 ft., 7 in., and measures 35 ft., 6 in. in the rear. On the west side, from front to rear, there is a strip of land not taken from this width, a strip 3 ft., 3 in. wide for a common alley. The act enables the minister and elders to sell this ground and the church that stands on it, and to purchase other ground on which to build a larger church and dwelling-house for the minister. The money derived from the sale cannot be used for building the house, but such new property in the name of "The Minister and Elders of the French Protestant Church in the City of New York."—Col. Laws N. T., 1: 556. See July 8, 1704. It is interesting to observe that the Huguenots who settled at Westminster and other places around New York. Etc. a time reported to the French ship that returned to the French church in New York.—Dunlap, Hist. of New Neth. (1840), II: Appendix, cliii. Those residing in New Rochelle, before the erection of their own church, came on foot, a distance of 18 miles, for Sunday morning service.—Walton, Huguenot of Westminster, 43+ citing John Finunt's Reclerics.
The legislature passes an Act increasing the fund for the maintenance of Rev. William Vesey from £100 to £160. This is necessary because the collections intended for "perfecting" the church and steeple have been diverted to supplying the deficiency in the Council House. See Cal. Laws N. Y., I. 358.

The legislature passes "An Act for Prohibiting the Distilling of Rum and burning of Oyster shells or Stone into Lime within the City of New York or within half a mile Distance of the City Hall of the said City."—Cal. Laws N. Y., I. 358. See Dec. 18, 1792. Cornbury states on April 15, in urging the passage of another Bill, that he believed that these industries contributed to the "fateful Distemper" in New York during last summer.—_Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 190. An unsuccessful effort was made in 1713 to amend this law.—_Ibid., I: 358.

Various inhabitants of the South, Dock, and North Ward petition the common council that a common sewer may be made in Broad St., as directed by the act of Oct. 1, 1691 (Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 269). "For regulating the building streets, lanes Wharfs & Docks and Alleys of the City of New York." The common council appoints James Evertts and Johannes Hone to be "the surveyors or Supervisors of this City by vertue of the said Act."—M. C. C., II: 235. By Nov., a sewer existed in part of the street. See Nov. 19 and 29, 1705.

Mr. "D" Honore ("D" Honnour), one of these appointed, occupied, prior to 1716, the building adjoining the custom-house in Broad St. In 1711 it was sold to Obediah Hunt, a tavern-keeper.—_Liber Deeds, XXVII: 270-72; see also Nov. 20, 1716. He was later proprietor of the Black Horse Tavern in William St.—See Oct. 9, 1727.

Cornbury writes to the lords of trade that he hopes "to get one of the Battes [at the Narrows] up this summer."—_N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1006. See June 19, May 25, 1706.

Cornbury informs the lords of trade that Kipps Bay "is the usual place for any of the Queen's ships to lay up in, in winter for fear of the ice which drives down here in winter with great fury."—_N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1006.

The general assembly passed last spring, and outlines their provisions. One is "an Act to enable the Minister and Elders of the French Church to build a larger Church." See June 19. Their congregation is much enlarged.—_N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 164-85.

July 1705

The common council, on considering a petition of Gerard Beekman, orders "that the Ground between his Lott and Low Water marke lying in Queen Street fronting the East River on the West side of Beekman's Slaughter house be Granted unto him and to his Heirs and Assigns for Ever upon the Conditions following" (Wm. J. Smith, _Records of the Governor & Council of the Province of New York_). See July 23.

George Clarke (see April 29, 1702) arrives in New York from England in way of Virginia. See _N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1006; Pougue of George Clarke_ (cited under March 16, q.v.). For brief sketch of his life, see _Man. Com. Coun. (1864), p. 571_. See also July 30.

George Clarke is sworn in as secretary of the province.—_Cal. Coun. Min., 1787._

George Clarke is sworn in as captain-general and governor.—_Cal. Coun. Min., 1787._ By his commission, the command of the militia of Connecticut and the Jerseys is granted to him.—_Diary of Samuel Sewall_, II: 84. Cornbury was originally sworn in at the time of his arrival.—See May 3, 1702. He later had a so-called "secret" commission and instructions (see Jan. 24, 1705), which does not appear in record. Probably it was under these that he was again sworn in, together with the members of his new council.

The governor's council orders that the collectors of the £1,500 for erecting batteries at the Narrows be summoned.—_Cal. Coun. Min., 1787._ See June 19.

Ordered, That Mr. David Jamison & Mr. James Emet be feed as Attorneys for recovering of the money that was Contributed for the Redemption of some who were Slaves in Sally's.—_Trin. Min. (M.S.)._ For the history of this case, see June 8, 1793; June 24, 1796; Sept. 6, and Dec. 2, 1797.

Ordered, That ye Reverend Mr. Vesey Recter, Coll-Van-ken & Capt Willer ColVardens Peartree Capt. Toverhill & Capt. Lurbing be a Coffee to meet with Mr. Regnier Mr. Britt Lieut. Hobson & Mr. Carter & they to Confer with & discourse Mr. Henry Neering Organmaker, about making & Erecting an Organ in Trinity Church in New York, & if they shall think meet agree with him on as easy terms as possible.—_Trin. Min. (M.S.)._

The governor's council orders that repairs to the custom-house be made.—_Cal. Coun. Min., 1788._ A warrant was issued on Nov. 3 to pay Thomas Byerley for the work.—_Ibid., 179._

William Carter, the present comptroller of the customs and sworn in._—Cal. Coun. Min., 1788._

Cornbury, with the council's advice, appoints Col. William Peartree mayor for the ensuing year.—_M. C. C., II: 240._ Peartree was reappointed mayor in 1792, 1795, and 1796.—_Ibid., II: 274, 287, 312; Cal. Coun. Min., 211._ For a brief sketch of his life, see _Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 401._

The new city hall is occupied by the common council._—M. C. O. C., II: 240; and see Oct. 16, 1799._

William Anderson (see Jan. 15) is appointed treasurer of the city and sworn in.—_M. C. C., II: 240, 241._ On Sept. 11, 1795, he was reappointed. He was "the giving sufficient security in the sum of one Thousand pounds for the due Execution of that office and he Stating and Posting the City's Accounts in the Book in due form."—_Ibid., II: 287; Anderson continued in office until Sept. 29, 1796 (q.v.).

In an address to the council and the assembly at the opening of a new session, Lord Cornbury says: "I must now acquaint you, Gentlemen, that the great Queen of England, my Mistress, has been pleased to ease this Province of a Burthen, which by Custom, has load lain upon it, I mean, that of Presents to the Governor. In the Chief of this Colony, her Majesty has been graciously pleased to confirm that Act, by which the last Fall you were so kind as to give to me a very great Present [see _Col. Laws of N. Y.,_ I: 508-13] but at the same Time, her Majesty has commanded me to acquaint you, that she has given the necessary Orders, for preventing any Governor, Lieut. Governor or Commander in Chief, from receiving any Presents for the Future._

On the same day, the messenger of the council takes the "oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy" and subscribes "the Test" (see March 29, 1763), and the speaker and the members of the assembly take "the Abjuration oath."—_Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 205-6._ The oaths of allegiance and supremacy are also administered to the officers of the independent companies.—_Cal. Coun. Min., 182._ See also Brodhead, _Hist. State of N. Y._, II: 618, footnote.

The governor's council orders that Marshall Hawdon "do produce to this board the lists of troops granted to part of the said custom house."—_Cal. Min. (Albany)._ By order of the common council, four "poor Tradesmen" are made freemen gratis.—_M. C. C., III: 243._ This order was a violation of the Dagon Charter.—See May 25, 1768.

The common council resolves "that A Cage Whipping post Nov. pillory and Stocks be fortieth Erected before the City Hall._—_M. C. C., II: 244._ These are doubtless ordered built to replace those which stood before the old city hall and which, at the time the old city hall was ordered sold, Aug. 17, 1699 (q.v.), were to be removed within 12 months.—_Ibid., II: 81._ See _Pl. 25-a, Vol. I, SALSO Nov. 2, 1740._

This is Gunpowder treason Day. The city provides a bonfire and wine for the celebration.—_M. C. C., II: 256-57._
Rev. George Keith preaches in Trinity Church, having now completed his duties as the third woman of the Province of New York, 1704. He preaches in the Church of England after a widely different career in his religious theories. His sermon on this occasion was published in 1704 by Bradford, with the title The Notes of the True Church with the Application of them to the Church of England, and the sin of Separation from her. Delivered in a Sermon preached at Trinity Church in New York, before the Governor and the whole Body of the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper the 7th of November, 1703. In his "Epistle to all Unprejudiced Readers in these American parts," Keith makes violent charges against "those called Quakers and their Leaders, who abound in these American parts, and who most insolently in their assemblies, trade upon the name of the Church of England and Sacraments, in the said Church, with notorious Lyes and Falsehoods that the Quaker Teachers belch out against her, especially in their Meetings on Long Island."

There was also published by Bradford in 1704, probably at the same time as the above item, another sermon of Keith's, entitled The Great Necessity and Use of the Holy Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, delivered in a Sermon preached at Trinity Church in New York the 28th November, 1703. This contains no address to the reader, but has an appendix attacking the Quakers, and stating that many people of Pennsylvania were deserting their meetings on account of the " vilest and grossest Errors" taught by them.

The great door and stairs are leased to John Ellison for the term of nine years. He is required to clean the door "to the hard sandy foundation" within two years of settlement in New York, and to make a Common door shewer upon his own Cost and Charge in the broad Street Joyning to the South End of the Common shaw that now is and running from thence in length to the North End of the fish bridge in Said Street and the Said Shayer to be made of good two Inch board or of hard brick." This common sewer is to be completed by the following June. Ellison is also required "to make a head on the end of the North End of the Said Bridge of good Stockdoades or Stone Wall to the full height of the New Street." His rental is to be one pepper corn per annum for the first three years, and £25 per annum for the last six years—M. C. G. II: 247. On Dec. 9, Ellison having "fallen from his Agreement," the common council leased the door and stairs to a trio of lessors, Lancaster Synnes, merchant, Gerrret Vanhorne, boltier, and Christopher Denne, carpenter, for 12 years from Nov. 1, 1705. The conditions about cleaning these properties were the same as those formerly agreed to by James Spencer. The new lessors were also required "att their own proper Cost and Charge" to make "A Common Sewer from the fish Bridge to the Other Common sewer in the broad Street," to be finished by the following June; and "to make a head of stone or Stockdoades the height of the Bridge att the North End thereof." The liberty "to fall up A Corner of the Dock Next Alderman Cortlandts and also A Slip of the Dock on the West Side thereof Next to white Hall or to Clean the same att their discretion."—Ibid., II: 320-51.

Vanhorne soon retired from the combination (Feb. 13, 1705), and the lease was changed accordingly.—Ibid., II: 278. A combination of lessors proved no more satisfactory than a single one.—See Feb. 15, 1706; also Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 120-22. See diagram of the dock, Addenda, 200.

A city ordinance is passing provided that no caneman shall "drive his Cart Over the Common Sewer at the Lower End of the broad Street of this City upon penalty of three Shillings, where a Man is called a Common Sewer, vill be obliged to do as the Sewer is or to use the same."—Ibid., II: 280.

Capit. Congreve, writing in this year to the Soc. for the Propagation of the Gospel regarding the "State of the Church in New York," said that "Before Colll. Fletcher was Govt of New York, the Province of New York was made for the Maintenance or Support of a Minister of the Church of England, nor Church erected in any part of the Province,..." Fletcher obtained contributions from "Colll. Nicholson Govt of Virginia" and others, founded and erected Trinity Church, and granted a charter to "the Rector, Church-Wardens," etc. He also procured the passage of an act which settled a maintenance of £100 per annum on the minister, who had also £26 per annum paid "out of his Majesty's Revenue" for house rent (stopped by Bellomont, but restored by Cornwallis); but no "Parsonage House" had yet been built. Lord Cornwallis, "who religiously promotes the true interest of the Church & generously protects the Servants & Members," also obtained an act to increase the minister's maintenance £50 per annum.—From transcript in Library of Congress of Clarendon MSS. (in Bodleian Library, Oxford), cited 101, ff. 152 ("Extracts in Letters and Memorials relating to Lord Cornwallis while governor of New York, 1702-1705"); this extract is also among those from the Lambeth MSS. made by Rev. Francis L. Hawk, D.D., in 1786, and filed with Hawk MSS. in Church Mission House, N. Y. City.

"Mr. Bradford, the printer, was obliged to borrow of Trinity Church about forty pounds to buy paper upon which to print the book of Common Prayer. Chaplain Sharp became his security."—See Ecles. Rec., III: 1569, citing (Trinity) Records, I: 49, and Dis. Hist. of Trin. Church, 156-58.

A free Latin school was established, with George Mainsen as instructor.—Ecles. Rec., III: 1569. An assessment levied on July 21, to raise £90 for his maintenance, showed the assessed valuation of each of the several wards as follows: Dock Ward, £10,500; East Ward, £9,000; South Ward, £7,765; North Ward, £4,950; West Ward, £3,665; Bowery, £1,705; Harlem, £5,751; Total, £58,300.—See Vol. 1, 1704.

This year, the Lutheran church was repaired, and a building fund for a new church started.—Kretzmann, The Oldest Lutheran Church in Am., 18.

Anthony Aston, "commonly call'd Tony Aston," an English actor, passed the winter of 1704-5 in New York, where, as he said, he spent his time in "acting, writing, courting, fighting."—See Vol. 1, 263-66; also Sonneck, "Pre-Revolitory Opera in America," in The New Music Review, VII: 438-441; Sonneck, Early Opera in Am., 471; and Daly, "The First Theater in New York" in Hist. Mag., July, 1894 (at ibid., pub. by the Danlap Soc., 1840). See also May 6, 1709. For the first published mention of a play-house in New York, see Dec. 11, 1712.

One of the first law libraries of which we have any account was that of Samson Shelton Broughton, the attorney-general. It contained 53 volumes.—See Hist. of the Domestic Affairs of the Inhabitants of New York, in Man. Com. Com. (1850), 593. But see Oct. 30, Nov. 9, 1764.

For a list of New York privateers, all of them having from 18 to 20 guns, fitted out at New York, between 1704 and 1708, see Man. Com. Com. (1790), 867.

William Blathwayt reports favourably to the lord treasurer Jan. (see May 23) regarding a new grant to the Trinity church-wardens of the Queen's Farm and the Governor's Garden "without reserving any acknowledgment to the Crown." He speaks of the farm as containing about 100 acres, already granted to Trinity Church, and for which the crown receives a yearly acknowledgment of six busters and about £4 a year. He values the entire farm at £200.

Of the Governor's Garden, which lies before the church in a convenient location for the minister's house, he says: This half acre "does now lye wast, and is of the smallest Value to be Sold."—Blathwayt, Jour. (transcr.), 1737-38.

In negotiating with Dickenson for continuing his lease of the ferry, the common council requires him to "Land all Flower brought Over to this City in the ferry Boats at the Slip at Burgers path and also to Land passengers and other Commodities brought Over one tide till the said Slip at Burgers path and the Other tide att Countess Key."—M. C. G. II: 354. See Jan. 27, 1701; Aug. 15, 1704; April 11, 1705.

William Brickle is fined 20 shillings "for prophaning Christ- mat" by keeping "open shop," although he pleads that he "did it Complacently and not Corporation." Brickle was a Quaker (see Feb. 6, 1705).—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (M.S.), 86.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1704 This is the queen's birthday. A bonfire and wine are provided Feb. at the expense of the city to celebrate it.—M. C. C., II: 257. See also Feb. 6, 1703.

18 Dirck Vanderheyden presents his account for wine furnished Lord Cornbury. His excellency gives his promissory note.—The New-English Tradesman, or Foreign and Domestick Mercuries & Employ workmen for yr making of A Convenient & sufficient Prison for Debtors on the upper Story of the City Hall at the East End thereof and that the same be of the bigness as this Court.—M. C. C., II: 256.

19 Headrick Vanderhul is granted permission by the common council "to make a Cellar under ground before his dwelling house in Dock Street twelve foot into the Street." He is required to complete it "in six working days after he breaks up the Street," and to make it "soe Strong that the way be secure."—M. C. C., II: 257. This is the first street vault in New York of which we find record. Cf. Report of the Chief Engineer of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment for the year 1800.

20 It is ordered by the common council that it shall be lawful for any person "to Kill any Swine that shall be found Running at large in the Streets or Commons of this City on the south side of the fresh water."—M. C. C., II: 258; VI: 152.

21 It is also ordered that persons shall be subject to fine who "dig any holes in the Commons of this City on the south side of the fresh water or take or Carry away any earth or Mould or Shall Cut take or Carry Away any sods or Turf of any part of the said Commons."—Ibid.

22 The Common council issues a peremptory order that all the swine on the north side of the great dock must be completed (raised and paved), as required by the terms of the grants of the lots fronting them. Likewise, the owners of the lots fronting the docks are required to have the "said Street" raised, levelled, and paved by the 1st of June.—Ibid.

23 A warrant is issued to pay Lancaster Symes "for Bristol stones to the fort."—Col. Cun. Min., 193. Permission is given to him and to Christopher Denn, the dock-masters (see Dec. 9, 1703), to put up lading cranes.——Ibid., 194.

24 The common council, being informed that the Widdow Haub of Combury has sold to the commoners on the west side of the Broad way all levelling of the fortifications and about to fence in the Street fronting to Hudson's River, threatens them with prosecution.—M. C. C., II: 260.

25 It is resolved by the common council "that John Marsh have L26 16s. 8d. out of the Draining of the Cellars of this City at his own Charge and 5l if he bring the same to perfection in A year and A day after the date hereof that then he have a grant for doing of the same Excluding all Others from making any benefit or Advantage of the said projection."—M. C. C., II: 260.

26 The hall on Wall St. is completed about this time.—M. C. C., II: 261. For an account of the building of the hall, see Oct. 16, 1699.

27 Trinity vestry orders "That Col. Wrenham be desired to write to M'r Thrale to procure the Plate & furniture given by her Majesty to Trinity Church and that he order Money to M'r Thrale for paying the Fees of the Officers for the effectual obtaining the same & that his word will satisfy Col. Wrenham what he shall disburs upon that acc't."—Trin. Min. (MS).

28 The first number of The New York Gazette, being for the week ending April 24, is published. This was the first permanent newspaper in printed in America.—See An Historical Digest of the Provincial Press (1911), 53, 61. The second number, for the week ending May 1, contained the following item of news from New York, dated April 26: "The Dreadnought with Colonel Seymour, Governor of Maryland arrived the 10th. Instant. The Virginia Fleet will Sail the latter end of May for London."—Ibid., 68.

29 The first printing-press in the English-speaking colonies of America was set up by Stephen Daye, in Cambridge, Massachusetts, Bay, in 1659 (p. 5, Mar.). Fifty years later, the earliest product of the press having the character of a domestic news-sheet made its appearance. This was a journalistic broadside, called The Present State of the New-English Affairs, bearing the imprint "Boston, Printed and Sold by Samuel Green, 1689." It may fairly be called "the precursor of the American newspaper." A specimen of this scarce sheet is preserved in the Massachusetts Archives, State House, Boston; the only other known copy is in the author's collection. Following this, and prior to the appearance of The Boston News-Letter, there were other sporadic papers of a news character published: Publick Occurrences both Foreign and Domestick (Boston, Sept. 25, 1690); Letters Written by John Campbell, Postmaster of Boston, and sent to the Governors of New England (April-Oct., 1703); and Letters Written by Duncan Campbell of Boston and sent to Governor Winthrop of Connecticut (May, 1700).—See An Historical Digest; Green, Ten Fac-simile Reproductions (1901); ibid. (1905).

30 It is ordered by the governor and council that the following warrants be issued: to pay William Smith for use of his house as soldiers' quarters; and to pay the commissioners of the revenue for fitting up the chaplain's and surgeon's quarters in the fort, and for rendering the governor's bargain.—Col. Cun. Min., 194.

31 The common council orders that Thomas Byerley, the receiver-general, and George Clarke, the secretary of the province, "be Complimented with the freedom of this City."—M. C. C., II: 263.

32 It is ordered by the governor and council that warrants be issued to pay Daniel Ebbets for bricklayer's work in the fort; and Anne Daniels and Elizabeth Stokes for nursing sick soldiers.—Col. Cun. Min., 196.

33 The governor's council assigns a committee to "agree with workmen as Cheap as possible ... for the making of such reparations and doing of such things and finding Materials for the same in and ab'v her Majesty's Fort in New York as were yesterday reported to this board to be of most absolute necessity to be done at present." Christopher Denn, the carpenter, had presented to the council "to Consider off," at the meeting on May 4, a detailed estimate of the cost of repairs totalling £535. The governor ordered the council to inspect the same and to do "absolutely necessary to be done at p'tent." The report called for the expenditure of £500 only, including the "Glaring of the fort windows," three "Centry Boxes," 24 "Carriages for the Great Guns," and repairing "the Barracks" and "the fence round the fort."—Col. MS., XLIX: 69, 70 (Albany). There is a misleading entry in Cal. Hist. MSS, Eng., 325, under date of May 8, Denn's estimate of work for the council "to Consider offer" being labelled "For carpenters' work, &c. done." See further, May 13.

34 The committee of the council appointed to let a contract for repairs to the fort, makes a report of the difficulties encountered. No glass has been found in town "for Glazing of the Windows." Failing to find any one to undertake the mason's work "by the Great," they have arranged with Daniel Ebbitts as "the most proper man to perform the Same" on a day basis. He does not wish to undertake it "us'd as a manner of Work." Shall amount to be paid him Weekly" (see Nov. 1). For the gun-carriages and the fence around the fort, they think it best to arrange with William Dyer on a similar basis.—Col. MS., XLIX: 71 (Albany).

35 William Blathwayt, the auditor-general, writing to Sec. Clarke from Whitehall, states that he has received the draughts of the Queen's Farm and of the Governor's Garden; he reports thereon to the lord treasurer, and comments on the public accounts of the province of New York.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 325, citing XLIX: 79, of Eng. MSS. in sec. of state's office, Albany; and Blathwayt's

25 Thomas Coddrington having desired to purchase of the city "a Certain Gore of Land Situate and being between the Rear of his fence and the Common Road or highway Containing about four hundred and forty rods; and this Corporation doth... not Sold but Leased for A Term of years."—M. C. C., II: 295. On Oct. 3, it was resolved that 30 acres be leased to Coddrington for 21 years at six pence per acre annum. The land is thus described: "beginning where the North West Line between William Hooper and the said Coddrington Lotts End that Line Extending... along between the Road and the Harlem Line Running North till it makes up the Number of Sixty Acres which shall be Confin'd by Another Line Running North West and south East between and A Cross from the Road to the Said Street."—Ibid., II: 179. This marks the beginning of the city's policy of leasing (rather than selling) the public lands, which has resulted in great advantage to the municipality,—Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. at an 18th Cent. Municipality, 58-59. See also Oct. 7.

The common council orders "that Majd Ratier Widow of Jacob Ratier late of this City Marriner deceased have Liberty to follow any Lawfull Trade or Employment within this Corporation for the better Obtaining A livelihood for her and her family during her well behaving her selfe any former Law of this Corporation to the Contrary Notwithstanding."—M. C. C., II: 282 and see the same order respecting Mrs. Lawr. Widow, "as is the Will of her late Husband."—Ibid., II: 278. The corporation law called for a payment of £112 from "every Merchant Trader or Shop Keeper."—M. C. C., I: 322.

14 Lieut-Gov. Ingoldsby reports to Lord Nottingham that the consumption of flour, the staple manufacture of New York Province, having ceased in the Spanish West Indies on account of the war, the inhabitants within his jurisdiction are much impoverished.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 1090.

25 An act of provincial legislature is passed appropriating the road leading from the east part of the city hall, where the mayor's court is usually held, for the general assembly's sessions, and the room in the north-east part for a lobby. To fit up these for the purposes intended, the act provides for raising £415 10s 10d by taxation before the last of October. The city and county of New York are required to pay £510 18s 2d of this.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 569. The amount raised by this act is to pay workmen's bills, buy furniture, and buy Alderman Tothill "a Pair of Gloves, for his Care and Trouble in the Surveying the Work."—Assemb. Jour., I: 180-81. On June 30, Cornbury wrote to the lords of trade that he signed this bill because "till this time the Assembly has always sat in a Tavern," which he thought "was a scandalous thing."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 1114-15. For example of such occupation of a tavern, see Dec. 1, 1703.

The legislature passes "An Act granting sundry Priviledges and Permits to the Rector and Inhabitants of the City of New York of the Communion of the Church of England as by Law Established."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 564. On account of imperfections in the first charter (see May 6, 1697), this act reincorporates Trinity Church.—Ecles. Rec., III: 1565. The property owned by Trinity at this time is described in the act as follows: "The Church, and every and all the said House, and... a certain tract of land belonging thereunto, bounded easterly upon the street commonly called the Broad-way, containing [sic] in Breadth, on the West side of the said street, three hundred and ten foot, or thereabouts, from the north-east corner of the ground commonly called the Garden or St. John the Baptist's Church, thence by a straight line along the north side of the said Burying Place, continuing to Low Water Mark of Hudson's River; thence by a Line Southward along the said River three hundred ninety and five foot, all measured Exs; and from thence by the line of the said Garden easterly, to the place where this act ends."

Ibid. The next year, Queen Anne granted to Trinity Corporation a patent for the Queen's Farm (formerly called the King's Farm), and the Queen's Garden.—See Nov. 23, 1705.

28 July. The Day after, had a good and comfortable Meeting there [Quaker]; and though I had heard... that the Lord Cornbury had threatened, that if ever I should come into his Government he would confine me, for some Words falsely alleged to have been spoken by me in my Testimony, some Time before Maryland, (with which he had no Business at New-York) about the National Church of England, her Sacraments, Order, and Catechism; yet I did not go one Step out of my Way, nor at all shew him about it."—Jour. of the Life of Thomas Story, 370.

Cornbury again complains to the lords of trade (see Dec. 12, 1702) of the difficulty he has in communicating with England: "The post that goes through this place [New York] goes Eastward as far as Boston but Westward he goes no further than Philadephia, and there is no other post upon all this continent, so that if I have any letters to send to Virginia, or to Maryland, I must either send an Express who is often retarded for want of boats to cross those great Rivers, they must go over—or else for want of horses, or else I must send them by some passengers who are going thither. The least I have known any Express take to go from hence to Virginia, has been three weeks, so that very often, before I can hear from Coll Nicholson and Coll Seymour have wrote me word, that they will be here in September, and I do then intend to propose to them the sending of a Post, to go through to Virginia, by which I shall have opportunity to write Your Lordsship by every Ship that sails from this Continent."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 1115. Circumstances later prevented the proposed meeting with Nicholson and Seymour, whereby Cornbury had intended to arrange for "laying a Tax in each province by Act of Assembly, for the settling and defraying the charges of the post, which then might have gone from Boston to North Carolina."—Ibid., IV: 1120.

Charles Congreve reports to the lords of trade about the condition of fortifications, etc. Of the fort at New York, he states: "The wall thereof is faulty in many places, many of the guns are remounted with new carriages and others repaired. The magazine for the powder lately built is large and secure, but the Store Room for the Armes is ready to fall, and all sorts of stores wanting. There are 300 men in the fort. The province is £10,000 in debt, without credit, and poor "by reason of the decay of Trade which was the chief support." Congreve asks Cornbury to have the recruits be sent over every two years, and the same number discharged. The assembly has given £1500 towards building the two batteries at the Narrows, but £2025 is necessary to finish the work.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 1128-29.

John Bridges, LL.D., the chief-justice, dies.—Boston News-Letter, July 10-17, 1704. The governor appointed Roger Mompesson on July 15 to succeed him (ibid., July 17-24, 1704). N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 1119-20, and inducted him into office July 18.—Col. Coun. Min., 193-99. Bridges was the owner of the first gold watch of which we have any mention "in our papers."—Main. Coun. Cens. (1858), 552. He also possessed a considerable library.—Ibid., 552.

Lord Cornbury lays the corner-stone of "Le Temple du Saint Esprit."—Wittmeyer's Introduction to Collections of Huguenot Soc. of Am., I: xxiii. As stated in 1705, when making application for a charter, the church was erected on a lot of ground "situated on the North East side of King's [now Pine] Street and is laid out in Breadth in the Front to the said Street Seventy Feet and in the Rear Seventy Five Feet and in Length extending from the Front on both sides to Little Queen [now Cedar] Street on the Easterly Side one hundred & fifty four Feet and on the Northwesterly Side one hundred and fifty five feet and one Half Foot English Measure." Part of the lot was devoted "to the use of the Cemetery or Church Yard for the Internment of their Dead."—Dot, Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 297-98. The building "was built of stone and plastered on the outside; its dimensions were fifty by seventy feet, and it was in its quiant style of John Howling Esq."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IX: 186-87. The site was the present Nw. 18-22 Pine St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 932.

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1704 Rip van Dam petitions the common council for "A Grant or July Lease of the swamp lying to the Northward of Mr Beeckmans Orchard," and a committee is appointed to examine the title to the property.—M. C. C., II: 256. They reported on Aug. 22 that, after examining "several Ancient Patents," they found "that the Right and property thereof is in this Corporation," and a committee was appointed "to treat with Mr Van Dam or any other person or persons about farming of the said swamp for the Term of twenty one years."—Ibid., II: 265. On Oct. 3 (p. n.), it was resolved to lease the Swamp to Van Dam at an annual rental of 20 shillings.—Ibid., II: 274.

The common council pays the executors or administrators of John Cooley, Blacksmith, "for Iron worked done to A Battery of Guns under the Trees on the East Side of Burgers path in the year 1695."—M. C. C., II: 266. It was constructed prior to 1695.—See "Half-moon at Burger's Path (second site)." In Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

18 A petition to Cornbury is read in council from the rector, etc., of Trinity Church, asking that certain funds, raised for the redemption of captives in Barbadoes, may be applied toward "finishing the building of 3d Church."—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 271-72. On Aug. 14, a committee reported favorably on the petition.—Ibid., III: 255.

19 The governor sails from New York for Albany, with forces to strengthen the frontiers. More will follow in a few days.—N. Y. Legislature in Minutes-Letter, July 24-25, 1704.

21 Trinity vestry orders "That a Convenient place be fitted in the lowest florr [sic] in the Steple for the Rector to retire in & that the same be left to the Discretion of the Church Wardens."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

26 Peter van Dyck's name appears in the "list of men that have signed to goe with Capt. Nicholas Everetson on an expedition against a french privateer which appeared off the coast." Van Dyck ranks as one of the most expert of American silversmiths. He was an active participant in the factious strife which kept the city in a state of political unrest during the administration of Gov. Cosby. For a sketch of his life and work, see Met. Museum of Art Catalogue of Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1911), xxviii-xx, 58-60.

27 The militia is called out because of the report that ten large ships, supposedly French, have come within Sandy Hook. On the following day they were found to be prizes of Capt. Claver (see July 25), who was allowed to bring them into port.—Col. Coun. Min., 199.

28 Capt. George Regers of the men-of-war "Jersey" refuses to obey an order for cruising, except by request in writing. Such a letter to him is signed the next day by order of the governor's council. On Aug. 7, he went in pursuit of the French privateer (see July 25), which, it is reported, intends to go toward Boston. The council warns Gov. Dudley of Massachusetts.—Col. Coun. Min., 199.

29 There is a still-house, owned by Augustus Lucas, a mile from New York (i.e., north of the Fresh Water Pond). It is offered for sale.—Boston News-Letter, July 31-Aug. 7, 1704.

30 Rev. Elias Neau (see 1701) is licensed as catechist in the city of New York.—Eccles. Rec., III: 1949, citing "Deed Books," xii: 27. See also Aug. 29.

31 The church for Propagating the Gospel opened a "Catechising School for the Slaves at New York in the year 1704, in which City there were computed to be about 1500 Negro and Indian Slaves." They recommended that "The Legislature in the Colonies, would, by a law, obligate all Slaves to attend for their Instruction." A teacher was appointed.—Eccles. Rec., III: 1959. Rev. Elias Neau a Lutheran living in New York City as a "Trader." He commenced his labours in the year 1704, with great Diligence," the schoolhouse being "the uppermost floor in Mr. Neau's House."—From An Account of the Endeavours used by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign parts, Aug. 20, 1705, to instruct the Negro Slaves in New York, together with Two of Bp. Gibson's Letters on that Subject (London, 1730), reprinted in A Short Account of that Part of Foreign Missions conducted by the Church of England, 1741-1742. Extracted from divers Authors, in order to shew the inequity of that Trade, and the falsity of the Arguments usually advanced in its Vindication (2d ed., Philadelphia, 1762). London, reprinted, 1768. See also Chronology, April 7, 1712; March 11, 1715. Regarding Elias Neau's religious activities, see Eccles. Rec., III: 1959. "The most effective work of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among Negroes of the Northern colonies was accomplished in New York."—Jour. of Negro Hist. (1916), I: 356. For other references to Neau's work, see Doc. Hist. N. T., III: 75, 78, 82, 84, 156; and a brief reference to his career in Man. Comm. Coun. (1862), 83-84. Gov. Cornbury returns to New York from Albany, "which place with the rest of the Frontiers, he found in a very good posture of Defence. . . .—"N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, Aug. 14-21, 1704.

32 Trinity corporation petitions the common council for "A Re-lease of the Title of this Corporation to the Land Adjacent to the Church & buryal place &c," and a committee is appointed "to Examine into the Quantity of the Land Desired."—M.C.C., II: 268.

33 A new lease is granted by the common council to Dirck Benson, "the farmer of the ferry," on his application, which shows "the great decay of the Revenue thereof Occasioned by the late sickness, by Another ferry being Settled at yellow hooke, and by the Transportation of the Corne of long Island Another way and by Several Other ways and means," etc.—M.C.C., II: 267-68. See Jan. 27, 1701; Jan. 27, 1704; April 11, 1705.

34 Elias Neau (see Aug. 4) writes from New York to Mr. Chamberlayne: "I went with Mr. Moor to His Excellency's [Cornbury's] House, & wee spoke to him concerning the Designs of the Society [for the Prop. of the Gospel, for the Instruction of the Indians & Negroes, who promised to assist us both with his Authority . . . If Mr. Vesey had as much affectation for ye Illustrous Society as my Lord Cornbury, I should not meet with ye least difficulty."—From transcript in Library of Congress of Clarendon MSS. (in Bodleian Library, Oxford), cited 102, f. 150 ("Extracts of Letters and Memorials relating to Lord Cornbury while governor of New York, 1702-1707").

In accordance with the act of the general assembly to enable the city to raise money to defray the annual public charges, the common council resolves that £200 be raised by taxation "for the making of sufficient Goals," to pay the city's share of the expense "for the finishing the Assembly Room and Lobby," and to pay salaries and other necessary charges.—M.C.C., II: 268. On Sept. 10, 1702, the late Mr. Peiret (Peiret), minister of the French congregation, is buried.—Boston News-Letter, Sept. 4-11, 1704. See Dec. 10, 1702.

A ship, supposed to be a French privateer when seen off Sandy Hook on the 6th, is brought to the city. The crew was ordered examined, and on July 29, it was advertised to be a prize taken by Capt. Rone Touretgen (commander of a privateer) from one "L'Roux," who had been trading illegally with the Spaniards.—Col. Coun. Min., 200. A letter from Martinique written earlier in the year mentioned a "M. Larou," who was connected with the Spanish trade there. The similarity of his activities and those of the above-mentioned L'Roux make their identity seem probable. "There is lately arrived a small Spanish ship of 6 guns from Laverdecuir with about 800,000 pieces of eight, they have two French-men-of-war, each 50 guns, going richly laden to the coast of New Spain . . . and the convoy of this force has 50 guns richly laden with money and merchandise, which has been trading on that coast this two years and commanded by M. Larou."—Col. State Papers: Am. and W. Indies (1704-5), 184. See Oct. 16, 1695.

A warrant is issued by the governor and council to Capt. John Riggs, the commander of the fort, to permit the burial of Mary Slaughter, widow of the late Gov. Henry Slaughter, in a vault in the fort beside her husband.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 331. The coffin deposited here were removed when the fort was demolished.—See June 18, 1700.

Jacob Regier, barricarist-at-law, is accorded the freedom of the city.—M. C. C., II: living. 25 May 1701.

The city leases more outlying lands. Twenty-one year leases are given of Beeckman's Swamp and of 60 acres in Harlem.—M. C. C., II: 273. See May 25 and July 11.
The city pays John Ellison £216:17s. for “Plank Nails and Oct. 3 Bridge.”—M. C. G., II: 274. See May 17, 1700.

There is laid before the clergy of the English Church, convened by New York by Lord Cornbury and Col. Francis Nicholson, a “Summary Account” of the state of the church in the province. Assuming the benefits of Trinity Church, enumerated by Rev. William Vesey, is the gift of a bill, valued at £60, from the Bishop of London. Vesey also states that Cornbury, in view of the past and present expense of the parishes of Trinity “in raising the Edifice and steeple to that perfection they designed it,” recommended the queen herself to a further sum. The said City, knoys by the name of the King’s Farm, to the use & benefit of the said Church, with half an acre of ground adjoining to the said Church designed by his Lordship [Cornbury] for a Garden and a house to be built for the said incumbent.” Cornbury has also “contributed to the building a French church.” He has been instrumental “in enacting a law for establishing a Latin free school, and to endow it with a salary of Fifty pounds per Annum, to which station his Lordship hath preferred the ingenious Mr. George Muirson, who for sometime discharged that function with accomplishment & success. Two other Schools are likewise established in this City by his Excellency’s care, . . .” Vesey continues (and this portion of his “Account” appears to be addressed to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel) by recommending that “the Worthy and ingenious Mr. Muirson be appointed, instead of “the pious and deserving Mr. Elias Nieuw,” to be the chaplains in the place.—Dec. 26, 1702. N. Y. (410 ed.), III: 74-75. The original MS. of this “Account” is with the Clarendon MSS., in the Bodleian Library, Oxford.

John Talbot writes from New York to Mr. Keith that Cornbury on this day has signed the commission of Mr. Sharpe to be “Chaplain for Her Majesty’s Forces & Fenciers in New York,” in place of “Mr. Mott who dyed about 3 Months ago” (see July 22).—From transcript in Lib. of Cong. of Clarendon MSS. (in Bodleian Library, Oxford), cited 1257 f 151 (“Extracts of Letters and Memorials relating to Lord Cornbury while governor of New York, 1702-1707”). The text of the commission is in Dec. Hist. N. Y., (410 ed.), III: 250. Sharpe continued in this capacity until March 11, 1713 (p. 7).

Nov. 1. Daniel Ebbets, a bricklayer employed to make repairs on the fort (see May 13), petitions the governor for the payment of his account of £410:207, which he says, “has been auditing and found just.” Having proceeded “materials for the said work, on his promise to pay for them in a very short time,” he is every day “threatened to be arrested and put in prison for the Victualls be & his family eat while he was working in the said Garrison, & for the materials he used about the work.” He adds that he has no satisfaction, and deems the governor to be “in this Extremity or else he shall inevitably Starve to God this winter and his family perish for want of sustenance.”—Cal. MSS., L: 27 (Abany). The records give us no information regarding the outcome.

 Cornbury reports to the lords of trade that, since his last letter of June 10, a French privateer of 14 guns has taken a ship just outside Sandy Hook, bound from England to New York, on which were packets addressed to him by the lords. He refers to his intention of proposing the introduction of a bill in each province to lay a tax to maintain “the post” (the post-riders), “which then might have gone from Boston to North Carolina.”

He explains “how necessary it is to have a standing Force in this Province, where we are exposed to the invasions of the Enemy by sea, addressing: “I have not a bungler of the Twenty barrels of powder left, and several of them are spoiled. I have no small arms at all, no Carouch boxes nor paper, not one bed for the men to lie upon, but what has been peiced over and over again, not a sword in the Garrison, nor a dagger [!] if the Enemy should attempt any thing upon our frontiers this Winter, we shall not have powder enough left for salutes.”—N. Y. 17, Col. Dist., IV: 1120-21.

Ebenezer Willson, the high sheriff, is paid £100:16s.4d. “for the fitting and making sufficient the Goals of this City.”—M. C. G., II: 274. See June 17, 1704.

Carmen are forbidden to drive their carts “over the Common” Sewer in the broad Street near the Little Bridge upon penalty of £100, for the first offense, £200 for the second.—Nov. 177. This action was probably due to the fact that the sewer was not extended through to the dock, but was open and covered with plank at the foot of Broad St. On Aug. 20, 1709 (p. s.), the sewer was ordered extended and the open space beneath the little bridge filled in. For location of the little bridge and the development of the adjacent water front from 1648 and 1750, see diagram, Appendix I.

The court of chancery is revived by Cornbury’s order.—Cal. Coun. Min., 202. See also An Ordinance of His Excellency, Edward Vincent Cornbury, Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over the Province of New York, New Jersey and Territories depending thereon in America, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c., in Council (printed by Bradford, 1704). This court had been suspended by a previous ordinance, June 13, 1702 (p. 9).—Cal. Coun. Min., 171.

The subscription is received in Boston, signed by the queen, affecting the rates of all foreign coins in the English colonies, and specifying their value in sillings and pence. These coins include “Seville Pieces of Eight,” old and new, “Ducatoons of Flanders,” “Crudados of Portugal,” “Old Rix Dollars of the Empire,” etc.—N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, Dec. 4-11, 1704. This proclamation reached New York Jan. 23, 1705.—Ibid., Jan. 29-Feb. 5, 1705.

“The City of New York is a pleasant, well compacted place, situated on a Commodus River wth a fine harbour for shipping. The Buildings Brick Generally, very stately and high, though not altogether like ours in Boston. The Bricks in some Houses are of divers Coullers and laid in Checkers, being glazed look very agreeable. The inside of them are neat to admiration, the wooden work, for only the walls are plastered, and the Sunners and Grist are planed and kept very white wth their sides as is so all the partitions if made of Boards. The fire places have no Jams (as ours have) But the Backs run flush with the walls, and the Hearth is of Tyles and is as far out into the Room at the Ends as before, wth is Generally Five foot in the Low’r rooms, and the peice over where the mantle tree should be is made as ours with Joyners work, and I as suppose is faster’d to iron rods inside. The House where the Vendue was, had Chimney Corners like ours, and they and the hearths were laid wth the finest tile that I ever see, and the stair cases laid all with white tile which is ever clean, and so are the walls of the Kitchen wth a Brick Floor. They were making Great preparations to Receive their Governor, Lord Cornbury from the West Indies, and for that End raised the militia to Guard him on shore to the fort.

“They are Generaly of the Church of England and have a New England Gentleman for their minister, and a very fine church set out with all Customary requisites. There are also a Dutch and Divers Conventsible, as they call them, viz. Baptist, Quakers, &c. They are not strict in keeping the Sabbath as in Boston and other places where I had bin. But seem to deal with great exactness as far as I see or Deall with. They are sociable to one another and Curious and Civil to strangers and fare well in their houses. The English go very fashionable in their Dress, but the Dutch, especially the middling sort, differ from our women, in their habbit go, loose, were [were] French muches wth are like a Capp and a head band in one, leaving their ears bare, which are set out with Jewels of a large size and many in number. And their fingers hoopp’t with Rings, some with large stones in them of many Coullers as were their pendants in their ears, which You should see very old women wear as well as Young.

“They have Vendues very frequently and make their Earnings very well by them, for they treat with good Liquore Liberally, and the Customers Drink as Liberally and Generously, as well by paying for that which they Build up Brickly for, after the sack has gone plentifully about, tho’ sometimes good penny worths are got there. Their Diversions in the Winter is Riding Sleys about three or four Miles out of Town, where they have Houses of entertainment at a place called the Bowery, and some go to the Hands House who handsomely treat them. The handsomest carcy’d his spouse and Daughter and myself out to one Madame of New York for fitting and furnishing A Room for the Gentle Assembly with a Lobby in the City Hall of New York Pursuant to the Act of Gentle Assembly for Raising of the same.”—M. C. G., II: 276. See June 17, 1704.
THE CONOGRAPHy OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1704 Dowes, a Gentlewoman that lived at a Farm House, who gave us a handsome Entertainment of Five or six Dishes and choice Beer and meath in, Cyder, &c. all which she said was the produce of her farm. I believe we mett 50 or 60 slays that day, the people being more numerous that are so usually, and they turn out of the path for one except a Leaden Cart. Nor do they spare for any diversion the place affords, and sociable to a degree, they Table being as free to their Nayboors as to themselves.

If Thursday, Dec. 21, set out for New Haven with my Kinsman Trowbridge, and the man that waited on me about one a[fternoon] and about three came to half-way house about ten miles out of town, where we Baited and went forward, and about 5 came to Spitting Devil, Elie Kings bridge, where they pay three pence for passing over with a horse which the man that keeps the Gate set up at the end of the Bridge receives.—The Journals of Madame Knight, and Rev. Mr. Buckingham. From the Original Manuscripts, Written in 1704 and 1710 (N. Y., 1825).

22 Richard Harris, who had married the widow of Roger Baker, a tavern-keeper in William St. (See Feb. 21, 1704), is allowed the sum of £1013.6 by the common council "for an Entertainment given by this Corporation to his Excellency the Lord Cornbury upon his Arrival here from his Government of New Jersey."—M. C. C., II: 278. For a number of years, Harris's tavern was a favourite public-house. See Nov. 24, 1710.

1705 Rev. William Vesey, in writing (probably this year) regarding the "Benefactions of Trinity Church of New York," mentions that Lord Cornbury "half contributed to the building a French Church [see July 8, 1704]. And since the death of the late minister of the French congregation [see Sept. 2, 1704] resolves to use his interest to introduce a French minister that shall have Episcopal ordination and conform to the constitution of the church."— — In New York inventories of this year, the council mentions "a fine chest of drawers of walnut and olive wood £5.5."—Lockwood, Colonial Furniture in Am. (1901), 53. Chests of drawers were mentioned in the earliest New England records. The first mention, in America, of a tea-table is in a New York inventory of this year.—Ibid., 239.

15 Sampson Shelton Broughton dies. He was "Her Majesty's Attorney General, Judge Advocate, and of the Council of this Province."—N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, Jan. 29-Feb. 5, 1704-5; Aug. 11-18, 1705.

Feb. A Protestant declaration is signed by the "Justices by ye City & County of New York" on Feb. 5, and by the "Aldermen & Assists of New York" on Oct. 14 (all signatures being on the same document), stating: "I do believe that in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, not any Trumpery is used, but the Elements of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ at or after the Consecration thereby of any Person whatsoever and that the Invocation or Adoration of the Virgin Mary or any Other Saint and the sacrifice of the Mass as they are now used in the Church of Rome are superstitions and idolatrous . . ."—From the original declaration, in metal file labelled "Filed Papers 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room.

A proclamation from the queen "for settling and ascertaining the current rates of the Coin in the Plantations" is published in New York, and the city is soon drained of ready money, causing Coroby to write a protest to the lords of trade.

This being "the day the Boston Post sets out from hence," as soon as the proclamation was published "several persons here (pursuant to the directions sent to them from Boston) sent away as much money as the Post, as he could carry, and for four or five days all manner of Trade was stopped; there was no Market, nor one could [sic] buy anything with ready money." Coroby recites several instances to show how the proclamation has injured trade.—N. Y. Col. Disc., IV: 1131-33.

6 The Meeting house within this City Commonly Called and known by the Name of the Quakers Meeting house, is recorded as "the place of her Majesty's Protestant subjects dissenting from the Church of England Commonly Called Quakers to assemble and meet together for the worship and service of Almighty God," such certification is signed by three members, one of whom is William Brickley (see Feb. 1, 1704).

The record of religious meeting-places is in conformity with the "Act of Parliament made in the first Year of the Reign of King William and Queen Mary Instituting an Act and for punishing any person that shall turn out of the path except a Leaden Cart. Nor do they spare for any diversion the place affords, and sociable to a degree, they Table being as free to their Nayboors as to themselves.

The rec. of 1707 is paid for hanging the bell of Trinity Church.—Ecdes. Recs., III: 1768.

Trinity vestry orders "That the Church Yard be Inclosed;" also that "Caskets [probably storm saI] be made in all the Church Windows."—Trin. Min. (M.S.).

On this day occurred the death of the "Honourable Col. William Smith Esq. (the first of Her Majesties Council of this Province) at his House at Brookhaven."—N. Y. Corresp. in Boston News-Letter, March 5-12, 1704 (5). Col. Smith was formerly governor of Tanger, and had been a member of the council here since 1691, longer than any of his colleagues.—Col. Corn. Min., VIII, 865; see also Man. Corn. Com. (1886), 612-15; M. C. C., VIII, 416, 417.

The common council orders that the mayor permit the inhabitants of the city "to secure their Gunpowder in the small Magazine of the Garrison in order to prevent future damage."—M. C. C., II: 279. The order appears to have been prompted by a petition (undated) made by R. Walters, Leonard Lewis, and others, living near "Burger path," complaining "That of Late Great Quantities of Gunpowder has been Imported and housed in the Said Neighborhood, . . . whereby the said neighborhood is extremely affrighted . . ." They ask that the governor "may be Solicited that the powder may be Lodged [lodged] in the Kings Storehouse . . . that Some other Convenient house may be Elsware appointed out of the Towne untill the City Can build a Convenient house for that purpose."—From the original petition in file labelled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room. See also April 13, 1700, May 25, 1709.

The governor's council orders that the east "bastion" of Fort Anne be repaired.—Col. Corn. Min., 202.

The common council orders "that two pair of Stairs be made in the Dock on each Side of the little bridge, that the said little bridge be mended and the benches put up, and that two posts be put up in the Market house by the great bridge in Order to Keep out the Cows."—M. C. C., II: 279. See May 17, 1700, The "little bridge" covered the sewer at the foot of Broad St.

The common council orders that the great bridge be repaired.—

Apr. M. C. C., II: 280.

The common council permits Dick Bensou to repair the ferry house and deduct the amount of the expense from his rent.—

M. C. C., II: 280. He was paid on Oct. 11 the sum of £50 "for Bricklayer work Bricks Lime Nails, the use of sills and Ladders, Carmon, meat & Drink for workmen scalfold Poles from work board Gutters Plank & Glass &C," in connection with these repairs.—Ibid., II: 287. See Jan. 27, 1701; Jan. 27, 1704.

It is ordered by the governor and council that a proclamation be issued forbidding the imposion of "clipt bits and double bits."—Col. Corn. Min., 203-4.

John Vett is paid ten shillings, sixpence, "for painting the Queen's Arms upon the Constables Swords."—M. C. C., II: 281.

The anniversary of the queen's coronation was to be celebrated on this day, with a bonfire and "three Gallons of wine to drink health to her Majesty."—M. C. C., II: 281. This event was first celebrated on Apr. 25, 1701 (ibid., 299). Later references to the anniversary occur in 1706 (ibid., 293), where it appears the coronation took place on St. George's Day; in 1711 (ibid., 424); and in 1713 (ibid., III: 51).

The queen sends a new provincial seal to Cornbury, which she thus describes: "the same being engraved on the one side with our Royal Titles round the circumference of the said seal, and on the other side with our Royal arms, with the Garter, Crown, supporters and motto, and this inscription round the circumference "Sigilium provinciae nostrae novae et boreali in America,"—N. Y. Col. Disc., IV: 1141. On July 25, 1704, Governor Pope wrote Cornbury that the lords of trade required the old seal to be broken.—Ibid., II: 1157. The new seal was received Sept. 6 (ibid.).
The governor's council issues an order that guard-rooms for the town militia be prepared in the city hall.—Col. Coun. Min., 204.
June
The common council orders that the following streets and places be paved “before the fifteenth day of July next” (July 15).
12
From the custom-house to the corner house of the Widow Kierstead; the street leading down to the custom-house bridge; the street fronting the dock (later Water St.), between the great and little bridge (i.e., between the present Moore and Broad Sts.), the south end of Broad St. to the little bridge, on both sides of the way, from the new house of Capt. Teneyck to the south end of the wharf, and from thence along the wharf fronting the river to the corner house of Martin Clock; Queen St. as far as Mr. Beckman’s; the New St.; and Verlettes Hill to Broad St.—M. C. C., II: 282. As usual, each citizen was made responsible, under penalty, for paving in front of his own building or lot; but it is apparent that the penalty was not exacted, because an order for the pavement of the same streets, with one addition, viz., “the Street Commonly Called the Broadway...” from Trinity Church to the Market house,” appears under date of May 1, 1707, with Aug. 1 as the time limit.—Ibid., II: 310-11, 316. Further, it was reported on May 20, 1708, that former orders for paving the streets had been “much Neglected.” Another ordinance was, therefore, passed, to which citizens were required “to render an entire Compliance.”—Ibid., II: 355-56. See May 20, 1708.

1706
The common council appoints a committee to “Cause Grates to be put up before the Common sewer in the broad Street.” As soon as this is done they are to “Cause the Grate at the End of the Common sewer Next the Dock to be pulled down that the water may have A free passage.”—M. C. C., II: 283. On Aug. 3, this committee was required to employ persons “for the making of A Convenient Grate at the North End of the Common sewer in the broad Street.”—Ibid., II: 284.

July
Trinity vestry orders “That the Church Wardens get an Address drawn, to be presented to his Excellency [Cornbury] to Grant the Queens Farme & the Queens Garden to Trinity Church, & that of the Vestry present the same.”—Trin. Min. (MS.). See June 18, 1701; July 5 and 18, 1705.

The governor and council order that a warrant issue to the attorney-general to prepare letters patent to Trinity Corporation “for ye parcel of Land Commonly known & called by ye name of the Queens Farme, & also for ye lot of Ground lying & being in ye City of N. York, near Trinity Church commonly called & known by ye name of ye Queens Garden.”—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 216. A similar order was given on July 18 (p. 9). The conveyance bears date of Nov. 23, 1707 (p. 24).

One of the letters of credit: “I must acquaint you that this place suffers very much from want of a man of War—there has been a French privateer upon this Coast, be lay four days off of Sandy-hook... I ordered a ship of ten guns that was in this Port, a Brigantine of ten guns, and two sloops, one of four guns the other of eight guns; I put on board these four vessels, three hundred fifty men, who were all armed... they were victualled for ten days, they Cruised as far as the Capes of Delaware to the Westward, and as far as Block Island to the Eastward, but they could not get sight of the Privateer, so they returned into this port.”—N. Y. Col. Ditt., IV: 1147-48. Col. William Peartree, the mayor, seems to have had command of the expedition.—Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 401; and Col. Coun. Min., 204.

“The Trade of this Province consists chiefly in flower and biscuit, which is sent to the islands in the West Indies, in return they bring Rum, Sugar, Molasses, and some times pieces of Eight and Cocoa and Logwood; to Europe our People send Shins of all sorts, Whale Oyle and Bone, which are the only Commodity this Country sends to Europe, of its own produce as yet, but if they were encouraged, the people of this province would be able to supply the same...” With all manner of News from foreign countries, all sorts, Pitch, Tar, Rosine, Turpentine, Flux, Hemp Masts and Timber of all kinds and sizes, and very good in their kinds.”—Cornbury to the lords of trade, N. Y. Col. Ditt., IV: 1150.

Cornbury also reviews the history of the province and city of New York in the above-mentioned report to the lords of trade, concluding that “want, doubts” of having here no claim of right to either Assembly, but that they have them only by “the grace and favour of the Crown.” He adds: “I believe if Her Majesty is not pleased to signify her pleasure how far they shall be at liberty to proceed, they shall be claiming New Rights every day.”—N. Y. Col. Ditt., IV: 1151-55.

The governor’s council orders “that a Warre Issue to the Attorney Genl to prepare a Draft of Letters & Patents unto ye Royall & Inhabitants of the North & South Inward Men in Communion of the Church of Eng. as by Law Establisheth for that Tract or Piece of ye Queens Farme...” (rest of the record illegible).—Coun., Min., IX: 543-44 (Albany). See also July 5, and Nov. 23.

There is a great prodigious Tooth brought here, supposed by the shape of it to be one of the far great Teeth of a man; it weighs four pound & three quarters. ... It was lately dug up, a great way under ground... at or near a place call’d Clavarack, about 30 miles on this side of Albany, and is looked upon here as a mighty wonder, whether the Tooth be of Man or Beast. They also dug up several Bones, which as they came to the Air crumpled away. ... There is since another Tooth taken up in the same place, which is a Fore Tooth flat and broad, and is as broad as a man’s four Fingers, which I have not yet seen; but the other I did see, and was brought here by a Gentleman of the Assembly.”—N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, July 23-30, 1709.

Cornbury informs the council that a French privateer came to the mouth of the harbour (see July 25, 1705), and that he ordered several vessels to be fitted to destroy it or drive it from this coast; but as the people were unwilling to go on this expedition without reward, he issued a proclamation promising 2,000 “pounds of Goods” to be divided among the volunteers. The expedition failed to find the privateer; but Cornbury asked the council to consider rewarding the 550 officers and men who were employed.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 259-51. Cf. July 15.

A provincial act is passed “for Encouraging and Continuing the Act for Encouraging A Post Office in this Province of New York for three Years from the Month of October...” It mentions the titles of previous acts to encourage a post-office, which has been found “Very Advantageous to the Inhabitants of this Province by the preserving of Trade and Maintaining a Mutual Correspondence amongst our Neighbouring Colonies’s and Plantations.”—Col. Laws, N. Y. I: 381-82. This act expired Oct. 31, 1707.—Ibid. In his report to the lords of trade on Nov. 20, Cornbury said this law was “absolutely necessary, for without it the Post to Boston and Philadelphia will be lost.”—N. Y. Col. Ditt., IV: 1166. See, further, Nov. 25.

An act is passed by the legislature “for ye better Explaining & more Effecual putting in Execution” the Ministry Act of Sept. 22, 1693 (p. 6).—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 234; Laws of N. Y. (Gaine ed.), Chap. 956.

Four privateers arrive at New York, bringing with them “a Spanish Prize, which they took in sight of the Havana, bound in thither.” It is described as “a Ship of near 500 Tons 26 Guns,” and “a rich Prize,” loaded with wine, brandy, oil, raisins, currants, anchovies, oils, and dry goods.—Boston News-Letter, Aug. 13-20, 1705. See Sept. 19, 1705.

The council considers a statement of an account for repairs to the passage “between the chapel and fort distilling room.” On Aug. 30, a warrant was issued to Adolph Philipps “for repairing passage.”—Col. Coun. Min., 206. No other reference to this room appears in the records of the period.

A part of the English fleet, consisting of three ships and thirteen merchantmen, arrives at Sandy Hook, having encountered a “most violent Storm, wherein several of the Fleet perished, and those that escaped are most miserably scattered and damm’d...” —N. Y. correspondence in Boston News-Letter, Sept. 3-9, 1705.

The new provincial seal (see May 3) is received from England. On Oct. 5, Cornbury reported that he had it, and had ordered that the old one be broken.—N. Y. Col. Ditt., IV: 1182. On March 26, 1706, the lords of trade wrote Cornbury that they had not received the old provincial seal—ibid., II: 2900 “pens of Eight.”

The common council orders “that Alderman Vanderburgh be Surveyor of this City in the Room of Mr Everts deceased,” and he is sworn in.—M. G. C., II: 285.
The men of the brigantine "Dragon" (Capt. Gingsc), one of the privateers which arrived with a Spanish prize on Aug. 19, are leaders in a riot in front of the sheriff's house. They assaulted him, with swords, pistols, and cutlasses. Col. Featherton of Hough of Col. Livsey's regiment "that came in the Jamaica Fleet," before the forces from the fort and others could form and resist the mob.—Boston News-Letter, Sept. 24-Oct. 1, 1705. One Erasmus Williams, being tried and convicted of murdering Lieutt. Featherton of Hough, was executed on Oct. 26.—Ibid., Oct. 29-Nov. 5, 1705.

24 Mayor William Peartree is given a warrant from the governor and council to impress carpenters for H. M. S. "None Such."—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 339. On Oct. 30, it was ordered by the gentlemen of council that carpenters be impressed by the mayor for making repairs to the man-of-war "Deal Castle."—Col. Coun. Min., 207.

Oct. A bill was brought before the legislature on Sept. 27, on recommendation of Gov. Cornbury, to raise a sum of money to pay fasting and others for the defence of the frontier, and was under consideration until Oct. 12. It involved the important question of personal and official responsibility for the disposition of public moneys. On Oct. 10, a committee of the assembly asserted in their report that "Though considerable Sums have been raised, and duly paid in for the Defence of Albany, the Frontier, and the Island of Virginia, it appears that several Hundred Pounds raised for that End, has not so much as been pretended to be applied to that Use." They define certain misapplications of funds. These assertions are derived from their general accusation: "That they have experienced such an uninterrupted Anomnity and Misunderstanding between the several Governments, and all the Receivers appointed immediately by the Crown, that not one of them as yet has been able to avoid a Suspension, which having hitherto been succeeded by a total Exclusion, all possibility of rendering any Account to, or viewing or examining any Account by Assemblies, has been illused, and the Disposition of all public Monies left in the Dark."—Assemb. Jour., 1: 206-7.

“the Common sewer by the Cage” (see March 29) is out of order. Feb. 16 A “Dunghill made by the markett house near the Custom house,” and another “by Whitehall,” are carried into the dock by storms. This might be prevented “if the Inhabitants along Whitehall could be charg’d to shut the windows before their doors, and also to the south Ward of Whitehall fronting the River,” also by preventing “the Dirt from running of [off] the wharfs on the North-side into the Dock.” The committee thinks “the Inhabitants ought to fix A piece of timber on the Wall Plate that Should rise about Six Inches above the Pavement.”—M. Mar. 21 A committee of the common council is appointed to agree with workmen also to “find Materials for the Necessary Repair of the Common sewer near the Dock [see Feb. 16] and also for the Repair of the little & great Bridges and that as soon as the same are performed that the Mayor Issue his warrant upon the Treasurer for the payment of the Charge thereof. That they also Cause a Beam to be laid at the head of the Streets on the West Side of the little Bridge in Order that the Streets Contiguous may be paved.”—M. G. C., II: 297. The great bridge was in front of the custom-house, and the little bridge at the foot of Broad St. On April 6, a warrant was issued in the committee’s favour for £71512. —M. G. C., II: 357. A further payment of £150118 was made for the Effectual Repairing of the Common sewer at the lower End of the Broad Street near the little Bridge” was authorized on Jan. 31, 1707.—Ibid., II: 518. See Addenda, 1700, for diagram.

The common council makes payment of £11793 for the expenses of the Festivity the 28th of March. Bonfire was held every month in celebration of events of the time. These were: on Jan. 8 (an unspecified event, perhaps the victories of the Duke of Marlborough, for which proclamation was to be issued on Dec. 5, 1705.—see Cal. Coun. Min., 207) on Feb. 6, Queen Anne’s birthday; her accession, also celebration of the anniversary of the bonfire was held the following month. St. George’s Day (April 23), on the anniversary of the queen’s coronation, as ordered by the common council on April 19.—Ibid., II: 299. Regarding such celebrations generally, see Nov. 2, 1700.

The common council appoints a committee “to View the land desired to be Leased by Henry Cordaz and John Ackere lying near Incosombergh for the making of Bricks, that they Ascertain the quantity and boundaries thereof and upon what Terms and for what Term of Years itt may be Convenient to farme the same.” On April 19, they reported that the land lies “between the Mr Secretary Clinton’s Log to Bichley’s jump only to a Small Spott of Upland.” It was ordered that the mayor execute a lease to the persons named for three acres for 21 years at a rental of 40 shillings per annum.—M. G. C., II: 298.

Apr. 11 The Lords of trade report to the queen in council at Kensington that the colony’s two communications, as lieutenant-governor of New York and of New Jersey, cause “disorders and differences in those Governs:° with regard to the Gov’t in Chief and otherwise.” They recommend that their commission as governor of New York be revoked, because, in the absence of the governor to visit the Jerseys, “there is a president in Council in New York for the discharge of such. They also recommend that he be made a member of the council in New Jersey, where it will be his duty to see. The queen approves, and it is ordered that a warrant to this effect be prepared for her signature.—V. J. Col. Doc., IV: 1174-75. Through some error in the office of the secretary of state, the warrant of revocation was not signed by the queen, and was not sent to Ingoldby. This was discovered and rectified three years later.—See Sept. 17, 1709.

Corybant issues to James Lacey the license “to Keep and Teach School Within the City of New York.”—Col. MSS., LI: 111 (Albany). This license is reproduced on Pl. 28, Vol. IV.

The city magistrates petition Gov. Corybant to make arrangements for the city’s defence against possible invasion by the French; the city being “un capacable of making A Vigorous defence by reason our fortifications are wholly out of Repair our Artillery dis-mounted and our Inhabitants not so Compleated Armed as so great an Emergency Requires.” The petition urges the repairing of the fortifications, the making of others in convenient places, the mounting of artillery, and arming the inhabitants.—M. G. C., II: 299-300. See May 9 at 247.

The government council agree that fortifications for this city are necessary, and order that proclamations issue concerning the powder supply and the militia.—Col. Coun. Min., 1209.

The council orders that Mayor Peartree cause the citizens to aid in fortifying the city.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 348.

Corybant has issued two proclamations, one commanding all persons to appear in arms upon the first alarm, and the other to discover the quantity of powder now in the province and to prohibit its sale and exportation.—Boston News-Letter, May 13-20, 1706.

The common council arranges for the purchase of beaux for the Making of Carriages for the Mounting of the Guns in this City.—M. G. C., II: 300-1.

It is ordered by the government and council that the mayor shall receive the subscriptions of the inhabitants of New York for fortifying the city.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 348.

The city magistrates present a petition to Gov. Corybant beginning with the following statement of the military situation: “The Consideration of the Extraordinary danger we hereby Conceive the under Affidavit made by the Enemies, the poor posture this City is in at this time to make A suitable Resistance and the pressing Necessity there is for your Excellencys daily presence Advice Directions and Orders in the Arts of War as well for the Speedy and Compleat Ammunition of the Militia throughout the whole Province as for the Regular fortifying this City and Encouraging the Inhabitants to make A Brave defence if attacked by the French (who have boasted they Intend in A short time so to do),”—all compel him to urge him to defer going to New Jersey, as he intends, and to call the general assembly together to pass necessary laws this year, and to resolve to meet the situation, “that was fall not under the like Calamities of our fellow subjects the Inhabitants of Nevis [an island in the West Indies taken by the French in 1706] but be put in such A Posture that wee may with Bravery & Alacrity defend our Country against all its Invaders for the future tranquility under our Devotion.”—M. G. C., II: 305. Corybant defers his journey, and considers ways and means for fortifying the city.—Cal. Coun. Min., 210.

Citizens of New York offer to lend money for fortifying the city, and Lawrence Reed, David Provost, Robert Lurting, and Abraham de Puyster are chosen managers for buying materials.—Col. Coun. Min., 310.

News having come from St. Thomas, West Indies, that the 20 French plan to come to New York, the inhabitants of this city have begun “to make all possible provision to give them a warm Reception.” They bought “provided themselves with Arms and Ammunition, and all hands are employed upon Fortifying this City, which in a short time will be put in a good posture of defence.” They have also “voluntarily advanced large Sums of Money for the procuring of Materials,” until the assembly sits on the 24th. “A great many New Carriages and firing of Cannon, &c., for making of Batteries, Platforms, &c.,” Boston News-Letter, May 20-27, 1706.

“We have above 200 at work every day on the Fortifications, and a great number cutting and fetching of Timber, Stockades, &c., for making of Batteries, Platforms, &c. The Northside of this City from Hudson’s River to the East River will be inclosed with Stockades and a very good Breast-work, with several Block-

Houses at convenient places. One half whereof is already done, and we hope to have finished that Line this week. A breast-work is carrying on all along Hudson River, and several Batteries will be made fronting the Harbour, there being Carriages ready for Mounting 40 or 50 heavy Cannon, & more making.

"Most persons in case of any Attack from the Enemy have provided Retreats in the Country, for their Wives and Children, & as a Consequence has been made, that in less than 24 hours, we can have 4000 Men well Armed in this City; So that if the French should come, they are like to get little more than hard blows & Brick walls, which will do them no extraordinary Service."

Cornbury, addressing the council, refers to the act of June 19, 1803 (g.v.), for raising £1,500 to erect batteries at the Narrows. This, he says, "would have been of very Great Use at this time had that money been Collected, but it has not," and he adds, "I am sensible that some malicious, ill minded People have Reported, that I have taken that money into my hands . . ."

"The assembly resolves that the sum of £3,000 be raised towards building the fortifications. — Assemb. Jour., II: 209. A law to this effect was passed on June 27 (g.v.).

"Our Fortifications are briskly carried on, we having some days 400 men at work, & seldom less than 200. The Country are very much divided, as distance, and it will take us 150 men at least a time to work, & we hope in a short time to be in a good posture of defence." —N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, June 3—10, 1706.

The common council passes an ordinance "for the Carrying on the fortifications of this city, as authorized by the act of June 27 (g.v.). It provides that "The Citizens Freemen and housekeepers Inhabiting of the Five Wards of the said City on the south side of the fresh water shall be Compell'd and Obliged by themselves or sufficient Labourers to Work att or upon the said Fortifications by Equal Turn's & wards;" that the day before such labour is to be done, the city "Cryer" or other person appointed by the mayor is to give a warning of £500 to the inhabitants of the wards when and where the labourers are to meet; that every one appointed to labour shall come provided with "A good Spade Shovell Axe Pickax or Other Nessesary Tool or Instrument," and shall do the work as directed by the overseers or directors of the fortifications in case of need. — See M. C. C., II: 305—5. On each of the following dates ordinances were passed, continuing the above orders in force for three months longer: July 26, 1707 (ibid., II: 355); Oct. 28, 1707 (ibid., II: 337); and Apr. 28, 1708 (ibid., II: 335).

The governor notifies the legislature that by consent of the city they may appoint their own treasurer when they raise "Extraordinary supplies for particular uses." — Jour. Leg. Coun., II: 241.

Robert Lorting replaces William Anderson (see Oct. 14, 1705) as treasurer of the city. — See also Oct. 21, 1706. On Sept. 29, 1710, he was ordered to render to the board "A yearly Acc't of his Office during the time he has been Treasurer."— Ibid., II: 417. He resigned his office on Sept. 29, 1711 (g.v.), and on Sept. 29, 1716, was appointed mayor.— Ibid., III: 393.

The city treasury was now No. 2 of the city's account-books, now deposited in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

The common council orders eight ladders and two fire-hooks and poles, to be used in case of fire. — M. C. C., II: 309. These were paid for (g.v.) on Jan. 21, 1707—ibid., II: 316.

Cornbury reports to the lords of trade that, on Capt. Redknap's 1706 being detained in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, the people of New York "ran a line of Stockades from the North River 3 to the East River, which is about 45 chain; and raised a good Breastwork only there, but along the River side." He adds: "We have raised three Batteries upon the East River one of two and twenty guns, one seaven guns and one of eight guns; three Batteries on the North River, one of nine Guns, five of five guns and one of three Guns, and one Battery upon a point of Rock under three guns. We have raised such a wall of the Queen's to supply all these Batteries but the City have borrowed 18 guns out of a Scotch Ship which lay at Amboy, and some Merchants here who have some few guns for sale, have likewise lent them. I thought this a favourable opportunity to get the Fort repaired; which was done in great need of it, and all the walls repaired everywhere; the Papparet (which is of sodw work) all new done and all the guns that wanted carriage, new mounted and others repaired, so that now I have six and forty guns mounted upon the walls and the Courtilnes and Bastions of the Fort in as good repair as they can be without New Building."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1185.

21 The legislature passes an act for raising £5,000 by taxation toward defraying the expense of fortifying the city. The apportionment of the city and county of New York is £1,500.—Col. L. II: 599. June 17, 1706.

Nov. News reaches England that the province of New York has raised £5,000 "for fortifying that town" (New York); that 100 great guns have been mounted upon the walls, and 1,500 men put into the garrison.—Diary of Narcissus Lattrell, in Hist. Mag. (1866), 2d ser., III: 207.

8 This act of the legislature of New York in turn requires Cornbury not to give his consent to any bill of the assembly "of unusual or extraordinary nature and importance," wherein the queen's prerogative or the property of subjects may be prejudiced, without first submitting a draft of the bill for her assent.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1188.

23 The treasurer is ordered to pay Joseph Prosser £1007 for "repairing the little Bridge by the Dock of this City and the Wall that Supports the Same."—M. C. C. III: 312.

Dec. 21 A woman is appointed by the common council to hold public office. This is Rebecca van Schaeck, widow, who is made poundkeeper of the Out Ward in place of John Brevoort. She is required, at her own expense, to make "A good and sufficient pound and keep the same in good Repair during the time She shall be Keeper thereof;" to render an account under oath every three months, if required, to the common council, and to pay half the profits of the pound to the city treasurer. A pound-keeper's fees are prescribed as follows: "For the pounding every horse Mare or Colt Nine pence, for every Bull Cow Ox heifer or Other Neat Cattle four pence halfpenny, for every Sheep or hog three pence."—M. C. C., II: 315.

Jan. Presbyterianism is introduced into New York. Two itinerant Presbyterian preachers (Non-Conformist), Francis Makemie from Virginia and John Hampton from Maryland, come to the city, and, without asking Cornbury's consent, apply to the Dutch and French Churches for permission to preach in them. This is refused, in the absence of a licence from Cornbury. On Sunday, Jan. 20, Makemie preached in the house of William Jackson, a shoemaker, in Pearl St., "as in public a Manner as possible, with open Doors," and Hampton preached in a public meeting-house, offered by the inhabitants of Newtown, Long Island. Cornbury, hearing of this on Monday (Jan. 21), sent a warrant to the Sheriff of Queens County to bring them to New York. This warrant accused them of intent "to spread their pernicious Doctrine and Principles, to the great Disturbance of the Church by Law established, and of the Government of this Province." The sheriff returned with them on Jan. 23, and brought them before Cornbury at the fort. Cornbury claimed, by advice of the attorney-general (May Bickley), that the Act of Toleration, which governed in their case, required that they should obtain a licence before preaching, to satisfy the government that they were not Papists. Makemie maintained that they were licensed preachers in Virginia, and that the queen gave liberty of conscience to all her subjects without reserve. But Cornbury found Makemie "so proce to bid defiance to Government" that he ordered his imprisonment and prosecution. The grand jury indicted Makemie, but the petit jury acquitted him, and he was freed, but required to pay costs amounting to £5. Cornbury reported the case to the lords of trade on Oct. 14.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1186-87; and A Narrative of a New and Universal American Improvisation, of Two Presbyterian Ministers, . . . By a Learner of Law, and Lover of Liberty. New York, reprinted by Hugh Gaine, 1755.

Cornbury based his prosecution of Makemie upon an alleged clause in his instructions, as follows: "You are not to permit any minister coming from England to preach in your government without a certificate from the Right Reverend the Bishop of London; nor any other minister coming from any other part or place, without first obtaining leave from you, our Governor." This clause was proved by Brodhead, in 1863, to have been a forgery.—Hist. Mag., 9th ser., II: 397-99.

In the trial of Francis Makemie, "religious toleration was vindicated and sustained, and arbitrary conduct and attempt at tyranny were rebuked and foil'd."—Steele, The Council of Revision, 39-41.

He was the organizer of the Presbyterian Church in America.—Eccles. Recs., II: 857-77. Regarding the growth of Presbyterianism in New York, see ibid., III: 1671-73.

For a list of the Presbyterian churches and ministers in New York from 1700 to 1776, see Am. Quarterly Register, VIII: 311. See also March 12, 1746.

The common council orders that the mayor "Execute the General Rebell now ready to Mr. William Anderson late Treasurer of the City [see Oct. 14, 1707] under the power and Seals of the said Corporation." This is to be delivered to Anderson after he has handed to the present treasurer (see Sept. 29, 1706) all "such sum and sums of Money books papers Act writings Deeds Leases Evidences and all other Matters and things whatsoever which are in his hands and possession belonging to this Corporation," and they have been examined to see that there are no "Mischarges or Omissions in the same."—M. C. C., II: 317. All the accounts were not settled until Jan. 15, 1715, at which time the treasurer was ordered to give Anderson the release.—Ibid., III: 89.

21 Thomas Byerley is restored to office as collector and receiver general.—Col. Coun. Min., 212.

A whale is killed in the Hudson River, and brought down to New York, "where she is exposed to view."—Boston News-Letter, March 3-10, 1707. De Voe, in The Market Book, 22, 110-13, discusses the subject of whales having been seen and taken about the harbour of New York. See also Pls. 19 and 20, Vol. I.

20 John Lovell and others petition the governor and council for a patent for the small island or great rock (Mill Rock), lying 20 between Nassau and Manhattan Islands at Hell Gate. They recite the fact that John Marsh, the millwright, had formerly obtained the promise of such grant from the governor and council, had erected a mill there, and sold it to these petitioners. It is ordered that a warrant be issued to the attorney-general for preparing the grant.—Land Papers, IV: 105 (Albany).

The "Laws Orders and Ordinances of the city, reassembled and simplified, with unnecessary ones omitted (cf. M. C. C., II: 223 and 314), are ordained and established, and publicly read and published, to remain in force for three months from this date; and the common council orders that they be printed.—Ibid., II: 319. Bradford did the printing, for the payment of which an order was issued on May 1 (q. v.).

Trinity vestry orders "That the Queen's Garden granted to the Church be Inclosed with a good Fence."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

The common council orders that Broadway, from Trinity May Church to the market-house be paved, before Aug. 1.—M. C. C., II: 311. This was carried to the streets ordered, on June 14, 1705 (q. v.), to be paved.

The common council authorizes a payment of £5 to William Bradford, "for printing the Laws of this City."—M. C. C., II: 320. This was the second printed issue of the city ordinances. For the first, see Jan. 16, 1661 (q. v.). This ordinance, of 18 pages, a copy of which is preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library, it is entitled: Several Laws Orders & Ordinances Established by the Mayor, Recorder, Aldersmen and Assistants of the City of New York Contain'd in Common-Council, For the good Rule and Government of the Inhabitants of the said City. See also March 18, 1707.

The grand jurors report to the court of general sessions that "the highways and Bridges between Fresh water Near New York and Kingsbridge are in many places Very much broken defective and greatly out of Repair to the Common Hurt and Nusance of all persons travelling to and from the said City. The alderman May 7 of the Out Ward is ordered to "cause the places and bridges defective ... immediately to be sufficiently mended and repaired by the inhabitants of the said Ward."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 124. This appears to be the first suggestion of a bridewell. The common council was the first body to take any official action, but not until Nov. 21, 1765 (p. v.).

June 2 Her majesty's ship "Triton" Prize sails out of Sandy Hook and has an encounter with a French privateer. After almost a week spent in repairing damages, she went to sea again on the 8th. An embargo was in force until her return.—Boston News-Letter, June 16–23, 1767. See also Col. Coun. Min., 213; and Chron., June 13, 1767.

13 Trinity vestry orders "That the Church Wardens visit the Men that were wounded on board her Matys Ship the Trytoun Priz[, and] the French Privater on this Coast & Supply them & Families with necessaries not exceeding Ten pounds."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

It is also ordered "That Capt Mathews hold & enjoy the Garden called the Queens Garden, (Granted to the Church by his Excellency the Lord Viscount Cornbourn), for seven years, if he so long live, If the same be not demanded by the Church Wardens for the time being, to Erect a House thereon for the Incumbent of Trinity Church. Upon Condition the said Garden be Planted & Improvd w/good Choice Fruit trees & He lead him in return according to the Approbation of the same by the said Wardens & leave the same Improvements & the peace in good repair, when surrendered, & also to Level & make even the passage Lane or way, that Leads from the broad way between the Church-Yard & said Garden to the North River by the Lucy Trees, standing by the said River."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

16 The commissioners appointed by the act of June 19, 1705 (p.v.), to lay out highways on Manhattan Island, render their report, which, according to two verified transcripts in the records of the court of general sessions, is in the language printed below, the bracketed insertions being added to indicate the present author's interpretations of the landmarks mentioned, and also to show the textual variations in the two transcripts:

"Return of the Commissioners for Laying out the Highways in the City of New York Pursuant to an Act of Assembly made in the second year of her Majesty's reign, to divide the City of New York into districts by laying out Common High ways throughout this Province we whose Names are underwritten being appointed Commissioners by the said Act for the Island of New York have laid out the Roads thro the same as follows (Viz.)

"To begin from the gate att Spring Garden [Broadway near Fulton] to the Fresh Water the Course E. by N. Also from the Gate at the End of Queen Street [near present Franklin Sj], by a small turning Northerly till it meets with the Other Road at Fresh Water. So along the said Lane [Boulevard] to the furthest house in the said Lane the Course being about N.N.E.

"From the said ["last"] house the Road ["for Kingsbridge"] to run along the Fence upon the Right hand and ["so"] as the Road now lyes to Kips Run [the brook emptying into Kip's Bay]. From this the said Lane [Boulevard] along the road called "the Hill" from thence, by the corner of Turtle Bay pond to the top of the next Hill about E.N.E. From thence to the Saw kill Bridge N. E., a little North. From Sawkill Bridge along Mf Coddrington's fence, taking in some of the Corner thereof to the half way house about N.N.E.

"From thence along the lane to the Next hollow about N. From thence to Meyers N.E. E., and thence to the Run by Barten Waldruss N. E. From thence along the fence on the left hand leaving John Kiersse house on the Right and Cutting of the two Comers of the fence on the left["being taken"] and so along the Road now lyes to Hendrick Oblinus's, and from thence along the Road as it now goes leaving the Run of water called "the Deep", Bridge over the same between the two Hills. From thence along the foot of the Hill to the left about a half a Mile; then turning to the left hand and leaving the Swamp on the Right as the Road now lyes unto Nagel and Dyckman run. From thence as the way now lyes leaving the fence on the left hand through the Ground of the said Nagel and Dyckman by the house where the said Dyckman both now live and over his Bridge & so forward as the Road now is unto Kings Bridge the Main Course being North a little Easterly.

"From the Bridge by the half way house the Road to turn to the Right hand and so Over the Creek to Harlem, and from Harlem by the Lane as it now lyes to Johannes Meyers where it meets with the Main Road.

"From the House at the End of New York lane [the present Bowery], there is likewise to lye a Road turning to the left hand the Course being Northerly and so by Great Kills & forward as the said Road now lyes unto Thoensis Edis's [Ide] & Capt. D.Key theo the said Edis's land.

"From Rebeckahs house in New York Lane leaving the house on the left hand there is to be a Road as it now lyes unto Greenwich the said Road leaving the house last of Capt. Downe's, based on the Right hand ["the road to run to the leftwad of the house"]; and all the aforesaid Roads are to be and Remain of the breadth of four Rodds at least, According to the Directions of the said Act.

"Given under our hands in New York this 21st day of June in the 67th year of her Majesties Reign Annoq. Dom 1767. [With] our hands in New York this 21st day of June in the 67th year of her Majesties Reign, Annoq. Del. 1767."

"Will Anderson, Klemetialent Ellweert Pieter V. Oblunis.

The paragraph beginning with the words "From the House at the End of New York Lane ..." was omitted from the original entry at pp. 129–30, and not until Nov. 1, 1726, was it supplied (pp. 470–71), at which time the following explanation was written into the record:

"The Surveyors of Highways in the year 1707 delivered into Court then held the sixth day of August 1707 A Return of their Survey of Highways in the City of New York which was Ordered to be Recorded in this Book of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the City & County of New York a Copy thereof was delivered to the Clerk of this Court which was recorded, which accordingly was Recorded in this Book fol 129.130. And the Original Return of the Said Survey being now produced to this Court it appears a Paragraph was wanting in the said Copy Recorded which is in the Original Return now produced which Paragraph is in the following the said Road under the End of New York Lane ... It is therefore Ordered that the Clerk of this Court do Record the said Paragraph with the Other Return of the aforesaid Survey & that it be Deemed & Estimated a part of the said Return. The entire report was entered in full, at this later date (pp. 472–73), to include the missing paragraph, and the paragraph was also entered in the margin of the page of the original entry.

The difference in the date of the document shown in the two transcripts is particularly noticeable. The text of both, as printed above, has been modified by the introduction here of paragraphing, punctuation, and capital letters for geographical names and for the initial letter of sentences, in the belief that this slight editing will materially aid the interpretation of the document. No attempt has been made to locate the original report in the archives of the present court of general sessions, though it is quite likely that an examination of the earliest file-papers in storage would reveal it.

The commissioners' report was printed in the Mon. Com. Coun. (1860), 568–69. This was apparently from the original text, as evidenced by the fact that Valentine supplied a word (and did so erroneously) which he stated was "torn out the margin;" whereas this word is perfectly clear in the transcripts. See also Feb. 26, 1715.

The foregoing description of the highways includes, first, the Harlem Road.—See Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 317–18. Harlem Lane, also, from McGown's Pass to Spuyten Duyvil, which was at first an Indian trail, was laid out as a road pursuant to this report. It was surveyed as part of St. Nicholas Ave.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 1901, 1851; Hoffman, Estate and Rights of the Corporation, II: 219.

It includes, secondly, the Kingsbridge Road, which was the post-road for New England, now re-surveyed and with new courses in some places laid down. Its direction is the same as that mentioned above for the Harlem Road. In the "half-way house," its description beginning with the words "side supra": "From thence along ye lane to ye next hollow about N.," and ending with the words "as ye Road now is unto Kingsbridge ye main course being N. a little hastily."—Man. From this it seems safe to infer that the "Guard Room" of 1677-8 (ibid., I: 331, 351) was in the first city hall; also that the "Watch house" of 1712 (ibid., III: 6) was not a separate building but another name for the room mentioned above in the new city hall on Wall St. It is referred to again in the same times as the "Guard Room."—Ibid., III: 12. public documents. Lidea Rose, widow, petitions for a patent for a lot "in the street formerly called Single street, now Wall street."—Land Papers, IV: 113 (sec. of correspondence to the Governor, Albany). Likewise, in 1710 (Mar. 21), Lacyster Synnys sought a patent of confirmations for houses and ground "in the street formerly called Cingle street, now called the Wall street."—Ibid., VI: 62. "The Cingle" was mentioned as early as 1657.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 166. The name Wall St. appeared as early as Dec. 16, 1657.—See Beckwith's survey, Land Papers, IV: 144 (Albany).

Cap. Sheldon, "who was sent in April last from New-England with a Flag of Truce to Canada," arrives from Albany with a French flag of truce and seven New England captives.—N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, Sept. 1–5, 1707; Cal. Coun. Min., 214. This was evidently an exchange of prisoners.

The common council appoints a committee to direct the paving of "the Street Commonly Called the broad way lying in the West Ward of this City."—M. G. C., II: 356. See June 12, 1705.

The common council determines how the inhabitants near the Wall Street Slip have Liberty to fill up the same street in the same manner as they shall think convenient provided the Lessees of the Dock & Ships Consent to the same.—"M. G. C., II: 356. On May 20, 1708, this regulation was continued by order of "this Court," with the stipulation opposing it being rejected.—Ibid., II: 355.

"Ordered that Mr. Wormstall and the person concerned in the house that Mr. Maclean lives in the Bridge Street in the south side of this City doe forthwith Effectually Repair the Street and wharfe belonging to the said house fronting to the Dock upon pain of being prosecuted for their Neglect or default."—M. G. C., II: 374–75. John Maclean, a tavern-keeper, had evidently removed into the East Ward by Sept. 29, 1709, when he was elected a constable of that ward.—M. G. C., II: 376. In 1714, he was elected a constable.—Ibid., III: 69. His tavern, in 1729, was "on the Dock," and its sign was the "Blue Anchor."—See Oct. 16, 1750.

The governor in council appoints Capt. Ebenezer Wilsson (see, March 25, 1660, in the fourth council) constable.—Ibid., II: 329. Robert Lutting is redeclared "treasurer and chamberlain" of the city.—Ibid., III: 370. Wilsson was reappointed mayor in 1708, and in 1709.—Ibid., III: 362, 374. For a sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 502.

The common council orders that "the Church Wardens of this City put a Badge upon the Cloths of such poor as are Clothed by this City with this Mark N.Y. in blew or Red Cloth."—M. G. C., II: 330. This mention of the church-wardens in connection with the care of the poor indicates a change in the city's administration of its charity work. See Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 188. For previous care of poor, see Oct. 19, 1651; Dec. 4, 1691; Oct. 20, 1695.

The common council orders that the city ferry between Nassau Island and this city, together with the new ferry-house, old house, barn, pen, etc., situated on Nassau Island, "be left to farm," 02 Oct. 16, for five years, Feb. 26, 1705.

The justices deliver to the assessors of the city two warrants "for Assessing the Other Moeyy" of the taxes to be raised in this city and county pursuant to two acts of the general assembly, one being for raising £3,000 towards fortifying the city, and the other for raising £500 to fortify the frontiers.—M. G. C., II: 374. See also Oct. 21, 1706.

On the petition of the inhabitants of Queen St., the common council orders "that all the Lotts from Burgers Path to Thobahds Slip fronting the East River be fill'd up and the wharfs Complified According to survey as part of St. Nicholas Ave.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 1901, 1851; Hoffman, Estate and Rights of the Corporation, II: 219.

The common council directs that a mayor's warrant be issued to the treasurer to pay "for fitting the Room in the City Hall for the Constables watch as Appears by his Acc't."—M. G. C., II: 335.
1707 New York. "Vicuiller," at a rental of £50 per annum.—M. C. G., Sept. II: 350-34. On Nov. 21, he was given liberty "to Land from and take on board the ferry boats all Passengers att the most Convenient place after Sun Set."—Ibid., II: 338. Harding, who was a constable in 1702 (M. C. G., II: 295), was 32 by 1706, and is said to have been a collector of the town. His "Vicuiller," as appears from paupers' returns, stood at the mayor's court on Aug. 11, 1705, as a "Vicuiller," in a suit against Rebecca Haene to collect his pay "for sundry quantities of victuals and strong liquor."—M. C. M. (MS.). See Pt. 25, Vol. I, for a view of the ferry-house, and 1: 245-46, for a description of it under Harding's management. The ferry-house was soon afterward referred to as the "Dock Ferry," or as the "Ave Maria," and became known as the "Flay Ferry."—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 912. For extension of the ferry lease, ten years later, see Dec. 24, 1717; see also Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 541-45.

Oct. Ebenezer Wilson, who on Oct. 4 was appointed mayor, and Sheriff William Anderson (Cal. Coun. Min., 248), are sworn in.—M. C. G., II: 335. Regarding the form of oath taken by the mayor, see Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 325. According to custom (see Oct. 14, 1698), the common council pays the Rev. Mr. Vesey, rector of Trinity Church, £3 for "preaching a sermon to this Corporation," it being "the Anniversary day" when, each year, the newly appointed and elected officials of the city are inducted into office.—M. C. G., II: 337.

28 The common council orders that "the Butchers Shop in the Broadway now in the Occupation of Jeremiah Callcutt" be demolished, and that he have liberty "to Clear the Materials thereof."—M. C. G., II: 338. This was the Broadway shambles or meat-market at Bowling Green, erected in 1684.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 968; cf. De Voc., Market Book, 44.

A committee is appointed to " Assist the Treasurer [see Sept. 29, 1706] in bringing the Books of this Corporation to a Balance in Order the same by Stated and Adjusted and to make A List of the City Debtors."—M. C. G., II: 337.

The common council appoints a committee for "Lining and making Decent the Pews assigned for the Mayor and Magistrates in Trinity Church." Disbursement for the same was £31169.—M. C. G., II: 337, 338. See also June 29, 1698. Nov. "The Grand Jurors have presented the surveyors of the highways between the fresh water and Kings Bridge for not keeping the Roads in sufficient Repair and pray the Court [of general sessions] to put it in form. Ordered that the same be put in form and that unless the said Roads be forthwith Repaired that Process issue against them."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace, 1694-1731 (MS.), 122. For later examples of the jurisdiction of this court in the matter of the highways, see ibid., 161-62, 208, 260, 265, 267, 279, 489-90, 505-6, 520, 532, 546.

13 On the governor's return from "his Other Government of New York," the common council gives him a dinner.—M. C. G., II: 338. See Nov. 21.

The common council orders that a warrant be issued on the treasurer to pay Henry Swift, "Vintner," £85, "it being for wine And A Dinner as a treat to his Excellency the Governor" on the 13th inst. on his arrival from his other government of New Jersey.—M. C. G., II: 338. Swift, who had come to New York at the time of Lord Cornbury's arrival, was voted a freeman June 27, 1702.—Ibid., II: 197. His tavern stood on Broadway in 1724, when Arent Schuyler bequeathed the house, then in the possession of Mrs. Swift, to his two daughters.—Abstracts of Wills, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1894), III: 18. Pelletreau, in a footnote to the above, says the tavern stood at the present 109 Broadway.

The common council orders that the "little Bridge by the Dock" be repaired at an expense of not above £4.—M. C. G., II: 339.

Dec. The Bishop of London writes observations on the need of having —a bishop in America, on account of the "present disorders now arising in some of ye Plantations." He refers to the licentiousness prevalent, and believes a sufragan bishop would be preferable to an archbishop or metropolitan.—N. Y. Col. Doc., V: 69-70.

1708 "There are now above 800 Houses, the meanest worth 100 l. in this City, which for the Strength and Pleasantness of its Situation it would ruin the Town any where in the Nothern Part. 9 Lewis Morris, writing to the secretary of state, complains of Cornbury’s mismanagement of the government, of his accepting bribes, etc. He compares his administration with that of Gistus Florus, governor of Judea (who was appointed by Nero, and finding the country in a tumult added fuel to the flame, whose ruling passion was avarice, and who practiced every species of iniquity to aggrandize himself). Morris adds, regarding Cornbury:
“I must say something else perhaps no body will think worth while their to tell, and that is, he is dressing publicly in woman’s clothes every day, and putting a stop to all publique business while he is pleasing himself with y[our] peculiar but detestable maggot.”—N. Y. Col. Dict., V: 33-38. See also, regarding the character of Lord Cornbury, Hist. Mag., Feb., 1689, 2d ser., 71; and N. J. Archives, 1st ser., IV: 24: “History has already exhibited Lord Cornbury as a mean liar, a vulgar profiteer, a frivolous spendthrift, an impudent cheat, a fraudulent bankrupt, and an inconsiderate spendthrift. Let not Broodhead in 1865, in an impression proving that Cornbury was also a forger.—Hist. Mag.,

Cornelius Sebring’s petition to the governor for a private grant of a second ferry to Long Island having been rejected through the plea of the corporation counsel (see Jan. 25), the common council immediately decides to petition the governor “for her Majesty’s Grant of all the Vacant Land upon Nassau Island from High water to low water mark from the Wallabout to the Redhook for A further Conveniency for the ferry of this City with power to establish one or more ferries if there Shall be Occasion and A Confirmation of the same by giving the Rent and at Reasonable Rates etc.” The common council further resolves to raise the sum of $500 to be used in procuring the grant. The reason for this petition was that there was need of increased accommodations so that transportation should not be carried by indirect means to the detriment of the city interests. —M. C. C., III: 346-47
On April 5, Cornbury granted this petition of the city for the enlargement of the bounds of the ferry, thereby being resolved that a warrant be prepared for the attorney-general to draw a patent “for all the Vacant and unappropriated Ground on Nassau Island from High water to Low water mark fronting unto this City from the place called the Wallabout unto the Red hook against Nutten Island for the better Improvement and accommodation of the Said ferry,” etc.—Doc. Hist.
N. Y. (4th ed.), III: 258. The letters patent were issued by Lord Cornbury on April 19, 1708. The original document is preserved
New York 1700-1710).” The common council, at its first meeting (April 13) following the announcement, on April 8, of the governor’s consent, resolved to raise £500 by mortgaging the ferry, to pay the counsel fees and other charges incident to procuring the grant.—
M. C. C. On April 21, the Konin’s Land Ferry Question, known as Annes’s Chart, was embodied, entire, in the Montgomerie Charter of 1731. See Jan. 15, 1703, and Feb. 11, 1731; also Hoffman, Treatise on the Estate and Rights of the Corporation, 273-82; and “Importance of the Long Island Ferry Question,” in Man. Com. Coun. (1855),

A committee of the common council, appointed to inquire what repairs are needed at the ferry-house on Nassau Island, reports that the glass windows of the house, the barn, the well, the fence of the pen, the stairs going out of the house, the chimneys, and the plaster of the house, all want repairs, and these are ordered be made. The lessee, James Harding, is permitted to spend £30 on repairing “the little old ferry house of this Corporation on New Island which is Contiguous to the New ferry house,” this amount to be deducted from his rent.—M. C. C., III: 347.

The common council orders that lots in Dock St., sold by the city, be laid out.—M. C. C., III: 350.

The Earl of Sunderland (the principal secretary of state) writes from Whitehall (London) to the lords of trade: “Her Majesty having been pleased to appoint the Lord Lovelace [John, the 4th Lord Lovelace], Governor of New York and New Jersey, I desire you will prepare a Commission and Instructions for him as usual.”—N. Y. Col. Dict., V: 39. On April 22, an order in council approved the draft of a commission and required that it be prepared for the queen’s signature.—Ibid., V: 40. On June 26, similar approval and order were given respecting instructions.
Ibid., V: 45, citing N. Y. Council Minutes, X: 304, where the instructions are recorded. Additional instructions were given on June 28 and July 20.—Ibid., V: 46, 54.

The common council grants permission to the inhabitants of Broadway to plant trees before their lots and houses.—M. C. C., III: 353.

The Corbury or Queen Anne’s Charter (relating to ferries) is granted by letters patent.—See March 3.

Former orders for paving certain streets having been “much neglected” (see June 12, 1705), the common council passes another ordinance for the purpose. The streets are to be paved with “good and sufficient Pibble Stones suitable for paving.”—M. C. C., II: 355-56. “Pibble Stones” was the old spelling (see Evelyn’s Diary, April 21, 1643) for the modern pebble-stones, which are stones somewhat smaller than cobble-stones.—Gent. Dict. “All the Respectious Citizens Inhabitants and Freeloakers of the said City of New York are hereby required to render an Entire Compliance.”
—M. C. C., III: 355-56.

The common council appoints a committee to “Ascertain how far it will be Convenient to fill up the Easternmost Corner of the Dock . . . for a more convenient landing place and that the Lessees of the Said Dock do forthwith proceed to fill up the Same Accordingly.”—M. C. C., III: 354.

In a letter to the Bishop of London, the vestry of Trinity writes: “Since the granting of this patent [see Nov. 23, 1703] for the Farme and Garden we put the Garden into Fence, and built therein a stone wall which cost us upwards of fifty pounds and have let it for ten years, without any rent, on condition to improve the same with fruit trees and walks against such time we shall be able to have a dwelling house in the front thereof for our Minister.”—

A “Warrant of survey” is issued “to lay out for Abraham
Depuyter and others their several . . . lots of land on Queen Street, in the city of New York, ranging in the slip where the new market house is erected; and the other parcels mentioned in the grants thereof.”—From “Land Papers,” IV: 123, in sec. of state’s office (as listed in Cal. Land Papers, 85).

The queen’s order in council confirms the act passed at New York at the session of the legislature beginning March 2, 1699,
“for Vacating, breaking and annulling several Extravagant Grants of Land, made by Colonel Fletcher.”—N. Y. Col. Dict., IV: 48; see further, May 16, 1699. For the arguments leading to this order, see ibid., V: 7-16, 21-26. On July 20, the queen directed Lovelace to regrant “to the late Patentees of such Resumed Grants, a suitable number of Acres, not exceeding two persons, to any one person,” with certain reservations to the crown.—Ibid., V: 54-55. This latter instruction did not apply to the King’s Farm, the King’s Garden, the Swamp, and Fresh Water Pond, which, by the terms of the act, were the demesne of government, and could be alienated only for a government’s term in office.—Ibid., V: 915; Ann. C. II: 33.

Cornbury expresses the wish “that Packet Boats were Estab-lish’d to Some part of this Continent,” to give more frequent communication with England. He has not heard from the board of trade or the secretary of state in fifteen months. There are “but two safe ways of sending into America, which are the Virginia Fleet and the Mast Fleet from New England.” As there is no post from Virginia to New York, and it takes a letter sometimes six weeks or more to come that distance, the news of the expected sailing of a vessel from Virginia to England cannot reach New York in time to make that mail route to England always possible.

From Boston there is a Post by which we can hear once a week in summer time, and once a fortnight in winter, so that we might have a certain dispatch by the Mast Fleet." Another route in sending letters to England is by way of the West Indies, but this has proved uncertain. for "several of our Vessels have been taken every year during this War, besides that several of the Packet Boats from England [to the West Indies] have been likewise taken."—N.Y. Col. Docs., V: 55-56.

In a trade report of this date to the lords of trade, Cornbury states that families do not settle in New York to engage in business, but go to Philadelphia instead, where no duties are paid. He recommends that the most effectual way to prevent the removal of "trading men" from New York "would be to bring all the Colonies and Plantations upon the Continent of America under the same Duties and Customs, for goods Imported & Exported."

The commodities produced in the province of New York and sent to England "are Peltry of all sorts, Pitch, Tar, Resin and Travay Oil; and if due encouragement were given good quantities of hemp, flax, timber, Masts, and Yards might be sent." Commodities obtained from the West Indies and sent from New York to England are "Sugars, molasses, Logwood and other Dying woods, cochaneal, indigo, and Cocoa Nuts." To the West Indies are sent from New York "flower, biscuit, beef, pork, bacon and trawen oil," etc.

The trade of this province "is much decayed... for in the year 1695" (see under March 24, 1694) it received "its most fatal blow" by the act of assembly permitting all persons in the country as well as the city to bolt four. Cornbury explains how this has affected trade in New York City, and recommends that either the queen reject the Bolting Act, or that New York City be allowed "to choose as many representatives to serve in General Assembly as all the rest of the Province does." Thus the city may be able to repeal the Bolting Act.

There is a second cause for the decay of trade of the province: The act of the legislature has expired which placed a duty upon imports, and it has not been renewed. Cornbury explains to the lords of trade the results of this lack of import duties. To supply the deficiency of an act of assembly he suggests that the queen "signify her pleasure, that an Order of the Governor in Council, shall be effectual in that Case, as it was in the time of ST Edmond Andros."

To stop illicit trading, which is still prevalent between New England, Connecticut, and the east end of Long Island, Cornbury recommends that "a small sloop cruise in the Sound," or that "a yard is set up for the same purpose." He says that there is an uncertainty of finding a sloop fit for the service. "The number of Vessels belonging to this Port is much diminished of late years, I have been told that there has formerly belonged to this Port two and thirty top sail Vessels, besides Sloops; Now we can reckon above Eight and Twenty Top Sail Vessels & Sloops; The number has been so reduced that we can't find above three hundred Seafaring men, of all sorts, belonging to this Port. All sorts of Vessels are built well in this place, but the Vessels most usually built here are Brigantines and Sloops, of both which sorts there are several built every year in this place, by Direction and for the use of the Merchants in Jamaica, Barbadoes and others of the Leeward Islands, besides those that are built for the use of the Merchants of this Place, which have been a pretty many of late, because our people have lost a great many Vessels this War, both going to and coming from the West Indies, and I have no reason to believe there are above six Vessels belonging to the Place but were built here.

"The Manufacturers settled in this Province are Linen and Woollen; they make very good Linen for common use, and I don't doubt but in time they will improve that considerably; And I should think they might make a fortight to that end if they were on a peace already; And I must be of opinion that that will be a very great prejudice to England in a few years, and ought to be taken care of in time; They already make very good Serges, Linsey Woldies, and in some places they began to make coarse cloth, and without doubt in a short time they will so far improve in that, as that the Assistance of England to Cloth them-selves._ See June 5, 1715.

Cornbury mentions a few other products of the province. Fish of all sorts, he says, "is so plenty in the Rivers, and in the Bay before this City, that our people will not take the pains to go to Sea." French privateers have recently captured ships on the coast, and Cornbury has sent the "Thritos Prize" to drive them off.—Aug. 29, 1714, Wnist, III: 297.

It is decided to repeal the Lutheran Church "before the winter," the cost to be paid out of rents of private houses belonging to the church. Under the same date a resolution is passed not to rebuild the church at the present, the times being too hard.—Records Libr. Church.

"Lord Lovelace goes next month to his government of New York, in the room of lord Corunbury, recalled; and several German families, ruin'd by the French in the Palatinate, and come hither [to England], are preparing to go with him, and settle there."— Diary of Narcissus Luttrell, in Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., III: 297.

Caleb Heathcote writes to the lords of trade concerning American colonial manufactures: "They are already so far advanced on their manufactures that 4 of y^e linen and woollen they use, is made amongst em; especially the coarser sort, & if some speedy & effectual way were not found to put a stop to it, they will carry it on a great deal further, & perhaps in time very much to the prejudice of our manufactories at home. I have been discourse with by some to assist them in setting up a manufactury of fine stuffs, but I have for the present put it by, & will for my own part never be concerned in y^e nor any thing of y^e nature, but use all the little interest & skill I have to prevent it."—N.Y. Col. Docs., VI: 65. See also June 22, 1715.

The books and papers of Mr. Bogardus, the late notary public, Sept. which have been stolen, "to the Prejudice of many Persons in theirTitles," are discovered in an old chest in a loft.—Assemb. Jour., I: 223, 229.

The popular objection to the "prerogative" system of expenditure, by which the British government for many years endeavoured to support itself, finds expression in a resolve of the assembly, "That the raising of any Monies, for the Support of Government or other necessary Charges, by any Taxation, Import or Burthen on Goods Im- ported or exported, or any Clog or Hindrance on Trafick or Commerce, is found by sad Experience, to be the Expulsion of many, and the Improvising of the rest of the Planters, Freeholders, and Inhabitants of this Colony, of most penurious Consequence, which if continued will unavoidably prove the Destruction of the Colony."—Assemb. Jour., I: 224. See also Spencer, Phials of Royal Government (1705), 128.

William Bradford, the printer, petitions the governor and council for salary and moneys due him totalling £40:8:1, and covering a period from June 24, 1703, to July 1, 1708. He goes into the story of his being invited "to Remove out of another Province" (see March 24, 1693), encouraged by a regular salary here, and cites an order of the council of Jan. 6, 1705, to the effect that he shall "receive his Sallary quarterly as the rest of the Civil Officers of ye_Government." However, Collector Byerly "takes no notice of Mr. Lordsords Order" and has been "insensible to his duty," and he requests that the quarternly warrants in proportion to the rest of the Civil Officers. As a result, his family is now "near the brink of Ruin," and he seeks relief. He appends his account in detail, also a statement of the collector's payments to the "Civil Officers" during the last six quarters. On the 17th, Cornbury ordered the council to "inquire into the alligations," report was rendered on the 17th, in which the petitioner's statements were confirmed and his account deemed correct, and the opinion expressed that "the said Mr. Byerley ought to give his Reasons to ye_government and Council" why he has not complied with their order. On the reverse of Bradford's petition appears the endorsement "Warr^s Jasued."—Col. MSS., LII: 161, 164 (Albany).

"The Committee Appointed y^e 20th of May last to Agree with A scavenger doe Report that they have agreed with Jacob Cousine Cameron to be scaled at £540:8:1, and covering a period from June 8, 1709, to carry away the Soyle out of the broad Street from the Garden Street to the little bridge at the south End of the Said broad street" for £12.—M. C. C., II: 329.

The legislature passes "An Act for ye Encouragement of the Post Office within this Province." It states that the "General Post Office shall Remain, Continue and be in some manner Place within the City of New York." The details of its organisation and operation are described.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 612. For the establishment of the post-office, see March 2, 1685.
An order has been issued by Cornbury for rebuilding the front of the custom-house.—Assem. Jour., I: 231.

A conference between the council and the house was arranged to take place on this day at "the Coffee-House."—Assem. Jour., I: 231. See Oct. 6.

The following notice, published in Boston, explains the colonial postal methods at this time:

"This is to give Notice, that whereas several persons do refuse to take up, receive and pay for their Letters that come and go by Post and cannot have any redress of the same; that for the future all such Persons Letters shall be rejected, whether Foreign or Domestic, when tendered to be forwarded at every Post-Office; and for the better discovery of such, their Names with the Places of their Abode shall be Inserted in the Publick News-Letter.

"This is also to give further Notice, That whereas several persons do write upon their Letters Post paid, and then throw their Letters into the several Post Offices without ever paying the Portage of the said Letters; that for the future no person whatever do write Post paid upon any Letter, till the Portage is first paid, and the person that pays the said Portage may see the Officer that receives the Letter and the Money with Post paid on the said Letter; All Letters that have Post paid writ upon them, that come not thus regularly into any Post-Office are to be thrown out."—Adv. in Boston News-Letter, Oct., 4-11, 1708.

16 Trinity vestry passes an act to enable the city of New York to raise £600 in two years to be applied as follows:—£150 "to Repair the Common Goals and the City Hall...and for removing the Prison from over the Chamber where the General Assembly of this Colony now Sitteth to some other place," £60 to repair "the Publick Bridge by the weigh House and the Stairs and Landing places of the said City," £500 to pay the City's debts.—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 655.

17 A conference committee is appointed to meet "at the Coffee house." On June 6 and June 25, 1709, committees were ordered to meet at the "Coffee house," but on Sept. 22, 1709, the place of meeting was designated "New Coffee house."—Jour. Leg. Coun., 270, 283, 285, 288. The early coffee-house stood on Pearl St. (see Jan. 27, 1702).

26 Complaints against Lord Cornbury are declared by the council groundless.—Cal. Coun. Min., 222. The council issued a declaration the next day concerning these complaints.—Ibid., 223. See also May 29, 1706; Feb. 9, 1708.

Nov. 2 Liberty "to pull down the Boards about the Markett house by the custom house bridge."—M. C. C., II: 364. Alderman Thong reported on Feb. 8, 1709, that he had "sold the Boards of the Markett house by the great Bridge" as directed, and received £135.6. Of this sum he expended 18 shillings, 16 pence, for 34 loads of sand and for labour "for mending the street near the custom house."—Ibid., II: 571.

17 The council orders that a dinner be prepared for Lord Lovelace.—Cal. Coun. Min., 224. On Oct. 21, 1709, Henry Swift's petition for settlement of his account of £606 "for a Dinner dressed at the Fort, to accommodate the late Lord Lovelace," was taken into consideration by the assembly.—Assem. Jour., I: 265. Three years later, May 7, 1714, it appeared from another petition of Swift's that the bill was still unpaid.—Ibid., I: 310.

23 May Bickley takes office as recorder of the city. His commission from Cornbury in the county of Queens, New York, shows that John Tudor, the former recorder, who was present at the common council meeting on Nov. 2, had recently died.—M. G. C., II: 367.

The mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city present an address recommending to Lord Lovelace to use his influence with the merchants of New York for the benefit of his virtues, etc. They express gratitude to the queen for sending with him "two ships of Warr and such large Suppplies of Soldiers and Stores" for the support of the province. They recommend that William Sharpes be continued as town clerk (see Oct. 14, 1692), a position he has held for 16 years.—M. C. C., II: 367-68.

The governor's council orders that the powder magazine be repaired. On Jan. 20 a warrant was issued to Rip van Dam for repairing the new magazine.—Cal. Coun. Min., 224. See May 28, 1702.

11 Trinity vestry orders "That the Christening Pew & that behind it be appointed for the use of his Excel the Lord Lovelace's Servants."—Trim. Min. (M.S.).

13 Trinical legislators appoint a committee "to treat with workmen relating to carrying on the Steeple & produce a Model or Models thereof & Report their proceedings therein to the next Vestry."—Trim. Min. (M.S.). See Apr. 26, 1709.

14 Lord Cornbury is asked for Thomas Weaver's bond, and other public papers. On Jan. 20, he wanted time in which to deliver the papers; and this was granted.—Cal. Coun. Min., 224, citing N. T. Col. MSS., 52: 15-20. He was again called upon for public papers on May 10.—Ibid., 227. For earlier reference to Weaver, see Sept. 27, 1702.

The common council resolves to give the freedom of the city. Feb. 15 seals in a box of gold, to Gov. Lovelace; also to "Compliment" Chief-Justice Roger Monspenson, Mr. Harrison, Mr. Cockerill, Col. Redknap, and Mr. Thomas Wood with the freedom.—M. C. C., II: 370.

James Harding, the lessee of the ferry, is paid £25; "for building an Oven & Making A Gallery upon the top of the house where he now dwells in at the ferry," and £50 "for Repairing the little ferry house of this Corporation on Nassaw Island."—M. C. C., II: 369.

12 George Clarke, who later became lieutenant-governor of the province (see Oct. 30, 1766), is sworn in as clerk of the council.—Cal. Coun. Min., 224.

The subject of rebuilding the great bridge is introduced in the common council, which appoints a committee "to View the Great Bridge by the custom house" and report what repairs and "Amendments" are needed there.—M. C. C., II: 372. On June 23, it was resolved, with the consent of Christopher Drone, the lessee of the great bridge by the Custom house, that the great bridge be forthwith New built and Carried over the Dock to the wharf," and a committee was appointed to determine the best way to do this.—Ibid., II: 378. On Aug. 20, 1709, this committee reported a recommendation "to fill up between the old frame with good Stockades & Continue it direct over to the other wharfe with the same with substantial plates and Cross pieces and to board it between the Stockades and Whitehall to prevent the Dirt getting through filling up a lay of Mudd between," and a committee was appointed to engage workmen and obtain materials for the work. It was also ordered "that under the little Bridge by the Dock be filled up and yt the Common Sewer be Continued under the same to the Entring of the Dock, and that the place where the Little Bridge now Stands be Covered with boards after the Manner it now is A little higher than the Street and that the Aforesaid Committee imploy workmen to perform the same at a Costs of £499.6: 13. 11. 9d. Assem. Jour., I: 279-80. After Nov. 20, Oct. 4, 1709, for "Making the little bridge & Common Sewer by the Dock," a committee was appointed on Dec. 6, 1709, to supervise the making of the "great Bridge near the Custom house," as required in the order of Aug. 20.—Ibid., II: 392. On Feb. 9, 1709, the committee reported to the council that they had agreed with John Harris and Isaac Anderson to rebuild the great bridge for £70. Hall was to be paid on Feb. 15 and the balance on the completion of the bridge, which was "to be performed by the last day of July next."—Ibid., II: 395. Full payment was made on Sept. 12.

The common council "waited upon his Excellency my Lord Lovelace, and desired to become a Member of this Corporation by Accepting of the Freedom thereof (which this Court presented to his Lordship the Seal being inclosed in a gold box) after which Mr. Recorder made a Handsom Speech to his Excellency Suitable to the Occasion Assuring him of the Loyalty and affection of this Corporation." This request for admission was granted, and Lord Lovelace is required to follow instructions given to Col. Samuel Vetch regarding the place of rendezvous (to be agreed upon by SeeA. Lovelace, Vetch, and Nicholson), the levy of soldiers, and the time for action.—N.Y. Col. Docs., V: 70-71. See July 2, 1709.

In a petition to the queen, Cornbury, writing in the third person, relates that "the Misrepresentations his Enemies have maliciously made of him have so far obtained Credit with your Majesty as to Cause his Removal," etc. that he "is now hindered by some of his Creditors here" from appearing before the queen, and asks that the queen "may be at liberty to return into great Britain where he is willing to give the answer for [his serviços] handsomely hereafter." From MS. in the Emmet Coll., item No. 10652. See also June 20.

The common council requested Lord Lovelace to "make a visit and tour of inspection of all the buildings of this town and the adjacent country, and to report to the Board of Trade upon the same as the Law directs."—M. C. C., III: 374. On April 1, 1709, the instructions to the surveyors were "to begin at the Westernmost end of the said Street by Lord Haymogen foundation allowing the said Street or street as it now is to be thirty foot wide and to run from thence upon A Straight line to Capt. Theobalds Corner house aforesaid and all Persons Concern'd are to Regulate their buildings Accordingly as they shall be directed by the said Surveyors."—Ibid., II: 374-75.

Lovelace, in an address to the house, requires it "to provide for the support of the Officers of the Fortifications of the Province." The barracks, he says, "are so small and so much out of repair," that he has been obliged "to billet the Recruits," that came over with him, "upon this City," although this has been a burden to the inhabitants.—Assemb. Jour., II: 230.

The queen, "designing to fitt out an expedition for the reduction of Canada and Newfoundland according to some proposals made by Coll. Vetch, to whom Her Majesty has given instructions," (see March 1), has ordered Lord Sunderland to send to Lovelace Col. Vetch's instructions, and to avoid any delay "in case the ship which carries Coll. Vetch" should not reach Lovelace soon enough or should miscarry. If Lovelace receives these instructions before the arrival of Col. Vetch, he is directed "to dispatch an express to the sev'l Governors of Pennsylvania and Connecticut," to meet him with all expedition at New York to confer on the most proper and effectual methods of executing the instructions. Sunderland adds the written instructions additional commands of the queen, outlining the plan of the expedition. Quebec is to be attacked by sea, and Montreal by land.—N.Y. Col. Docs., V: 72-73.

Vincent de la Montagne is ordered by the court of general sessions to allow his wife and children to live in the great room of his dwelling-house "at Scavonia in the Bowry Division of the Out Ward," in order to prevent their becoming a charge to the parish.—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 160. It appears that "Ariandite Delamontagne the wife of Vincent Delamontagne late of the said City Bridges, was 'A Woman of publick Notorious and Adulterous fame and behaviour.'"—Ibid., 191.

Gov. Lovelace dies. Thomas Cockrell, his secretary (N.Y. Col. Docs., V: 90), notified Mr. Popple, the secretary of the board of trade (ibid., IV: 266), by letter from New York dated July 2. He said that Lovelace "never had showed any open Government," and attributed this "wholly to the cold & sickness he caught aboard the Man of War upon the Coast." He added: "One Son dyed before him and the Young Lord a fortnight after."—Ibid., V: 80-81. Thomas Byerly, writing to the lords of trade on June 50, referred to "the late Sir Cloudesley Shovel, who has sustained by the death of My Lord Lovelace . . . He was a Gentleman of those Qualifications, Excell't temper, and goodness, that, had he lived longer with us, he would have reviv'd the Country from its former calamity."—Ibid., V: 80. For a summary of the Lovelace genealogy, see Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 49-56.

"Play acting and prize fighting" are forbidden by the governor's council.—Col. Coun. Min., 227. This was perhaps intended, in part, as a mark of respect to the late Lord Lovelace. We know that Gov. Robert Hunter wrote a play which probably was acted in New York (see Aug. 1, 1714), and that Lieut.-Gov. Naadaf, who administered the governor's office, was given a license by one Richard Hunter and his company of players.—Hist. Mag. (1686), IX: 118. See also 1704.

The council orders that Col. Ingoldsby be informed of the death of Lord Lovelace, and that Col. C reviewed the list of council oridners, and that Col. Peter Schuyler presides at the council meeting, and is required by the council to keep the keys of the garrison, until the stores are inventoried.—Ibid., 237.

The council directs that the body of Lord Lovelace be buried in New York. A warrant is issued to Lady Lovelace for her husband's salary. The New York regiment is placed under orders for the funeral, and is furnished with powder, etc.—Col. Coun. Min., 1711. See May 24, 1704 (q.v.), having been commander-in-chief as early as July 26, 1691 (q.v.), and was recommended to be paid as lieut.-governor瑜伽 Nov. 8, 1694 (q.v.).

Lord Cornbury is called upon by the governor's council for papers, and on May 227.

The council considers a letter from the queen to the late Lord Lovelace about the Canada expedition.—Col. Coun. Min., 227. A council order is issued to the mayor to prevent the exportation of provisions.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 156.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for Regulating and Establishing fees," The fees of all public officials from governor to notary publics are prescribed for all their official acts.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 639. In the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (in box lettered "New York, 1700-1760") is a MS. list of fees paid in New York, dated Oct. 19, 1710. It includes: governor's fees for seal to patents; attorney general's fees for patent confirmations, grant or charter; surveyor's fees for surveying, etc.; and secretary's fees for a confirmation of a patent for a house and lot formerly possessed, for a patent for new land, etc.

Col. Francis Nicholson and Col. Samuel Vetch issue a proclamation at New York, printed by Bradford (having been made public by order of Peter Schuyler, president of the council), assuring a supply of arms or their value in money to all such as shall volunteer for the expedition (against Canada).—From reproduction in the catalogue of Southeby, Wilkinson & Hodge, London, of July 1 and 15, 1920, filed with broadside in N. Y. Pub. Library. To accordance with the act of June 8 (q.v.), a series of indented bills, the first to be issued in this province, bears this date.

1709 Contracted Narrowed & incroached upon A Certain publick Street

May 31 have built and Erected several large houses and buildings to the great Inconvenience and Nuisance of the Inhabitants." It is ordered that these persons be prosecuted "for the Removing the said Nuisance."—M. C. C., II: 376-77.

June 4 Lady Lovelace is reluctant to give up her late husband's papers.—Cal. Coun. Min., 229. A conversation which Lady Lovelace had with Col. John Byerly, as told by her in a letter to the lords of trade on Sept. 3, reveals the following facts: It was soon after the death of Lovelace and of his eldest son. Ingedolsby called on her and demanded the papers she had in her hands. These, she told him, Lord Lovelace had intrusted to her to send to the Secretary of State, Lord Sunderland, who had sent for them. He replied that "he did not value Lord Sunderland's let," "was nothing to him, and in very ruff and threatening terms" told her she "shoud not stir from New York" until she had given him the papers. Notwithstanding his Hectoring me," she adds, "I did at midnight get the trunk of Papers and myself on Ship board. . . .

Captain Symons belonging to one of the Companies in a very bullying manner would not let me Remove several things that we put into the Fort and paid for . . . .

"The damage our goods received by Sea was very great, the Expense in repairing the House at New York, the Expense of my Dear Lord's illness, from the time of our arrival till his Death, also of two children, and their Funerals, and the Expenсе of our voyages amount to above £2000 more than my Lord received there, which was not above £200."—N. T. Cal. Dist., V: 59.

Lady Lovelace's eloquent story of Ingedolsby's disposition may be taken in investigating the claim by the council of the province in 1692 regarding a report that one Mrs. Clapper had called Ingedolsby a "murderous rogue."—Cal. Coun. Min., 73.

8 The council directs that joint committees on the Canada expedition meet at the Coffee House.—Cal. Coun. Min., 229.

15 A bill is passed, entitled "An Act for the Currency of Bills of Credit for Five Thousand Pounds."—Assemb. Jour., I: 252; Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 666. This was the first issue of bills of credit (or paper money) by New York. It was to meet the expenses of the expedition against Canada. The expedition, however, was abandoned on the defeat of the allies in Spain, which prevented the coming of the fleet that was to cooperate in this expedition.—See July 5, 1709. See also Hickson, Hist. of the bills of credit or paper money issued by N. Y. from 1700 to 1786 (Albany, 1866). See May 31, and Addenda.

Joint committees of the council and house, on the subject of the Canadian expedition, plan to meet at the Coffee House.—Cal. Coun. Min., 229. See also Sept. 21.

16 Complaint is made that the ferry-man lands passengers from the Island of Nassau near Coenties Key, contrary to the terms of his lease.—Assemb. Jour., I: 352.

20 The council agree to petition the council for a certificate that his creditors prevent his return to England, an order of council is issued that he is "being detained by some of his creditors."—Cal. Coun. Min., 229, and see the original MS, Council Minutes (Albany). This was signed next day.—Ibid. Some time later, Cunbury escaped from custody (see April 22, 1710), and was next heard from when about to sail for Europe (see April 29 and July 31, 1710).

28 The militia of New York City is ordered to do guard duty at Fort Anne. Shoemakers are to be impressed for making cartridge boxes.—Cal. Coun. Min., 229.

29 The Government of Christopher Denne the Lessee of the Dock of this City it is Resolved [by the common council] that the great Bridge by the Custom house be withth new built and Carried over the Dock to the whare," and a committee is appointed to "view the same and Report to this Court what Meeting shall the opinion of the chairman be, the same for the publick benefit . . . .—M. C. C., II: 378. For the committee's report, see Aug. 20. See, further, diagram of the great dock, Addenda, 1700; see also April 13, 1710.

30 John Michael Schult and Catherine Provoost are given permission to take their goods off the street "to lay the Street Called the Heergragt or Broad Street to lay" "some wooden pipes therein in Order to drain their Cellars." No one in the neighbourhood shall "Presume to break up any of the said Street to place or Joyn any Other Pipes into the Aforesaid pipes," without permission from the common council.—M. C. C., II: 378.

See also ibid., III: 342.

24 The vestry of Trinity Church writes to "the Most Reverend Father in God Thomas Lord Arch Bishop of Canterbury:" . . . It is but of late years our Church had its being & is yet very tender, the greatest part of the Inhabitants of this Province of the Dutch & French reformed Religion or Dissenters & Quakers & but 3 Counties within the province, would receive a Church of England minister, to wit Queens County, West Chester & Richmond & of these Counties but the smallest number goe to the worship of God. With much ados, we have overcome the Deads we had contracuted by the building of our Church & Steele, wch latter is designed for a Ring of Bells, the Walls are of a good thickness & foundation above 30 foot square, it is got so high as the ridge poll of the Church, but for want of money, we were forc'd to leave it there, & for the present have hung in it a Bell of 64d [!] weight, the free gift of his Lordship of London, the Bishop of Bristol in the year 1699 sent us over so many stones as did pave all the Ides of our Church. Col' Fletcher, who was Govt of this Province from 1692 to 1698 gave the first Life & being to it & was a large Benefactor out of his private Fortune. His Successor [Bellomont] in the Govt, from the contrary endeavoured to ruin it, altho' sometimes he came thither to receive the holy Sacrament, & we hope God has forgiven him, the Viscount Cornbury next to him, during his govern't has endeavoured not only to restore, but advance the Churches Interest, & made in this Grant wch by the Church from his Successor the Lord Lovelace is shaken a rendred disputable, until Her most Sacred Majesty shall be gratiously plea'd to reestabish us therein. Col [Francis] Nicholson has likewise been a Benefactor to our Church of the first Rank. A thousand pound will be required to finish our Steeple[see April 26] with which he is abundantly rich. There is much more wanted, & is a Dwelling house for our Minister & a Vestry Room with a Ring of Bells & a set of Organs, what we cannot effect our selves, we shall leave to God Almighty's good Providence & must recommend the works to our Postierty, the Situation of our Church is very pleasant between two Rivers on Eminent Ground. We have a large Burning place adjoining it in good fence & adorn'd with rows of Lime Trees wch will make a pleasant shade, in a little time. . . . We want also a couple of Large Branches of Candlessticks, to hang in the body of our Church; Communion Plate; Books and Vestments, which these last, we are creditibly informed have been designed for us by the late King William, and since by her present Majesty, but by what ill fate or accident we know not, we are still without them."—Trin. Min. (MS); Eccles. Rec., III: 1768.

Nicholson and Vetch report from New York to the lords of trade on their safe arrival in England and on the success of their negotiations with the governments of the other British provinces concerning the expedition against Canada. Only the Jerseys and Pennsylvania demur, the assembly of the former being half composed of Quakers, and that of the latter almost entirely so.—N. T. Col. Dist., V: 78.

Col. Vetch, the originator of the scheme for the reduction of Canada, writes to Secretary Boyle renewing a petition, previously made by him to the cabinet council, that, on the success of the expedition, he be made commander-in-chief of Canada "until the government should be regularly modelled."—Ibid., V: 79. See A. July 2.

Thomas Cockrell (secretary to Lovelace) writes to Mr. Popple (secretary of the brent of the future company) "Having full Information of good Success from the Canada Expedition and shall raise in this Province £10,000, towards the charge of it. I can't say that we match the Zeal and Spirit of the Men of New England, Rhode Island and Connecticut. But we have already sent away all our forces both Regular and Militia, whom Col. Nicholson Commands July 1764 to Chief; We have some against it but they have been overbom'd.

I hope to hear of the Fleets' arrival with the Forces from England, July 1765 all Trade is at a stand until this expedition is over: Colonel Vetch's store weekly for Beef and Provisions."—N. T. Col. Docs., V. 81. See also March 1 and Oct. 21, 1769.

The "Anglican Minister of this Place" receives "a very handsome Salary" of £60 per annum, "besides his Perquisites," and "is attempting to obtain from Her Majesty an allowance of twenty six pound per annum out of the Quit Rents, for his House Rent." Lieut.-Gov. Ingoldsby, in giving this information to the lords of trade, adds: "And the Church has now in bank as I am informed, seven or eight hundred pounds."—N. T. Col. Docs., V. 83. Whether the "bank" referred to was in New York, London, or the statement metaphorical, does not appear. It undoubtedly means merely a place of deposit. The first organized bank doing business in New York was opened in 1784—See Feb. 12, 1784.

Ingoldsby writes to the lords of trade about the death of Lovelace, "whereby," he states, "the Government of this and Her Majesty's neighbouring Province of New Jersey devolved upon me."—N. T. Col. Docs., V. 82. But see Sept. 17, 1766.

The council orders that grenadiers be furnished with red caps.

The "Commissioners for laying out the highways" (see June 20, 1764, report) are prevented from proceeding because the Request of "the Neighbourhood of the Bowery," that a road might "be settled from the Meadows upon the East River unto the Next publick Way," they order that the new road "shall Come from the said Meadows by the path which now Comes from the street through the Land Commonly known by the Name of Leendert's Land from thence Running Westerly till you Come to the Southernmost Corner of the Land now in the Possession of Hendrick Brevoort and from thence along the south side of the said Brevoort Fences thro' the Land of the widow Selyns till you Come to the Publick and Common highway near the house where Daniel Ebert's land now lies."—Min. Gen. Sts. of the Peal (M.S.), 161-61. This road no longer exists. It is shown on the Ratzen Plan (Pl. 41), and more plainly on Ratzen Plan (Pl. 42, Vol. 1). It extended from Leendert's Meadows westerly, a little northerly, in a curve, and then south-westerly to the Bowery at Broom (then called Bullock) St. Generally speaking, according to the modern map, it ran from the East River near the foot of Houston St. to the intersection of The Bowery and Broome St.

The council orders that iron and steel be sent to Albany for the Canada expedition.—Col. Coun. Min., 231.

Aug. 20, 1764 Article to be appointed the last Common Council to View the Great Bridge: see June 225 Report . . . we have Viewed the great Bridge and do find that to fill up between the old frame with good Stockade & Continue it direct over to the other wharf with the same with substantial plates and Cross piers between the Street & the Bowery to prevent the Dirt getting through filling up a lay of Mudder which is hambly submitted . . . " A committee is appointed "to Agree with workmen and for Materials for the Speedy finishing of the Said Bridge."—M. C. C., II: 379. Another committee was appointed on Dec. 6 "for making and finishing the great Bridge near the Custom house . . ."—Ibid., 392. See, further, Feb. 9, 1716.

It is also ordered on this day that "under the little Bridge by the Dock be filled up and y't the Common Sewer be Continued under the same to the Entering of the Dock, that the place where the little Bridge now stands is covered with boards, which is not a little higher than the Street and that the Aforesaid Committee employ workmen to perform the same."—M. C. C., II: 379-80. See also Feb. 15, and Oct. 216 and diagram of the dock, Addenda, 1765.

An ordinance is passed by the common council "that the Ports that are now a year old out of the Quoit Rents, for his House Rent, and the Person Inhabiting the houses unto which they front."—M. C. C., II: 380, 382. These were perhaps hitching-post._Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 535. Possibly they were so placed to prohibit vehicular traffic in certain very narrow streets, or to support the house-rafters which were stretched across the street on either side of churches to prevent traffic during services.

Sept. The common council appoints a committee "to Agree with workmen for the Removing the Goal Purchasing Materials Re-Sept. 1716 paring the City Hall and making Cupido title."—M. C. C., II: 351.

The common council gives a permit to the inhabitants of the South and Dock Yards "to put A Covering or Roof over the little Bridge by the Dock" at their own expense.—M. C. C., II: 381.

The Earl of Sunderland (British secretary of state) is on the board of trade, that the queen appoints the Earl of Sunderland as "Captain of the Lords Lieut. Governor to the Committee of the Lords to which the question referred" (appointed Col. Robert Hunter "to succeed the late Lord Lovelace in the Governments of New York and New Jersey." He directs them to prepare a commission and instructions accordingly.—N. T. Col. Docs., V. 91.

The commission bears the date Oct. 15, 1769, and is printed in "Ibid," V. 92-98. It is an unusually full and explicit, and date of bear, Dec. 13, 1770 (p.v.).

Col. Ingoldsby's commission as lieutenant-governor of New York is duly revoked.—N. T. Col. Docs., V. 91. This is done in accordance with a representation from the board of trade to the queen, that no record exists in the secretary of state's office in London to show whether the queen signed the revocation of 1706, and whether it was sent to Ingoldsby.—Ibid, V. 89.

The council considers matters relating to the French church at New Rochelle.—Col. Coun. Min., 232. They were considered again on Nov. 4.—Ibid, 233.

A conference committee of the two houses of the legislature is appointed to meet at "5th New Coffee house."—Jour. Leg. Coun., 288. On Oct. 10, and again on Nov. 12, meetings were held at "Bradfords," perhaps the same tavern.—Assem. Jour., 1: 260, 270. On Nov. 23, 1764, an order was set at the vacant places of the quarter sessions of the peace, therefore the title was "set aside at Mr. Swift's."—Ibid., 2: 265. It was Swift who served the welcoming dinner to Lovelace at the fort in Dec., 1708 (ibid., I.: 265). There is no definite record of either the identity or location of this "New Coffee house," but the site of the only "Coffee House" indicated on the MS. map of 1763 (Pl. 50, Vol. I) was at Broad and Water Sts. The one in this location belonged to Philip Van Cortlandt, by deed dated Nov. 28, 1710.—Liter Docs., XXXVII 131.

In 1764, when Philip Van Cortlandt bequeathed the house to his son John, he described it as "known by the name of the Coffee House," and in a mortgage on this same property (Milliner to Marston), dated May 1, 1764, it was described as "from the East River, formerly called the Coffee House."—Abstracts of Wills, IV: 203, 205, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1805); Liber Mortgages, 419 (New York). In 1769, this tavern was known as the Exchange Coffee House (see March 25, 1730). For a view of this coffee-house, see No. 43 on Pl. 27, Vol. I.

Col. Samuel Vetch asks the governors of those colonies interested in the Canada expedition to meet at New London. It is the opinion of the council, however, that the congress of governors should meet at New York.—Col. Coun. Min., 232. This was the second time that a congress of governors at New York had been proposed.—See June 16, 1761; April 28, 1709.

Alderman Thong is reimbursed in the sum of £491. "Money Oct. 4 by him disburs for Making the little Bridge & common sewer by the Dock."—M. C. C., II: 385. See Aug. 20.

Several inhabitants of the East Ward petition the common council for "leave to Erect A Market house at the South end of Clarkes Slip at the end of the Wall street so soon as their Convenience Shall permit," and it is ordered that "they have Liberty to erect the same at their own Charge provided it be finished within two years from the date hereof."—M. C. C., II: 385. The original MS. of this petition and order is preserved in the city clerk's record-room. This was known later as the Meal Market.—De Voc, Market Book, 242. It was removed in 1762 (see Feb. 25, 1762), and annexed to the Oswego Market.—M. C. C., V: 287. See also landmark Map Reel, Key, III: 939. It was at "the Market By the Market house" that slaves stood to be hired, according to an ordinance of Nov. 18, 1713 (p.v.). See also Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 559; and May 12, 1762.

Ingoldsby, addressing the assembly, says: 1 am sensible the Money you have raised this year has been extraordinary, yet I cannot but desire Streets for the repairs of Majesty's Forts in this City, which very much want it. The Barracks are so far decay'd, that I doubt, unless some speedy measures taken, they will in a short time require a far greater sum to put them in a Condition to accommodate the Soldiers. Many of the Carriages are likewise much out of Repair, and without some care be taken of them, the Guns will soon want new ones."—Assem. Jour., 1: 260.

A letter from the Earl of Sunderland, dated July 1, stating 21 that the queen "had thought fit to lay aside this time, the said Expedition" (to Canada), is received by the lieutenant-governor and council at New York.—Assemb. Jour., I.: 168-70. The letter itself does not appear of record in the N.Y. Col. Docs. Regarding the further progress of the expedition, see June 14, 1711. See also July 2 and Nov. 12, 1709.

Several "undue Grants of lands" having been made in the province of New York by Ingoldesby, since the death of Lovelace, the queen orders that no grants of land be made by the president of the Council of New York (so wholly unconnected with the government temporarily devolves since Ingoldesby's commission was revoked).—N. Y. Col. Docs., V.: 110. See April 10, 1710. Among the several "undue" grants referred to is one to New York City of the land between high and low-water mark on Long Island; also "the house on the City of New York lately burnt down, said to belong formerly to Governour Lovelace," which was seized for the crown and granted privately. —Ibid., V.: 110-11.

The council grants the petition of John van Horne and others, who asked "that the dock from Burger's path, to Capt. Theobald's ship, frothing their lots, may be erected, and made a public landing place."—Col. Coun. Min., 1713. Col. Land Papers, 92, 97.

Mr. Amison presented to the board [Trinity vestry] Mr. Lodge his bill for making two Sun Dial's on the Church, amounting to three pounds Seventeen Shillings & 4 G. It is ordered that "the Church Wardens pay Mr. Lodge three pounds for the two Sun Dials."—Trin. Min. (M.). On Feb. 15, 1709, the vestry ordered the church-wardens to pay the remainder of the bill, "seventeen Shillings & 4 G. for setting the Sun Dial's on the Church in a true position."—Ibid.

13

The draft of instructions for Hunter (see Sept. 9, 1709) is submitted to the queen by the board of trade. The governor's council is to consist of Peter Schuyler, Samuel Skaats, Robert Walters, Gerardus Beckman, Rip van Dam, Calch Heathcote, Kilian van Kanaler, Roger Mospause, John Barbarte, Adolphus Philips, Abraham de Peyster, and David Provost.

21

Among the other noteworthy provisions is one requiring the governor to give directions to merchants, planters, and others, to be "very cautious in giving an Account by letters of the publick state and condition of our said Province," lest such letters fall into the hands of the French; and "to give directions to all Masters of Ships, or other persons to whom you may intrust your letters, that they put such letters in a bag with a sufficient weight to sink the same immediately in case of imminent danger from the enemy."

The governor is not to accept any present from the assembly; his salary, however, is raised from £500 to £1,100 per annum. He is to send to the lords of trade a map of the province. He is to permit liberty of conscience to all persons except Papists. He is to submit a census of the inhabitants.

The Bishop of London has ecclesiastical jurisdiction in the province; and the governor is to notify him if any minister preaches without orders. No schoolmaster will be permitted to keep school in the province without a license from this bishop. A table of marriages, established by the canons of the Church of England, is to be hung up in every orthodox church and duly observed. Drunkenness, debauchery, swearing, and blasphemy are to be discouraged and punished; and no person is to be admitted "to publick trusts and employments whose ill Fame and Conversation may occasion scandal."

Merchant-ships are to fly "no other Jack" than "such as is worn by our ships of war, with the Distinction of a White Excus- eon in the middle thereof, and that the said mark of Distinction may extend itself one half of the depth of the Jack, and one third of the fly thereof." The instructions contain a sketch of this Jack.

In cases of errors in the trial or hearing of law cases, appeals are allowed to the governor and his council, and the sum appealed for exceeds £100 sterling. If the amount involved is over £500, either side may appeal from the governor's decision to the queen and her privy council. In additional instructions to Hunter, blank forms are prescribed to be used in keeping records of shipping at the port of New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V.: 112-15.
The lords of trade, writing from Whitehall to Gov. Hunter, Dec. of 1709 refer to "the late Lord Cornbury now Earl of Clarendon."—N. Y. C. 23 Col. Dust, Vol. 154. When he became governor of New York in 1709, he was Sir Edward Hyde (by courtesy called Lord Cornbury), a grandson of the first Earl of Clarendon, and nephew, by marriage, of James II. He became Earl of Clarendon on the death of his father. It is said that his elevation to the peerage secured his release from prison in New York, where his creditors had placed him.—Hunt's Envoy, of Mr. H. St. Hilary, "Cornbury," Miss. Coun. (1864), 273; ibid. (1890), 763; but see April 22, 1710; April 15, 1712.

From this year until 1720, the South Sea Company, of England, sought to fund a floating debt of £60,000,000, the stockholders to have a monopoly of the trade with Spanish South America. The "South Sea Bubble" collapsed on the refusal of Spain to enter into a commercial treaty with England, and thousands were ruined.

In the year 1710, five kings, or Sachems of the Iroquois went from hence to England, in order to engage Queen Anne to make an alliance with them against the French. Their names, dress, reception at court, speeches to the Queen, opinion of England and of the European manners, and several other particulars about them are sufficiently known from other writings."—Kalm, Travels into N. A., 1774. See also Add, MSS., p. 173.

"The portraits of the four visiting Indians (one of the number conducted by Colonel Schuyler having died) were painted, by order of the queen, by a celebrated Dutch portrait-painter, John Verelst... who had resided many years in London. The work of art had created such sensation at the capital and throughout the kingdom, that the artist found it necessary to guard against unlimited reproductions of his work... In the 'Tatler' of November 14, 1710... there appeared an advertisement as follows: 'This is to give notice that the noble Bowes, and John Simon, in whole lengths, of the four Indian Kings, that are done from the original pictures drawn by John Verelst... are now to be delivered to subscribers and sold at the Rainbow and Dove in the Strand.' But other hands could not be restrained from making copies of pictures that were so greatly in demand: none of the others, however, were recognized or authorized by the painter. It was the Simonds mezzotint prints that were sent in such generous numbers to the 'plantations' in America. A set of proof impressions is in the possession of Mrs. John Carter-Brown, and the illustrations in the text are derived from these. Another set is included among the collection of the American Antiquarian Society. The originals of Verelst are still preserved in the British Museum."—Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II, 146 (footnote). There is also a set of these rare mezzotints in the N. Y. Pub. Library, showing the names of J. Verelst Pinx. and J. Simon Fecit. They were "Printed for J. Bowes, at the Black Swan, in the Blackfriars."—Quoted ibid.

23 appointed for taking the Great Bridge [see Aug. 20, 1709] do report that they have agreed with John Harris and Isaac Anderson for the making of the same for the Consideration of seventy pounds." Half (½) is to be paid on the 15th, and the remainder "as soon as the Bridge is finished which is to be performed by the last day of July next."—M. C. C., II, 395. On Sept. 12, they received £35 "in full for their making the bridge over the Dock."—Ibid., II, 415. Apparently this somewhat ambiguous order refers to further filling in of the dock west of the custom-house bridge which was completed at this time. See, further, Feb. 1, 1712.

The city pays Col. Abraham de Peyster two years' interest (£60) on the ferry mortgage.—M. C. C., II, 396. See March 5, 1708. This is ordered by Trinity vestry "that Mr. Habbs be the under-taker [contractor] to build the Sphire [sic] of the Steeple of Trinity Church if the Church Wardens and a Comitie of the Vestry can agree with him for the Workmanship."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Feb. 5, 1711; Apr. 26, 1709.

The petition of James Harding asking for an abatement of his rent of the ferry, by reason of "the Great sickness of the small pox," is rejected by the common council. A second petition, on March 31, was also rejected.—M. C. C., II, 397, 398. For the contract with Harding, see Sept. 29, 1707.

Warrants are issued to Thomas Byerley to pay for repairs to the fort made by Rip van Dam, Mr. Philipsy, and Major Provoost.—Cal. Coun., 235.

The order of the queen of Oct. 29, 1709 (p. v.), stopping all further grants of land until the arrival of the new governor, 10 Brigadier Robert Hunter, is received, and the council orders its publication.—Cal. Coun., 235. See also Add, MSS., p. 173.

Col. Ingoldsby comes before the council, the queen's letter revoking his commission having been received.—Cal. Coun., 236.

John Cruger, Stephen de Lancey, and George Norton petition the president and members of the council that Sheriff William Anderson be dismissed from office for having allowed Lord Cornbury to escape from his custody. It is charged that he refuses to retake his prisoners; and that he has given no security to answer for the escape, nor does he possess any possible estate.—Cal. His. MSS., Eng., 370; and the original MS. in Albany. On April 29, Anderson addressed an answer to Gerardus Beecken, president of the council, denying the charges against him, and stating that he had performed his Cornhill duties and was answerable in the proper court of law. The attorney-general gave his opinion.—Ibid., 275. On July 31, Anderson was suspended from office.—Cal. Coun., 239. Cf. Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VIII, 196, where it is stated that Cornbury remained in the debtors' prison in New York until his accession to the earldom of Clarendon furnished him the means for his release. He was Earl of Clarendon on Dec. 25, 1709 (p. v.), and was first so called in New York records on April 29, 1710 (p. v.).

The governor's council receives a letter from Lord Clarendon (Cornbury).—Cal. Coun., 237. The original entry in the council minutes states: "A Lett" from my Lord Clarendon to this Board Concerning the Petitions against the Sheriff of this City was delivered to ye President by Mr. Bickley & read at the Board."—From Council Minutes (Albany), X, 491. See also April 22 and July 11, 1710.

On account of the expected arrival of 3,000 Palatines, papers May are refused to a shipmaster for the clearance of his ship laden with pork and peas.—Cal. Coun., 237. See April 13, 1710. As to the number of Palatines, cf. Dec. 5, 1709; April 13, July 24, and Nov. 7, 1710.

The committee of the common council appointed Nov. 29, 1709 (M. C. C., II, 391), to audit and adjust the books and accounts of the treasurer, reports much "disorder of the City Affairs." In addition to £3481810d due the city "from Sundry Persons," there appear to be "Considerable Sums of Money belonging to the Hunter gives to the corporation of Trinity Church the use of the Queen's Farm during his term as governor.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V. 132. The validity of the patent of Nov. 23, 1705, (p. 76,) had been questioned, hence this action of the governor. Litigation regarding the farm was still in progress in 1714, but was settled by instructions to Gov. Hunter from the queen dated April 14, 1714, directing "that immediately upon receipt hereof, you do issue the same, or carry on the present conveyance and payment to said corporation, against the said corporation (Trinity Church), and do not suffer any further proceedings to be had in that suit, until we shall signify our further pleasure to you.—Eccles. Recs. III: 2041-42.

In accordance with a committee's recommendations of May 13 (q. s.), the common council enacts a law to regulate the office of chamberlain or treasurer of the city. The person elected to this office shall be of good ability and reputation, a resident of the city, and a freeman. He shall give a bond to the corporation with sufficient sureties in the sum of £1,000, to discharge the following duties of his office: He shall keep, in due order and method, in proper books, "A true Exact and Just Account of the several Branches of the Revenue Rents and Incomes of the said Corporation; and "discharge the same by due and Orderly payments." Every three months, or oftener if requested, he shall render an account to the corporation of his receipts and disbursements, observing the common council's orders for making payments. Within 14 days after the termination of his occupancy of the office, he shall render a true account, turn over to the corporation the money remaining in his hands, and deliver up all the "Books [of] Accoumts belonging to the said Office with all Warrants Vouchers and Memorandums . . . Books Bonds Specialties Leases Grants Deeds Patents and all Other Papers and Writings whatsoever in any wise belonging to the said Corporation without any Concealment Imbazzlement or fraud." —M. C. C., II: 497. The corporation of the city treasurer's office, see also Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. at an 18th Cent. Municipality, 29-31.

"A Great Number" of the Palatines having arrived, the common council petitions the provincial council to so dispose of them as to prevent their coming into the city "until they shall be in A full state of health;" for "there is just Cause to believe there are many contagious distempers among them." —M. C. C., II: 408-9. See Sept. 5, 1711. President Beeckman states to the provincial council that, in response to the mayor's petition, and in accord with the queen's command to "Provide Lodging and Provisions" for them, it is the opinion of the board "that Nutten Island [now Governors Island] is the properest place to put the Palatines on and that Huts should be made for them, and Doctor Law, Doctor Moore and Doctor Garran be Desired to go on board the said ship" and examine them. Two carpenters are ordered to accompany the president of the council this afternoon to Nutten Island, to consult regarding building the huts, and obtaining the necessary boards. The supplies from the ship are to be stored in the fort. The goods of the Palatines are to be landed at once on Nutten Island.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., III: 333-34. "On their landing at New York, they were quartered in tents. A large number were quartered in tents, at least, in six Companies, over each of which was a Captain appointed to Comand them . . ."—Ibid., III: 423-24.

The Palatines, whose original home was the Lower Palatine of the Rhine, and who had espoused the faith of Luther, were fugitives from religious persecution at the hands of Louis XIV, of France, who destroyed their towns and farms. At the beginning of the eighteenth century they were wanderers over Europe, and a number of them had come to America under the protection of "the good Queen Anne." —Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 125-30; see also Hall, Hist. N. Y., III: 345 et seq.

On the same day, the common council orders "that Mr John Keill & Mr Archibald Kennedy Gos! be Complimented with the freedom of this Corporation." —M. C. C., II: 412.

According to the agreement entered into with workmen to rebuild the great bridge (see Feb. 23, 1709), it was to be completed at this time (see M. C. C., II: 355) but according to a common 1710 council order of Feb. 3, 1711 (q.v.), for employing workmen to finish it, is evidently not yet completed.

Cornbury, over the signature "Clarendon," writes from on board "the Middle" at Sandy Hook, to Gov. Hunter: "I would not let Colonnel De Peyster go without troubling your Excellency with these few lines to return you my most hearty thanks for all your favours, and particularly at my going off . . . He commends to Hunter's protection the sheriff, Anderson, N.Y. Col. Docs., p. 406. See June 20, 1709.

William Anderson, nevertheless, is suspended from the office of sheriff (see April 22, 1710), and Francis Harrison is appointed in his place.—Col. Coun. Min., 239.

Sept. A large prize ship, the "Sto Christo de Burgo," loaded with cocoa, is brought into the harbour.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 232.

A fleet of 26 vessels, commanded by Francis Nicholas, sails from Boston to Canada. Port Royal surrendered on Oct. 2, and the English immediately took possession. The province was formally ceded to Great Britain by the treaty of Utrecht (1713).—Winor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 406-9.

The governor nominates Col. Jacobus van Cortlandt to be mayor for the ensuing year.—M. C. G., II: 416. He was sworn in on Oct. 14.—Ibid., II: 420. He became mayor again on Sept. 29, 1719 (q.v.). For a brief sketch of his life, see Mem. Coun. Coun. (1853), 402.

Oct. 1. The Council made a payment of $5000 to "Hendrick De Crefort," on July 6, 1711, "for glazing the City Hall" this month.—M. C. G., II: 445.

An ordinance is passed by the provincial council to regulate official fees. It was printed by Bradford in 1710.—Evans, Am. Bibliog., I: 386.

The governor and council having determined to apprentice "the Orphans of the Palatines (and some of those other Children whose Parents have too many to look after them and mind their Labour) for a certain time," John Peter Zenger, at the age of 13, is apprenticed to William Bradford for 8 years. In the indenture Zenger promises to serve his master "well and truly," not to "absent or prolong him self" from his master's service at any time, and to behave "in all things as a good and faithful Servant;" while Bradford agrees to provide him with "good, sufficient and wholesome Meat, Drink and Clothing;" and at the expiration of the 8 years to "Surrender and deliver up the said John Peter Zenger, well clothed," to the governor of the province.—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., VIII: 35-36, citing "Indentures of Palatine Children," in secretory of state's office, Albany. The MS. volume containing these indentures was lost in the Capitol fire in 1911; but the names of the children, parents, and those to whom the children were apprenticed are printed in Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4th ed.), III: 339, 341, 342.

The assembly having resolved on Oct. 25 "That 2500Oares of Plate, be levied and raised towards defraying his Excellency's necessary charge for the ensuing year," the governor is obliged to communicate to them the instructions from the queen (see April 20, 1703) that the assembly should not make any such gift, or the governor receive it.—Assem Jour., I: 280-81.

The cupola of the city hall is painted during this month at an expense of $617.6—M. C. G., II: 445. This completed the repairs on the cupola which had been going on for three months and for which over $25 had been disbursed for carpenter work, "soder Charcole Candles," boards, nails, sheet lead, and ironwork.—Ibid., II: 429-42.

According to information given to the lords of trade by James du Pu in Dec. 6, 1711, the Palatines, by November, 1710, had "for the most part" been removed from the city of New York, "to the lands laid out for their settlement." Their number "then amounted to about 2200."—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 289. See April 13, 1710.

The common council orders "that the Cage Pilloy Stocks & whipping post be Removed to the upper end of the broad Street A little below the City Hall."—M. C. G., II: 442. The work was done in June following, and a bill of $338.6 for the same was paid on July 6.—Ibid., II: 445. See Nov. 1, 1705, and Feb. 19, 1710.

A bill "to lay a Duty on all Chimneys and Fire Hearths for the Support of the Government and Defence of the Frontiers" is introduced in the legislature, but fails to become a law.—Assem Jour., I: 282, 285, 285; Col. Hist. MSS., Enga, 375. A similar tax had been proposed in New Amsterdam (see July 1, 1666). The hearth tax in Somerset, Eng., in 1664, was one shilling annually per hearth.—Dewley, National Rec. Vol. I.

A conference commences of the two houses of the legislature is appointed to meet at "Mr Harris' Tavern" (tavern—see Dec. 32, 1704), to consider an act entitled "An Act, to prevent the burning of Woods."—Assem Jour., I: 283. In 1712, other conferences were held at Harris'.—Ibid., II: 379, 370.

Lewis Morris is expelled from the assembly for "falsely and scandalously" vilifying the "Integrity and Honesty" of the house.—Assem Jour., I: 285.

Gov. Hunter informs the council that he is "directed by her Majesty to Naturalize the Palatines," he recommends that they consider a resolution of the bill lately brought into the house for a general naturalization.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 305. Such a law was not passed, however, until July 5, 1715 (q.v.).

John Bridger, the surveyor of woods for the province, writes to the lords of trade to ask for the same allowance for travelling expenses (namely, 20 shillings) as is granted to "the Surveyor of Customs, the Engineer & Post Master."—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 176. He was to instruct the Palatines in the process of making tar.—Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 125-30.

In accordance with a request, yesterday, a joint committee of the council and assembly is to be held this evening, "at Mr Haver's tavern" (a tavern), to consider the amendments to the bill entitled "An Act for laying a Duty on all Chimneys."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 306 See Nov. 4.

A conference committee of the two houses of the legislature is appointed to meet "at Mr Swift's."—Assem Jour., I: 315. See also Nov. 21, 1709; Sept. 22, 1709; May 7, 1712.

The house reports that it cannot agree to amendments made by the council to "An Act for the Treasurers paying sundry Sums of Money," because such amendments would destroy "the very Essence and Intent of the Bill . . . the misapplication of the publick Money's of this Colony, have been told apprehensive to avoid the Notice of the Assembly; to prevent the like is the Intent of this Bill."—Assem Jour., I: 286-87.

A joint committee of the council and assembly is to meet at ye house of Mr Harris.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 309. Harris' tavern retained official favour for a number of years.—See Dec. 22, 1704: Nov. 8, and 1710; April 6, 1711; Nov. 25, 1712; and cf. Sept. 19, 1715.

Chaplain John Sharpe, writing to Sec. Clarke, says that the Dec. floor of the chapel in the fort is finished and "the Govt. Gallery will be begun this week." As the officers at Albany "will give nothing" toward these repairs, he requests Mr. Clarke to pay the carpenter twenty dollars "out of his Excys Bounty towards the repairs of the Chappel," also to procure a contribution of $4 from Col. Ingolobsey, if possible.—Col. MSS., LIV: 111 (Albany).

Ordered that Capt. Clarke agree with a certain man that built the meeting house for an amount on the plan of New York about Building the Steele not exceeding $25.—Trim. Min. (M.S.). See Feb. 5, 1711.

1711 The committee of the common council appointed on May 13, Jan. 1710 (q.v.), "for Stating the Debts due to this City," presents a detailed report. The total amount due is $835109, about 40% of which is charged to Mayor Van Cortlandt and five ex-mayors.

The treasurer is ordered to "demand & Receive of the several Persons D' to this Corporation the several sums of Money mentioned in the said Report."—M. C. C., II: 259-73.

It is ordered by the court of mayor and aldermen that hereafter the clerk of the court may relieve the mayor by signing "all Process of this Court Except writs of attachment."—M. G. M., Jan. 23, 1711.

A committee appointed by the common council is directed Feb. 3, 1711 to "employ workmen and provide Materials for finishing the great Bridge by the Custom House and Making the same Convenient for the Shiring of and Landing of Merchandise," and also "Cause the Wall under the Market house at the South End of the broad Street near the Dock to be Repaired."—M. M. C., II: 354. See Feb. 3, 1709; July 24, 1710; June 12, 1711; Jan. 6, 1714.

Jean Cast (a Frenchman), writing to Hunter regarding the Palatines, states, among other things, that the people "persuade themselves that Canada will be taken this campaign, and that upon the conquest of that country, as for a security for that settlement, they will be established on the lands destined for them."—

6 The common council orders that "the Treasurer forthwith purchase Eighteen Rush bottom Chairs and an Oovel Table for the use of the Common Council."—M. C. C., II: 440.

Richard Harris, the tavern-keeper, petitions for leave to lay a drain "from his house into the broad Street and to Open the Ground to lay the same and that no body bring in any Other into itt without the Petitioners leave." Harris is permitted to lay the drain "from his dwelling house through Princes [Beaver] Street into the broad Street at his own Charge be filling up and paving the Street again." It is ordered that no one be permitted to use the drain without bearing a part of the cost of building it.—
M. C. C., II: 444. For the tavern of Richard Harris, which stood in William St., see Dec. 22, 1704.

23 At the celebration of the anniversary of the queen's coronation on this day, for which a bonfire has been ordered by the common council, there is to be only "such a Quantity of wine as The Mayor shall direct."—M. C. C., II: 442.

27 Plate belonging to the chapel is to be delivered to Mr. Sharpe, chaplain of his Majesty's forces.—Cal. C. M., 241. This date probably marks the completion of Hunter's refitting of the building for its original purpose, it having been used for various secular purposes since Fletcher's time.—See Feb. 20, 1712.

John Basford, who "for the Space of Six Months now last past having Kept A Common Alehouse or tilting house in the West Ward," is fined 20s. by the court of general sessions for keeping one set of weights "heavier than they Ought to be," which he used when he "did Receive and take in his way of trade and dealing," and another set of "false weights which were tooJor light," when

From June to September, inclusive, the great and little bridges were repaired.—M. C. C., III: 1. See Feb. 3, 1711.

1 A law is passed in England for "establishing a General Post Office for all Her Majesties Dominions," which provides a "Chief Letter-Office" at Edinburgh, Dublin, and "at New York in North America," as well as at other convenient places, the law to be effective after June 1, 1711. Rules and regulations governing the cost of "portage" are made. For a single letter, London to New York, or vice versa, the charge is to be half a shilling for one letter, two shillings for a "treble" letter, three shillings, and for a letter weighing an ounce, four shillings. Rates of postage are also prescribed for communications between the colonies, and between the various cities of the colonies in America. Thus, the cost of sending a letter from York to any place not exceeding 100 miles, is sixpence for a single letter; one shilling for a double or treble letter; and two shillings for a letter weighing an ounce.—

Aristote Down, widow of Andres Down, is appointed by the common council to be "Continu'd Scavenger" [see March 31, 1699] on the Broad Street" for one year, at £11 per annum, payable quarterly from June 11.—M. C. C., II: 443. Her husband had been the scavenger.—Ibid., II: 441.

Gov. Hunter, who is 100 miles up the Hudson on his return from an interview with "the Five Indian Cantons," receives from Secretary St. John the queen's instructions and commands relating to "the Expedition against her enemies in these parts." These have been forwarded by Lieut.-Gen. Nicholson who has just arrived at Boston with two men-of-war and transports destined for New York. Hunter thus reports to the New York Council of Albany with orders "to detain two Sachims of each Canton till further orders." At New York, he gave orders for bread and other provisions; ordered the "Feversham" to go to Virginia and Marylond for pork, "this country affording none," and then went to New London, Conn., to concert matters with the Council of Warr constituted by her Majesty for that purpose. . . . I dispatch Coll. Schuyler from New London, with orders to ye 8th Sachims above mentioned to bring down immediately all their fighting men with their arms and canoes to Albany." On his return to New York, Hunter, besides obtaining provisions to secure and build bateaux for the transportation of forces and supplies (see June 27, 1711), the assembly of New York raised £10,000 and their quota of 500 men. So well did Hunter's preparations prosper that, by the end of July, he reported: "I had the troops I had, clothed, equipped and vaccinated and upon their march for Albany, had made ready 350 bateaux, capable of carrying each six men with their provisions and had sent round to Boston a sufficient quantity of bread and a very considerable stock of other provisions, the pork from Virginia not being then arrived; and on ye 8th of August went in company wth Lieut. General Nicholson to Albany."—See Sept. 19, 1711.

Preparations are under way for the expedition against Canada.

Gov. Hunter is going to New London to meet other governors.
An embargo is laid on outgoing vessels.—Cal. C. M., 241.

Mf Westerton and MF Prosser attending without were called in and agreed to work Masonery work on the Steeple at Six Shillings and Six pence per day and to find themselves drink and to find Labourers to tend themselves the Church paying the Labourers two Shillings and two pence per day and to take Mf Prosser fifty Load of Lime at the market Price."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

Up to 1709, the steeple had been built up "so high as the ridge pool of the Church," and £4,000 were required to finish it.—Trin. Min. (MS.), June 24, 1709. By March 1, 1712, a great deal of the building was done.
See also Feb. 5, 1711; and March 1, 1712.

A subscription paper, dated May 1, 1711, showing contributors and amounts paid "towards the finishing the Steeple of Trinity Church in New York in America," was entered in the minute-book of the vestry. The total subscription was £1,212 17s. In addition to "The Jews Contribution" was £5,213 2s.—Trin. Min. (MS.).
The list of subscribers is published by Berrian in his Hist. Sketch of Titus Church (1847), 311. This item corrects Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., 1: 300-1, as to date of subscription; also Everts, Rec., II: 1168.
Queen Anne issues a proclamation "for Enforcing the due Execution of the Act, Intituled, An Act for Establishing a General Post-Office for all Her Majesties Dominions, and forsett a Weekly Sum out of the Revenues thereof, for the Service of the War, and other Her Majesties Occasions," this act having being passed in the last session of parliament, as by the act does establish the post-office in America. It provides for one general post-office in London, "from whence all letters and packets may be with speed and expedition sent into any Part of the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or to North-America, the West-Indies," etc. There is to be a postmaster-general, appointed by the queen. See "Royal Proclamations," in the Am. Antiq. Soc. Transactions (1911), XII: 165, citing Statutes of the Realm, IX: 393 (9 Anne, Chap. 11; Chap. 10 in some editions). For rates of postage prescribed in the act, see June 1.

The governor's council orders that carpenters be impressed for work on bateauxs for the expedition.—Cal. Coun. Min., 241. On the next day they ordered the common council to direct "that all ye Market houses in this Town Except that at Burghers Path be set apart for ye Carpenters to Build their Bateaux in."—MS, preserved in metal file case in city clerk's second-room, reproduced in PL V in Peterson & Edwards' N. Y. as an act of the Gent. Municipality. Compliance on the part of the common council was immediate.—M. C. C., II: 444. John Walters was ordered to procure materials for building the boats.—Cal. Coun. Min., 242. See June 14, 1711. See also De Vor, Market Book, 252. For similar matters in Governor's war, see June 13, 1711.

Proposals looking to the building of 126 bateaux (see June 27) in 22 days are made by the carpenters. They include the delivery of all materials "at Mr. Buckman's Orchard," where also a grist-stone must be set up the employment of 45 or 50 carpenters and at least eight sawyers, and the allowance of a "Barrel of Beer a day five gallons of Rum & 6 lb. of Sugar."—Cal. MSS., LV: 64 (Albany).

The governor's council directs that the independent companies be mustered into a regiment and to procure the necessary materials for building bateaux.—Cal. Coun. Min., 242.

The inhabitants of New York petition the council that measures be adopted for the defence of the city.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 383. Instructions were issued in July for that purpose, and for the removal of the women, children, and public records, in case of invasion.—Ibid., 384.

July

The council arranges that French officers sent from Albany to be entertained by Mr. Bradford.—Cal. Coun. Min., 242.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for raising Forces [600 men] to assist in the Expedition to Canada" (see June 16). New York men mostly escaped by a gale. On the 24th, Gov. Hunter on the 26th, an act was passed for levying £10,000 to pay these forces, this city's apportionment being £2,030 (ibid., I: 739) and an additional sum of £3,030 was to be raised in the city by another act, for the better rewarding of volunteers (ibid., II: 713). See June 14.

The house resolves to petition the queen for relief from the burden the colony has been under by reason of the "present Undertaking to reduce Canada," setting forth "our own Wretchedness and Poverty, and the Inequality of the Proportions expected from us, in the Expeditions, compared with the neighbouring Colonies and Plantations."—Assemb. Jour., 1: 291.

The merchants of New York petition the governor and council to remove the embargo (see June 16) on the exportation of provisions.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 387. The embargo was nevertheless continued.—See Aug. 10.

It is ordered by the general assembly "that the Forces to go on the present Expedition, be allowed 12d. per Man every Day they stay in the City of New-York, in Lieu of their Provisions, not exceeding 4 Days, that come from the neighbouring Counties."—Assemb. Jour., 1: 294.

The legislature resolves "That the Commissioners for providing Necessaries for the Expedition, do defy the Charges of Building the Bateaux [see June 27] for the Transportation of the Quota of Forces, raised in this Province for the Expedition, and that the Treasurer do furnish them with money to pay the same."—Assemb. Jour., 1: 296. On Aug. 2, the house resolved to limit this expense at £200 (ibid., I: 297).

The general assembly passes "An Act for the Security & defence of this Colony during the Expedition to Canada." Beacos are to be set up in Richmond and Kings Counties, near the Narrows, and at Rockaway.—Cal. Laws N. T., I: 741. A committee report, which on July 28 was approved by the governor and council, provided for the following plans: One or two vessels were to act as a coast patrol, and beacons were to be established to give intelligence to New York of the approach of the enemy's ships, "at least of which there ought to be a Great Gunn ready loaded, and primed to be fired off at the time of firing each beacon." The locations recommended for these were: "One at ye high Lands of Never Sinkes One other at ye Inside of Sandy hook that may be Sene from thence;" "Sumter's Island in the vicinity of that may be Sene from the last mentioned, and that may be Scene from thence on Long Island;" and "One other at ye Narrows on Long Island." At each beacon there was to be a constant watch kept by at least three men; and at the beacons on Long Island there "must be Troopers with their horses ready Equipt to post Away to ye flerry the Minute the Beacon is light to Give intelligence here." On sight of the lighted beacons, the militia were to appear at once "to their proper Arms at their Usual Rendevouz." Also, messengers were to be sent to the counties of Westchester and Orange, "for getting their men in Arms and Sending them hither forthwith."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 318. See also June 14, 1711.

"Last week all the Inhabitants of this City appeared under Arms, none excepted that were able; And an Act is past, obliging all persons whatsoever (the Council, Cleric of the Council & Ministers excepted) to Lift [list] June 13, 1711, & pay £3,040 of Six pounds. The Regiment here are now under Arms; and his Excellency designs frequently to Exercise them himself; and we lose no time in mounting our Cannon, and repairing the Fortifications, and other necessary precautions are taken, in case of an Invasion."—N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, Aug. 6, 1711.

This day is observed as a "Day of Fast and Humiliation, pursuant to the Governor's recommendation to procure the Divine Aid on the Expedition [see July 13]; we are hard at work on our Fortifications, and a strict Embargo is continued here."—From N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, Aug. 13-20, 1711.

The council issues an order to Francis Vincent, gunner, concerning the position of guns about the city.—Cal. Coun. Min., 242.

Gen. John Hill, on H. M. S. "Windsoe," at the mouth of the St. Lawrence, wrote (on the 25th) to Gov. Hunter a "melancholy account of the disasters" that have happened to the fleet. As a result of gales and fogs on Aug. 22, eight transports and a ship laden with provisions were lost on the North Shore. The men-of-war were ordered on Aug. 23 and 24 to sail. The letter was carried on of "gathering from the Shore the Scattered remains of Almost Six and twenty Companies of Seamours, Kanes, Claytones, and Windsoe's Regiments which wee find are all peris a very Small Number that we have Saved and are now Saving." The loss is estimated at nearly 1,000. The decision of Admiral Walker and the captains of the ships of war, on account of the ignorance of the pilots, is to return to Spanish River, since they can "proceed no farther on the Execution of her Majestys Comands at Quebec." Gen. Hill therefore requests that Hunter:...with all imaginable haste[le] send an Express to Mr. Nicholson with the inclosed Letters for his acting or returning, with the forces under his Command to N. York..."—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 277. See also June 14 and Sept. 12; and Walkers, Jour.of the Canadian Expedition, 124-26.

A French privateer off Sandy Hook is the subject of the council's deliberations and orders on Aug. 29 and 31.—Cal. Coun. Min., 243.

The common council passes an ordinance for appointing a market-place in Broad St. It requires "that the North end of the Broad Street between the City Hall of this City and the Cross Street which goes from the Broadway to the Dutch Church" (Garden St.), be established as "A publick Markett place of this City in as full and ample manner as Other publick Market places in this City are or lawfully Ought to be.” It is also ordered that the inhabitants in and about the broad street have liberty to erect and build such Stalls and sheds and Other Conveniences in the broad street Market place according to such Regulations and directions as they shall Receive from the Clerk of the Market.”

Governor, not having yet heard of the disaster to the fleet (Oct. 28. Aug. 12.) writes to Secretary St. John an account of the preparations made for the expedition, and the promising outlook, including a favourable report which he received on Sept. 1 from Admiral Walker. He says: “The Admiral presses much the sending after him more provisions, for fear of being obliged to winter there [at the mouth of the St. Lawrence River]. I have now in port [New York] the Faversham [see June 14] with transports having on board a thousand and odd barriols of pork, and as much bread, flour, butter, pease rum and tobacco as they can carry; which are to sail for Quebec the first wind that offers...”. He also reports upon the independent attitude of the provincial assemblies, and what, in his opinion, it portends.—N.Y. Col. Docs., VI, 255-76. Regarding the fate of the “Faversham,” see Nov. 12.

Abraham de Lucena, “Minister of the Jewish Nation Residing at the City of New York,” petitions Gov. Hunter to be excused from bearing any Office Civil or Military within this City, and also to be allowed to perform the duties of his profession. He offers additional duties to the inhabitants, just as his predecessors had been, “by reason of their ministerial function.” The petition was read in council on Sept. 18, and referred to a committee to examine and report.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., III, 265.

Danas, Caleb Haseldine, is nominated mayor. On Oct. 15 he was sworn in.—M. C. C., IV, 450, 451. He was continued in office for three years.—Ibid., III, 17, 48. For a brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 403; ibid. (1864), 665.

The mayor informs the board “that Mr. Robert Lurtt, the present Treasurer of this Corporation [see Sept. 29, 1706] is willing to resign that Office to be Private Agent or to perform any Service to the Citizen, to assist him in the Execution of the same.” Samuel Bayard was appointed in his place.—M. C. C., IV, 450. Bayard held the office until Sept. 29, 1718 (q.v.).

The land expedition up the Canada is about to return to Albany.—Col. Gov. Min., 243. See Aug. 22.

In a report of the “Genl State of ye Plantes Revenues,” William Blathwayt, surveyor and auditor-general, says this of New York: “In the Province of New York by Act of Assembly pass’d in the year 1692 a Revenue was granted to the Crown for the Support of that Government to be raised by an Excise upon Liquors by Q’t. Rents & by an Import upon Goods & Merchandise Imported upon Furs exported & upon the Indian Trade for two years which Duties have been continued by divers and Subsequent Acts to ye 18th of May 1709 when the same expired; Since which time the Act of 1709 is the only Provision for the Civil Lease nor for defraying the other Incident Charges of the Governm’t. These Revenues before the expiration of the Acts of Assembly produced about £3,400 £ Annun.”—Blathwayt’s Jour. (MS.), Oct. 11, 1711.

Hunter was asked by the house if it was his pleasure that the sentinels and guards at several the beacon be discharged, “the Reason of their being posted there, seeming to be ceased.” He replied that “he was of the same Opinion.”—Assem. Jour., I, 299.

Hunter sent a message to the house that “the Magazine to Fort Anne, was defective, and the Powder therein dammified, demanded from several Duties and Service Incumbrant upon the Inhabitants.”—Assem. Jour., I, 300. William Bord, the store-keeper in the fort, in a memorial to the council on Feb. 15, 1710, had proposed that some means be taken for the better preservation of the powder, which he found very much damaged by dampness, the hoops of which having almost fallen off.—Col. MSS., LI, 1548 (Albany).

The common council passes an ordinance providing that “the Country People who frequent the Market of this Corporation have liberty to Expose their Meat to sale in the Publick Market by the Joyes of Otherwise as they Shall see Convenient, first paying the fees of the Clerk of the Market for the same...”—M. C. C., II, 455.

The common council directs the treasurer to buy “A tin Box for containing the Charter of this Corporation.”—M. C. C., II, 455.

It is ordered that “Alderman Bayard as Treasurer of this City [see Sept. 29] do send to London for a Standard of Troy weights and scales and Measures for the use of this Corporation and that upon the Delivery thereof this Corporation will pay unto him one hundred and fifty 24 Cent and other Charges thereon. See A. Nov. 15. He was paid £257 for these on June 17, 1715.—M.C.C., III, 94.

Hunter writes to Lord Dartmouth: “On Tuesday last [Nov. 6] five fisher men brought into this harbour the poor remains of Her Majesty’s Ship Faversham’s crew, which with the three transport ships laden with provisions for the expedition [see July 12] was cast away upon Cape Britton the 7th of October in the night; all the Officers except the Lieutenant & Master are perish’d and only forty eight, of one hundred & fifty sailors, saved.”

Since the fatal miscarriage of the intended expedition our frontiers have been infested...” It is proposed by the council and assembly to renew it.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VI, 284-85.

The colony is too much involved in expense to offer any compensation to Henry Beys, missionary at Harlem, who has petitioned for support.—Assem. Jour., I, 728-9. Beys was an Episcopalian, and served in the Harlem Reformed Dutch Church, (third site) at the present Third Ave. and 121st St.—Corwin, Manual of the Reformed Church, 1001; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III, 935.

In this year, there was prepared a summary of the revenues of the province of New York, the conditions existing in the matter of collecting, etc.—See the original MS. (25pp., folio), in N.Y. Pub. Library.

The common council passes the following law, appointing a place for the more convenient hiring of slaves: “That all Negro and Indian slaves that are let out to hire within this City do take up their Standing in Order to be hired at the Market house at the Wall Street Slip until Such time as they are hired, whereby all Persons may know where to hire slaves as their Occasions Shall require and also Masters discover, whences their Slaves are so hired and all the Inhabitants of this City are to take Notice hereof Accordingly.”—M. C. C., II, 458.

The “Western Post” from Boston, for Connecticut and New York, sets out once a fortnight during December, January, and February.—Boston News-Letter, Nov. 16, 1711. That this is a winter custom is shown by similar notices in Ibid., Dec. 1, 1712, and Nov. 30, 1713.

In this year, Valentine Wightman, of Groton, came to New York to preach to a few Armenian Baptists. In 1714, Wightman appealed to Gov. Burnet for protection against the people while performing the rite of baptism at the water side, and such protection was given by the governor. The members increased so that a private house would not hold them; accordingly, a lot on Golden Hill was purchased and a church erected in 1728 (q.v.). It was still in existence in 1774, but “by mismanagement had become private property.”—Benedict, Hist. of the Baptist Denomination, I, 537.

One of the last references to the “great Bridge” or “Custom House Bridge” is recorded in the M. C. C. (see earlier mentions under April 13, 1700; June 22, and Aug. 20, 1709; Feb. 9, 1710; and later mentions under Mar. 3, and Oct. 24, 1713). Johannes Jansen is paid £512, “out of the Six hundred pound Tax,” for the repairs of “the great and little Bridges in the Months of June July August and Septy last.”—M. C. C., III, 7. The Burges View of 1717-8 (Pl. 25, Vol. I) shows no trace of the old custom-house bridge.

The grand jurors present to the consideration of the court of general sessions “the insufficiency of the Common Gaol & also the want of the Reparation of the Highways through the Island to Queens Bridge” (Kingsbridge).—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.); 208.

The merchants of New York complain to the queen that the English ships of war go from New York to the West Indies and return carrying cargoes of merchandise. This deprives the merchants and traders of carrying in their own vessels, and discourages ship-building. The ships of war should be used only as convoys and cruisers, they claim. On June 5, the lords of trade, by direction of the queen, ordered this practice stopped.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VI, 331-32.
Col. Morris writes to John Chamberlayne that the Chapel in Trinity, from Fletcher's time to that of Hunter, was "put to the several uses of Store house, Bear house, and work house;" but the Hunter's "...are very decently fitted up [see April 27, 1712] and applied to the use it was built for, and the Soldiers who before were carried out of the Garrison [to Trinity Church], and during the service stood for the most part in the Steeple, where they could but imperfectly hear are now very well accommodated with Seats in the Chappel, where the Service is regularly performed, and there is yet room for persons to build Pews who have not Seats in the church of New York [Trinity], and who are inclined to build would the Government admit them, which he has hitherto declined." He further states that the rector of Trinity, Mr. Vesey, opposed Hunter's building a new chapel, claiming it gave evidence of a schism in the church.—N. Y. Col. Doc., V; 518-24.

Hunter's own account of his controversy with Mr. Vesey was told on Feb. 15, 1712, in a letter to the secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (ed. III), 156. Hunter also wrote to the Bishop of London on March 1, 1713, that "The ancient Chappell in the Fort ... for many years past a Bear Garden," he had "at a great expense put in repair so that it is now one of the most decent & most constantly frequented Houses of Prayer in all America."—N. Y. Col. Doc., V; 315.

Another note to the Bishop of London against the Rev. Mr. Vesey, about 1714, stating, among other things, "After Coll. Fletcher had obtained of the Dutch to build themselves a Church in the town, he pulled down the old one in the Fort, and in its room built a chappel for the use of the Garrison and his own family, who after his death, his son, the present incumbent, remained at some time neglected, and at others converted into a store house for fire wood, till the arrival of his Excellence Brigadier Hunter, who soon repaired and beautified it, and caused divine service to be constantly performed in it by the Reverend Mr. Sharpe, Chaplain to the Fencibles; which gave great satisfaction to many of the Church of England, and especially such who wanted accommodation in Trinity Church, (where Pews are not to be purchased but at a very high rate), and were forced sometimes to absent themselves from divine service; which now they need not do, having now a place of worship to resort unto where all degrees are seated without price or reward."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III; 267. See also "Church in the Fort," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III; 934.

Hunter reports that the steeple of Trinity Church is finished. Mar. 4

N. Y. Col. Doc., V; 711. See June 16, 1711; June 11, 1712.

Hunter writes to the lords of admiralty, transmitting an address of the merchants of New York relative to building a galley for the better defence of trade, together with some proposals of Col. Heathcote for providing naval stores.—*Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 494.

In an address to Gov. Hunter, the grand jury says in part: "...we, the grand jury, pursuant to an order of the grand jury, amicably and we are credibly inform'd you have given Assurances not to molest or disturb the English Church in the Enjoyment of the Queens Farm, During all the time of your Administration, altho' the Same has been Claimed as a perquisite by all preceding Governments."—Boston News-Letter, March 17-24, 1712.

An insurrection of negroes in the city occurs, and measures are taken to suppress it.—Cal. suits, Mir. 246. The following summary presents the principal events: "Some Cormorntine Negroes to the number of 25 or 30 or 2 or 3 Spanish Indians having conspired to murder all the Christians here, and by that means thinking to over throw the Providence, about two days or two or three. They have their bloody design in Execution," and having fire a house, murdered all who ran to it. An alarm was sounded and the slaves escaped into the woods, some being captured.—From N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, April 7-14, 1712.

The earliest official record of the details of this conspiracy is found in Hunter's report to the lords of trade, June 23, 1712. He refers to it as "a bloody conspiracy of some of the slaves of this place, to destroy as many of the Inhabitants as they could." Their reason was "to revenge themselves, for some hard usage ... from their masters that is, Hunter's cruel cause." His narrative continues that "they agreed to meet in the orchard of Mr. Crook the middle of the Town, some provided with fire arms, some with swords and others with knives and hatchets." This, he said, was the sixth day of April, the time of meeting was about twelve or one o'clock in the night." He stated that about 25 of them met; one set fire to an outhouse of his master, and when an alarm brought the citizens toward it, the slaves shot and killed about nine to have it deceased before he came. Hunter also ordered soldiers from the fort "to march against them, but the slaves made their retreat into the woods."

The next day he caused the militia of New York and of Westchester to "go to drive the Island." By this means and searching the town, they found some that had just wounded for his master, and those few that had "first laid violent hands upon themselves," and the rest were brought to trial. Of these, 27 were condemned, and of this number 21 were executed, "one being a woman with child, her execution by that means suspended." Of those executed (see April 30), "some were amongst those that had been before in the woods," and one hung a live in chains in the town [see April 11 and April 15], so that there has been the most exemplary punishment inflicted that could be possibly thought of." This, he says, was only justified by an act of assembly. (Compare the "Act for the Security & defence of this Colony," in Cal. Laws N. Y. 2) 7-24. The act for punishing slaves was not passed until Dec. 10, 1712.

Hunter then detailed the prosecution against particular negroes, for whom he had obtained stay of execution pending his appeal to the court for a reprieve for them.—N. Y. Col. Doc., V; 341-42.

For the expense attending their execution, see Feb. 4, 1713.

Another account of this sort was written on the same day (June 25, 1712) by Rev. John Sharpe, chaplain of the garrison, to the secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, in whose archive in London Sharpe's letter is still preserved. His statement supplies the following facts: "Some Negro Slaves here of Vesey's from the beginning of the last year, haveing done all the White[s] in order to obtain their freedom." He names the time of the occurrence as "Sunday night Apr. 1 [probably misread for Apr. 7] abt 2 a Clock about the going down of the Moon they set fire to a house. The rest of the account agrees, except in minor details, with that of Hunter. Sharpe added that the occurrence made many persons oppose "Negroes being made Christians." He also stated that "Mf Neau [see Aug. 29, 1709] durst hardly appear his School was blamed as 20th Main Occation of it, and a Petition have had to be presented [against him] if ye Govern's had not Stood to his Cause." But, Sharpe stated, only two of the negroes were members of Neau's school, one of whom was executed while declaring his innocence, and who was afterwards generally pronounced innocent. Sharpe comments further upon the Christian, or unchristian, character of those executed.—From transcript of Sharpe's letter made by Rev. R. R. Hoes, U. S. N., in N. Y. Gen. & Hist. Reg., Vol. II (1890), 162-63. There was published in London, in 1776, An Account of the Endeavours used by the Soc. for the Prop. of the Gospel in Foreign parts, to instruct the Negro Slaves in New York, together with Two of Bp. Gibson's Letters on that Subject. The information given by Sharpe is contained in this document, and it, or Divine Service, they were compelled to attend, and we are credibly informed you have given Assurance not to molest or Disturb the English Church in the Enjoyment of the Queens Farm, During all the time of your Administration, tho' the Same has been Claimed as a perquisite by all preceding Governments."—Boston News-Letter, March 17-24, 1712.

This is the first instance recorded of the court of general sessions holding a special session "for the tryal of Negro and Indian slaves." The occasion of this meeting was that after the negro slaves, Claus, Robin, and Quaco, were found guilty of murdering Adrian Hoglandt, Robin's master, and were visited indeed with the wrath of the court. Clause was ordered to be taken "to the place of Execution and there to be broken upon a Wheel & so to continue languishing until he be dead and his head and Quarters to be at the Queens Dispatch." Robin was ordered to be hung up in chains alive and so to continue without any sustinance until he be dead. Quaco's penalty was to be burnt with fire until he be dead and Consumed."—Min. Gen. Sess. of the Peace (M.S.), April 11, 1712.

By this time, 70 negroes are in custody, and it is feared that "most of the Negro's here (who are very numerous) knew of the Late Conspiracy to Murder the Christians." Six of the negroes committed suicide; three were executed—one burnt, a second
The young Lord Cornbury, who probably had been one of the "household" of Gov. Clara of York (see M. C. C. 1797), now, like his father (regardless of whose departure, see July 31, 1710), came into unfavourable public notice. A letter of this date, written to Utrecht by G. St. John, brother of Lord Bolingbroke, makes this curious comment upon his career: "... My Lord Cornbury does with Mr. Montagu he has not been cowl [illegible] since wee left you. He has drunk ye conut out of house and home, and he is retreated to a summer house upon a Bastion out of 3d Wall of the town, but my Ld has found him Lay'd to Siege to his Cellar and drunk him almost dry already."—From the original in the Leasing sale of books and MSS. at The Hon. J. D. B. son Galleries, New York, Jan. 29-30, 1917. Edward Hyde (styled Viscount Corbray), here referred to, was the only surviving son and heir apparent of the third Earl of Clarendon (the former governor of New York). On his mother's death (see Ap. 4, 1710), he became Lord Clifton of Leighton Brownswood. He died of fever "got by a surfeit of drinking," at the age of 21, and was buried in Westminster Abbey Feb. 20, 1713. In his will he styled himself "Lord Viscount Cornbury and Baron Clifton."—The Complete Peerage, III.: 268. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1864), 573: Ibid. (1869), 769.

"Great pecuniary imposition is imposed on "Tom, the Negro man slave of Nicholas Rosevelt." Found guilty of the murder of a man, Beeke, and "having Nothing to Say for himself why Judgment of death should not pass upon him," Tom is "burned with a slow fire that he may Continue in Torment for Eight or ten years longer," he said, and will he be Aced and Consumed to Ashes."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), Apr. 15, 1712. The usual peculiarity, of course, was to be "hang'd by the Neck till they are dead." By this time, 19 negroes have received sentence, and most of them have already been executed.—N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, April 21-28, 1712. See April 7.

Hunter, in a message to the assembly, says: "The Late Hellingh Attemp of ye Slaves is sufficient to Convince you of the necessity of putting that Sort of men under better Regulation by Some good Law for that purpose, and to take away the Root of that Evil to Encourage the Importation of White Servants."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 333. See April 7.

Hunter states in a message to the assembly: "If speedy care be not taken to Repair the Magazines that great quantity of powder of Severall thousands of pounds value must Inevitably be spoilt." I hope you'll take it yeoff Consideration that matter with the Repaire of the fort wall which is in a bad condition by the Report of Mr Ebbets whom I appointed to Survey it Late ly.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 333. A committee is appointed to investigate.—Assem. Jour. I: 311. On May 17, "Mayor Provost, representing the great loss made to Lord L., the people of the Town, the Magazines, and presented to the House, an Estimate of the Mason and Carpenter's Work, about the old and new Magazines within her Majesty's Fort Anne," amounting to £515, and the Charge of removing the Powder, Copoerage and Stowage, £430.—Ibid. I: 312.

Henry Swift, a tavern-keeper (see Nov. 21, 1707), presents a petition, setting forth "That he prepared a Dinner for the late Lord Lovelace, on his Arrival," amounting to £267/6, "and that he hath also a Warrant," for £614, "for boarding of French Prisoners from Canada." He prays that "a Method may be taken, for paying the said Sum." It is ordered that the petition lie "on the Table."—Assem. Jour. I: 310.

The clergy of the province of the Church of England, in an address to Gov. Hunter (Mr. Veseys not signing), express thanks for his offers to concord with them in promoting the interests of the church, and for what he has already done. Special reference is made to the encouragement he has given "to the labors of the Society's Catechist, the pious Mr. Elias Neau, and still continues, notwithstanding of the attempts made against him [see April 7, 1712] upon accounts of the late bloody designs of the Negroes."—Doc. Hist. N.Y. (40 ed.), Ill: 54.

A letter is introduced to the assembly for employing an agent to represent this province in Great Britain.—Assem. Jour. I: 313. It was not passed, however, until July 21, 1712 (p. iv).

William Huddleston petitions the assembly for the introduction of a bill settling a yearly income on him "for teaching the Children of the poor Inhabitants of the English, Dutch and French in the City of New-York."—Assem. Jour., I: 313. Such a bill was introduced, and reached its second reading (ibid., I: 316); but no such statute appears in the Col. Laws N. Y.

There was prepared a "List of Inhabitants and slaves in the city of New-York," bearing this date.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 407. See June 5.

John van der Heul and John Rosevelt, having "Erected in the City of New-York a Mill for Grinding Flax seed and making Linseed oil," are given the monopoly of this business in the province for the next ten years by act of the general assembly.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 752. The manufacture of linseed oil was introduced in the province as early as Oct. 17, 1694, when an act was passed "allowing and Lasse t to set up a mill to make it."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 539; Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 63.

A similar monopoly was given to John Parmenter on June 21, 1712, for the making of "Lamb black" for the next five years (ibid., I: 755), and on Dec. 23, 1712, the time was extended for five years more (ibid., I: 955). On July 24, 1745, Parmenter's widow was given the sole right for a period of ten years.—Ibid., II: 242.

David Jamison is recorded in the register of the city in place of May Bickley; his commission was entered in the Minutes on June 13.—M. C. C., III: 8-9.

"A Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to agree with any person or persons who will undertake the Raising the Ball and Spindle upon the Steeple of Trinity Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See March 1.

The city having brought an action against the lessees of the dock for breach of contract, a committee of the common council reports proposals for settlement. These include the provision that the lessees shall "sufficiently Repair the Breaches of the Wharf made in the late Storm with Stockdaces Cover the same first with Stone then with Mud or sand and bind the same with Wall Plate."—M. C. C., III: 4-9. In this measure shows the construction of the early wharves, which, when extended and filled in, built up the city's water front at its southern end.

Hunter reports to the lords of trade that he has had difficulty in taking the census (see Jane 5), "the people being deter'd by a simple superstition and observation, that the sickness follow'd upon the last numbering of the people." The population of New York City and County is found to be 5,469, an increase of 1,404 since 1709.—N. Y., Col. Dock., v: 319.

He also states: "As to births and burials [here] has never been any Register kept that I can hear of neither is there any possibility of doing it until such time as the Counties are subdivided into Parishes, great numbers remaining unchristen'd for want of Ministers."—Ibid., v: 310. The lords of trade replied on April 23, 1713, by asking: "what provision can be made at New York for the support and maintenance of such ministers there."—Ibid., v: 306.

Hunter's report also contains the observation that the forts and barracks of the province were "at present in a very bad repair: one half of the Governours House, ready to fall down" and ten flags are needed for the forts, of which there are five.—Ibid., v: 340.

In a petition to Gov. Hunter for a license to teach school, Allane Jarratt (Allen Gerard) says that he has had "an experience and practice of the Art of Navigation and other parts of the Mathematicks for the space of fourteen Years after an early education in the most usuful parts thereof. . . . and being sensible how much the youth brought up to this City are at a loss in going to sea without a sufficient Instruction in writing and Arithmetick and in the Art of Navigation and other useful parts of the Mathematicks that might be abundently serviceable to them in the discharge of their duties at sea . . . Your Petitioner Humly begs ye Excellency's Licence."—Col. MSS., LVIII: 120 (Albany).

Although this name does not appear in the list of schoolmasters teaching in this city between 1695 and the Revolutionary War, as published in Valentine's Hist. of the City of N. Y., 338, Gerard had a notable record as a surveyor-general.—Ibid., 275.

Capt. Graves, who arrived yesterday on the British Ship "Don- wich," brings a proclamation of the cessation of arms between England and France, and this is published at the city hall, in the presence of the governor, council, city corporation, and others.—From N. Because "the free Negroes of this Colony are an Idle slothful people and prove very often a charge on the place where they are," the master or mistress who enslaves a slave is required to pay the slave's tax for a year, as a part of the slave's life-time.—Col. Laws N. Y., I, 761. See April 7, 1714.

A criticism of the assembly for not giving financial support to the British government, and threatening punishment if the revenue is not granted, headed: "To All whom these Presents may Concern," is printed as an anonymous broadside and sold by William Bradford. There is a copy in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. See also Catalogue (item No. 1611) of the library of the late George H. Moore, L.L.D. sold May 10, 1878.

Charles le Roux, American silversmith, worked in New York from this date until 1745. He was long the official silversmith of the city. The records show that, from 1720 to 1743, to him alone was entrusted the making of the various gold and silver boxes, which, engraved with the arms of the city, inclosed the city seal and accompanied the freedom of the city granted for noteworthy service or to highly honoured visitors. For reproduction of such a box, see Pl. 53, Vol. IV. In 1735 (July 8, 9, 10) le Roux also engaged the seal of the mayorality of New York City. For further information concerning him, see M. E. Museum of Art of Estab- lishment of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1914), xxii-xxxv, 35-36. For reference to le Roux as possibly the engraver of the Bradford Map (Pl. 27, Vol. I), see III: 254.

Permission is given by the common council to level "the Street Called broadway between M? Delaney's house and the Well towards Spring Garden."—M. G. C., III: 20.

The Man, Com. Counc. (1866), 515, is in error in stating that this was between the present Maiden Lane and City Hall Park. Etienne de Lancy lived, not near Maiden Lane, but in a fine house he built for himself on the plot now known as No. 115 Broadway. Spring Garden gate was at the present corner of Ann St. The earliest mention found of Spring Garden occurs in this record. "Old Spring Garden House," Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980. Spring Garden house is shown on Pl. 27, and is called Spring Garden on Pl. 30, Vol. I. The tavern, or house of entertainment, stood at the southeast corner of Broadway and Ann St., and behind it, in this block, was a large sugar shop and meat and dairy shop, could be enjoyed out-of-doors, after the manner of that day. It had probably ceased to exist as a tavern before 1765, when it was called "Old Spring Garden House."—Weyman's Gaz., Sept. 19, 1763.

By 1769, only a part of the old building still remained, which "had not been improved as far as time and many years of Simsiame's MSS., in Payeway Brunch, Library Co. of Philadelphia. By 1771, it was the blacksmith shop of Andrew Hopper.—M. G. C., VII: 294.

It was later the site of Barnum's American Museum. The St. Paul building now occupies this site. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980, Pl. 174, Vol. III.

One of the "Carmes" of the city, "by reason of his Indisposition and Infirmities of body," not being able to walk and drive his cart, as required by the city ordinances, is permitted to ride in his cart, "provided he at no time ride faster than a foot pace."—M. G. C., III: 21.

A similar case was treated in like manner on July 2, 1713.—Ibid., III: 18. On Dec. 1, 1714, however, an ordi- nance was passed that "no Carman whatsoever" should there- after "presume to Ride or sit in his Cart in any of the Streets of this City by Virtue of any Licensse or Liberty whatsoever."—Ibid., III: 80.

A committee is appointed to let the ferry, on Dec. 17, at the house of Richard Harris.—M. G. C., III: 24.

Harris was paid £7:10:9 for his expenses on this occasion.—Ibid., III: 25.

His tavern stood on William St. (see Dec. 22, 1705).

A Spanish prize, laden with gunpowder and soap, is brought into the harbour.—Boston News-Letter, Oct. 6, 1712.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for preventing Sup- pression and punishing the Conspiracy and Insurrection of Negroes and other Slaves." Persons are forbidden to trade with any slave without the consent of the master or mistress. It is made lawful for a master or mistress to punish a slave "at Discretion, not ex- tending to Life or Member." On account of the daily increase in the number of slaves, and their being often found guilty of "con- federation, in running away, or other ill practices," it is made unlawful "for above Three Slaves to meet together at any other Time not at any other place than when it shall happen they may meet in some servile Employment for their Masters or Mistresses profit, or by their Masters or Mistresses Consent, upon penalty of being whipped or made to stand at the Pillory." A similar law having been detailed in this act is one that "no Negro, Indian or Malattato, that shall hereafter be made free, shall enjoy, hold or possess any Houses, Lands, Tenements or Hereditaments within this Colony, but the same shall Escheat to Her Majesty Her Heirs and Successors." on the West side to the wharf that leads to the Great Bridge."

Agreed to an order of the common council on Feb. 28, an ordinance is passed "to prohibit Negro and Indian slaves above the Age of fourteen years from going in the Streets of this City after Night without A Lanthorn and A Lighted Candle therein." The law applies to streets south of the "Fresh water," and to those parts of the City "within the Stockades or Fortifications." The penalty for violation of the law is arrest and confinement in the "Common Goal" until the master, mistress, or owner shall pay eight shillings "to the person or persons who Apprehended and Convicted" the slave; and every such slave before release is to be "whipped at the publick whipping post forty lashes save one if desired by the Master or Owner."—M. G. C., III: 30-31.

"The room over this having a stair on the outside may be proper for the publick library." This library, he states, "may be the same with the publick or provincial Library hereafter mentioned." After presenting his proposed "rules and orders for the better Government of this school and forming the minds and manners of the youth," he considers the library thus: "Another thing which is much wanted here is a publick Library, which would very much advance both learning and piety. Such there are at Charles Town in Carolina, Annapolis in Mary Land, at Philadelphia and Boston. Some books have been formerly sent to New York but as parochial they remain in the hands of the Incumbent." He describes the regulations of his proposed library. Among these are the following provisions:

"This Library I would have to be publick and provincial and to be open every day in the week at convenient hours."

"That any person borrowing a book shall be obliged to deposit a certain sum of money which shall exceed the value of it and in case the book is not restored at the limited time, this money to be forfeited to buy another."

"In this Library also may be kept a Repository of all such Raglets at the Country produces, or are brought thither from other places to be communicated to the Ingenious in England. There may be also a small garden of rare and exotic plants to send yearly some to the curious in England and have others in exchange."

Following his analysis of the operation of the library, he states:

"For a foundation or beginning of this Library I have long since resolved to give all my own books, which I now have or may have at the time of my decease or leaving of that country, which shall be put up in how soon it is fitted to receive them, and appropriated by a deed of gift under my hand to the Trustees for the Library, carrying on the title page or cover such inscription, badge, or impression as the Trustees shall appoint, reserving to my self during life or stay in the country free access to the Library and leave to borrow of such as I want to my own house, under the same restrictions and limitations as others are or may be by subsequent rules or orders. . . . A Catalogue of my books is at the End.

"To these a considerable addition may be made by buying in the best books found in the Library of the Reverend Mr. Lydus deceased, Mr. Selyns, the Rl. Mr. Bays. There is a small collection of Phyick and Surgery in the hands of the Heirs of Dr. Gaudeneau deceased, and of a certain expectation of two large volumes by donations, legacies &c. when there is a place to put them in, and a beginning once made. An Act of Assembly can be also easily obtained to secure them as shall be thought proper."

The Rev. Mr. Sharpe's observations concerning the third feature of his scheme—the catechising chapel—begin thus: "It is about ten years since the Venerable Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, out of their tender concern for the souls of the Indians and negro's who are Slaves at New York appointed M. Elias Neau [see Aug. 4, 1704] to instruct them in the knowledge of Jesus Christ and Salvation through him."

"Mr. Neau . . . is certainly the best qualified for it of any [that] could be found upon these accounts." His qualifications to have charge of the proposed chapel are considered at length; also the difficulties in the way of accomplishing this design. The chief of these impediments are: The unwillingness of the masters to have their slaves made Christians; the inconvenience of the time allowed to attend classes; the smallness of the meeting-places; and the want of zeal in many of the slaves "which proceeds from the slender regard had to them." The meeting-place "is inconvenient, tho' the best that can be got." It is "the upper floor of Mr. Neau's own house—which tho' as large as most in the city is not capacious enuff for such a number as often does come nor for the sixth part of the Negro and Indian Slaves in Town besides children and apprentices both English, Dutch and French who constantly attend and receive instruction there."
1715 In closing, Mr. Sharpe says: “I will give for myself with a cheerful heart to carry on the building of the Catechetical Chappel for Negroes and Indians, the sume of fifty pounds.” There is added:

“A Catalogue of Books belonging to John Sharpe intended to be given as a foundation of a Publick Library at New York.” It consists of 132 items, mostly religious.—From N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1850), 341-45, citing the original MS. (No. 841) in the Library of Congress, Washington, D.C.

The remarkable history of the collection of books left by Rev. Dr. Sharpe to New York is told by Keep, in Hist. of the N. Y. Society Library, 43-44. The collection survives, almost intact, in the archives of that society.

14 Hunter reported to the lords of trade that the assembly has affirmed that the governor’s council has no right “to meddle in money bills,” but that the assembly may raise money by ways and means of its own, exclusive of the council. They have placed the public moneys “in the hands of a Treasurer of their own,” who is to dispose of it only by their direction. They have suspended the receiver-general who was, constituted by “Royal Letters Patent.” Hunter has dissolved the assembly for their disrespectful behaviour. There is no hope, however, in a new election; as “they have first the name of slavery upon the supporting the Government in the manner her Majesty has been pleased to direct, and that of being on their own rabb resolutions and practices.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 356.

Gov. George Clinton, writing March 19, 1750, to the Duke of Bedford, stated: “that the first encroachments on the Royal prerogative, begun under Mr. Hunter’s administration, that the Assembly have not by the advantage of the necessities the Administration was then under (by the war with France and an expedition then set on foot in America against Canada) to claim a right of appointing their own Treasurer, and refused to support the Government unless this was yielded to them. Mr. Hunter struggled under these difficulties for four years from 1710 to 1714 without any support, in hopes that the Ministry would think it incumbent on them effectually to support His Majesty’s authority and prerogative in his Colonies, but after all was not only forced to yield to this demand, but likewise to consent to a large emission of paper money, which remains without being sold to this day.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., VII: 554. Lewis Morris, writing to the lords of trade in trade 1754, stated that a similar “dangerous attack upon the prerogative of the Crown” was attempted in Gov. Montgomerry’s time.—Ibid., VI: 767. See also To All whom these Presents May Concern (printed by Bradford, N. Y., 1715), an anonymous pamphlet, relating to the objections of the inhabitants to being taxed for the support of the English government, and asking the colonists to show more respect for the mother country. It threatens punishment if the revenue is not granted.

24 The following is the city’s first pauper list, as given in the Mayoralty Minutes under this date.

“Daniel Bates Catherine Reade
Effie a blind woman Anne Shutleworth
Sarah an old Maid Mrs. Hope
Mrs. Cooley a soldier’s wife Mrs. Taylor
Cornelius Van Vliert Jan. Mrs. Carlle
Mary Cooley Margaret Key
Elizabeth Dragon Mary Brown
Effie Bluett a blind woman Phillip Battin & Pasco Battin
Two fatherless & motherless children.”—M. C. M., March 24, 1715.

On March 20, 1716, the church-wardens were ordered to “Strike Mary Brown out of the list of the poor of this City She being a lewd woman as the Court is informed.”—Ibid., March 20, 1716.

28 “Greenevill” is for the first time noted by name in the city records. C. P. writes: “The Bowery district of the Out Ward” is required by the common council to remove a fence which he has erected “upon the Land of this Corporation from High Water to low Water Marke whereby the Cattle of several of the Neighbourhood cannot pass to their respective Pastures.”

The Treaty of Utrecht gives Acadia to the English, makes the Five Nations subject to England, and confirms Portugal in its possession of Brazil.—Winton, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 115, Sec. A.

1541 VI: 6, 110, 406, 475; VII: 457; VIII: 572; VIII: 83; VIII: 27, 28, 206, 236, 242, 356. The queen’s proclamation announcing this reached New York Aug. 18, 1713 (g.v.).

The grand jurors recommend to the court of general sessions "that the Imparting into Weights and Measures [see May 1, 1714] and to Prevent Forestallers of the Market &e and that the Streets be kept Clean & that the Laws agst the Sabbath be put in Execution all which this Court Resolve to see Executed with all Expedition." The highways "between this City & Kingsbridge" are reported again in "Great want of Repair." (See Feb. 7, 1713, as well as "the Queens Bridge."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace, (MS.), 260.

Anthony Ham is appointed dock-master and ordered to "Col- lect and Receive all the Revenue of the Docks and Ships and Account to this Corporation for the same as often as shall be thereunto Required."—M. C. C., III: 35. See July 27, 1715. This represents a change in policy on the part of the common council; previously the position of dock-master was "farmed" or auctioned off to the highest bidder for a term of years, the successful bidder being required to "Keep the Said Docke in good and sufficient repair." Dock-masters, however, without exception, failed to keep their agreement. The dock was found to be either "foul," or "much out of repair," or else the keeper was lax in his quarterly payments to the city. Hence the change in policy, above mentioned, was inaugurated. Anthony Ham's salary was £50 per year. (Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. Acts of 18th Cent. Municipalities, 111-23. See Oct. 19, 1685; July 12, 1720.

Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to secure the Sweep, &c for building, & take care for Soundi Board." June 29, the committee reported they could not perform the order, owing to want of money. ("The Account of that the Church wardens take up one hundred pounds upon Interest for Carrying on Said work."—Trin. Min. (MS.) Jan. 21, 1714.

Trinity vestry orders "that the Church Wardens let the Queens farme and Queens garden Severally to the highest bidder for three years & that good Security be given by them to the approbation of the Church wardens to pay the rent quarterly, and to leave the fences of both in good repair."—Trin. Min. (MS.)

Gov. Hunter, in a message to the legislature, says: "You are a new Assembly, and so are not accountable for the wrong steps in the former or concerned in any vindication of them, so what I am about to say must not be otherwise construed as than a caution to you, that you walk not in their ways, so displeasing to her Majesty & so Justly resented by her; You are called together in order to settle a revenue for the support of her Majestyes Governm^ not to settle ye Governm for that is already done by the only authority upon Earth, that has a right to do it."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 154.

It is ordered by the assembly "that Mr. Bayard do search in June the Secretary’s Office for Proclamations, Commissions and other publick Papers, that relate to the first Settlement, or settling of this Colony, and make repo..."—Ibid., I: 150-40. June 29, it was ordered, "that the Secretary do lay before this House, To-morrow Morning, the Books of Record wherein is contained King Charles’s Grant to the Duke of York, the Duke’s Commission to General Nicoll, The Treaty and Articles of Surrender, The Duke’s Commission to Sir Edmund Andros, and Sir Edmund Andros’s Proclamation."—Ibid., I: 350. See also the later order of May 26, 1715.

David Lyell, the sealer of the province, whose duty is to "mark and seal all Weights and Measures in this Colony," states in a petition to the assembly that there have been "great Complaints of the Weights or Standards... for measuring Grain..." To correct this he has sent for and just received from Great Britain some copper standards for this purpose, which he wants adopted as standards for the colony.—Assem. Jour., I: 340. See also May 24, 1714.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act to Impower Frederick Phillipse, a Minor, to Remove Kings-Bridge [erected in 1693, p. 91] to a more commodious Place, and for Confirming the Toll thereof." The will of the late Frederick Phillipse, under which the then owner of the manor has title, was dated Oct. 26, 1700. The act further states that: "by means of Springs-Tides, not only the Causey leading through a Meadow from Manhattan, or Yorks-

Island, to the Bridge erected in pursuance of the said Grant, but likewise the Bridge itself is often difficult and unfit for Travellers to pass." The act therefore enables Phillipse, the younger, to..."
CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664-1763

1713 Erect and Build another good and sufficient Draw-Bridge between July the Neck, or Island of Papparinnemo, and York or Manhattan-

1 Island, at such place or Place to the Westward of the present Bridge as to prevent them shall be safe and convenient, and to join and affix the same to or in any Land on York-

Island, and to dig away or level any Part or Parts thereof, both to secure the Bridge, and to make the Path or entry thereof commodious and convenient for Travellers. And when another Bridge shall be built (which is to be called the Names of Bridge) it shall and may be Lawful for him and them to pull down the Bridge heretofore Built.” A table of the toll rates, mentioned in the manor grant, “shall be hung or fixed up in the Ferry or Toll-house.” On account of depreciation in specie, the payment shall be increased in Troy weight, and are to be paid “in good Mexico or Seville Plate.” That is, according to the schedule given in the act, payment of tolls is to be made in a certain number of grains according to the person or thing passing over the bridge. Thus, the toll for every man and horse passing in the daytime is 15 grain; for each head of near cattle, 13 grains; for every score of hogs, calves, or sheep, two pennyweight and a half; for every boat, vessel, or canoe that shall pass the bridge and cause it to be drawn up, 1 pennyweight and 2 grains; and for so forth. Free passage over the bridge, as the manor grant provided, is given to the British sovereign, and to any forces and war supplies. (See 1713, II, p. 392, for the new toll rates, Jan. 4, 1759. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 926.)

15 The receiver-general having instituted a suit against Peter Oehlens and other inhabitants and freetholders of the town of New Harmon, “for great sums pretended to be due from the said inhabitants to the Dominions’ Farm.” Isaac de Riemer, formerly mayor, is made pound-keeper. —N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 317.

16 “One Berry a Taylor and one James Mark who lately came from Boston and Rhode Island, are in Goal for Counterfeiting” paper money, a “Felon without benefit of Clergy.” —N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, July 20-27, 1715. Both men were tried, found guilty, and sentenced to death. —Ibid., Sept. 7-14, 1715. On Sept. 15, Col. Stephen Thomas wrote from New York to John Winthrop at New London concerning these men, one of them “a German Grauer who in thought will have the Government’s pardon.” —From a letter in the Winthrop Papers, in Mass. Hist. Society. Both men were pardoned by the governor, however, at the intercession of “most of the Gentlemens” who, the city, who addressed him “with Prayers and Tears” for the lives of these men in Boston News-Letter, Oct. 23, 1715. This counterfeited money was, apparently, one of the earliest pieces of printing from an engraved plate made in New York. See description of Pl. 27, I: 254.

25 “A Bill was filed in the Court of Chancery [on this date] by the then Attorney General here, against the Said Rector and Inhabitants, for a Discovery of the Lands they held, and particularly the Said farm and Garden, to which they appeared, but before any further proceedings were had her Majesty by her letter of the 14th April 1714 directed General Hunter then Governor to Stop the said prosecution, and not suffer any further proceedings thereafter, and accordingly a Stays was put thereto and the Said Rector and Inhabitants have not hitherto had any other proceedings against them.” —Trin. Min. (MS.), under date of April 25, 1715. See also Dec. 5, 1712.

20 Hunter presents a history of quit-rents, as levied in the province since Nicholas’s time and the attorney-general answers and queries as to how collections are to be made for the queen. —N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 668-71.

Aug. 1713 Her Majesties Proclamation of Peace between Great Britain and France [see March 31, April 11] was Published here with all imaginable demisitions of Joy, the Population and Militia were under Arms, the Cannon were fired, and at Night a noble Bonfire and Illuminations and a Ball at the Fort, where his Excellency made a very fine Entertainment.” —Boston News-Letter, Aug. 31, 1715; Col. Coun. Min., 252. The bonfire was made “on the Green before the Fort,” and was at the city’s expense, having been ordered the day before by the common council, with 25 gallons of wine for the occasion. The cost to the city was £68. —ibid., 445.

The petition of Col. Abraham De Peyster and Mr’s Samuel Bayard is read in the common council setting forth that part of the city hall stands on their land, and a committee, including the recorder, is appointed “to make diligent search and Enquiry how the City Hall Came to be built upon the said Ground.” —M. C. C., III: 42. The complaints brought an action of ejectment against the city on Oct. 29.—ibid., III: 46. For full account of the title to this land, see description of Pl. 24, I: 238; see also July 18, 1718.

The governor’s council orders that a proclamation be issued for a day of thanksgiving—Col. Coun. Min., 253. This was on account of Gt. Britain’s peace with France. —See Aug. 18, 1713. The original MS. order in the State Library, Albany, shows that the celebration is to be observed “this day month” throughout the province.

The petition of Abraham de Lannoy is read in the common council, “praying Liberty to build an Overa under Ground in the Street fronting to his house in Queen Street near Burgers path he undertaking that the same shall not be prejudicial to the Street or the Neighbourhood and that he will keep the same Street in good and due repair”. The permit is granted, the petitioner to pay “A Penny loaf of bread on the first day of May yearly for the use of the poor.” —M. C. C., III: 46-47.

The common council orders that the pound be removed “from John Brevorts at the Bowery to the top of the Hill near fresh water in the Domains farm.” Isaac de Riemer, formerly mayor, is made pound-keeper. —M. C. C., III: 47.

A hundred soldiers, to recruit the four companies here, arrive from London.—N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, Oct. 26, 1713.

The provincial legislature passes “An Act for Mending and 25 keeping in Repair the Post-Road from New-York to Kings-Bridge.” It states that the highways and post-roads through “Manhattans” Island, from New York to Kingsbridge, “are become very Ruinous, and almost impassable, very dangerous to all Persons that pass those Ways, occasioned chiefly by reason of divers Disputes happening and arising among the Inhabitants.” The inhabitants are to do the worke and bear the expense in their respective wards, except in the Out Wards. There, the inhabitants of the Bowery Division shall keep the highway in repair from Fresh Water to the Saw-Kill; but, from the Saw-Kill (including the Saw-Kill bridge) to the limits of the Harlem Patent, it shall be mended by the inhabitants of the several wards within the city; and “from the Limits of Harlem Patent, to the Causes-way of Kings-Bridge,” the highway is to be mended by the inhabitants of the Harlem Division. The said post-road and highway “shall be laid out the breadth of Four Rod, and cleared the breadth of Two Rod” at least. —Ibid., Sept. 7-14, 1715.

The lessee of the ferry is required, at the city’s expense, to “load the Bridge at the ferry with five score loads of Stones in Order to secure the same from the Ice.” —M. C. C., III: 50. See A.

The common council Minutes record for the first time the appointment of a “publick Whiper.” Richard Cooper, “for his Encouragement for the due Execution of that Office,” is to be allowed an annual salary of $5. —M. C. C., III: 49. Cooper held the office for five years, as the warrants issued periodically for his salary show.—Ibid., III: 50-52, passim. For two years thereafter no incumbent of the office appears. On Nov. 16, 1720, the common council felt compelled to make such an office more attractive, if possible, by doubling the stipend, and resolved “that Advertisement thereof be published.” —Ibid., III: 245. Dennis Mahaney became the “Publick Whipper” the following year.—Ibid., III: 257. The office was still in existence after the Revolution. —M. C. C. (1752-1753), I: 145.

The text of the Treaty of Utrecht is received, and the governor’s council orders that it be printed.—Col. Coun. Min., 253. See also Oct. 27, 1712; March 31 and Aug. 18, 1713.

The speaker having communicated to the assembly a letter received from the emperor, reporting that he desires the pictures in the assembly room returned to him, or else that he may receive an order on the treasurer in payment for them, it is ordered that the door-keeper deliver them to him.—Assembly Jour., I: 345. On June 18, 1714, it is resolved that £60 be given him. —Ibid., I: 358.

Trinity vestry orders that £100 more be "take up" to pay the remaining charges for the steeple, spire, sounding boards, etc.—

Feb. 2

Pursuant to the Directions of an Act of General Assembly 2 of this Colony Entitled An Act for Mending and Keeping in Repair the Post Road from New York to Kings Bridge Tennis Quick Garrett Oncleboh & Peter Oblinis are by this Court Nom inated and Appointed to be the surveyors of the several Highways Bridges and Causeways Mentioned in the said Act for the year Next ensuing;—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 265. Such surveyors were appointed annually for many years.

6 The common council orders "that there be a Bonfire on Saturday Day [Feb. 6] at the usual place in this City before the Fort at the Charge of this Corporation being the Anniversary of the Queen's Birth day and that the Treasurer provide five Gallons of wine to be Expended therat in drinking her Majesty's health."—M. C. C., III: 55-56. Prior to this place the bonfire is referred to in the Minutes as "the usual place." When the Queen's birthday celebration was first mentioned in 1703, no place was designated.—Ibid., II: 221. For an analysis of the references in the Minutes to public bonfires ordered by the common council, see Nov. 2, 1700.

10 Early this morning (Shrove Tuesday), it is discovered that Trinity Church has been broken into, through the north window of the steeple and the window of the vestry-room, spurries cut and torn, prayer-books and psalm-books strewn about the yard, and the sacred vestments scattered. Addresses to the governor's council from the English, Dutch, and French ministers and congrega tions urge investigation and punishment. Such investigation produced testimony showing that the rector of Trinity, the Rev. William Vesey, had been ridiculed and even threatened. In the address of the rector and vestry to the council, on Feb. 16, they stated that, "notwithstanding his Excellencies Proclamation against Immorality & profaneness [and] the great diligence of the Magis tracy of this City in their several Stations, there are some Byster mockers & scoffers of Religion, who Ridicule both sacred things & Orders, and their present vileness in vilifying the Ministers of Christ, & Exposing them & their Holy Function to Reproach & Contempt; And it is with y° greatest Concern that we find these Vices so Flagrant That y° Innocent & unblameable Life & Converse of our Reverend Rector for Many years among us, have not been able to Protect him from y° False Calumnies and Barbarous Reproachs & Threatenings of such Irreligious & wicked Persons, which we humbly conceive hinder the Word of God, & naturally tends to Infidelity & Atheism." They offered a reward of £50 for the conviction of the offender. On the council's recommendation, Hunter issued a proclamation on March 9, offering a reward of £55 to any one, not guilty, who discovered the offender, and £55 with indemnity and pardon to any guilty person who would reveal his accomplices.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4to ed.), III: 260-77. The offender was not discovered, and no one was punished for this impious act. It is worthy of note, however, that the governor's own proclamation contained reflections against Rev. Mr. Vesey (Ibid., III: 276-77); and, in a satirical play, which Hunter wrote, and published on Aug. 1, 1711 (q.v.), he freely lampooned him. For other information regarding Hunter's quarrels with the rector of Trinity, see Doc. Hist. N. Y., III: 264-68.

27 By the Treaty of Rastadt, Emperor Charles VI accepts the Mar. terms of peace agreed to by the other allies at Utrecht (see March 6, 31, 1713).

24 A committee of the common council is appointed "to Consult with the Mayor about the building of A poorhouse and house of Correction in this City," and "to Consider of A Convenient place to Erect the same, of the Dimensions and Materials and of Ways & Means for Raising A Fund for compleating thereof."—M. C. C., III: 59-60. No report of this committee appears in the Minutes, and apparently no further action was taken by the city to build an almshouse until Nov. 15, 1713 (q.v.).

A city ordinance is passed "that no Oyster Shells or Lime be burnt on the Commons of this City on the south side of the Windmill, commonly Called Jasper's Mill."—M. C. C., III: 57. Cf. Dec. 17, 1713.

An agreement has been made between the corporation and Samuel Bayard, the city treasurer, for him to send to London "for A sett of Weights and Measures According to the Standard of her Majesties Exchequer in England to be a Standard of Weights & Measures for this Corporation (to wit) An half Bushell A Peck and an half peck Made of Copper. A set of Troy weights of Sixty four Ounces and A Beam and scales. A Yard of Brass or Iron, One quart pot of Beer Measure, and of Wine Measures from A Gallon to A Gill to be made of Copper, That the said Measures be Marked (City of New York) and that A Certificate be procured from the Lord Mayor of London under the City seal or seal of his Mayoralty that the aforesaid Weights and Measures are According to the Standard Aforesaid."—M. C. C., III: 56-57. These were paid for June 17, 1715—Ibid., III: 94. See also Ibid., Jan. 23; and June 30, 1713.

The council considers a rumour that Lord Slane has been ap

20 The ill consequences of oppressive regulations regarding the entry of vessels into this port are described by Samuel Mulford to the assembly. His address is a plea for methods of government which shall be for the good of the subjects as well as for the benefit of the queen.—From postscript (in N. Y. Pub. Library) of Mulford's speech, taken from the original printed speech in the Mass. Hist. Society's archives.—See July 22, 1714.

The common council under take to fix for the first time to institute a regular night-watch in the summer season.—M. C. C., III: 61. Hitherto watchmen had been employed from about Nov. 1 to May 1. Although the new arrangement provided for six men for the summer season, only two men appear to have served for the whole six months, a third man being paid for service "during part of that time."—Ibid., III: 61, 79. See Dec. 1, 1702; Dec. 14, 1711.

The post-road to Kingsbridge is again the subject of an order of the court of general sessions (see May 5, 1713). "From Spring Garden Gate to Kingsbridge," it is ordered to be "laid out the breadth of four Rodd & Clear'd the breadth of two Rodds on each side." The surveyors are to be paid £26 10s. 0d. "To the Surveyor of the Garden Gate," and "from thence proceed to fill up the holes level the Hills Repair and Amend the Bridges Cut down the Trees and brush and in all things well and Sufficiently Amend Repair and Clear the said Highway."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 267.

The council receives a petition from among the assembly a petition, stating that he has invented "a Machine, whereby to row a Ship or Boat with much Swiftness against Wind and Tide," and asking for the passage of a law to entitle him "to the sole Benefit of said Invention, for a certain Number of Years." Permission to bring in such a bill is granted by the assembly.—Asmb. Jour., II: 355. The bill was introduced during that session or the next.

The common council orders that the "Market house fronting June the Dock at the south end of the Broad Street [see Feb. 3, 1711; Dec. 1, 170a] and the Market house at the south end of the Wall Street [see Oct. 4, 1709] be Required at the Charge of this Corporation," at an expense not exceeding £50.—M. G. C., III: 65. Payment of £17:17:17 was made Aug. 4, 1714 for the repairs at the latter (Ibid., III: 66); and £210, on March 20, 1717, "for Levell ing the Ground on the West side of the Dock near the Weigh house," from April 1, 1716 to April 1, 1717, and "for Repairing the Market on the south end of the Broad Street" (Ibid., III: 137).

The common council orders that Capt. Richard Willett deliver to the treasurer of the city "all such Iron work Stores and Other Materials as are in his Custody belonging to this City or to the Great Guns and fortifications," and that the treasurer "Cause such place in the City Hall to be fitted and partition'd off securing the said Stores kce . . . and that the same be kept under lock and Key."—M. C. C., III: 62.

William the third by the grace of God King of England Scotland France and Ireland Defender of the Faith &c. To all to whom these presents shall come a salutation be this.

Whereas our loving subject, the Church of Trinity, within the City of New York in America have for a long time past been in possession of a certain piece of land in the fair and decent part of the same City and the one of the Church of England at new York, subject to the church, and the See of the Bishop in England, and the King of Great Britain, and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal.

And whereas the said Church of Trinity, at the request of the said King and Lords, have granted and assigned to us, the said Bishop, a lease of the same parcel of land, for the sum of one hundred and fifty pounds sterling, for the term of twenty-one years, with all appurtenances, and the right of ingress and egress, and the use of all buildings, houses, and lands.

In consideration of the above, we have agreed to pay to the said Church of Trinity, the sum of one hundred and fifty pounds, payable in annual payments of twenty pounds each, and the said Church of Trinity agrees to deliver to us the said parcel of land, and to hold the same in fee simple, to our use and use and pleasure, during the term of years aforesaid, without any further demands or payments.

This agreement is witnessed by the above-mentioned parties and officers, and shall be recorded in the records of the City of New York, and shall be upheld by the Court of the City of New York, and shall be in force and effect until the expiration of the term of years aforesaid.

Given in the City of New York, this 10th day of August, 1697.

By the order of the Mayor and Aldermen, the said City of New York, and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal.

tute to confer on the subject of regulating and settling the fees of the government officers, is ordered to meet on Monday next at the "Boot."—Jour. Leg. Conc., 172. This tavern site is unknown. July 17 It is ordered that Thomas Buryer report to the assembly the amount of the compensation for himself and other carpenters who repaired "the Fortifications in her Majesty's Fort in New-York," in 1706, on Cornbury's order, is allowed £33.—Assem. Jour., I: 322, 338.

July 21 It is ordered that a Royal Highness be informed that the answer of the King's New-York, having been received from the mayor of London, "brought under Majesty's Beam, in the Weigh-House in New-York," in the time he has been receiver-general.—Assem. Jour., I: 364. See April 2, 1714.

Aug. 1 The reigs of George I begins, on the death of Queen Anne. It ended June 11, 1717.—Cobbett's Parliamentary Hist. of Eng., VI: 1769. See Oct. 4 and 11.

The first play published in English America comes from the pen of Gov. Robert Hunter of New York. It is entitled: Aedoeasras A Biographical [sic] Force In Three Acts, In the Senate, The Con- sensions and The Apotheosis. By Governor Hunter. Printed at Monrooris since 1 August, 1714. For description and history of the book see Bibliography. It lampoons some of the most conspicuous personages in the city at this time, particularly Rev. William Vesey, rector of Trinity Church. The play was probably written for and acted by the governor's official household and its most striking of the book known to be extant (in the library of Henry E. Huntington, Esq.) the names of the inhabitants of New York, thus parodied, have been written by a contemporaneous hand (probably by the author himself) opposite the printed names of the "Dramattis Personae." Thus, "Andrew Glossom,"—"Nichols," "Aesop,"—"Jamison," "Doodlejack,"—"Lake- man;" "Tom of Bedlam,"—"Assembly;" "Babilard,"—"Bayard;" "Multigrib,"—"Mulford;" "Colub,"—"Cortland;" "Solomons,"—"Justice/""Morris;" "Pitler,"—"Vesey," etc. Manuscript addi- tions and alterations, in the same hand, include the change of the word "Monopolis," on the title-page, to "Moropolis." In explanation of this, a former owner of the volume has written the comment at the beginning of the book: "Whoever made the correc- tion meant, I suppose, to imply that it was printed at [word illegible]—'Poot's town.'" "Hunter was not only a soldier and a courtier, but a scholar and wit as well. His literary attainments had won him the friendship of Addison, Steele, Swift, and other wits and lettereurs of his day. He was a good Latin and French scholar, and wrote both languages fluently; most of his letters while in New-York, and some of his drafts of council minutes, now among the State papers at Albany, having been written in French."—Charles Burr Todd, in Wilson's Mem. Hist. N. T., II: 122.

The vacant ground on the west side of the custom-house bridge is levelled to a garden, to be contracted M. C. C., III: 66.

A committee of the common council is appointed to meet the mayor "at the fighting Cocks to settle the Affairs of the Dock."—M. C. C., III: 66. The Fighting Cocks was a tavern at the present 28 Water St., next the Coffee House. It was destroyed in the great fire of 1776.—See Sept. 21, 1776; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 978. The house was owned by Philip van Cortlandt.—See Aug. 1, 1746. Cf. Bayes, Old Taverns of N. Y., 125.

Oct. Gov. Hunter, returning from Albany, informs the council of the death of Queen Anne (see Aug. 1, 1714) and the accession of George, Duke of Brunswick. The council orders that King George be proclaimed "in the most solemn manner" on the following Monday, Oct. 15 (n. s.).—Col. Conc. Min., 356. Hunter had learned of the accession of George I from private, not official, sources.—See N. Y. Col. Docs., VI: 380-81, where the date of the celebration is erroneously given as Oct. 15.

The government having notified the corporation of the death of Queen Anne, and the increased expense of the mourning, on Oct. 11, that Prince George is King, the common council, in order to "demonstrate their Great Joy for so great a blessing as that of a Protestant successor to the Crown of Great Britain &c: in the Most Illustrious house of Hanover," orders that on that evening "there be A Bonfire at the usual place within this City of seven or Eight Cords of wood with several Tar Barrrels, that there be twenty Gallons of wine at the said Bonfire to drink the Kings health and the health of Prince George; That the City Hall be illumi- nated in the best manner that may be, That the Alderman and Ward direct his Constable to give Notice to the Inhabitants to Illuminate their respective houses on that Night and that all the Charge thereof be defrayed by the said Corporation."—M. C. C., III: 71-72. See Oct. 11.

King George I is proclaimed at the fort and city hall. The governor, council, and secretary (Clarke) take the oath.—Col. Coun. Min., 256. Regarding the character of the celebration on this day, see Oct. 6. A news report gives the following account: "This Morning at Eleven, the Funeral Obsequies of our Late Sovereign Lady Queen Anne of Blessed Memory [see Aug. 1, and Oct. 4], was performed here with great Decency and Order, The Flag in His Majesty's Fort George being Hoisted half Mast high; The Garrison and Militia of this City, both Horse and Foot under Arms, His Excellency our Governor being attended by the Gentle- men of His Majesty's Council, the Corporation of this City, and the Principal Gentlemen and Inhabitants of the Place, 50 Pieces of Cannon were discharged at half a Minutes distance, which were followed by His Majesty's Skip Seaford, and the other Ships in the Harbour." "At One a Clock the High and Mighty Prince George Elector of Brunswick Lannenburgh, was Proclaimed King of Great-Britain, France and Ireland &c. at His Majesty's Fort George, and after- wards at the City Hall, The Regular Forces Marching after His Excellency, and the Corporation, with Hobos and Trumpets before them. The Morning after, Morning the 13th, several Guns were shot at the Fort to the City Hall, all the Guns of the Garrison made a Triple Discharge, The Regular Forces and Militia Twice Three Volleys, with Hazza's and great Acclamations of Joy. The Shaping in the Road did the like." "On His Excellency's return from the City Hall to the Fort were drank His Majesty King George's Health, His Royal Highness the Prince, Royal Family, and the Lords Justices, &c. At Night His Excellency makes a Ball, and a fine Entertainment, and on the Parade before the Fort will be Fired several Mortars, and variety of Fire Works, where is a large Bonfire at the Charge of the Corpora- tion, and Wine to Drink the King's Health, &c. The City Hall and the whole Town will be finely Illuminated. And the Joy is Universal for His Majesty's Happy Succession to the Crown."—N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, Oct. 11-15, 1714.

A glister has been employed to repair the windows in the city hall, presumably for this occasion.—M. C. C., III: 72. The city's expenses for the celebration included payments of 18 shillings each to John Vergereau and John Noble, and 24 shillings to Dennis Hall and his son, "for Attending this Corporation as Musick on the King's proclamation day." Further, on Oct. 23, Samuel Bayard, a city treasurer, was reimbursed £19:8:6 for expenses incurred for Illuminations on this occasion, made by him "for Illuminations Bonfire Mastick Wine &c." and Richard Harris (tavern-keeper on William St.—see Dec. 22, 1704) was paid £84 "for Expenses of this Corporation at his house."—Ibid., III: 76-77. On Dec. 21, John le Chevalier was paid £58 for his work and materials "for fixing Illuminations in the City Hall."—Ibid., III: 82.

Fort Anne becomes Fort George.—Ibid., M. C. C., III: 73; and see Jour. Leg. Conc., I: 580-82. It was so called until its demo- lition in 1778. For earlier names of the fort, see March 24, 1661. The city constables sign the following declaration against Roman Catholics: "I, A. B., do Solemnly and sincerely in the presence of God, Profess Testifie and declare, that I do believe that in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper there is not any Tran- substanstiation of the Elements of Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Christ at or before the Consecration thereof, by any Person whatsoever. And that the Innocation [sic] or Adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other Saint and the Sacrifice of the Mass as they are now used in the Church of Rome are Superstitious, and Idolatrous. And I do solemnly in Presence of God profess Testifie and Declare that I am convinced by this Declaration and every part thereof in the plain and Ordinary sense of the words real unto me as they are Commonly understood by English Protestants without any Evasion E. . . . or Mental Reservations whatsoever and without any dispensation already Granted me for this purpose by the Pope or . . . or person whatsoever or without any hope

In the archives of the Reformed Dutch Church of New York is a small manuscript volume, containing the signatures of each year of the new Cloth-Drums and Church Masters to the calls of the respective ministers, and running from 1715-1767.—Eccles. Rec., III: 2746.

The common council orders that the freedom of the city be bestowed upon Capt. Henry Holland, Lieut. Garland, and Capt. Charles Pinkerton. The last named did "many Considerable services for this City in the late War as Commander of A Private Ship of War Called the Hunter Gally."—M. C. C., III: 84.

The king appoints Hunter to be governor of New York, and Secretary Stanhope directs that a new commission and instructions be prepared for him. The commission bears date of March 7. The instructions "are to the same purpose as the last be had."—See A.

N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 390, 391-97, 411. These were laid before the king by the lords of trade on May 6.—Ibid., V: 402.

Hunter appoints Lewis Morris, chief-justice of the province.—N. Y. letter in Beston News-Letter, March 14-17, 1715. Chief-Justice Monpesson, whom Morris succeeded, died Jan. 2.—Ibid., Jan. 10-17, 1715 N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 400. The original parchment letters patent, with large seal pendant, from George I to Lewis Morris, to be chief-justice of New York, dated July 1, 1718, is now preserved in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (with "Miscellaneous Address"). In Cosby's time, Morris was dismissed, but subsequently reinstated.

Hunter experiences great difficulty in raising a revenue to support the government. He urges parliament to come to the relief of the province.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 400-1. See Nov. 8, 1714.

In a list of freemen admitted to the corporation by the court of mayor and aldermen appears the name of a woman, Agnes Boyce, "Spinster."—M. C. M., March 29, 1715. It was not often that a woman petitioned for or received this right. The common council minutes of the city of Philadelphia show that four women were made freemen on July 13, 1705.—See M. C. C., July 13, 1705.

The common council resolves to grant to Jeremiah Callcutt the water lot fronting his premises, on condition that he will make "A Wharf or Street fronting Hudson River...of forty foot wide to Remain A publick Street for ever."—M. C. C., III: 90. A grant for this was ordered to be executed on May 25.—Ibid., III: 93. The street to be built was part of the present Greenwich St.

This being a day appointed by the governor for "General Thanksgiving for His Majesty's happy and Peaceable Accession to the Throne," the common council orders the lords of trade for relief.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 455. See March 28, 1715.

A fire breaks out about one o'clock in the morning "in Mr. Monerville's house in Wall Street; it burnt that house, a good brick house of Capt. D'Honour and two others down to the ground."—N. Y. Col. Jour., III: 274. May 26, 1715, Abraham Brasier petitioned for relief on account of damages which he sustained "by breaking down his House to prevent the further Progress of the late Fire in the City of New York."—Assem. Jour., I: 371.

John Parmyatt petitions for permission "to lay A Drain from his house in Beaver Street into the Drain in the broad Street and that no person have Liberty to make use of his Drain without contributing to the Charge thereof." The petition is granted, on condition that Parmyatt contribute to the expense of the drain in Broad St., to the court to regulate the contributions for the drain in Beaver St.—M. C. C., III: 80. Parmyatt was a tavernkeeper on the north-east corner of Beaver and New Sts. On Aug. 13, 1713, his widow, Elizabeth, conveyed the house to Cadwallader Colden. —Liber Deeds, XXXI: 357 et seq. (New York).

The common council passes an ordinance against trading with soldiers for their clothes, arms, or accoutrements.—M. C. C., III: 79.

The postmaster-general of North America (Hamilton) publishes a notice that from this date the western post between Boston and New York sets out once a fortnight during the winter months, going from Boston to Saybrook and Hartford on alternate trips to meet the rider from New York. of any such dispensation from any person or Authority whatsoever Oct. or without thinking I am or can be acquitted before God or Man or absorbed of this Declaration or any part thereof. Although the Pope or any other person or persons of Power whatsoever should dispense with or Annul the same or declare that it was Null and Void from the being." The dots represent a defect in the original parchment document, owned by T. Bailey Myers, Esq., and reproduced in facsimile in Man. Com. Coun. (1866), opp. p. 588. See Oct. 14.

The same declaration on parchme which was signed by the constables on Oct. 11 (p. v.) is signed on this day by the new aldermen and assistants. The same document was signed by later appointees in the city government, as well as by three military officers and an attorney at law, at different dates, as late as Oct. 15, 1716.

Dr. John Johnston, who was nominated mayor Sept. 29 (Col. Coun. Min., 256), takes the oath of office.—M. C. C., III: 73. He "made a very fine entertainment for the governor, Council, the corporation & a great many gentleman." —N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, Oct. 25, 1714. He was continued in office for five years, a longer period than any previous mayor had served. —M. C. C., III: 101, 129, 150, 185. For further reference to his career, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 404. He occupied the residence in which Mayor Rombouts lived in 1679 (p. v.), which was originally the home of Burgomaster Van der Grit—Ibid. (1853), 511.

The common council orders the mayor to "having due consideration of His Majesty George's on his happy Accession to the Crown," passes favourably on the draft of the document. This is to be given to the governor by the mayor who is "to pray the favor of his Excellency...to convey the same to his most sacred Majesty."—M. C. C., III: 74-75, 77.

This week, Gov. Hunter goes to Albany to meet the Five Nations of Indians and "renew the Covenant Chain, &c."—From N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, Aug. 15–22, 1715. At this meeting, the governor "Engaged them to make War upon the Carolina Indians, or oblige them to make Peace with His Majesties Christian Subjects of that Colony."—Ibid., Sept. 12–19, 1715.

The king's assent is given to an act of parliament, entitled "An act for the further security of His Majesty's person and government, and the succession of the crown in the heirs of the late Princess Sophia, being protestant; and for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and his open and secret abettors." It recites the titles of the previous Acts of Succession, (namely, those of Dec. 13 & 15 Wm. III, Chap. 2; Dec. 15 & 16 Wm. III, Chap. 2; 4 Anne, Chap. 3; 9 Anne, Chap. 8;) and the three oaths: first, of allegiance to King George II; second, of abjuration of Papal authority; and third, of abjuration of the Pretender, for whose seizure within the king's dominions $100,000 reward was offered. Among the persons required to take these oaths are all civil and military officers, ecclesiastical persons, schoolmasters, etc.—Jour. House of Lords (1716) of the present session, p. 176.; 1 Geo. I, Chap. 18; 2 Pickering, Statutes at Large (1764), XIII: 187.; Ledam, Pol. Hist. of Eng., 1702–1760, 245. The charter of King's College required that its officers take the oaths prescribed in this act.—See Oct. 3.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

11. On this day, Louis XIV ascends the throne, succeeding Louis St. 13. XIII as king of France.

19. Mary Harris (wife or widow of Richard Harris)—see Dec. 22, 1704,—now described as "Late Mary Baker Widow of Roger Baker late of the City of New York Inhabitor," by an indenture made on this day, to her son-in-law George Cokee, relinquishes, for a certain consideration yearly, her third interest in a "large brick Dwelling house and Lott of Land . . . in Smiths [William] Street within the City of New York in the East Ward . . . and now in the possession of the said George Cokee." This house had been bequeathed by Roger Baker to his wife, son and daughter, by will dated Sept. 18, 1702, "soon after the making of which" Baker died.—Liber Deeds, XXVIII: 158-202 (New York). In a mortgage given by Cokee on this property on July 10, 1716, he described the house as on east side of Smith St. bounded south by the ground of Lawrence Thomas, east by ground of Johannes Vanburgh, west by Smith St., and on the north by persons unknown.—ibid., XXVIII: 241-45. On July 18, 1716, Mary Harris sold her interest outright for £130 to Cokee, and relinquished the yearly rent.—ibid., XXVIII: 1714, to have no other record of George Cokee's occupancy (for the old King's Head Tavern).

Oct. An order is issued by the governor's council, on the memorial of Charles le Roux, to pay him for engraving bills of credit.—Col. Coun. Min., 260. Warrant for payment was issued March 1, 1716—ibid., 220.

25. Some time between this date, when Adolphus Phillips of New York and Thomas Dongan of London, a kinsman, are given power of attorney to sell "the large Message Tenement or dwelling house known by the Name of Whitehall with the Ware house Bakehouse or Bolting house and the Ground or Yard thereunto belonging" (Liber Deeds, XXVIII: 91, 195-97), and the date when the Burgis View (PL 25, Vol. I) was drawn (probably in 1717-8), this famous "Great House" of Gov. Stuyvesant and Gov. Dongan (see Nov. 12, 1677; March 11, 1686; April 22, 1697) was destroyed by fire. In the Burgis View only the walls remain, and, in the Key beneath, the building is described as "The Ruines of White Hall." See reference to "Whitehall" (with no mention of ruins) under date of Feb. 23, 1716; see also Oct. 29, 1709. The building stood at what is now the northwest corner of Whitehall and State Sts.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 952. In 1917, when the building at No. 25 Whitehall St. was torn down, the office building which now (1921) occupies the site, the author picked up an oyster-shell five inches long on the railed sand beach then still clearly visible in front of the old house, at a depth of six feet below the present street. He also found heavy old adzed timbers extending out under the street, on the beach level, from a point near the corner of Whitehall St.

Nov. In a report to the lords of trade on the state of the province, Hunter writes, among other things: "The trade of this Province has consisted chiefly of provisions;" but it has considerably decreased "since the late Peace." To prevent "the total decay of this and other branches of trade," the provincial representatives propose to go on with the production of naval stores (masts, yards, tar, etc.). He sends "a list of the number of ships, Vessells & mariners belonging to this Province, almost all of them having been built here.

He confirms an earlier estimate of the proportion of homespun used in New York (see Aug. 3, 1708), so far as it applies to "the planters and poorer sort of country people," stating that the computation is "rather less than more, but the several sorts are coarser than those made from England;" he says he has never known homespun to be sold in the shops, and that "The people of this Town and Albancy, which make a great part of the Province wear no clothing of their own manufacture." There is "no currency but of silver and bills of credit, the smallest of which is of two shillings." He proposes the coinage of copper farthings from native copper, for which purpose he asks the grant of a patent.—Y. N. Col. Doc., VI: 460-62. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 447.

The vestry of Trinity Church passes a resolution regarding the king's command that the increase in the Rev. Mr. Vesey's salary shall be paid by the justices of the peace and vestrymen of the city. —From the original minutes, in metal file labelled "Filed Papers, 1750-1800," city clerk's records. An explanatory note, supplied by the late E. T. Corwin, and citing various authorities, states that the Rev. Mr. Vesey was in England from June, 1714 to Nov., 1715, for the purpose of securing some relief from the opposition to the Episcopacy in New York which grew out of "its pretended legal establishment." Although the church charter asserts, "about a dozen times, that the Church of England was established by law," the Ministry Act of 1693 (q. v.) "did not establish the Church of England." Moreover, "the Legislative Assembly in 1695 positively declared—that the Vestrymen and Church Wardens had power to call a dissenting Protestant minister, and that he is to be paid and maintained as the law directs." Gov. Fletcher, however, asserted that the law meant what the Assembly itself declared it did not mean. —When Vesey went to England, the city vestry, which was elected by the people at large, "took advantage of their legal position, and refused to confer the further funds upon him as they were never intended specifically for them; but had only been collected and paid before because of official pressure. The claim had always been considered a perversion, as it really was."—Eccles. Res., III: 2035, citing Heathcote's letter of Feb. 25, 1716 to the Lord Bishop of Boston in England, wherein Vesey was made a "Commissary" of the Bishop of London; and obtained a letter from the king to Gov. Hunter, directing Hunter to secure the back payments of Mr. Vesey's salary. This was accordingly done.—ibid. See, further, ibid., III: 2107-8; VII: 370, footnote; Henham, Hist. Sketch of Trin. Church, 32-33, Appendix E. Thomas Kearney is made a defendant in a suit in the mayor's court brought by Messrs. Dugdale and Searle, four merchants. The plaintiff alleged they had been brought "into great Dis- credit" because, out of 100 hall barrels of flour which Kearney delivered to them as "good and Merchantable," and which they sold at Bridgetown, Barbados, as such, 57 were found to be "bad and mixt flour." Kearney had to pay £2015s in damages and costs.—M. C. M., Dec. 19, 1715. For legislative action concerning the sale of flour, see Oct. 24, 1750.

The governor, council, mayor, and city corporation, as well as the ministers and principal men of the city, sign an"Association" to uphold King George's title to the throne against the Pretender.—From N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, Dec. 26-Jan. 2, 1716. The occasion of this was the attempt of the "Pepish Pretender," son of James II, with the assistance of adherents, to wrest the throne from James. The "Association," recorded in the Minutes of the Common Council of the next day, reads: "His most Sacred Majesty King George our Sole And undoubted Rightfull and Lawfull Soveraigne, having from the throne Informed his high Court of Parliament that he had full Assurance that the late Rebellious Tunmills in Great Britaine were only the prelude to the Intended Invasion of his Dominions by a Pepish Pretender to his Crown and his Associates. We Who have hereto Subscribed our Names, in Duty to God and our King and due Regard to our Holy Religion our Country And Povertry do solemnly Declare and promise that we will to the utmost of our Power and Wit assist and support in every wise, with all our might, his Majesties Rightfull & Lawfull Title to the Sovereignty of Great Britaine And all other the Dominions and Territories thereto Belonging against the Said Pretender and all other Pretenders whatsoever their Associates and Abettors, And we do further in the most Solemn manner promise and engage to one another That we will cheerfully and Readily Join together when thereto Requir'd by Lawfull Authority at such place within this Province & in such manner as Shall be by the Said Authority Appointed to Oppose and Suppress all such Efforts as Shall be made by the said Pretender and to the said Churches' Vestaries and their Adherents to the Disturbance of his Majesties Government and the Peace and Tranquility of his Subjects. In Testimony of the Sincerity of our hearts we have hereto Affixed our hands."—M. G. C., III: 107.
From the period of 1716-8 dates the well-known Burgess View of New York from Brooklyn Heights, reproduced and described in Vol. II of Mr. Delany’s "New York," page 252. This is the most important, as well as the finest view of the city, and shows in detail every building along the East River water front as far north as the present Catherine Street, as well as many of the buildings and other landmarks back from the river. The drawing was probably made about June 14, 1717 (p. 150), as it shows the long bridge at the foot of Broadway, which, on that day, was ordered to be constructed.

About this time, John Horn built a house upon the tract which he had acquired "in conjunction with his brother-in-law Cornelius Webber, the latter’s sister Rachel having married the former three years previously. The house, which became the starting point of the Bloomingdale Road [see Nov. 25, 1751] was located between 22d and 23d Streets, in the present centre of Fifth Avenue, on the exact spot where the ‘Isle of Safety’ has been placed, and immediately west of the Flatiron Building. It became later the residence of Christopher Mildeberger, a merchant in the Swamp, who had married Margaret Horn in 1808 and removed to this dwelling in 1820 from Vanderwater Street. Fifth Avenue was ordered opened in 1837 . . . In 1839 . . . the homestead was removed to the north west corner of the avenue and street where the Fifth Avenue Hotel stands."—Mott, The New York of Yesterday (1908), 6, Min. Coun. (1865). A committee of the common council, which has waited upon Stephen de Lancey to thank him for presenting £20 (his salary as assem-blyman) to the city, being advised by him that the money may be well expended for a public clock, the common council directs the committee to order a clock made, with four dial-plates.—M. C. C., III: 108. On April 26, the committee reported that Joseph Phillips, a clockmaker, would make "a good substantial Town Clock, and is to be had for use," he being advised by Mr. Delancy to this Corporation. (Ibid., III: 117), and final payment on March 20, 1717(76, p.)

A committee of the common council is appointed to employ workmen "to Level the Ground Between the Great Bridge and Whitehall," and also to repair the wharf by the Market house at the south end of the Broad Street.—M. C. C., III: 109.

Mr. Hay’s homestead has been determined by the entry in the Min. of the Gen. Quarter Sessions Court (1694-1731), 317.

THE CONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1716 smooth, then they can make use of wheel-carriages. There are but 22 two coaches belonging to this province, because of the badness of the roads, though there are many rich people. There are three churches, the English, the French, and the Dutch Church;
the last two for the Assembly to sit, which is not very fine, and where they judge all matters. The town is compact, the houses for the most part built after the Dutch manner, with the gable-ends towards the street; the streets are of a good breadth;
the town is built close upon the river, and there is a fine quay that reigns all round the town, built with stone and piles of wood outside. There are small docks for cleaning and building small ships.
At high-water, the vessels come up to the quay to laden and unladen.
In winter the river's frozen, sometimes all over, and such abundance of ice comes down, that it often cuts the cables of ships, but cannot hurt those near the quay. The town is built on ground that gradually rises from the water, so it is amphitheatrical like. The French have all the privileges that can be, and are the most in number here, they are of the Council and of the Parliament, and are in all other employments. The chief produce of this province is beef, flour, pea, butter, and cheese, which they send to the West Indies, and sometimes to Lisbon. They drive a great trade with the Northern Indians for skins and furs. There is plenty of all sorts of fish, oysters, and water fowl. The climate is very cold in winter, a great deal of snow and frost for four months, and very hot in the late part of the summer.

Oct. 31st At ten, I went to the Coffee-house, and walked upon the Exchange [see Burgis View, Pl. 25, Vol. I], which is a small place that is planked, and hath pillars of wood all round, which support the roof and leave it open on all sides. I dined with Mr. Andrew Freneau . . . At ten I went to Mr Freneau, and with him to church . . . which is after Calvin's way. The church is very large and beautiful, and within it there was a very great congre-

Feb. 20 a bill for the removal of a decayed blockhouse from his premises near the east gate of the city.—Cal. Hist.
MSS., Eng., 435. It seems clear that this was the Fly blockhouse, which stood at the foot of Wall St.; the Miller Plan (Pl. 23-a) shows this blockhouse at the location mentioned. A year later, Jan. 29, the city council registered for "a grant of land upon the Black house in the East River between Mf. Beeckman and Mf. Sacketts."—M. C. C., III: 165. Curiously enough, no Beeckman has been found of record as receiving a water grant south of Beeckman's Slip (Fulton St.). Between Fulton St. and Peck's Slip, Governor John's petition of 1715 for a grant of land under water, as recorded in Liber City Grants, B: 70, 831 as did also William Beeckman, recorded in ibid., B: 491, and C: 181; and likewise Benjamin Peck, recorded in ibid., B: 515. Between Peck Slip and James Slip, Richard Sackett received such a grant, recorded in ibid., B: 1.
Notwithstanding these records, the Fly blockhouse is evidently here referred to.

Mar. 20, the payment (55) is made by the city to Joseph Phillips, locksmith, on his completion of the public clock which he has fixed in the City Hall of this City for the use of this Corporation, the gift of Stephen de Lancey (see Feb. 23, 1716.)—M. C. C., III:

riation for the afterwards mentioned clock, Mar. 27, 1718.

after June 29, 1714.—M. C. C., IV: 211.

In a petition by the common council to the assembly, to have the dock cleaned and the course of the common sewer altered, it is stated that it is desired also that the dock be repaired, "that the Dock may be capable to shelter Vessels from

A memorial of Robert Jenney, master of the grammar school, referred by the council to the house, with the recommendation "that a sufficient Fund may be raised, for building a School-House and Dwelling House for the Master, and to allow him a Salary of Seventy Pounds per Annum, for teaching 35 Boys."—Assem. Jour., I: 395.

May 14 Agreeable to the resolution of the common council of March 20 (M. C. C., III: 135), the provincial legislature passes an act to enable the city to raise $300 for "Altering the Course of the Common Sewer at the End of the Broad-Street, and for Cleansing and Scowering the Dock of this City." The act recites the fact that "Violent sudden Rains and the great conformity of water from twenty streets into the Broad-street, and from thence unto the Dock, brings such Large Quantities of Dirt, Sand, Rubbish, Ooz and Mudd, which Selles and Lodges itself in the Bason of the said Dock," that there is an unsupportable expense for "Cleansing and Scowering of the Same." The plan now is to prevent this by "Extending or Altering the Course and passage of the said Common sewer a house to Obscure against a place formerly Called the Great Bridge and next Adjuyning unto the Custom House, with all its appurtenances "now late in the Tenure or Occupation of one Johannes Dohounour" and now in the Tenure or Occupation of the said Obadiah Hunt. — Liber Deed, XXVIII: 229-30.

Gov. Hunter sets out for Albany, "to Renew the Covenant with the Six Nations of Indians, &c."—N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, June 3-10, 1717. A pirate vessel, the "Paul Williams," follows a ship into Sandy Hook, causing considerable uneasiness in and about New York.

The pirates, however, knowing that they are pursued by two sloops from the Rhode Island council, were fearful of capture. N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, June 7-10, 1717. Just before leaving, a part of the crew, which had been impressed into the pirate's service, rebellled without success, "five or six being dangerously wounded, and 825 thought dyed within a few Days of their Wounds."—Assem. Jour., I: 391.

tion of the Burgis View, I: 241, see May 18.
The following New York advertisement is published in Boston:

"This is to give Notice to all Persons that have Occasion for Bell or Bells in Churches or Meeting-houses, that in New-York they may be supplied with New Bells, or if they have an Old Bell broke they shall have a new Cast at a reason-able Price, and that one shall be good for Twelve Months, that if it Crack or Break it shall be new Cast for nothing: And all new Bells shall be made of better Mettal than any that comes out of Europe for Churches or Meeting-houses.

All Persons that have Occasion may apply themselves to Joseph Phineas, in Southack, near Boston, who is already agreed with some Persons, and is ready to do the same with any that are disposed."—Boston News-Letter, June 10-17, 1717.

The common council passes a resolution that the Common sewer at the End of the Broad street be carried through the Dock to the Outside thereof so that it may Empty itself into the River. That the Overseers Appointed for Making the said Common sewer, Cleaning the Dock and Repairing the Wharfs &c do with all Convenient Expedition purchase Materials, Employ Workmen and Labourers for the Making of the said Common sewer Repairing of the Wharfs and Cleaning of the Dock, and that they Cause A Good and substantial Bridge to be made and Erected Over the said Common sewer from the Market house fronting the Dock to the Dock’s Mouth and that they from time to time Consult and Advise with proper Artificers and Workmen for the better Executing the said Work and that there be an End of the Dock on each side of the Common sewer."—M. C. G., III, 1717. This action is in conformity with the act of the general assembly (May 14, 1717), authorizing the city to raise £500 by levying upon the real and personal property of all the freeholders and inhabitants, for which purpose, a resolution of the common council was passed on June 5, 1717.—Ibid., III: 142-43. Payments aggregating £300 were made Sept. 30, 1717, for work and materials.—Ibid., III: 149.

The auditing committee, for examining the accounts of the treasurer of this fund, made its final report Jan. 3, 1719.—Ibid., III: 190-92.

"There is now Published, and to be Sold at Mrs Jeanne Perry, Bookseller’s Shop in Kensington near Boston, Capt. Cyrpm Southack’s large and Correct Chart or Map of all the Sea Coast in the English America, on the Continent, viz. from Newfoundland, to Cape Florida, the like never yet Exacted, of great Use to all, but especially Mariners."—Boston News-Letter, June 17-24, 1717. This map is not listed in the catalogues of the British Museum, the Library of Congress, or the N. Y. Public Library. Later (c. 1750), William Herbert of London published a Southack map of the sea-coast from New York to the "I. C. Britonio," which contains accounts of two explorations made by Southack along the coast of the East America, one in 1749 and another in 1757. Winor, Mem. Hist. of Boston, II: 429. The results of the explorations made in 1717 were probably used by Southack in a later and probably more detailed chart on which he was working in 1718 (see May 26, 1718).

The "Phoenix," the new station ship for New York, commanded by Mr. Patrick Macknight and Mr. Gilbert Livingston is ordered that the house Situate in the East Ward of this City Commonly Called & known by the Name of Venzov’s house be & is hereby Recorded a Publick Meeting house for the Congregation of Disenting Protestants Called Presbyterians for the Publick Worship of Almighty God."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 334. A different meeting-place was recorded on May 3, 1721 (q.v.). A plot of the land containing the house was purchased Oct. 15, 1748, from Daniel Venesov. He was living on the waterside between Old Slip and Wall St. in 1694.—M. C. G., I: 365-64. In 1717, he resided at the present No. 144 Pearl St., 83 ft. south of the corner of Wall St. See recitals in Liberty Deeds, XXV: 396; also ibid., XXVI: 52; 74(New York).

Charles Parmyter’s tavern continued to be the favourite resort of the city magistrates is shown by a common council order to pay him £35 for “ferry Expenses at his house by this Corporation on several public days Ending the first day of August last.”—M. James Dixon is appointed by royal order and is sworn in as collector and receiver-general of the revenues and collector of customs, in place of Thomas Byerley, removed.—Col. Coun. Min., 265. See Nov. 30, 1717.

Elizabeth Journard petitions the general assembly, which is considering a new Act Day of May and wants the province, that her accounts may be settled as "amongst the publick Service of the Government." One of these is for "lodging Soldiers, and entertaining the Gentlemen of her Majesty’s Council at her House, on the Affair of the Expedition against Canada" (the date of which, whether now building a Furnace or not appear).—Assemb. Jour., I: 402. The law, passed Dec. 23 (q.v.), to pay the debts of the province, does not provide for this payment.

Elizabeth Journard, the tavern-keeper, first appeared in the city records when she received letters of administration, April 15, 1703, on the death of her husband, a warrant on the Ship "Dolphin," who died at sea.—Abstracts of Wills, I: 365, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1892). On Sept. 16, 1706, she sued one Charles Wolley in the mayor’s court for £512:19 in payment for rum and sugar supplied to him as a shipowner. On Oct. 28, 1727, she applied to the assembly to be relieved from the penalties of four recognizances, entered into by her for payment of the excise, alleging her "extream Poverty." The petition was denied, and the commissioners were reprimanded for failure to collect the excise.—Assemb. Jour., I: 565-66. Her tavern was still in existence on March 31, 1730 (q.v.), but its location is not now known.

The common council orders that the representatives of this city and county in the assembly "use their utmost Endeavours to procure the passing of a Bill in the Said Assembly for Regulating the Ferry between the City of New York and the Island Nassau."—M. C. G., III: 150. It seems surprising that the assembly should be requested to pass such a bill when the ferry privilege rested solely with the corporation. Perhaps it was desired that anyone who infringed on the privilege should realize that he was violating provincial, as well as municipal, authority.—See Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Century, p. 143. Such a bill was passed on Nov. 2 (q.v.); and the ferry was offered for lease accordingly, on terms prescribed by the common council on Dec. 24, 1717 (q.v.).

Gov. Spotswood of Virginia and Gov. Keith of Pennsylvania, accompanied by several gentlemen, arrive in New York. The garison and militia, under arms, having formed as a guard on both sides of the street, "from their Landing to the.. ." His Excellency the Governor & most of the Gentlemen of the Town received them on their Landing at the Water-side and conducted them to the Fort.—From N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, Oct. 7-14, 1717.

"Mr. Wm. Wildman, coroner of the city, memorializes the assembly for "Satisfaction for making nine Inquisitions on the Bodies of Persons murdered, in the horrid Conspiracy and Insurrection of the Negroes in 1712." See April 7, 1712.—Assemb. Jour., I: 493.

In making arrangements to celebrate, as usual, "his Majesties Coronation," with "the usual Quantity of Wine," it is ordered by the common council that the treasurer provide also "A Cleare hamper with lock and key to secure the same from Imbazzellment."—M. C. G., III: 151. See Oct. 20.

For expenses of the corporation on the anniversary of the king’s coronation, on Oct. 20, John Parminter, the tavern-keeper (see Dec. 1, 1717, was purchased Nov. 25, 1718), paid £313, 15s. Nothing further on the subject appears of record until June 1, 1724 (q.v.).

Since the time of the Dongan Charter (see April 27, 1686), the whole subject of ferries was controlled by the common council, including the adjustment of ferriages (q.v. Rec. N. Am., Vl, 85-88). The Harlem ferry had been so controlled since 1660 (q.v.). However, the legislature passes an "Act for Regulating the Ferry between the City of New-York and the Island Nassau," which establishes a certain "Catalogue" of ferry rates. This has become necessary because the ferry-man has made himself "sole Judge" of...

The proper charges for carrying goods not listed in the official list
Nov. 2 and has exacted "Extravagant Prices." Penalties are prescribed for charging more than the law allows. The rates designated in this act are principally reckoned in multiples of a grain's weight of plate; thus, every person transported one way across East River is required to pay

33 weight of plate, and double that sum after sunset (unless the ferry-man neglects or refuses to transport the passengers). For a horse, or "Grain Weight of Plate" is extracted; and other amounts for a calf, a hog, a sheep or lamb, a barrel of rum or sugar or molasses, a dead hog, an empty barrel, an inch board, a wagon, etc., in numerous variety. For every 100 eggs, four eggs are taken for ferriage.

The act also provides that the ferry-man shall be "Obliged to Come and go with the Ferry-Boats, to and from such places in the City of New York, between the Great Dock and Beeckman's Slaughter-house, and by such Turns as are appointed and prescribed in him in the former Regulations, for Encouraging the Markets of the said City (Wind and weather permitting)," New York City's monopoly is asserted, it being permitted by this act "Establish and keep one or more ferries between New York and the Island Nassau." The ferry-man "Established in the City of New York" shall receive into his ferry-boats on Nassau Island (with there) "all sorts of Goods and Passengers (horses and Cattle only excepted)". For a horse, or "Grain Weight of Plate" is extracted; and other amounts for a calf, a hog, a sheep or lamb, a barrel of rum or sugar or molasses, a dead hog, an empty barrel, an inch board, a wagon, etc., in numerous variety. For every 100 eggs, four eggs are taken for ferriage.

The mayor was reimbursed on Jan. 29, 1718, to the amount of £2,12, "Expended at the house of M' Thomas Brasier [evidently a tavern-keeper] upon Committees of the Council upon the following the Act of General Assembly lately made for regulating the ferry between the City of New York and the Island Nassau." — M. C. G., III: 165.

30 James Dixon, the collector (see Sept. 26), states in a memorial to the governor's council that "his Majesties Custome house being Intirely out of Repair and in Danger of Falling in, and that a presentment of the Grand Jury has lately been made against it," he Such repairs were made. — Assemb., Jour., I: 435. See June 16, 1719.

23 The provincial legislature passes an act to raise and place in the hands of the treasurer "Several quantities of Plate," and to make bills for the redemption of "of £150,459," for the payment of the debts of the province. The "Plate" here referred to as the standard for the value of the bills for credit is the "Spanish Coynes of Sevil, Mexico or Pillar Plate." The bills shall be "in press in the middle of the Armes of the City of New York, and on the Top of each of them shall be printed the Quantity of Plate they shall go current for." The form of the bills is prescribed; they are to be signed and numbered by Robt. Walters, Johannes Jansen, David Provoost, and John Cruger, or any three of them, or by the major court of them who survive. Provisions are made for retiring these bills; and exact accounts are to be kept of payments under the act.
In case the debt is not paid, numbered over 500, some of which date back to Dongan's time, are the following:

To John White, for joiner's work done in 1698 in the fort at New York; to Abraham Pip, for beer delivered in 1700 on Bellomont's order to H. M. S. "The Fortune," to the widow of John Cruger, for an assembly of book of debts due from the province; to Lady Lovelace, for firewood used at the fort during the Lovelace administration; to Captains Jansen and Lewis, for services in the expedition against the French at Albany in 1692; to certain "Out-Scouts" at Sandy Hill, to John Harris (on a claim of £4), "for bringing Several Boat Loads of Timber for Carriages, and Several Boat Loads of Sods, and for ferrying horses from Amboy to New York;" to John Crook (to discharge his account of £1,414,434, for work done at the fort from 1701 to 1702; to Jacobus Bayard (£2,69), for "Several Casks of Beer deliver'd by his father . . . for the Dec.
use of his Majes Garrison at New York, by Order of Jacob Leisler, Esq.;" to Anthony Lepenard (£9), "for fetching three Shipp Load of Stockades for his Majes's fort at New York;" to Crannel (£710), for services "as Cockswaine of the Governors charger" to Justice Bosch (£415), "for hire of his Sloop, which assisted the unloading of Capt. Jones's Ship, which was taken in the Colony Service," in 1705, "in an Expedition a'gt some French Privateers then investing this Coast;" to Edward Throckmorton, for discharging a warrant, drawn by Cornbury, May 8, 1704 (for £79), payable to Elizabeth Stokes, "for nursing Sick Soldiers;" to Richard Chapman (£615), for carpenter's work done in the fort; to Jonathan Whitehead, "for Victualling the Soldiers that March'd from the East End of Long Island to go to Albany in Coll. Dongans Expedition" in 1688; to Johannes Janse, Isaac d'Riemer, and Gerrit Viele, for bringing 2,500 pounds of powder from Philadelphia to the fort in the time of "the late happy Revolution" (the Leisler rebellion); to Johannes Johnse, "for his Expenes in Proclaiming King William & Queen Mary as of Blessed Memory," to Samuel Provoost (for the account of Capt. Partridge), "for his Majes' George his Picture;" to repov Gov. Hunter, 2,525 ounces, 75 pennyweight of plate, for his extraordinary disbursements; to repay various members of the council for their services and expenses; to the corporation of the city of New York, 500 ounces of plate,
"for the Repair of the Barge;" to Philip de Dyser (£464), carpenter's work for the fort in 1704 to 1706.

Certain soldiers and officers (their widows or children) are to be paid for services in the fort under Leisler in 1689-90, among which is Hartman Wessels, who was surgeon of the fort. Certain British officers, "to ferrying the goods," are to be paid a total of 600 ounces of plate. The owners of the frigate "Hoorn," which was taken from them by Gov. Slaughter for the use of the government, are to be compensated for the loss of their shares. Certain barren are to be paid "for carrying Sheep, and Sand, Sods, &c., for his Majesties fort at New York" in 1701-3. Other persons are to be paid "for sundry Arms left in his Maties fort at New York, And taken from Some of the Inhabitants of this City, and Carried to the said fort," in 1691, "for the Service of their Maties King William & Queen Mary, of Glorious Memory." Still other inhabitants are to be reimbursed for provisions, ammunition, and other war materials, delivered for the use of the fort in 1689-90, and for services performed at that time during the "late happy Revolution." Among these, Abraham Governor is to be paid £100 for his services as clerk in the fort, and £600 for the services of his predecessors, Jacob Millburn, deceased, as a commissioner for the expedition against Canada, and as a major of the forces, in those years. The owners of the 19 negro slaves excuted for the conspiracy of 1712 are to be paid "the Satisfaction intended" by the "Act for preventing the Conspiracy of Slaves."

The treasurer is to pay to James Dixon, the collector and receiver for several of the province's credits, with "his Majesties plate at New York," to be applied "for the Repairing his Majesties Custome house in the City of New York."

The act further provides that: "Whereas the place which has been for many years Last part Asigned and Made Use of for the Secretaries Office of this Colony, In Which the Publick Records Original Wills, and other papers and Writings of Great Concern and Consequence both to his Majesties and his Subjects of this Colony, is So Small and otherwise So Inconvenient, that his Excelency the Governor has been pleased to Appropriate the Building over the fort Gate for that Service, Where in the Records, and other papers Mentioned will be better Secured, and the Office more Conveniently kept." George Clarke, the secretary of the province, is to be paid in bills of credit and is to apply them for materials and labour in fitting up the building. Cf. description of Burgis View, I: 244.

The bills are to be printed by Bradford. He is to be paid for this service in such bills, and also for "Cutting & Engraving the Stamp" (but see June 12, 1710).— N. Y. Col. Lacs. I: 958-91.

The common council conceives the idea of leasing the Long Island ferry in two parts and conditions are drawn up accordingly.

The ferry-man (a ferry-man or a "furman") is to receive one horse, one cow, one goat, one sheep, one cow, and no cattle, only passengers and goods; and was required, therefore, to provide only two small boats. The ferry-man on the Brooklyn dike had to furnish both large and small boats, and was not restricted as to his cargo. He alone had charge of the tavern and all the ferry
The page contains a historical document discussing various legal and topographical details related to land and ferry rights. It references the treatment of land in New York City, including transactions, ferry services, and legal proceedings.

For instance, the text mentions the sale of land near Wall Street to Broadway and Nassau St., the trustees of the Presbyterian Church, and the creation of the first ferries in New York City. It also discusses the establishment of the Council and the actions taken by the council, such as the provision of ferry services.

The text is written in a formal, historical style, typical of legal or governmental documents from the 18th century. It uses legal jargon and references to historical figures and events.

The page contains several numerical references, such as dates, years, and financial figures, which are integral to the content. It also includes several footnotes and references to other documents, indicating a thorough investigation into the historical context.

The document's purpose is to provide a detailed history of land transactions and ferry services in New York City, offering insights into the legal and economic conditions of the time.

1753 to a common council order of June 24, the committee, agreed, to see what repairs are needed to the city hall, reports: "first that the Cupelo be well Secured and Mended and the City Arms be Affixed thereon. 2d That the floors of Each End below be made New & the Middle part thereof be laid with Bristol Stones. 3d That the City Hall below be enclosed with Bannisters & Rails and a gate for Passage to be on Each End & on Each Side. 4th That a Balcony be made frontal Broad Street of the Dimensions formerly Intended. 5th That the City Hall be Repaired with Masons work where Needfull. 6th That the Insides of the Common Council Room be made with Glasses & Casements 7th That all the City Hall be Painted where it is Needfull for Preservation thereof.

The report is approved and it is ordered that "the Treasurer Provide the Materials & Imply Workmen and Labourers for the Speedy and Effectual doing thereof by and with the Advice of the aforesaid Committee & pay for the Same."—M.C.C., III: 176.

1758 Col. Abraham de Peyster and Samuel Bayard enter into a deed of partition of their land adjoining the city hall (see Jan. 9). The deed states that there is left undivided between them the following ground: "On the East-side of the City Hall fronting Wall Street, from the Hall to Lot No. 14 in breadth about 27 feet 9 in. and in length along the No. 15 about 48 feet, also about 21 feet some inches from the North side of the City Hall to Lot No. 18 and in length from Kip Street Eastward, on the Backside of the City Hall about 65 feet 8 in. also about 16 feet in breadth on the West side of the City-Hall, fronting Wall Street—Besides the Ground belonging to said De Peyster & Bayard Whereas part of the City Hall is built upon.

The foregoing statement is endorsed on the back of a MS. plan of the estate of Abraham de Peyster in Wall Street, which was presented to the N. Y. Hist. Society by C. Auguste de Peyster, great-great-grandson of Abraham de Peyster. This plan shows the location, dimensions, and abutting lots (numbered) of the city hall and Presbyterian Church in Wall Street, and the lots of Samuel Bayard on "Kips Street. . . Now Called Nassau St.," and his lots and De Peyster's lots on Wall street, surrounding the city hall, which is on Wall opposite Broad Street—From original MS. plan filed with Misc. MSS. in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Aug. Gov. Hunter sends an account of the number of families

7 Germans (Palatines) settled on the Hudson River. There are 394 families, containing 1,601 persons, of whom 70 families of 100 people each, go to New York City and adjacent places.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), I: 470. Regarding the arrival of the Palatines, see June 13, 1710.

14:25 French immigrants arrive at Dauphine Island, and found New Orleans.

17 John Wright, a watchmaker, is allowed a salary by the common council of £3. a year for "keeping in good and Sufficient Repair and Order the Publick Clock of this City."—M. C. C., III: 180. His services lasted 16 years, to June 29, 1734; and during the later years he was paid £10 a year. See, for example, Ibid., III: 491; IV: 241. The clock was in the city hall, bought with the Stephen de Lance money fund, Feb. 23, 1716.

Sept. It is ordered by Trinity vestry "that a New Gallery be built over the west Gallery if the Charge thereof can be detained by Subscriptions and when built the front pews to be Appropriaed to Housekeepers & their wives, Masters of Vessels and their wives and Scholars of the New School and the members of the said Gallery for M' Jennesy & M'Huddleston Scholars, M' Jennesy to have the first choice, the two range of pews in the middle to be in Common."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

"Ordered that the two hindermost pews to the Eastward in the New Gallery be allotted to the Scholars of M' Huddleston, and two in the middle of two hindermost pews over the north door in the West Gallery be allotted to the Scholars of M'Huddleston, until a New Gallery shall be built."—Ibid.

29 Capt. Cornelius de Peyster is appointed "Chamberlain or Treasurer of this Corporation" by the common council.—M. C. C., Sept. III: 182. He was continued in office for the rest of his life, almost 29 years (see Jan. 9, 1740). The Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to view the Farm belonging to the Church & report to this Board what part thereof may be laid into Lots and what to be Let as a farm and for how much Annual Rent & the terms for Improvement."—Trin. Min. (MS.). Report was made by the committee March 4, 1719 (q.v.). The provincial legislature delivers an address to Gov. Hunter, reminding him of the difficulties experienced in Cornbury's time about the misuse of public moneys. It is in part as follows: "Before we enter into any Remarks on their Lordships Objects or rather Observations, on the Act, for Support of His Majesty's Government here, we beg your Excellency to call to Mind the Circumstances of this Colony at the Time of passing this Act, both with Respect to the Inhabitants themselves and to the Government of it, . . . As for the payment of the public Debts, though often recommended by the Earl of Clarendon [Cornbury] and your Excellency, and at last happily effected; yet the Bulk of them was known to be occasioned by the Misappropriation of the public money and the Sense of the Colony was fully expressed to my Lord Cornbury by the Assembly of that Time" (see May 27, 1705).—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 454. Regarding Cornbury's misappropriations, see May 29, 1706.

The tavern of Obadiah Hunt is chosen as the house of entertainment by the corporation of the city, on the anniversary of the king's coronation. It was again resorted to on Nov. 5, 1718.—M. C. C., III: 192. Hunt had acquired title to this property on Nov. 20, 1716 (q.v.). It was in Dock St., or Custom House St., near the custom house (now No. 15 Pearl St.).—See Liber Deeds, XXVIII: 270, 275; M. C. C., III: 431. Recitals in his deed indicate that the tavern was kept before Hunt's time by one Johannes Debonour. On Aug. 2, 1735 (q.v.), he advertised his house for sale or rent, and by Jan. 13, 1736 (q.v.), William English had become the lessee of the tavern. Hunt had other property in the neighbourhood, where he continued to live for many years. See June 14, 1729; June 4, 1739, and March 12, 1752.

Cases involving sailors and masters of vessels were frequent in Nov. the mayor's court of the early eighteenth century. For example, 25, 1718.

1719 In this year, Thomas Fleet published at Boston the nursery tales of Mother Goose.—Winor. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 141.

In this year, Andrew Bradford, son of William Bradford, began to publish the American Weekly Messenger, the earliest Pennsylvania newspaper.—Ibid., V: 248.

The First Presbyterian Church was in course of erection during this and the following year, on the north side of Wall Street about half way between Broadway and Nassau St., on the land purchased on Jan. 5, 1718 (q.v.).—Sess. Book; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 278-291. The original drafts of letters, petitions, etc., relating to the erection, etc. of this church are filed with Misc. MSS., relating to churches, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. It stood on ground known as 1683 at Stoutenberg's garden.—See Dec. 14, 1683; and Landmark Map. Ref. Key, X1: 931. William Pell, Nicholas Mattye and others have recently laid out and sold land belonging to the city "at or near the old Cherry Garden between Sacketts & Beekman."

The declaration of War against Spain, and a proclamation pardoning all "Piracies Committed before the 1st of July last," are published, and, "it being His Majesty's Birth Day" as well, the city celebrates in the usual manner. There is "a Noble Bonfire," a "great deal of Wine at the Charge of the Corporation," a ball in the fort, and the discharge of guns from the fort, and from the three men-of-war and other ships; there are also "the finest Fire works ever seen in New York."

Charles le Roux, in a memorial to the assembly, states that William Bradford was allowed £50 for engraving copper plates for printing the best bills of credit; that Bradford received this sum but did not pay Le Roux, as Bradford made use of plates formerly engraved for that purpose.— Assemb. Jour., I: 434. The committee appointed to consider the memorial reported, on June 19, that they reported the same to the House & that the Colle.
"give notice to the Tenant in Possession Accordingly."—Trin. Min.
(MS.). See Aug. 9, 1720.

A report having been made to the council as to the sufficiency of the repairs to the custom-house, recently made by the collector, James Dixon (see Nov. 30, 1717), it is conveyed to the assembly with the statement that, on account of the space needed for offices for clerks and other persons, and for storing goods, it would require about £50 to complete the work.— Assemb. Jour., I: 435.

A committee appointed on June 12 (M. C. C., III: 204) to prepare a plan of the water lots at the lower end of Queen St., in front of the premises of Johannes Breedman, John Cannos, Gilbert Livingston, and John Elison, to whom said lots are to be granted, now makes its report (see the original report and plan in the city clerk's record-room); and a resolution is passed by the common council that this ground, from high-water to low-water mark, be granted to them,—a specified width to each. Each grantee is to pay the city £50 on delivery of the grant, and they are to make a Street of thirty foot fronting to the River According to the Covenants of the Other Grants in Queen Street to be Complanted on or before the first day of September 1721.— M. C. C., III: 206. These water lots ran from Peck to the future Fulton St., and the new street to be made was the present Water St.—See City Grants, Liber B: 50, 57, 64, 70 (comptroller's office).

For the protection of the cooperers of this city, a duty is laid upon empty casks imported into the colony.— Col. Laws N. T., I: 1021.

The law was revised Nov. 13, 1734 (ibid., II: 853), and Sept. 23, 1744 (ibid., III: 440).

The colonial legislature passes an act for supporting the government by levying import taxes on wine, distilled liquors, cocoa, European goods and negro or other slaves. A duty is placed on tonnage,

A committee appointed by the common council on Oct. 28 (M. G. C., III: 216) "to treat with the Printer for Reprinting the By-Laws of this Corporation & the Charter & to Deliver to this Court Sixty Copies thereof for the Publick use" reports that Bradford will do this for £10. This offer is accepted, and the clerk is directed to give Bradford a copy of the laws.—Ibid., III: 218. At the same time, the laws and ordinances of the city are "Made Ordained Renewed Established and Published (After the Ringing of three Bells)," and are entered by titles in the Minutes.—Ibid., III: 219-20. Bradford was paid on March 1, 1720.—Ibid., III: 223. These laws were continued in force by enactment of the common council every three months. For page references to these recent editions of the laws of the king's the M. G. C. also copies of the corporation laws was printed in 1749.—See Feb. 17, 1719.

A committee of the common council is appointed to examine "the Wall fronting the Dock which supports the Market house at the south End of the Broad Street," with a view to having repairs made.—M. G. C., III: 218. See Feb. 3, 1715; June 1, 1714.

In this year, Herman Moll published his New Map of the North Parts of America, etc. The original measured 20 x 30 in.—Wann, N. Y. Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 80.

A list of the city's annual expenses and revenues, and the city's rent-roll, are prepared. They are undated, but appear to be for 1720, as printed in Man. Comp. Comp. (1858), 595-96.

Gov. Hunter reports in person to the lords of trade that the number of militia in the province was about 6,000.—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (C. M. A.) II: 409.

"There are five Printing Presses in Boston, which are generally full of Work, by which it appears that Humanity and the Knowledge of Letters flourish more here than in all the other English Plantations put together; for in the City of New-York there is but one little Book-seller's Shop, and in the Plantations of Virginia, Maryland, Carolina, Barbadoes, and the Islands none at all."—Neal, Hist. of New-England (London, 1720), II: 587. In Philadelphia, which is not referred to in this observation, there was one press—that of Andrew Bradford, who succeeded Jacob Taylor in 1712. See Hildebrand, A Century of Printing—the Lives of the Press of Penn., 1685-1784, I: 45, 46, 54-56; Evans, Am. Bibliography, I: 446. For further comparative view of the printing done in different parts of the United States at this time, see Thomas, History of Printing in Am., I: 209-10.

John Hutton, silversmith, was admitted as a freeman of New York in this year. A tankard made by him is described in Met. Museum of Art Catalogue of Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1911), 53.

In the 12th volume of the "Hist. of the Domestic Affairs of the Inhabitants of N. Y.," in Man. Comp. Comp. (1858), 591, that "Japanese tea-tables, gilt-frame looking-glasses, and the great eight-day clock were introduced at about this time; and that, after this date, hangings of camlet, coloured harlequin, and other expensive goods came into common use in houses having any pretensions to style; nevertheless, by more recent researches made by Luke V. Lockwood, we find that tea-tables began to be mentioned about the beginning of the eighteenth century"—one at New York in 1705 (the first mention we have found).—Colonial Furniture in Am., 219. This authority states that a New York inventory of 1696 mentioned "a looking glass with a gilded frame and one with an ebony frame."—Ibid., 285. See July 26, 1731. The finest collection of eighteenth century American furniture is the Bowles collection in the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

On the 92nd, 10th and 12th Instant great Numbers went over Hudson's River upon the Ice, from New-York to New-Jersey.—Boston News Letter, Jan. 25-Feb. 1, 1720. See also, Jan. 29, 1728.

Capt. Thomas Clarke, Gerrert Vanhome, John Reade, Isaac Gouverneur, and several others, having petitioned the president of the provincial council for leave to proceed "between the Corner house of Rip van Dam Esq' by the End of Maiden Lane slip and the Corner by Capt Thomas Clarke Next the Market house at the Low End of Wall Street," 150 feet into the river fronting their respective freeholds, with the privilege of erasing ermes, buildings, etc., the common council orders the recorder to oppose the grant.—M. G. C., III: 221. The question involved here seems to be the title of the city to the water lot, under the Dunham Charter grant, after the city became gradually extended by the process of filling in along the water front. The common council at its next meeting, Feb. 19, resolved to petition the president and council of the province "for his Majesties Grant to this Corporation of all the Land that may be Gained out of the Rivers Round this Island Manhattans being the bounds of this Corporation under such Regulations and Restrictions as to his Honour and Council shall seem Reasonable."—Ibid., III: 222.

Letters written in London on Feb. 15, which were received by the council at New York on April 21, describe Gov. Hunter, who has "perfectly Recovered his Health," as being in great favour with the Court, and about to return "with fuller Power than here tofore," they also record the appointment of Francis Harrison as Surveyor General of New York, in place of Col. Graham, deceased.—From N. Y. letter in Am. Merc. (Phila.), April 21, 1720; Cal. C. Min., 275. See April 19 and 21.

The common council resolves that "A Cage Pillery and Stacks be made at the Charge of this Corporation & be set up where the old One Now Stands."—M. G. C., III: 221. See Nov. 2, 1710. These, and a whipping-post, were paid for on May 24.—Ibid., III: 227. They were again given a new location by order of the board on Sept. 16, 1731 (5, 6).

Rev. James Anderson, a Presbyterian minister, in behalf of his congregation, petitions the governor and council for a patent of incorporation. On March 17, May Bickley, the attorney-general, entered a caveat on behalf of Trinity Church against the patent.—Cal. Comp. Min., 274. The council issued an order on Sept. 19—10, 278. For a later petition—

Payment is made by the city to Philip van Cortlandt and John Van Cortlandt for repairing the Pullick Wall at the lower End of Wall Street Pursuant to an Order of Common Council made the first day of December last.—M. G. C., III: 224.

The common council orders "that Alderman Kip & Mr Marsh- schack be a Commissioner of Vessels with Abe Workman for Compleating and finishing the Stil Case at the West End of the City Hall from the Ground floor to the Garrett & for purchasing Materials & that the Same be performed with all Convenient Expedition."—M. G. C., III: 225.

The king appoints William Burnet governor of the province.

In a short historical review regarding the British revenues, Horace Walpole informs the lords of the treasury that Gov. Hunter, arriving in New York in 1710, applied himself "with all possible address to procure & settle a Revenue but the Assembly resolving to enlarge their power, not only demand the nomination of a Treasurer but the appointment of all officers necessary to the Collection & Dispersal of Revenues to the utter exclusion of the Crown officers, & likewise of all the Salaries not excepting the Gov't to be issued by Acts of Assembly." Walpole protests against this conduct, and against the revenues being diverted from "their antient channell."—N. Y. Col. Doc., V: 545-48.

Ham, the dock-master, to employ persons to repair "the Wharves Inclosing the Great Dock," and for removing 60 socow loads of mud out of the dock. The number of socow loads was then increased to 100.—M. C. G., III: 228, 251. This work follows very soon after the more extensive work of the kind begun three years before and completed in 1718.—See June 18, 1717. Payment of £36 was made for this work, when completed, Sept. 26, 1720.—Ibid., III: 223, 258.

The need of cleaning the dock was frequent and troublesome for many years, the mud from it being used as early as 1691 to fill up lots west of the river. See also 1700, 180, 191, 102-3; III: 239, 245, 259, 262; IV: 412, 456, 461-2; 488; V: 514-16, 176. These references carry to 1735; the records regarding cleaning the dock by the city. Losses of the dock and slips were usually required to have them cleaned.—See, for example, ibid., II: 191-92, 245, 259, 294. See also May 12, 1715.

A letter from year to year on the great dock, or parts of it. For example, see, for example, ibid., II: 191-92, 247, 270, 294; III: 325-29; 349, 445-444; IV: 254, 357, 482-83; V: 56, 57, 117, 169, 201; VI: 163, 202-3; VII: 21, 114, 115-16. These references to repairs begin the records to 1768.

The common council orders "that some small Prizes be made at the West End of the City Hall in the Gerritty" also that the entrance into the court room be arched, and the king's arms for the court room be made new.—M. C. G., III: 259. In September, the arms were "Affixed in the Court Room."—Ibid., III: 371. See also Sept. 26, 1722. The anniversary of King George's accession to the throne is celebrated. "At Noon the Artillery of the Fort, his Majestys ships of War, and of several Merchant men were fired. Y. letter in Am. Merc. (Phil.), Aug. 4, 1730.*

Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to See that part of the Church farm that lies between the Bank where the Stockado's lately Stood and the house and land now in the possession of Francis Byrne be Surveyed & laid into lots by Mr Bond the City Surveyor and the draft thereof be presented to this Board." The same committee is directed "to lay out the ground behind the Church yard into Lotts and present the draught thereof to this Board."—Trin. Min. (M.S.). See March 4, 1719; July 20, 1721. It is ordered by Trinity vestry that the Church be Enlarged as far as the Street," and a committee is appointed "to Consider what formre may be most proper & report the Same to this Board."

The subscription paper is dated Aug. 12.—Trin. Min. (M.S.). "Brigadier Hunter," the former governor, now in London, answering queries regarding the city of New York, states among other things, that it is in latitude 40 degrees, 38 minutes; but that its longitude has not been determined with certainty, "for want of Artists & instruments fit for observing the Eclipses."

The inhabitants of the province are increasing daily, chiefly from New England and lately from the north of Ireland.

There is "very little Trade with any foreign Country or Plantation [Europe besides Gt. Britain] chiefly with St Thomas Curazo & Surinam no returns but Gold or Silver at least that are avowed & discovered." The natural produce and staple commodities of the province are corn, flour, tar, whale oil, and pork, "but no sort of Manufacture that can be of importance." The fort at New York has "a regular Bastions 50 Guns mounted, Faced with Stone with neither Foseee nor out works." "There is a supreme Court at New York held by a Chief Justice & second judge who goes Circuit also through all the Several Provinces, there is besides in each County one Judge & three or more assistants Justices of the peace in number proportionable to the extent of the Country one Sheriff for each Coroner and Constables. The Cities of New York, Albany & Westcheap have their respective Mayors & Aldermen & Common Council. The Secy, Attorney General & Receiver General & all the Officers held by Patent.—N. Y. Col. Doc., V: 555-57; see also 600-2.

The laws and ordinances of the incorporation of the city, made Sept. and published Dec. 1, 1719, and renewed March 1, 1720 (together with a law for marking of butters), are again renewed and published, after the Ringing of three Bells, and are to continue in force for three months more; also, a Law for Requiring the inhabitants of the City to repair in every twenty-four Fresh Water & Kingbridge."—M. C. C., III: 232.

Gov. William Burnet arrives at Sandy Hook in his Majesties Ship Sea Horse." He "came to Town about 1 o'clock the same Night in the Man of Wars pinnace and the next Day the Garrison and Militia being under Arms his Commission was published with the usual Ceremonies."—From N. Y. letter in Am. Merc. (Phil.), Sept. 23, 1720; M. C. G., III: 234. Burnet informed the lords of trade, Sept. 24, that he published his commission "on the 17th day after my landing."—N. Y. Col. Doc., V: 573. On the 17th, also, names of aldermen were admitted to the seal and keys of the magazines were delivered to him; and he ordered a proclamation to be issued continuing all officers in their places.—Cal. Coun. Min., 278.

The Presbyterian congregation petitions the governor in council to be incorporated "by the name of the Minister Elders and Deacons of the Presbyterian Church in the City of New York." The petition states "That they have adventured to Purchase a Piece of Ground for a Church and Cemetry & have Erected theer [sic] a Convenient Meeting house to Woship in after the manner of the Presbyterian Church of North Brittain."—*Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4th ed.), III: 278. This church was built in what is now 5th Ave., on the north side of Wall Street, west of Nassau St.—Ibid. (footnote). Objection is made, however, by Gilbert Livingston and Thomas Smith, in a memorial to the president of the governor's council, that the grant of the charter to the persons who petitioned. for it "will Confirm the Meetinghouse now building to the actual Sept. 20 possession of the Reverend Mr James Anderson as Sole minister therein, and wholly bring it under the Command of these that adhere to him" several have left the congregation on his not allowing him unsuit to his office, but do not wish to be excluded from the grant of the charter, as they have exerted themselves to advance the work; they are also bound in the sum of £50 toward the purchase of the land, and the congregation is indebted to them to the amount of £60. They ask that the rest of the charter, and that the meeting-house may be confirmed to them and to the minister procured by them, on equal terms with those who first asked for the charter; or else, they ask to be discharged from all the debts and encumbrances, and they will then give up all title to the premises, "only Respecting two pews," etc. The council asks the governor to refer the question to the lords of trade, to obtain, through them, "the opinion of his Majesties Learned Council on the subject matter of the said Petition."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (1891), III: 275-84. According the unsuccessful outcome of all efforts for charters for churches, except the Church of England and four Dutch churches, see March 18, 1766.

At this time the Rev. Mr. Anderson was charged with exercising a spirit of ecclesiastical domination, and improper interference in the temporary concerns of the church. "On these accounts, the uneasiness of the dissatisfied party became at length so great that, in the year 1762, they drew off from the body of the congregation, formed themselves into a distinct society; and worshipped, it is believed, in a small building in William-street, between Liberty and Wall-streets, for a number of months."—Miller, Memoirs of the Rev. John Rodgers (1815), 156.

20 By act of the common council to Gov. Burnet. A warrant to the treasurer was issued, on Sept. 26, to pay Obadiah Hunt, the innkeeper, £216:6:0 for "a Dinner, Wine, Beer, Cyder & Other Expenses at his house by this Corporation on an Entertain-ment to his Excellency the Governor on the 20th Instant Sunshine after the Ball in his His Government &

The common council plans to present to Gov. Burnet "the Freedom of this City with the Seal thereof in a Box of Gold." The address, adopted by the common council to accompany the gift, expresses confidence that Burnet will exert himself in a "Conspicuous Manner to make us a happy people And that this City will flourish in its wealths, Buildings & Number of Inhabitants."—M. C. G., III: 233-34.

22 Charles le Roux made the gold box at a charge of £15.3—Ibid., III: 239. William Sharparis, the town clerk, was paid £11:15:3 for expressing the freedom, and for the parchment and silk lace.—Ibid., III: 240.

"Payment of £1:14 is made for affixing the king's arms in the court room of the city hall.—M. C. G., III: 234. See July 12.

The dock-master is ordered by the common council to have the cargoes of the ship, "not their owners' expense."—M. C. G., III: 235.

24 The governor nominates Robert Walter to be mayor for the ensuing year.—M. C. G., III: 237. Walter was continued in office for five terms—until 1725.—M. C. G., III: 267, 298, 320-30. For a brief reference to his career, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 404.

26 The common council ordered him to make.—M. C. G., III: 240-41. He was superseded March 24, 1727 (p. v.).

The petition of John Kelly is read in the common council "praying that this Corporation will Grant him Liberty to Erect New Slaughter houses for the present slaughter houses becoming A Necessity &c." and a committee is appointed to examine and report upon the subject.—M. C. G., III: 241. See Nov. 9, 1698. The committee reported on Feb. 9, 1721, that the allegations were true, and they were "humbly of opinion, that the present slaughter houses fronting the East River at the East End of Queen Street in the East Ward of this City now and late belonging to the Widdow Cortlandt & Johannes Beckman are Become a Public Necessity and Ought in a short time to be Removed in Order more Convenient and Ornamental Build-ings may be Erected &c."—M. C. G., III: 242. They are Retarded by Occasion of the said slaughter houses. They also approved the petitioner's selection of a new location "for the Erecting Publick slaughter houses and Penn upon the East River of this City A little to the Westward of the now dwelling house of Mr John Deane in the said East Ward;" and were of the opinion that he should have a grant for erecting three or more slaughter-houses there at his own expense, "at which all Persons whatsoever shall and may suffer and be allowed." This order was remitted to the said John Kelly or his Assigns one shilling or the Tongue of each Neat Cattle so slaughtered," etc.; and also "that no Other slaughter houses from thence forward shall be built & Erected on the East River Aforsaid as Publick slaughter houses during the said Term of one & twenty years." (proposed), except in case of necessity.—Ibid., III: 249-51. The grant was made accordingly on Feb. 14, 1721 (p. v.—City Grants, Liber B: 76 (in real estate bureau, comp- troller's office). For a later lease to Nicholas Bayard, see Sept. 12, 1750. See also Landmark Map Rel. Key, III: 962, regarding Beckman's slaughter-house.

The common council resolves that Wall Street, from the city hall to Broadway, be 41 ft. wide "from the fence of the Meetinghouse [Presbyterian] to the Corner of New Street," according to a "Draft thereof, this day produced to this Court by Mr Samuel Bayard."—M. C. G., III: 241.

Tennis Tielbrouck, carpenter, is paid £66:10:0 for work and materials used "in finishing the Stare Case the Arches in the Court Room & Making several Rooms and Partitions in the Garretts," etc. in the city hall.—M. C. G., III: 239.

The assembly is addressed by Gov. Burnet, who specially urges the strengthening of the city and the French, who are advancing farther into the country daily, building trading houses, and endeavouring to gain the allegiance of the Five Nations of Indians away from the English.—Assemb. Journ., 1: 439.

The court of mayor and aldermen makes provision that the churchwardens shall receive back with interest whatsoever means they advance for the support of the poor.—M. C. G. (MS.), Oct. 18, 1720.

The anniversary of the king's coronation is celebrated with bonfires, illuminations, and drinking of healths.—From letter to Amb. More (Phila.), Oct. 27, 1720.

The common council resolves that "the Inhabitants of the south Ward have Liberty to Remove the Old Market house near the Custom house to A more Convenient place near the water side at their own proper Cost and Charge, Provided they do the same within ten days which if Neglected to be done that the said Market house will be pull'd down According to an Order of the Superann Court; it being presented as A public Necessity."—M. C. G., III: 244-45. The market-house was accordingly removed to Coenties Slip, at Pearl St. (see modern map), as shown on Pl. 27, Vol. I. It was known as the "Fish Market."—See June 30, 1790; March 15, 1797; Landmark Map Rel. Key, III: 978.

It is also ordered "that the Neighbourhood of the Wall Street Market house have Liberty to Remove the said Market house higher up into the said Street, or Repair it where it now Stands at their Own proper Cost and Charge," provided they do so on or before Dec. 14, 1727.—Ibid., III: 242.

The market-house was evidently not moved, and, on Dec. 29, 1727, Philip Cortlandt was paid by the city "for Materials and Workmanship for Repairing the Market House and Street at the End of Wall Street," etc.—Ibid., III: 427. This was after the Wall Street market had been restricted to the exclusive sale of grain.—See Jan. 24, 1727.

A city marshal is paid £5:18: for a quarter's salary, to "reimburse him for horse-hire, including the expenses of a constable for Carrying A Hse & Cry to Kings Bridge."—M. C. G., III: 245.

After an inspection and survey which disclosed certain encroach- ments "upon the Common of this City on the East side of the sawkill Bridge," (M. C. G., III: 229-30, 240-41), the common council orders "that no Brickmaker or Others within this City & Corporation Cutt any firewood or timber upon the Commons of this City along the East River from Turtle Bay [see Landmark Map Rel. Key, p. 570] to Madam Coddingtons [see M. C. G., III: 273] for the Burning of Bricks upon this Island upon pain of being prosecuted at Law as Trespassers."—M. C. G., III: 245.

The rule is also applied to "Charcoal Burners."—Ibid., III: 247.

The Sawkill Bridge was on the Post Road, east of the present Pearl Ave., some 300 of 70th St.—See Landmark Map Rel. Key, III: 926. Mrs. Coddington's lease was renewed Dec. 29, 1726.—M. C. G., III: 401.

Catharine Pont, the innkeeper, is allowed £6 by the assembly "for the use of her house for the sitting of Committees."—Assemb.
CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664-1763

1720 Journ., I: 449. It was a regular custom, apparently, even at times when repairs were not in progress at the city hall, for committees to 1721 meet at some tavern, and this one became a favourite at this time.

On Nov. 24, 1722, the city paid Catharine Post £3,673 for expenses of her examination, "in conversations taken about A Riot," and for the meeting of an assembly committee "About passing A Law for the Ferry."—M.C. G., III: 501. See also July 6, 1722.

The general assembly passes "An Act to Enable Garret Van Horne and Cornelius Van Horne Son of Said Garret Van Horne to Sell and Dispose of a Certain House and Ground . . ." This act recites that the Van Hornes have been appointed agents, by children of the late Gabriel Thomson, innkeeper, to sell Thomson's real estate to pay his debts. The property referred to is described as "frotroouth South, to West Street, Easterly to Thien Horrens Street, Westerly to Land belonging to Mr. Samuel Bayard and Northerly to Land Belonging to Col. Abraham De Peyster."—Col. Laws N. Y., III: 15. See Oct. 13, 1701.

The legislature passes "An Act to Lay a Duty of two Pounds on every hundred pounds Value Prime Cost of all European Goods Imported into this Colony."—Col. Laws N. Y., III: 32. Writing to the lords of trade on Nov. 26, Burnet said: "The Duty their laid of 2 per cent on European goods was the main support of Government for 18 years which appears by the following Acts which are not to be found in the New Book of New York Laws because they are now enacted but will be found in Rolls lying in the Office." Here he refers to the law, first passed in 1691 (see ibid., I: 248), "for establishing a Revenue for the defraying the public charges of the Province where this duty of 2 Per Cent on all merchandise imported (except Rum & Wines before taxed in the same Act) is laid for two years." This law was continued by acts of 1692, 1695, 1699, and 1702; it expired in 1790. Burnet adds: "I know of no Reason why this Act has not been continued since but that my Lord Clarendon [Cornbury] made so ill a use of the publick money by misapplying it & squandering it away that the Assembly would not repass the Act and consider the revenue would not give any Revenue for four years after Brigadier Hunter arrived & then but a scanto One whereas now his prudent and just administration has brought the Assembly which he left into a better temper, and they are come into this to support the Government in all its parts for five years to come and because this law relates to the trade of great Britain it has a clause in it declaring that it of no force till confirmed by His Majesty, so that I hope no objection will lie against it, it being an easy trilling duty on the importer and of the greatest Service to the Province."—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 585. The act was repealed by the king on April 30, 1744.—Col. Laws N. Y., III: 32.

By an act of the legislature, all persons are forbidden to sell to a French subject the following articles, designated as Indian goods: "any of the Cloaths known by the Name of Strow waters, Duf- fales or Trucking Cloth, Indian blankets, Indian Coster, halibittics, Gunners' sets, Stokins, Shirts, Flints Stedle, all blades, Swords, pistols, Powder, Lead or any other Goods . . . known by the Name of Indian Goods." Such a provision was necessary because the Canadian French, by means of goods purchased from this province and then sold to the Indians, have almost "wholly En- groos'd" the Indian trade, and have likewise largely "withdrawne the Affections of the five Nations of Indians from the Inhabitants of this Province and rendred them Waverings in their faith and Allegiance to his Majesty."—Col. Laws N. Y., II: 8-9.

Gov. Burnet asks the lords of trade to dismiss Peter Schuyler, president of the council, and Adolphus Philips, another councilman, who advised Schuyler in making grants of land with the great seal affixed, contrary to the king's instructions. He recommends that Cadwallader Colden and James Alexander be appointed in their places.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 578-79. This is approved.—Ibid., V: 647. See March 9, 1712.

Dec. 1721

The common council for a lease of land "between the Kings highway and his Lott lying near the saw hill Bridge [see Nov. 16, 1702] on A Reasonable Annual Rent in Order to preserve the Timber growing therin from being Cut down and destroyed & for preserving the Stream running to his Mill therefrom." On the 13th, the council appointed a committee to "lay out an Highway from the Kings Highway to the Mill of the said Thomas Hook."—M.C. G., III: 247-48.

Gov. Burnet, this year, ascended the altitude of the fort, and found it to be 30' 42" N.—See description of Pl. 46A; ib. 537.

This board do agree with Mrl Rob't Hanson to lett out to him the remaining part of the Kings farm which is appropriated for the term of Ten Years at the Rent of twenty Six pounds S' Ann payable Quarterly on Condition that the Said Hanson do Annually during the Said term give Sufficient Security for the Rent and performance of the Covenants upon the Conditions made to the by the Committee this Board."—Trns. Min. (MS.).

The lease of "the Public slaughter houses" to John Kelly (see Oct. 11, 1720) is approved.—M.C. G., III: 252.

"This Day was a famous Horse Race, run for the Sum of Sixty Pounds, between the Inhabitants of Queens County on the Island of Nassau, and Samuel Bayard of the City of New-York, Merchant, where the latter gained but little."—Am. Merc. (Phila.), Feb. 21—March 2, 1721. The race-course is not mentioned.

Upon application of Dr. John Nicolls, exclusive use of a well, to be dug in Gold St. in front of Dr. Nicolls' lot of ground, is granted by the court of mayor and aldermen to those who shall contribute toward its construction.—M.C. G. (MS.), Feb. 28, 1721. Owners of private wells were thus protected by the court on many occasions.

Caleb Heaston, a member of the council, having died on Feb. 27, Gov. Burnet asks the lords of trade to appoint Lewis Morris, Jr. As Dean of the place, ib. 558.

The common council appoints a committee to employ workmen to repair "the South End of the Wall Street about the Market house," it having been found by the grand jury to be a common nuisance.—M.C. G., III: 252, 262.

The city marshal is reimbursed for "an Iron Back for the Chimney of the Common Council Room," etc.—M.C. G., III: 252.

The common council appoints a committee to "Cause the Wall at the End of the Broad Street fronting the Dock on the East and West side of the Market house to be built up and Covered with Bricks like that of Mr. Jouneve and Cornelius Depeyer."—M.C. G., III: 254.

Elias Chadrevine, an innkeeper, is paid by the common council £1,121.—See the expenses incurred at his house "by the Justices and Others in Enquiring into the Report & Taking Examinations of A supposed designed Insurrection of the Negroes within this City."—M.C. G., III: 254.

May 1722

"The house of John Barborie Situate in the Broadway in the South Ward of the City of New York Near his Majesties Garrison Called Fort George" is recorded by the court of general sessions as a place for "the English Presbyterian Congregation to Assemble and meet together for the Publick Worship & Service of Almighty God."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 300-91. For an earlier place of meeting, see Aug. 7, 1717; Feb. 7, 1722.

The mayor's court authorizes the payment of forty shillings to Sarah Meals, an object of charity, "to Remove herself" out of town.—M.C. G. (MS.), May 28, 1722. See Dec. 7, 1717.

The governor of Canada, according to a communication before the council, lays claim to Nicaragua. On July 1, the French were building a fort there.—Cal. Coun. Min., 280, 281.

The council receives depositions about ships commanded by Capt. Bradbrick and by Capt. Norton, seated at Southold. Gov. Spotswood of Virginia reports that Roberts, the pirate, is on the coast with two ships. Capt. Bradbrick is called before the council, and on being examined is committed for complicity with pirates.—Cal. Coun. Min., 280.

It is resolved by the assembly "that Care be taken to prevent the keeping great Quantities of Gun-Powder within the City of New York;" and to build a "convenient Place, at a proper Distance from the said City, for a Store to lodge and secure such Quantities of Gun-Powder as shall be imported into the same."—Assemb. Journ., I: 452. The same condition was complained of four years before.—See Oct. 12, 1717. On June 6, 1722, it was ordered that a bill be introduced to accomplish the desired purpose.—Ibid., I: 456. See July 24.

That Secretary Clarke, who resided at Jamaica, L. I., possessed at least one of the fashionable carriages of the period is attested by a letter to him from Isaac Atkinson, his private secretary, who says: "I am sorry for your misfortune in breaking the Wheele of your Chase . . . I will observe what you wrote me in Relation to Chariot Wheels, Lead, &c." Again, on March 14, 1724, Bohin

6 Mr. Geo. W. Houghton, editor of The Hub, says: "The early 'pox' signs were almost identical in construction, the chief difference being that the post-chaise was simple, but forever intended for hard usage in traveling; while the 'chariot' was a state or show carriage, suggestive of luxury and elegance, and elaborately carved, gilded and ornamented with blazonry. Both were, in fact, cut-down coaches, or gigantic coupes, suspended very high on thoroughbraces or leaf springs, with lofty coachman's-seat in front, often covered by a hammercloth, and a standard for one or two standing footmen at the rear." - Colonial N. Y., June 12, 1879, 26.

18 The opinion of council is obtained on a letter from the governor of New England relating to a naval rendezvous; Sandy Hook is considered preferable to Nantasket. - Col. Conn. Hist., 280.

19 An indenture deed on parchment conveys from Jacob Leisler, Jr., son of Capt. Leisler, to his sister, Francina Staats, 20 lots of ground, described as "in the street there [in New York] newly laid out and Called Frankfort Street." It also mentions a "Street there newly laid out and Called Duck Street;" the "Street there newly laid out Called King Georges Street;" and "the Street there newly laid out and Called Princes Street." It also refers to a Beckman survey in the following words: "the in East Ward nigh to the said house of William William's of the said City which he lately caused to be laid Out in sundry Lotts by William Bond Surveyor of the said City and caused to be numbered in a Certain Chart or Map thereof." From the original deed, filed with Misc. MSS. in the library of the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

4 The common council orders that a wharf be built "on the West side of the Dock as far into the River as Conveniently may be done between the Dock and Whitehall According to the Draft thereof made by Capt. Bond the surveyor of this City." - M. C. C., III: 257.

5 The will of Jeanupp, written and signed by Messrs. Jean Barbette, Stephen Delancy, Abraham Juineau, Elias Peltreseau and Jean Cryalls, of New York, merchants, a certain obligation, dated October 1, 1716 whereby is due to me... the sum of £141, with interest. And they are to put the money out at interest, and pay the interest yearly forever, for the maintenance of the French Church in New York. I also leave to them a certain obligation dated February 16, 1719, whereby is due to me... £109, 9s. 6d. and they are to distribute the interest among the poor of the French Church." - Abstracts of Wills, II: 238.

8 The common council grants to Josiah Quinby, on his petition, 15 acres of ground, between high and low-water marks, between the old and new bridges on Manhattan Island at Kingsbridge, for 13 years, for the purpose of a fishery, for which he is required to give "yearly on Every fourteenth day of October to this Corporation A good dish of fresh fish." According to his petition, no other person is "able to get upp or Carry the fish of tyning to him or so Near to him as may prejudice the fishery to be Carried by the Petitioner, by means whereof the Petitioner proposes to Supply the Market at New York with fish Very fresh and at Very Easy Rates, and that he will not Stop up the Channel so as to obstruct hinder or Retard the passage of Sloops Boats or Can- nons through the said River." - M. C. C., III: 257-58. On Feb. 13, 1723, the Mayor was ordered to execute the lease to Quinby, the place being referred to as the "fishing place at Kings Bridge." - Ibid., III: 312.

12 The King's Farm, known at this time as Trinity Church Farm (see Nov. 25, 1763), is leased by Trinity Corporation to Robert Harrison for a term of 10 years. The lease recites that the land was lately demised to Francis Ryeser; it excepts six acres located to W. Lake. - Sanford's Chancery Rep., IV: 692. See Aug. 9, 1720.

24 The assembly having appointed a committee on July 11 (Assemb. Jour., II: 493) "to find a piece of ground on which may be built a Magazine to Stow Gunpowder for publick use in Order Encourage- ment may be given to any Person that shall undertake the building of the same," the common council, acting as a "Court," soon passed a resolution "Viewed and Traversed the Commons and Other Ground to the same," and commissioned a Committee of Publick Opinion, that a small Island to the southward of fresh water Contiguous to the Pond is the Most Convenient place for Building of a Magazine or powder house for the securing and well keeping of all Gunpowder within this City of New York." A committee to confer with the committee of the assembly. - M. C. C., III: 258-59. On the following day the common council resolved that "this Corporation would agree to take the house, with the "Encouragement" of the common assembly, that they would petition the assembly for leave to bring in a bill for this purpose." - Ibid., III: 259-60. Such petition was presented the following day (July 26), stating that "the Corporation are willing to contribute one Moity of the charge of building thereof." - Assemb. Jour., II: 468. The proposal was rejected. For further developments, see June 5, 1722.

27 A new act is passed "for settling the Militia of this Province and the making of it useful for the Security and Defence thereof and for Repealing all former Acts relating to the same." For the last Militia Act, see Nov. 27, 1702. The same provisions, which were in the old law are found in this, better defined by paragraphing. There are fuller provisions for recovering and disposing of fines and forfeitures imposed for infractions of the military regulations. Where the offender has no goods, punishment by imprisonment is imposed. When a "Commission Officer" is legally superseded, he shall not thereafter be obliged to do duty as a private soldier, "unless he be cashiered by order of a Court Martial for Covardice or some other Notorious Offence." To be thus free he is required to serve in commission for at least 12 years. - Col. Laws N. Y., II: 83-92. Burnet explained, in a letter to the lords of trade, Oct. 16, that this act was to provide only incidentally for the defence of the Town of New York who used to be the most remost of the whole Province and now by encreasing the fine for non appearance at the Masters have immediately upon this Act appeared in Arms to bear double the number as formerly." - N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 624.

The act was repealed by another of the same title, July 24, 1724 (g-9).

Cradwaller Colden and James Alexander are sworn in as members of the provincial council; the latter being appointed attorney-general in place of David Jameson. - N. Y. letter book.

A lottery case demands the attention of the mayor's court. John Jourdain sought to dispose of certain merchandise "by way of subscription," selling tickets to subscribers at six shillings each and advertising it as a lottery. Other fishers buying from eight shillings to fifteen pounds. Frederick Williams and John Blake both brought suit; the latter charged that he bought three tickets, drew a £6 prize, but received only a periwigh worth five shillings. Williams said he took out 24 tickets and won seven prizes, one of £14 and six of eight shillings each, and received goods worth only £6. The defence offered was that Jourdain was "within the age of one and twenty." The court awarded equitable damages to both subscribers. - M. C. M. (1907), V: 1431 but see Feb. 27, 1726.

3 A counterfeiter "for seven shillings Paper Bill" is brought into the court of mayor and aldermen by the mayor. It is "burnt to Ashes in Open Court." - M. C. M. (MS.), Aug. 15, 1721.

On the petition of Albertius Bosch (or Bush), a blacksmith, the common council orders that the street or passage-way (now Liberty Place) which leads from the town (now Bowery St.) to the Quaker meeting-house shall be widened at one end and narrowed at the other, so as to be of a uniform width of 20 feet, the abutting owners, Edward Burling, George Talbot, and Bush, agreeing to the plan, and making certain concessions of land.—M. C. G., III: 261. The present Liberty Place was formerly Little Green St., and later Liberty Alley.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 926, and 1004.

The common council, having just ordered that Tennis Trench boyed $5,175 for furnishings and Materials for Repairing and Refitting Mackett house at the Lower Foot of the Great Dock (see April 18), now appoints a committee to examine his accounts and determine "what part thereof ought to be paid by Mrs Child" for these repairs; also what part ought to be paid by Alderman Cortlandt and Cornelius Depuyter "for Repairs done on the East and West Sides of the Mackett house fronting the Great Dock."—M. C. G., III: 262-63.

Catherine (or Catalina) Post, a tavern-keeper, is allowed $15, told, for her expenses in serving at her house a committee of the common council when "setting the Acrets of Tinsel Trench Act for Repairing the City Hall Scars."—M. C. G., III: 263.

Two Quarter Casks and Twenty-one half Quarter Casks of French Brandy" are adjudged forfeited and condemned by the court of mayor and aldermen because they had been imported "from foreign parts beyond the Seas and not Directly from England into this Province."—M. C. G. (MS.), Aug. 15, 1721. See Sept. 19, 1677. The same prosecutor, Francis Harrison, "Surveyor of his now Majesty's Customs of the Port of New York," reported to the court, April 3, 1722, more smuggled merchandise of various sorts "from toy looking glasses in tin boxes" to "mens felt hats" and rams. On the meeting of April 17, they were ordered to be condemned.—Ibid, April 3 and 17, 1722.

In a representation to the king regarding the state of the 8 provinces, it is explained that the government of New York "is in the Crown;" that the king "appoints the Governor, & Council, which consists of twelve persons" and that "the Assembly is chosen by the people, & is composed of nineteen members."—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 600.

A petition, signed by Nicholas Eyles and others, is presented to the common council, asking that Eyles, a Baptist minister (see Feb. 7, 1719), be exempt from serving as a constable of the North Ward, to which office he has been this day elected.—From the original petition in metal file labeled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800." city clerk's record-room. On Oct. 21, he was excused and a new election ordered.—M. C. G., III: 270. See also Jan. 19, 1722.

The council issues a warrant to pay Catharine Post for the use of her house by assembly committees.—Col. Crown. Min., 282.

The common council appoints a committee "to lay out the 3 Street or Highway leading from the house of John Smith the Currier in Queen Street to Fresh water."—M. C. G., III: 266. This has reference to the continuation of Queen St. northwardly, later called Magazine St., and now part of Pearl St.—See Pl. 27, Vol. I. This street ran from Broad to Stone, or sand, and passing around the city hall.—M. C. G., III: 265-66, 272.

For the first time, the birthday of the Prince of Wales is celebrated by the city, this being in the usual manner with bonfire and wine.—M. C. G., III: 273.

In this year, Bonner's map of Boston was published.—Green, Ten Fac-simile Reproductions (1901), 35.

Rev. Mr. Vesey, writing to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, states, among other things, that his parish is 14 miles in length (the length of Manhattan Island), and that in there are supposed to be 1,600 families, English, Dutch, and Jews; also 1,562 Indian and negro slaves. He has no house or glebe, but the rental of the farm yields £26 annually, which is made a special payment to him, as the parish can provide a "convenient dwelling house." He also gives a brief account of the "parish school under Mr. Huddleston."—Dis, Hist. of Trin. Church, I: 199.

Letters from New York tell of an "unhappy Accident" which "fell out on the Lord's Day, the 14th of January last, the River being so much crowded, that some of the barges have been dragged upon the Ice, and the Ice withdrawing from both sides, they could not get to either shore, and had not the People been extraordinarily diligent with their Boats to save them, many or most of them, most of necessity have been lost, and perished one said to be drowned." Another very extraordinary peril has sustained, we know not yet. However it may be a fair warning to them and all others not so providently to abuse the Lord's Day, in turning it into a Day of Sport and Diversion as these did."—Boston News-Letter, Feb., 5-12, 1722.

"It is excessive cold, and the River full of Ice from the Narrows to New-York. Yesterday a great many People went upon the Ice from New-York to the Ferry on Long Island."—From New York news in Jan., 1722. Nicholas Eyles, a brewer and Baptist teacher (see Sept. 29, 1721), petitions Gov. Barnet for a permit "to Execute the ministerial function of a minister within this City to a baptist congregation," and he asks the protection of the king's "gracious indulgence extended towards the Baptists dissenting from the established church," etc. His petition shows that his hired house was registered as an Unbaptist meeting-house on the first Tuesday in February, 1715 (i. e., 1716)—see Feb. 7, 1716; that he hired a house of Rip Van Dam on Jan. 1, 1720 (i. e., 1721) to be a public meeting-house of the Baptists, and that he was their preacher. The permit was granted on Jan. 23, 1722.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4th ed.), III: 299-91.

Mayor Walter informs the common council that on Jan. 18 a petition was presented to Gov. Barnet and council by "Garrett Vanhornes, Thomas Clarks, John Reado, Thomas Bayeux, Henry Cuylers, Rip Van Dam Juste and Stephen Richard," in behalf of themselves and others, "praying his Majesties Letters Patents for all the Land that may be Gained out of the East River from the Corner of MF Rip Van Damms house at the lower End of Maiden lane to the Corner of Thomas Clarks to Extend into the Said River two hundred foot with the Liberty to have and to Use the the lands & Stairs acre And to Receive the Proffits and Wharffe thereof." This petition, the mayor says, was referred to a committee of the council by the governor's order. The common council considers "the great prejudice the Granting thereof may be to the Publick in General and this Corporation in particular," and they order that a petition to the governour be prepared asking for a grant "of all the Land that may be Gained out of the River, Round this Island Manhattan."—M. C. G., III: 271-72.

On Feb. 2, 1722, the mayor informed the common council that he had presented to the Governor the following petition in confirmacion to the proposed patent, and that the governor had read it in council and referred to a committee to consider and report upon: It first recites the grant to the city, by the Dongan Charter of 1668, of "the whole island Manhattans and all the Ground round the Same to Low water mark;" that this ground, so far as built upon, has been "So Ordered & Disposed of that the Inhabitants frothing to high water had the Offer of the Ground before them to low water Mark upon Easy and Moderate terms to the great Advance- ment of their Interests;" that some of these grantees "have taken Confirmations from the Crown" for their grants; that others, "particularly those between Burghers, as Captains. Theobalds finding the Streets reserved by the Corporation towards the Wharf to be too Narrow for Common & publike use and for the passing and repassing of Carts and Carriages," obtained a grant for extending their wharves 25 feet and 130 feet farther into the East River, with the privilege of erecting cranes and charging craneage and wharffe; and that now the grantees of the best parts of the city, "between the Corner of the Slip by the End of Wall Street and the Slip at the End of Maiden Lane," are making petition for the privilege of "taking in and filling up of two hundred foot out of the East River before their wharves & promising to make a Wharf of forty foot broad before that ground for a Street. Providing they may have a grant of the fee Simple thereof and to build and Erect thereon Cranes & Other Conveniences for loading & unloading of goods & Merchandizes Provided they be thereby Entitled to receive a Dockage and Wharffe." The petition expresses alarm at this last proposed development, alleging that, if granted, it would set up a right independent of the city, which has by charter "the whole and sole power of regulating and laying out of Streets alleys lanes Wharfs and Docks,") that it would "Monopo- lite to a few the whole Conveniency of loading and unloading," and the rest of the merchants and inhabitants of the city would depend upon the caprice of those who now seek the exclusive grant; that the water front would lack uniformity, and the grantees would claim a privilege of being exempted from the city's jurisdiction and, as "Ministers of this kind are much more readily embraced than remedied afterwards," the petitioners ask that the proposed grant be rejected. The common council appoints a committee to confer with the committee of the governor's council, in opposition to the 22 The same committee of the council are on record (evidently the committee here referred to), showing, under date of Feb. 25, 1721, that they decided upon "the opening of a new street...to be called Burnet street, and the continuation of King street," also a wharf on Burnet St., to be called Burnet's Key; and also fixed the width of these streets and the riparian privileges granted to the corners of the lots, and the quit-rents payable therefor.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 467.

A patent was given to Rip van Dam and others on March 7, 1723, of "all that space of ground of the East River of N.Y. now lying under water from the present wharves or low-water mark between the corner of the slip that leads from Wall Street called Clark's corner and the S. E. most corner of the lot of Rip Van Dam, Jr., which joins to the slip that leads from Maiden Lane,"—which is more particularly described in the patent,—there being 16 feet along the wharves reserved for a common highway or street (with 20 feet additional, making 45 feet), to be called Burnet Street.—From Book of Patents, IX: 13, in secretary of state's office. See also Cal. Land Papers, 134 (Dec. 23, 1719, Jan. 13, 1720); 156 (Jan. 18, 22 and 23, 1723); 157 (Jan. 26, Feb. 1, 5 and 13, 1722); 164 (Dec. 16 and 20, 1722); 166 (Dec. 6, 1722); 167 (Feb. 12 and 13, 1723).—Cal. Payment of £156 is made for 18 leather chairs for the common council room.—M. C. C., III: 273. See also April 6, 1711; Dec. 22, 1722. Fragmentary records of this kind taken together might enable us to-day to picture fairly accurately the interior of the city's old common council chamber in the city hall on Wall St. (Compare description of room where the legislature met, as shown in this room in the present city hall about 100 years later, and at the present time. See also the description of the David Grim drawing of the old city hall, PI. 32-b, Vol. I.)

7 Feb. A "New House lately erected and Built on the East side of Smiths Street in the East Ward" is recorded as "A Publick Meeting house for the Congregation of Dissenting Protestants Called English Presbyterians."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 799. It appears from this record, as well as from that of May 3, 1721 (p.49), that the meeting-house in course of construction on Wall St. in the North Ward (see 1719) was not yet ready for worship.

A warrant is issued to pay "Daniell Bouteenc [f] £600:104 for expenses at his house by the common council in "treating" a committee of the governor's council in connection with a petition by the city. M.C.C., III: 281. D. Bouteenc (Boutonc, ou Bouteouc) was a tavern-keeper in the North Ward, of which he was elected a collector in 1724.—Ibid., III: 534. In 1759, he advertised property for sale in Gold St., Montgomery Ward.—N. Y. Merc. Corp., Dec. 4, 1759.

April. It is ordered by Trinity vestry "that the Church wardens...be a Committee to agree with workmen...to provide Necessaries for the Carrying on the New Building of the Church." The same committee is further ordered to "lay out a Sufficient way and passage thro' the Churches farm from M'lakes."—Trin. Min. (M.C.).

24 A grant is made to Gerardus Beeckman of land in the East Ward, at the lower end of the Smith's Fly (Queen St.), between high- and low-water.—Liber City Grants, B: 83-91. M. C. C., III: 283-86. Towards Queen St., the grant is only 35 feet wide, although the grantee agrees to make and keep a public slip 42 feet wide on the west side of the street, facing the river of 50 feet wide. The latter was the modern Water Street. The slip was at the river where subsequently Fair (Fulton) Street was cut through. It is well shown on PL 27, Vol. I. The slip was partly filled in 1722 (M. C. C., VII: 341-43, 456), and subsequently was entirely filled and paved. It was part of the modern Fulton Street. Beeckman petitioned for this grant on Feb. 15, 1723 (p.65); the slip was not built until now (III: 688 being in error).—Cal. Hist. MSS., May 22.

William Dugdale and John Searle are given leave "to Continue their Reap Walk where it now is [see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 562] during the Pleasure of this Corporation; and also "Liberty to Remove their work house and Cover A part of the said Rope Walk."—M.C.C., III: 288. See Jan. 3, 1719, and Jan. 27, 1722.

Preparations are being made to celebrate the king's birthday in "the most splendid manner of which we are capable," with illuminations, fire-works, a ball, and an entertainment at the fort, planned by the governor.—N.Y. news in Am. Merc. (Phila.), May 24-31, 1722.

5 On reading of an Order of the General Assembly...June with the proposals made by Mr. William Dugdale for Building of A Powder house within this City," the common council appoints a committee to draw up a petition to the assembly "praying leave that this Corporation may be in A Bill to Enable them to build a sufficient Magazine, and that the Assembly may, upon such Reasonable Terms and proposals as may induce the Legislative of this Colony to pass the same into a Law."—M.C.C., III: 288-89. Such a bill was introduced on June 12, and passed on its third reading, June 18 (Assembly Jour., I: 472, 474); but on June 22 it was rejected by the council.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 480. The magazine was not built until 1728.—See July 6, 1728. See also July 15.

Catalina (or Catherine) Post, a tavern-keeper, presents to the assembly her account "for white washing and cleaning the Assembly Room, and Lobby, and for mending the Glass Windows thereof," amounting to £21:3:11 for "Diet and Expenses of Mrs. Monteur, and other Indians; upon their Examination by Order of his Excellency," £275, making a total of £213:19. The account is approved.—Assembly Jour., I: 482. Again, on July 6, 1723, she was allowed £5 for whitewashing and cleaning the "Assembly Chamber and Lobby."—Ibid., I: 499. See also April 10, 1718; Nov. 18, 1720; Aug. 23, 1721; Jan. 10, 1722, III: 184.

Catharina Post is allowed £137:6: for the city for "Expenses at her house in Treating the Assembly on the Passing the Bill for a Powder house" (see Jour.), M.C.C., III: 296. Again, on Nov. 24 of this year, she was allowed £316:75: for "Expenses of this Corporation at her house on Examinations taken about A Riot, and On A Committee of General Assembly About passing a Law for the Ferry."—Ibid., III: 301.

Gov. Sporckland of Virginia arrives on his "Majesty's Ship Enterprise." On the 12th, "His Excellency Sir William Keith, Bart. Governor of Pennsylvania, and his Lady arrived."—N.Y. news in Am. Merc. (Phila.), Aug. 9-16, 1722. This repeals their visit of five years before.—See Oct. 1, 1717. Their conference with Gov. Burnet on the present occasion is related to Indian affairs, a subject which they and the governor took up with the chiefs of the Five Nations at Albany on Aug. 27, and which continued to Sept. 8.—Cal. Coun. Min., 287.

After leaving £20 to the poor of the French Church, "being Refugees, residing in the city of New York," and making various other bequests, he died, March 26, 1723, leaving £400 in possession to the sum of £50 for and towards the printing of 152 hymns, composed by myself; which said sum of money I desire may be deposited in the hands of Rev. Mr. Lewis Row, minister of the French Church in New York, for the better effecting, and printing said hymns in the French Language."—Abstracts of Will, II: 255. From Aug. 27 to date, Albany has been the scene of an inter-colonial congress. It was one of the series of such meetings which had the result of developing the idea of an intercolonial union.—Winor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 486, and 611, citing N.Y. Col. Docs., V: 687. On this occasion, New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia joined to renew the league with the Five Nations.—Cal. Coun. Min., 287. See also 1684 and 1694.

Gov. Burnet receives additional instructions from England relating to trade, on which he orders a proclamation to be issued.—Cal. Coun. Min., 287.

On this day it is officially recorded that, "in a Certain Street Oct. Called the Broadway," Thomas Braine stole William Butler's milk cow.—M.C. M. (M.C.), Oct. 2, 1722.

2 A city ordinance is passed requiring "That all Negroes and Indian Slaves that shall Dye within this Corporation on the South side of the Fresh Water be buried by day light at or before Sunset."—M.C.C., III: 296.

City limit between high- and low-water mark, "from the West side of the slip near the House of Andries Hardeckebo." is to be fenced. To determine the high-water limit, a committee of the common council is appointed to take the affidavits of such "Antient & honest inhabitants as can best Inform them."—M. C. C., III: 298. Hardenbrooke's land was probably between Peek Slip and James Slip, but there is no water grant of record here to him.

"The proprietors of lots between high and low water," between the land late of Sacketts & Beekmans at the lower end of Queen Street," are required to complete their "Wharfs or Streets," mentioned in their respective grants, on or before May 1, 1723.—M. C. C., III: 326. April 24.

Edward Witting is paid for the expenses (horses-borne) for a committee to lay out the land in the Out Ward around the magazine.—M. C. C., III: 327.

The Rev. William Vesey, writing to Mr. Humphreys, secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, in behalf of the vestry of Trinity Church, asks that, on account of the death of Elias Neau, "the late Catechist of this City" (see Aug. 4, 1704), the society appoint a "Prebystry of the Church of England to officiate in his stead," and give him directions to assist "our Minister" (Mr. Vesey himself), "who, in his declining age, is not so able as formerly to perform all the duties of his calling, which daily increase on his hands." (Mr. Vesey continued rector 24 years longer, until his death in 1745.) His stated reasons for this request are: "We have lately been obliged, by voluntary subscriptions, to enlarge our Church, but the subscriptions being insufficient, we have been under the necessity of raising up money at Interest to complete the work which, by the city hall assessment, will cost more than £1000, and have no prospect of being discharged of the debts thereby contracted in some years; and, therefore are not in a condition of allowing a complete maintenance to an Assistant, tho' one is absolutely necessary." He also states that there is "a vast Increase of Children, and Indians, and Negro servants, who cannot, without such assistance, be so well instructed in the principles of Christianity."—Berrian, _Trin. Church_ (1837), 38.

A committee is appointed by the common council to form out the Long Island ferry, on Jan. 10, 1725, and to meet for the purpose at the house of Obadiah Hunt.—M. C. C., III: 355. See also June 14, 1729.

The common council orders that Alderman Jacobus Kip provide "a handsome large table" for the common council chamber, and that the treasurer send to London for fine green broadcloth to cover it.—M. C. C., III: 357. On June 22, 1723, Kip was reimbursed to the amount of £42.16 for this table, "by him bought of Joseph Kingston Jonyer as Appears by his Act."—Ibid., III: 317. On Feb. 18, 1744, the broadcloth was paid for at 20 shillings per yard.—Ibid., III: 338. See Jan. 22.

The population of New York City (and County) is 7,248; of the province, 40,564.—_Doc. Hist. N. T._ (40 ed.), I: 471. It appears by the Chalmers MSS., relating to the city (in N. Y. Pub. Library), that the population of the city this year was 7,630, and that the county was 40,000, the original record being in the public record office, London. For the names of the principal inhabitants, in this year, see _N. Y. Gen. and Biol. Rec., XLIX:_ 569 (Oct., 1819).

About this time, Anthony Rutgers erected his handsome residence on the westerry half of the Kalkhok, the 50-acre tract of land originally granted in 1746 by Gov. Kiest to Jan Damen. The site of the house was at the present 232-236 Church St. "He surrounded his habitation with elegant shrubbery in the geometrical style of rural gardening of those days. Long walks bordered with box-wood, and shaded by chestnuts, were laid out in various directions in the pature, fronting the house. The favorite orchard extended along the southerly side of the mansion, while the pasture lands and cultivated fields extended toward the north."—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 953; _Man. Com. Coun._ (1875): 575.

The Long Island ferry is again leased in two parts (see Dec. 24, 1717) by publick Outcry. James Harding, who had secured both leases five years earlier, receives now the Manhattan privilege only, the ferry on the Brooklyn side being awarded to John Deane.—M. C. C., III: 307-8. Harding declared he would not live in New York, and proposed lots between high and low water, "between the Land late of Sacketts & Beekmans at the lower end of Queen Street," to be required to complete their "Wharfs or Streets," mentioned in their respective grants, on or before May 1, 1723.—M. C. C., III: 326. April 24.
is thus described: "At noon upon Drinking his Majesties, the May Prince and Royal Family's Healths, a Round of the Guns in the Garrison was fired and was answered by the Vessels in the Road, the Soldiers (with the others here in the Cloth Hall) with a handsome Appearance) fired three Volleys, as did our Militia who were under Arms, together with a new Artillery Company, being all in blew Cloaths with Gold laced Hats, the Company consisted of Masters and Mates of Vessels, at night there was a Bonfire and Plenty of Wine. Set the charter of the Corporators on July 23, its two Rockets and other fire Works fired from the Walls of the Garrison, the whole Town was illuminated, and the whole was concluded with a fine Ball and handsome Entertainments by his Excellency our Governor."—Am. Merc. (Phil.), June 3, 1723. See also May 28, 1775.

For many years (M. G. C., III: 12, 13, 35, 276) the streets were employed to level the ground on the west side of the dock where dunghills and rubbish accumulated. Now, the common council orders that all persons shall be prohibited from throwing rubbish, etc. "on the West side of the Dock between the Dock & Whitehall."—Ibid., III: 318.

22 Burnet sends to the lords of trade two "discourses" prepared by Calden, the surveyor-general; one concerns the trade, the other the climate, of the province. The latter is the first thorough review of the health conditions of this part of America.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 634-52.

On Feb. 13, "The Petition of Messrs. Jacobus Roosevelt, Abraham van Wyck, Abraham Lefters and Charles Sligh" is read a second time in the common council, "praying a Grant to them and their Heirs & Assigns for Ever of the Lots of Land belonging to the Corporation fronting Hudson's River to low water Mark to the Green Trees near the English Church."

M. G. C., III: 319.

Set the charter of the Corporators on March 20, 1723, it is resolved that "the Land between high water Mark and low water Mark on Hudson's River from the house of M^ Gaeseck near the Fort to the Green Trees Commonly called the Locust Trees near the English Church be Granted to the Respective Inhabitants and Proprietors of the Lots of Land on the West side of the Broadway at any Annual Rent of the pence if they shall Accept of A Grant of the same on those Terms" and if they Refuse that the same Land be Granted to any Other Person or Persons who Shall purchase the same at the Annual Rent of six pence & one foot payable to this Corporation."

It is ordered that "M^ Ruth, Alderman Corlinsland, Alderman Philipse Alureden Stuyvesant, M^ Teller, M^ Maetserchak & M^ Roosevelt or any five of them whereof the Recorder to be One a Comitee to Cause the Said Lands to be surveyed and laid out; leaving Convenient Streets Wharfs and Slips; and to Ascertain and appoint when, in what Manner and by whom it shall be paid."

The Common council passes a resolution giving to Capt. Peter Solgard, "Commander of his Majesties Ship Greyhound the Station ship of the freedom of the city, handsomely garnished on parchment and with its seal enclosed in a gold box. On one side of the box are to be engraved the arms of the city, and on the other side a representation of the "Greyhound" to its fight with pirates, with the motto "Quaesitos Humani Generis Hostes debellare Superbum 16th June 1723."

The event which this commemorated was the gratitude of the city to Capt. Solgard, who pursued and engaged two pirate sloops commanded by a notorious pirate, one of whose sloops he captured (see July 29). Twenty-six of the pirates so taken had been lately executed in Rhode Island.—M. G. C., III: 321-22. The presentation of the freedom was made on August 20, 1723.—Ibid., III: 322-24. Claes de Roux was the maker and engraver of the gold box containing the seal of the corporation, for which he was paid $319.19.—Ibid., III: 325.

29 A north-east storm of wind and rain "broke up the Wharfs from one end of the City to the other, drove all the Vessels ashore, except one which was protected by some Tides higher than ever known here. Sugar and Goods in Ware-houses and Cellars were damaged; the market-House with several others were blown down, Tyles & Covering of Houses blown off. Vast quantities of Beards, Timber, Staves, Boats, Canoes, and Rubbish lies in heaps. It is necessary to tow away the many pirate sloop captured and burnt by Capt. Solgard.—Boston News-letter, Aug. 21, 1723. See also July 25, and Aug. 19, 1723.

The common council appoints a committee to see what damage was done to the docks and wharves of the city by the great storm of July 29, and to decide upon the best way to make repairs, calling to their assistance "Able Workmen and Skillfull Artists."—Am. Merc. (Phil.), Aug. 13, 1724.

The report of the committee was presented to the town meeting, which immediately ordered a committee to "survey the Town and report what repairs must be done," and a special committee of three, including the surveyor-general, to report "all the storm damage."—Ibid., Aug. 13, 1724.

Sept.

On Aug. 17, the committee reported that they had examined "the Wharfs Including the Offshore Stocks," and found them "almost entirely ruined and washed away," and the repairs will cost about $500. They were ordered to employ workmen and see that the repairs were quickly made.—M. G. C., III: 325, 326. On June 15, 1724, the common council, in an address to Gov. Burnet, referred to the "late destructive Storm" which had fallen on this Corporation by the Ruinous Condition of the Great Dock and of all its Walls Occasion'd by the Storm in July last and now repair'd or rather rebuilt . . . .—Ibid., III: 349.

The provincial council passes an ordinance relating to the recompense of those that shall be near to the latest damage, Col. Coun. Min., 382. This was published by Bradford, with the title: An Ordinance for Regulating the Recording of Deeds and other Writings. By his Excellency William Burnet . . . . In Council, this twenty second day of August . . . Our one thousand seven hundred and twenty Third. 1725.—From copy in N. Y. Pub. Library.

As Benjamin Franklin, a boy of 17, arrives by sloop from Oct. Boston, on his first visit to New York. As stated in his autobiography, addressed to his son in 1721, he was "without the least recommendation to, or knowledge of, any person in the place, and with very little money." He offered his services to "old Mr. William Bradford, to the government could almost him to embark Charge, but I say: "My son at Philadelphia has lately lost his principal hand, Aquila Rose, by death; if you go thither, I believe he may employ you." When Franklin arrived at Andrew Bradford's shop in Philadelphia, he found the father, William Bradford, there before him. Andrew Bradford referred Franklin to another printer, Keimer, who engaged him to be "a Printer to the Free Press of Pennsylvania."—The Complete Works of Ben, Franklin, compiled and ed. by John Bigelow (1887), I: 57-66. A payment of £1255:113:12 is made by the common council to Cornelius de Puyter, the city treasurer, to reimburse him for money advanced for repairing the great dock, which was damaged by the storm of July 29.—M. G. C., III: 330. A year later, £21616 was paid to him on the same account.—Ibid., III: 338. The rebuilding of the dock was completed before July 14, 1724.—Ibid., III: 349.

A census of the province of New York for this year shows the total number of inhabitants for the city and county of New York to be 7428. The total number of white persons is 5886, of whom 1450 are men, 1726 women, and 2700 children. The total number of Negroes and other Slaves is 1762, of whom 408 are men, 476 women, and 478 children. The total number of inhabitants of the province is 40,646.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 702. Burnet sends the report to Lord Carteret on Dec. 16, and explains that the census has been prepared by the sheriffs of the several counties, according to the returns made under the instructions of the Council of the province of New York in the Broad Street near the Exchange, where Mr. John Walton late of Yale-Colledge, Teaching Reading, Writing, Arithmetic, whose [whole] Numbers and Fractions, Vulgar and Decimal, The Mariners Art . . . all or any of them for a Reasonable Price. The will of John Haberdink (Harpening), dated April 13, 1725, is proved. He bequeath to the Dutch Church his interest in the
"Shoemakers’ Field," which he describes as "on the north east side of Maiden Lane or Path, which leads into a certain street called Queen street, which said tract contains by estimation about 16 acres, and by Agreement of all the proprietors some years past was surveyed and laid out into 164 lots, with convenient streets and lanes, as may appear by a certain instrument and chart, bearing date September 14, 1696." The said John Haberdink’s share being 75 lots. He stipulated that the income from this property was to be used only to pay the salaries and maintenance of the minister or ministers of the church. —From Abstracts of Wills, II: 284 in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1893). At first it would hardly pay one minister; by 1861, it paid the salaries of four and left a surplus of $70,000 a year. —N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1895). The map is entitled "A Map of the Conquest of the Five Nations..." it is here reproduced as the Appendix B, vol. III, and described on p. 361, vol. III. A committee is appointed in the common council "to cause the Land belonging to this Corporation lying on the West Side of the West Water house, and the Great Dock to be Surveyed and laid out in Convenient Lots in Order to Erect Buildings thereon, and that the same may be Let to flame on A Ground Rent for such Term of Years as Shall be Agreed on by this Court." —M. C. C., III: 341. On May 13, the committee reported they had "Caused A Draft to be made of ten Lots, of the Part thereof Next the Street frosting the Custom House, and it was ordered that "the said ten Lots of Land be Let to farm by Publick [public] to the Highest bidder," on Tuesday, June 16, "at the House of Mr. Onahiah Hunt [the tavern-keeper] Next to the Custom House," at an annual ground-rent for 41 years, and that the proposed sale be advertised.—Ibid., III: 341. On June 25, the day before the proposed sale, certain residents of the South Ward entered a petition with Gov. Burnet against leasing part of this ground. They were: Jacob Leider, Stephen Richards, Ohad, Hunt, Benj. Wynkoop, Robt. Crooke, Thos. Roberts, Paul Richards, and Isaac de Poyster, who, being inhabitants of that part of the South Ward "near the southeast bastion of the fort," which fronts the place where the dock and one of the market houses were formerly situated, opposed "leasing the ground on the which last stood," —Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 455. This petition, "praying A stop be put to the Letting to farm the ten Lots of Land on the West side of the Dock near the Custom House," was referred to the common council with an order from the governor (probably directing them to consider it). That body approved an answer that had been prepared and ordered that it be engrossed for presentation to the governor.—M. C. C., III: 345-46-47. This answer, entered in the Minutes on July 14, stated that the apparent reason for the petition of the residents of the South Ward lay in the fears which they expressed "Concerning the south East Bastion of his Majesties Fort being rendered Useless," the loss of the outlook they now enjoy, and their interest "in that Ground where the Old Merchants House. Once stood and that Space where the Old Dock is filled up." These fears were answered by the common council in a statement that they "did not foresee that any Buildings which might hereafter be Erected thereon would have Obstructed the Guns or weakened that Bastion, which Ranges over those Lots because Buildings upon Leases are seldom of such or Costly Structure but that they may be Soon removed upon any great Emergency." The common council therefore sought to correct the oversight of not asking leave of the governor to erect buildings here, before advertising the lots for rent; and, while maintaining their right to the soil in this locality, they now asked the governor’s permission "to dispose of these Lots in the same manner as the Governor directed the sale of the Grounds to the north of Whitehall,"—Ibid., III: 348-50. This answer was presented to the governor on July 14.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 456. See Aug. 24, 1724. For the location of Whitehall and the other sites and buildings here referred to, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947.

About the end of April, Benjamin Franklin leaves Philadelphia by boat on a visit to Boston, and, returning, stops at New York (presumably early in May). In his autobiography (written in 1771) he states: "The theo governor of New York, Burnet (son of Bishop Burnet), hearing from the captain that a young man, one of the passenger books, desired to see him, and then would bring me to see him. I waited upon him accordingly ... The gov’r. treated me with great civility, shov’d me his library, which was a very large one, and we had a good deal of conversation about books and authors. This was the second governor who had done me the honor to take notice of me in open court. This method was the usual way of disposing of such counterfeit money.—Min. Geo. One estimate of the repairs needed was made on March 23 (q, v.) another was reported to the assembly on May 19, amounting to £1,427/7/10 (ibid., 1: 501); and, again on May 20, another estimate was ordered made by a committee with the assistance of carpenters and masons (ibid., 1: 502); and, on June 3, they reported an estimate of £3,452/5/5 (ibid.: 502). On June 4, the house resolved that a sum not exceeding £5,000 "be granted to His Majesty, for repairing the ruinous Buildings of the Fort."—Ibid.: 502.

July

An old chest, still belonging (in 1820) to the Dutch Church, is believed to have been in use as early as 1724. The following action, recorded in the Minutes of the consistory July 2, 1724, probably refers to this very chest: "All Church papers which shall be deemed of importance shall be put in a roll in order and be placed in the Church Chest at the house of Do. Da Bois, the key of which shall remain at the house of Do. Da Bois, and nothing the said taken out of the Chest but by direction of the Consistory. And in the Chest there shall be a book, in which whoever takes anything out of the Chest shall record the fact. Likewise, when anything is deposited, that also shall be noted therein."—Eccles., Rec., III: 2221. The "chest" in which money was kept is referred to, in 1665, in Rec. N. Am., V: 253.

23 The common council passes a "Law Appointing Proper Places for Unloading of Hay." It provides that "no Hay be unloaded within this City but at Hudsons River near the House of Thomas Eld and to the Northward thereof, and at Beekmans Slip on the Lower End of Queen Street and to the Eastward thereof and that no Carman within this City do presume to load any Hay into his Cart or Ride the same from any other Place within this City on the South side of the Freshwater under the Penalty of three Shillings for each Offence."—M. C. C., III: 351.

24 A new Militia Act presents again the provisions of the old laws (see May 6, 1691; Nov. 27, 1702; July 27, 1721), but better assembled, and revised by the introduction of several new features. Every three months, or oftener as occasion requires, "Each Regiment and Company of the Horse and unregimented Companies of the Several Counties" are required to bemustered and exercised. Each soldier "belonging to the horse" is to appear provided with "a Good Servicable horse not Less than fourteen hands high Covered with a Good Saddle, Hosstlers, housing Brestplate and Cropper a Case of good Pistols a Good Sword, a pouch for Powder, a pouch for Shot, a pouch for Bullets a Good haid Laced with Silver Lace a Black bag or Ribbon for the hair or perscut a Scarlet Coat Trimed with Silver a pair of Large boots with Suitable Spurs and a Carchene well fixed with a Good belted buckle and bucked [later militia acts read 'bucket']. Provided that so much hereof as relates to the Apprenticeship is to be extended to the City and County of New York only." As before, each troop shall number 50 men, "fit for the horse Service and of ability to Equip themselves for the horse service." The foot soldier is to be provided, as before, with a "July Good well fixed Musquet or fluzze a Good Sword belt and Cartridge box Six Cartridges of powder and Six Setrable Bullets," His uniform is not prescribed in this act. It being the experience of these colonel and other officers of both foot and horse in New York City "that the Severall Corporalls and Serjeants of said Regiment and Troop, who are often Considerable Tradesmen doe Lose much time and are tooe Loog taken from their Shops or other Necessary care by Lervying the fines and forfeitures by this Act Imposed," it is now enacted "that there shall be one Maritall in the City and County of New York appointed by warrant from the Commander in Chief or Captain General..." who shall have full power to make such levies. He shall retain one-third of each "Disters" as his fee, not exceeding to shillings each.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 187-97.

This act was revived and continued by subsequent recourses until a new Militia Act was passed Oct. 5, 1725 (q.v.).

The provincial legislature passes an act to raise £6,650 by taxation, and to issue bills of credit to that value, to be expended for various purposes. One of these is to pay for the repair of the buildings in the fort, which, the act states, are "very much out of Repair and will Some of them fall down and become ruin if not timely prevented."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 173, 1732. See, further, Sept. 15, 1725.

Catharine Post is allowed £6 "for the Use of her House, for the Assembly in Committees."—Assemb. Jour, 1: 513. See July 13, 1722; March 23, 1723; Nov. 10, 1725; May 9, 1726.

26 William Douglas, of Boston, writes to Cadwallader Colden: "It is with pleasure I understand that you inclose to oblige the World with a correct Map of N. America, I am sorry that it is not in my power to contribute towards it by sending you a good Map of the Provinces of N. Eng., there is not one extant but what are very imperfect and grossly erroneous." He sends a copy of a map he commissioned Cadwallader to make his map "far more exact than any hitherto published."—From the original MS., with Colden Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

27 William Sharps, the town clerk, is reimbursed for his expenses "for Printing Advertisements for letting to Farmers to rent to farmers and rope manufacturers. His receipt was extended west from Broadway in the middle of the block between Dey and Cortlandt Sts.—From note by Pelletreau in Abstracts of Will, II: 358, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections.

28 William Colden presents to Burnet "A Memorial concerning the Fur Trade" and "other officers of both foot and horse." His receipt was increased with the lands to the lords justices on June 25, 1725. Colden's "Memorial" is referred to as printed at New York in a book "with a Map of the County of the five Indian Nations."—Ibid., V: 760. Dregeende Daag-Brieven, &c.—The Rev. Theodorus Frilinghuyzen, pastor of the Dutch church at Raritan, N. J., was accused by some of his congregation of preaching Labadist doctrines or advocating principles akin to those of the early Quakers, resulting in four being excommunicated by their pastor. They published the Klage as their defence. Rev. Bernardus Freeman wrote from New York to the classis of Amsterdam, April 27, 1725, defending Frilinghuyzen, and sending a copy of this “Complaint-Book.”—See Ectes. Rec., VII: 2104, 2244, 2299, 2317, 2350, 2353, 2355, etc.; the controversy continued many years.

Felonos and others who are prisoners in the “Common Gaol” having “several times lately Attempted to break the said Gaol and to make their Escape” two more “Watchmen or Bellmen” are added to the four already appointed. All the “Watch & Bellmen” of the city are required to “keep their Watch at the City Hall . . . and be diligent . . . that None of the Prisoners do break Gaol or make any Attempts thereunto.”—M. C. C., III: 362-65. See Sept. 11. No other jail, outside of the fort and the city hall, had yet been built. See Oct. 16, 1699.

Mr. Le Happe, agent for the province at the court of Great Britain, writes from London to Gov. Burnet, informing him of “an Address presented to the King by the Government of Boston, to desire that New-York be required to send a Quota of Men and Money to their Assistance, in their War with the Eastern Indians.” This letter was submitted to the assembly of New York Province on April 6, 1726.—Assemb. Jour., 531.

The revenue of the city “being already Exhausted in Repairing the . . . Prisons, the City Hall the Wharfs and Other Publick Structures,” the common council decides to petition the assembly for leave to bring in a bill “to Raise Money to Repair the said Prison, Binnengates, and to make Necessary and to keep the same in sufficient Repair and Annually to defray their Publick and Necessaries Charge.”—M. C. C., III: 369. See Oct. 24, 1724. Such petition, adopted by the common council on Sept. 14, was based upon the difficulties which the high sheriff experienced on account of “the Weakness and Insufficiency of the Common Gaol in this City,” and the consequent necessity of putting prisoners of all kinds (debtors, criminals, diseased, and both male and female) in the same apartment (or “hold”).—Ibid., III: 370-71. This petition being presented to the house on Sept. 16, leave was given to the city to bring in a bill “to enable the Corporation to raise a Sum sufficient for the building of a new Gaol, or enlarging the Old one,” and also to enable them to raise “such annual Sums, as may defray the extraordinary Charges of this City and County, as is usual in all other Parts of this Province.”—Assemb. Jour., I: 517.

The common council deemed it “impracticable to Repair the Pres- ent Prison & Gaol” of this city so as to render them “useful and Convenient.” They therefore resolved, on Sept. 23, “that a New Prison & Common Gaol be built within this City on some Convenient Piece of Land belonging to this Corporation;” that £500 will be sufficient “to build and Complete it,” and that a bill be brought in this session to raise the money required to defray the extraordinary charges of the city do not exceed £500. — M. C. C., III: 372. The bill with these provisions was introduced in the house on Oct. 6; but, after consideration in and out of committee, it does not appear to have been reported after Oct. 29.—Assemb. Jour., I: 523, 524, 525. See, however, Oct. 9, 1727.

Gov. Burnet’s resolutions to the council, says that the provisions they have already made “for renewing the Decayed Buildings of the Fort” have been “frugally and Effectually Imposed.” He urges them to pass a resolution to provide “what is Still wanting to Complete it.”—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 519. See Sept. 29.

Gov. Burnet nominates Johannes Jansen to be mayor for the ensuing year.—M. C. C., III: 374. Jansen was installed on Oct. 14 (Ibid., III: 375), and served one year. For a brief sketch of his life, see, Mag. Coun. Min. (1752).

It is reported from the “Committee of the whole House” that the managers of the repairs on the decayed buildings in the fort should be required to give an account of their expenses for this object and state what sum is needed to “complete the Buildings which are already brought near completion.” A resolution to this effect was passed accordingly.—Assemb. Jour., I: 521. See Sept. 15. On Oct. 1, Allerman Kip, one of the managers, reported that out of £5,000 received from the treasurer, there still remained in hands £4,939.44; and Caspar G. Van Horne, another member, reported that, out of the £5,000 which he received, there remained £7,272.51.—Ibid., I: 521-22. On Oct. 15, Capt. Van Horne reported the following estimate of expense to complete the buildings:

For Masons Work and Materials (excepting the Marble and Tiles for the Heartis)
For Carpenters and Joiners Work, Materials and Liquor
For painting the same, Sum Total

The governor, on Nov. 4, desired that the repairs on the fort (see Sept. 29) be completed without delay; but the “House being informed, that if (besides the Rooms already finished in the New Buildings) the Sashes are hung, and the two Rooms are finished, which are now almost completed, his Excellency is very indifferent whether any more Rooms are finished out of Hand; it is the Opinion of this House, that the Remainder ought to be deferred until next Spring, especially since the Days are now so short that the Workmen can do but little Work in them.” They resolve that, at their session next Spring, they will make a suitable Sum for completing and finishing the new Buildings in his Majesty’s Fort George.—Assemb. Jour., I: 529. See April 6, and June 17, 1726.

The “House taking into Consideration, the Conveniency and Accommodation which the Members of this House have every Session in the Meeting of Committees, as well as at the House of the Widow Post’s, and that the Trouble and Expen ces which is occasioned to her upon these Occasions, far exceeds her Gain,” she is exempted from paying the tax until Nov. 1 next.—Assemb. Jour., I: 530. See Oct. 25, 1719. The same resolution was passed on Nov. 9, 1720.

The common council orders that, if the sheriff "will Order A Gallows to be Erected at the usual place on Execution on the Commons of this City," the city will defray the expense—M. C. C., III: 381. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 972. On April 18, 1726, the sheriff was paid "for Making A Public Gallows on the Commons."—Ibid., III: 385. As in modern times, the erection of a gallows was apparently for only temporary use, as more definitely appears from an order issued in 1727.—See June 26, 1727.

25 The customs-house records of imports and exports at the port of New York between Christmas 1724 and Christmas 1725, show there were 25 incoming vessels, from London (8), Bristol (7), Cowes (5), Liverpool (2), Westminster (2), Dover (1), and Lancaster and Cork (4), carrying woolens, goods, linen, silk, "Ribey," cloth, cardenware, calicoes, glassware, bottles, iron, steel, coal, tiles, and brick, earthenstones and millstones, lead, chalk, junk and oaken, and salt. The account of braver and other fur, "with deer-skins," shipped from New York to Great Britain, between Nov. 24, 1724 and Dec. 25, 1725, shows these went to London, Bristol, and Cowes. Braver, etc., has been "wrought up for hats and furnished the People of this Province," and also "Manufactured for Others on Account of the Trade to the West Indies and Neighbouring Provinces."—N. Y. Col. Div. V: 774.

8 John Hunter, admitted as a freeman in New York in this year, was one of the early American silversmiths. Two mugs and a tankard made by him are described in Met. Museum of Art. Cat. of Exhibition of Silver used in N. T., N. J., and the South (1911), 31-32.

Jan. 1 John Rodman, of Flushing, L. I., makes a will, leaving to his son Joseph all the land which he "purchased of the Mayor and Aldermen of New York, with all the buildings, except the tenement, or house and land with the yard belonging to it, now in the possession of Joseph Ledder. Which said land was adjoining to the King's house in New York, and was commonly called the City Hall."—From Abstracts of Wills, III: 46, N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 1914.

27 Col. Mathews, of New York, passes an ordinance prohibiting cutting down any "hook Sticks" or sagging on the Commons.—M. C. C., III: 383.

The common council appoints a committee "to Agree with Mr. John seare for an Annual Rent for the Road Walk which he now Occupies of this City by the Licence of this Court and that if he Refuses to agree for such Annual Rent that they give him Notice to Remove his Buildings and Conveniencies for Rye making from the same without delay."—M. C. C., III: 383. See Jan. 7, 1729; May 22, 1722; May 28, 1734.

Feb. 12 On account of the increase in the number of those who have no seats in the Dutch Church, a committee of the consistory is appointed to inquire of each person belonging to the congregation "what he would be willing to give for himself, or his family, for the building of a new church on a proper spot elsewhere in the city, or, if not contenting to this, what he would contribute to the enlargement of the old church."—Eccles. Rev. IV: 2345-44. This plan of raising funds for this object was altered the following year.—Ibid., IV: 2375; and see Jan. 26, 1727.

Apr. Gov. Burnet, addressing the assembly, says: "... the Repairs of the Buildings in the Post, stand in need of your immediate Care to be finished by them, may not be lost."—Assemb. Jour., I: 520. See Sept. 27.

12 "Ordered that two Church wardens... [and 3 vestrymen]... be appointed a Committee to Settle and ascertain the partition fence between the Churches Farine and the Land of Doctors Free Men..."—Ibid., I: 520.

12 "Ordered that the Church wardens do provide a handsome velvet pavilion for the use of this parish and that the fee for the use of the said pavilion be twelve shillings.

8 "Ordered that all such persons as have purchased pews in the New Building or Addition made to Trinity Church do take out their respective patents for the same within the Space of three Months..."—Trin. Min. (M.S.).

Another act of the legislature is passed (see July 24, 1724) to discharge the debt, now amounting to $300, "for finishing & Completing the New Buildings in his Majesty's Fort George."—Col. Laws N. T., I: 273, 276. See, however, Sept. 27.

There remain in the keeping of Cornelius van Metwick, one of the late Managers of said Trinity Church, and employ Workmen for the Repairs of the Buildings in his Majesty's Fort George, 805 pounds of nails. He is permitted to buy these at the current rate of "Sevenpence Hall-penny a Pound." Also, "a pretty large Quantity of Boards are lets," and the common council arranges for the sale of these.—Assemb. Jour., III: 543. See Sept. 29, 1725.

Trinity vestry writes to the secretary of the "Venerable Society" (for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts) explaining the need of a "Catechist" in New York: "... We humbly pray that he may be One in Orders and directed to Assist in our Church besides this will be an Act of Charity to us who being deeply Involved in debt enlarging our Church and at present having but small hopes of discharging it are unable of our Selves to raise a sufficient maintenance for one to assist our Rector in his declining Age [The Rev. William Vesey continued his ministrations just 20 years longer] and to preach an after Service, and to maintain Obedience and great Importance in this populous City a place of considerable trade and resort and the Center of America; A good English preacher of such a cleaver Audible voice as may reach our large Church and the Eares of the numerous Hearers will by the Divine Influence very much advance the Glory of God the Interest of the Holy Church and Religion at this time... Were it possible for the Society to have a perfect View of this Indian Church planted among many different nations & Several Meeting Houses we persuade our Selvses that her Interest would dye as near their Hearts as it does want their Assistance."—Trin. Min. (M.S.).

The "Great Conveniency of a Dutch Church resolve" That the ground of Mr. [David] Jameson should be purchased, for the purpose of erecting thereon a second Church edifice "for their Congregation. The great consistory having retired, the consistory appoints a committee to buy the land, and "pay for it out of the Deacon's Treasury." It was immediately bought for $275, payable in three years.—Eccles. Rev., IV: 2358. This was the site on the east side of Nassau Street, between Cedar and Liberty Sts. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 915.

It is ordered by the common council that "A Convenient Lodging House with a Chimney Pot" be made to connect the East End of the City Hall above Stairs Contiguous to the Great Goal for the use of the Gaoler to lodge in for the better and more safe Keeping of such Prisoners as are or may be Committed to the said Gaol or Prison."—M. C. C., III: 591. See Sept. 11, 1725.

The wording of the oath administered to a freeman, although lost, is discussed in the common council minutes until this date, when it appears as follows:—

"The Oath of a Freeman of the City of New York "Ye shall Swear that Ye shall be good and true to our sovereign Lord King George and to the Heirs of our said sovereign Lord the King. Obeying and Obedient shall ye be to the Mayor and Ministers of this City. The Franchise and Customs thereof Ye shall Maintain and this City keep harmless, in that which in you is. Ye shall be Contributing to all manner of Charges within this City as summons Watches Contributions Taxes Tallages Lot and Scot and all other Charges bearing Your Part as a Member of this City. Ye shall take no Apprenices for a less Term than for seven Years without fraud or deceit, and within the first year ye Shall Cause him to be Enrolled or Else pay such fine as Shall be reasonably imposed upon you for Omitting the same, and after his Term ends within Convenient Time being Required ye Shall take him free of this City if he hath well and truly served you. Ye shall know of no gatherings Conventicles or Conspiracies made against the Kings Peace but you shall warn the Mayor thereof or lett it to your power. All these Points and Articles ye Shall well and truly keep According to the Laws and Customs of this City. So help ye God. "—M. C. C., III: 902. Although the formal oath that is not previously recorded, a change in it as regards apprentices was ordered, Oct. 30, 1711.—M. C. C., III: 455. In the oath as approved Nov. 18, 1731, the apprentice clause was omitted.—Ibid., IV: 121.

Gov. Burnet, in addressing the general assembly, states that he hopes that by frugal management "the Repairs of the Roof of the Chapel and the Barracks, which are in a Condition entirely ruinous, will require no very large Sum." He urges that the work be not delayed until next spring, as the cost would then be greater.—Assemb. Jour., I: 546. But see Nov. 10, 1726.

Archibald Kennedy, the receiver-general and collector of customs of the province (N. Y. Col. Doc., VI: 768), prepares an account, from the custom-house books, of the number of negro slaves imported each year into New York. There was a total of 2,105, from 1701 to 1726, inclusive, all of whom were imported by private traders, none by the African Company. The numbers ran from 8 in the year 1704 to 447 in 1718, from the West Indies; from 24 in 1705 to 266 in 1717, from the coast of Africa, and 117 in 1721 from Madagascar.—Ibid., V: 84. See also Col. A committee of the Dutch Church consistory is appointed to assist the mayor and aldermen in the government of their undertaking to build a new church. They obtained his consent the next day.—Ecclesi. Rec., IV: 1755. See Jan. 26.

The common council passes a law appointing "the Market House at the lower end of Wall Street near the East River Commonly Called Wall Street Market House" to be a market "for the sale of all sorts of Corn, Grain & Meal" and requiring that, after March 25, "No Corn Grain or Meat be sold in Publick Market within this City at any Other place (but at the Aforesaid Wall Street Market House).”—M. C. C., III: 404. This came to be designated as the "Meal Market."—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, 1727.

The "ruling consistory" of the Dutch Church resolves that instead of asking for voluntary subscriptions (see Feb. 12, 1726) for building the new church, it shall be commenced with funds out of the church treasury.—Ecclesi. Rec., IV: 1757-76. See further, Mar. 25.

An "Indenture grant" of the ferry, bearing this date, from the city to Theophilus Elsworth, a "Victualler," describes it as "That Certain ferry Between the City of New York and Nassau Island Commonly Called the Ferry of New York." The grant includes "the New Brick house Old house Pen Land and well," etc., situated "at the place Commonly Called the Ferry," in the "Township of Breckland."—From the original lease, filed with Richard Varick papers, among Miscell. Caldwallaster Colden publishes his well-known book entitled The History of the Five Indian Nations Depending on the Province of New York in America. Printed and Sold by William Bradford in New York, 1727 (1758 pp., 12mo.). An "Advertisement" (opp. p. 1) states, "There is now Published a MAP of the great Lakes, Rivers and Indian Countries mentioned in the ensuing History...sold by William Bradford in New York." This was the map en- titled "A Map of the Country of The Five Nations . . .", which first appeared in 1724 (p. 26).—See description of A. Pl. 2-b, III: 862. The book was the result of a dispute between the government of New York and some merchandising companies, and is more complete than any other of its time. It was the first general history of the Iroquois, and the first historical work printed in New York.—Church Catalogue, No. 905; Sabin, IV: 222, item No. 1270.

Not more than four copies of this original edition are now known in the United States. It was reprinted at London, with large additions (8vo), in 1747 and 1750, and in 2 vols. (12mo), in 1755.

"Dr. Colden, of Scotch descent, came to America in 1710, and settled in Pennsylvania, where he practiced medicine. In 1718 he was induced by Governor Hunter, of New York, to remove to that colony, where he was appointed Surveyor General, and soon after Master in Chancery. Four years after he was raised by the crown to the important place of a Member of the Legislative Council; and a large grant of land was made to him. In 1746 he was made Lieuen- tenant-Governor of New York. He is said to have been the best informed man in the colony; and he was the librarian of the library of James Carter Brown, Providence, R. I., 1780, 109-9, citing the earliest biography of Colden, that written by John Gilmary Shea in his introduction to the reprint of Colden's History, publ. by T. H. Morrell, N. Y., in 1866.

The "Great Consistory" of the Dutch Church resolves: (1) that the new church building "shall be begun out of the money in the Deacon's chest," to which shall be added £2,200 if that sum can be obtained; (2) that it shall be a four-sided oblong; (3) that it "shall be built on the ground bought for it, to the north of the French Church" (which was on the north side of Pine Street, east of Nassau); (4) that it shall be 200 ft. long and 78 ft. broad, inside measure (but see May 31); (5) that the "Great Consistory" will leave the direction of the undertaking to the "Ruling Consistory," and "that the earliest progress be made with the building of this New Church."—Ecclesi. Rec., IV: 2178, citing "Liber B. 66." The "Ruling Consistory" appointed John van der Heul director of the building operations; Tenius Titubat master-carpenter; and Cornelius Turk master-mason.—Ibid., 2378-79. On April 13, it was agreed that Titubat and Turk were to "receive daily as wages, for the care and pains and direction of those who are under them: wit six shillings daily, and one pound for each man." The grand jury having brought in a presentment of "the In- commodiousness and Insufficiency of the Goales of the City and County of New York," the supreme court orders that the mayor and aldermen have a sufficient number of men employed to guard "the Prisnees in this City" (see above). The common council gave suitable orders to the watch and bollmen, and appointed a committee to look after repairs to the gaols to be done under the direction of the high sheriff. They also resolved to petition the next assembly for leave to bring in a bill "for making and Erecting sufficient & Commodious Common Gaols for the Said City and County." They directed the mayor or recorder to inform the chief-justice and attorney-general that they had then taken "all the Effectual Measures in their power" to repair and guard the gaols; that they intended to petition the assembly; and that they desired no prosecution be brought against "the Corporation of the Justices of the Peace of the City of this City & County," etc., "for any Humbly Conceiving" that they had no authority, by any law then in force, "to Levy Money upon the subject for the Making or Repairing of Gaols." To defend themselves, in case prosecution were commenced against them, they engaged the recorder (Francis Harison), and Je- seph Murray and John Channing, attornies at law; and the mayor's legal agent, 1738, each of whom was paid £5 as a retaining fee.—M. C. C., III: 405, 7, 411, 412. See also the order of April 25, for making a prison "out of the East End of the City Hall Yard Over the Common Council Chamber &c."—Ibid., III: 410. Regarding the proposed bill in the assembly, see Oct. 20.

24 and Cornelius Turk and Abraham Aalsteen, masons. The plan is May 22 to be made by Mr. Chevalier. The ground measures four rods square. The building is to be 40 ft. long, 30 ft. broad, 25 ft. high, and to have a nave (?), and to be the third (all these measurements). There are to be ordered in England 200 lbs. of nails, a chest of double glass, and a good church door-lock, etc. Mr. Van Boskerk is to supervise the building. Wood from the Kinderhook saw-mill is to be delivered, consisting of 24 boards of 14 in. by wood for the purlins. Mortar is to come from Lassing (?). The flat measures shall be the same as the old church, but so that a gallery can be built in, and a steeple built on, the new church. The cost is to be $600. A collection taken up yielded $165:155 for this purpose (of which $701:6 is in cash, and the balance to be paid in July). It is proposed that the old church be broken down as soon as possible. Lutheran Church records (MS.). See Oct. 2.

At a meeting of the consistory of the Dutch Church, it is proposed to reconsider the conclusion reached at the meeting on March 9 (q. v.) of the "Great Consistory" (that the church shall be 100 ft. long, and 75 ft. broad, or the inside), and to see if it would not be possible to make it the outside measures. "1. This was unanimously approved. 2. As soon as the Church is begun, the foundations of the Tower shall be laid, and it shall be carried up along with the Church, as far as the wall (of the church) goes. 3. The Church shall be placed exactly in the middle of the (plot of) ground, South by North. That is Ocean, so be the very dangerous in the Night time through the Streets thereof by Attack- ing and flying at them." The constables of each ward are required to go from house to house and warn the inhabitants who have dogs to keep them in their houses or yards at night.—M. G. C., III: 407-8.

Apr. 13 A royal mandate, appointing Archibald Kennedy to the council, in place of Thomas Byrce, deceased, is received by the governor's council; he is sworn in, and takes his seat.—Col. Coun. Min., 303.

25 The common council orders that a committee of aldermen and assistant aldermen, with Mayor Lurtzing and Recorder Harison, "Cause the Partition Line between the Lands of this Corporation and those of Harlem to be Run surveyed and Ascertained on the fourth day of May next," and that they "take the surveyor of this Corporation or any Other surveyor to their Assistance," giving notice to the trustees of Harlem that they may be present with a surveyor on their behalf; also that as soon as the survey is made the committee shall inspect and inquire "what Encroachments are made upon the Lands of this Corporation in the Out Ward," and shall remove them.—M. G. C., III: 409-10. On May 9, the committee reported the surveying partly done on May 4; "Most of the Inhabitants of Harlem and Mr. Clove's have this Survey being presents" it was ordered that they finish the survey "with all Conven- ient Expedition."—Ibid., III: 411. On Dec. 29, 1767, a payment of £5 was made to the executors of Lawrence Kortright (a tavern keeper), "in full of Expenses of this Corporation at his House in April last on Harvard Lands."—Ibid., III: 426-7. From another payment on the same day, it appears the work was again in progress in October (q. v.). Obadiah Hunt, who was one of the committee appointed on April 25 (vide supra), was allowed £5:8:11 on July 6, 1728, for expenses of this committee at his tavern.—Ibid., III: 431. See also "Harlem" in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987.

26 The common council orders that the west end of the city hall over the council chamber be made into a prison.—M. G. C., III: 416. For the prison in the east end, see under Sept. 1, 1766; also Pl. 32-5, Vol. I. Although a committee was appointed to make application to the assembly for a law to secure the necessary funds, no action resulted. A similar application to the assembly, July 22, 1760, mentions "Gaols;" (M. G. C., IV: 18), and a committee was named Aug. 26, 1761 (q. v.) to "Cause a Strong Gaol to be made at the East end of the City Hall Doors." May 28 Mrs. Catalina Post is paid £5:16:9 for "Expenses of the Committee in Agreeing with Bellmen & Other Expenses at her house by Other Committees on the publick Affairs of this Corporation."—M. G. C., III: 411. This is the last record in the Minutes of this tavern which had been a favorite meeting-place since 1718. See April 10, 1718; Aug. 22, 1721; July 13, 1722; March 23, 1723; May 24, 1724; Nov. 10, 1725.

acknowledges this king to be the lawful and rightful king of his realm; that "the person pretended to be prince of Wales during the life of the late King James" has no right to the crown; that the person taking the oath will defend the present king against "Cromerous Conspiracies and Attempts" which may be made against "his person Crown and dignity." He will declare all treasons, and will maintain the succession of the crown, which (according to the parliamentary "Act for the further Limitation of the Crown and better securing the Rights and Liberties of the Subject") is limited to "the princess Sophia Electress Electors and Dutchess Dowager of Hanover and the Heirs of her Body being protestants."—From facsimile (with signatures added), in Man. Com. Coun. (1859), pp. 415.

Another oath administered to officeholders under the crown presented that "in the sacrament of the Lords Supper there is not any Transubstantiation of the Elements of Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Christ at or after the Consacration thereof by any person whatsoever And that the Invocation or Adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other Saint and the Sacrifices of the Mass as they are now used in the Church of Rome are superstitious and idolatrous."—Ibid., pp. 415.

Bradford advertises that he has for sale "Very good Press Papers for Fullers and Fulling Mills." From time to time he advertised other commodities which he or his son William Bradford, Jr., sold, such as coffee (N. Y. Gaz., Oct. 9-16, 1727); "Mill'd Stockings" (ibid., Oct. 27-Nov. 6, 1727); "Bohe Tea" (May 27-June 3, 1728); lampblack (ibid., April 21-28, 1725), etc.

The inventory of the effects of Thomas Selby, who died on this day, included "one map of New York." For discussion of this subject, see description of Pl. 2, I: 241-42.

In addressing the assembly, says: There has been so much already done, to beautify and repair the Buildings in the Fort, that I am persuaded you will no longer leave that work imperfect. The Soldiers Barracks are in a very ruinous Condition, and will require a much greater Charge if what is necessary to keep them from falling, be not done speedily. Delay."—Assem. Jour., I: 558.

The work on the barracks dragged along for several years. See Nov. 24, 1727; Aug. 23, 1728; Oct. 16, 1733; Apr. 5, Sept. 2, 1717; Sept. 5, 1738.

The Harlem Line is again being surveyed (see April 25), as appears by a payment of £70 4, on Dec. 29, 1727, to Edward Blagge (tavern-keeper) "for Wine Rum Beer Pipes Tobacco and Other Expenses at his House by a Committee of this Corporation in October last."—M. C. C., III: 427. That the line was twice surveyed was stated when payment of £2 was made, Feb. 5, 1728, to Robert Cooke, the city surveyor, "for Surveying twice the Division Line between the City and Harlem."—Ibid., III: 431.

See, however, Jan. 27, 1749; July 12, 1750. This line does not appear to have been shown on any map of this early period. In the office of Francis W. Ford's Sons, city surveyors, formerly at No. 8 James St., was a map of 1750 (see under Jan. 9, 1750) by Marc- schel in London, that shows the harbor more clearly than the previous one. (reproduced on Pl. 56, Vol. IV;) and, in the Bancier Coll. (in N. Y. Pub. Library), box G-H, folder "Harlem" is a description of the "Harlem Line," survey'd by Bancier & F. & A. Marschel in April 11, 1777 (p. 5). This map or description was prepared after the line had been established by the legislature, on March 24, 1728 (p. 5). The line is also shown on the Goerck Map of the Common Lands (1850), reproduced on A. Pl. 9-a, Vol. III.

At about this date, the "Honourable John Montgomery, Esq; who is appointed governor of New-York" (see Aug. 12), is expected to leave London and "come away in a Man of War" to this city.—N. Y. Gaz., Nov. 17, 1727.

Work on the new Lutheran Church (see May 22) stops, until subscriptions are increased. This condition continued until the end of 1728.—Lutheran Church records (M. C. C.), III: 427.

The common council presents two addresses to Gov. Burnet, both addressed to his Highness King George Louis which occurred June 11 (p. 6). The first expresses their great esteem for the late king, and compliments the governor on his administration. The original draft of this address is preserved in metal file No. 4, city clerk's record-room. The second is an address to the throne, to be transmitted by Burnet to the new sovereign George II.—M. C. C., III: 429-24.

A bill is again introduced in the assembly (see Sept. 11, 1725) to enable the city to raise £600 "to build a convenient Goal and Prisons within the said City," and also to raise an annual sum, not exceeding £200, to pay the city's necessary public charges.—M. C. C., III: 419; Assem. Jour., I: 560. It was read a second time on Oct. 16, and referred to a committee.—Ibid., I: 561. As in 1725, however, it does not appear that the bill was reported out of committee. See also March 20, 1727.

A conference committee of both houses of the legislature is appointed to meet on Oct. 10 "at the House of John De Honore."—Assem. Jour., I: 560. De Honore was proprietor of the famous Black Horse Tavern, which stood on the west side of William St., corner of Exchange Pl.—Liber Deeds, XXXVII: 445; N. Y. Gaz., Aug. 4-11, 1751; Du Simitte Miss., in Ridgway Branch, Library Co. of Philadelphia. His tavern was a favourite meeting-place for committees of the lower house, and was the headquarters of the liberal faction. It was there that Andrew Hamilton, Zenger's attorney, was entertained after the trial on Aug. 4, 1715 (p. 6). In 1740 the tavern was referred to as "the late Black Horse Tavern."—N. Y. Jour., Jan. 19, 1740. By 1750, the Black Horse had moved to Queen (Pearl) St., and was being run by Jonathan Ogden. See July 23, 1750.

Jason Vaughan presents a petition to the assembly stating "that he has set up a School in the City of New-York, to teach the Greek and Latin Languages," and "is willing to instruct a certain Number of Poor Children therein," if the house will allow him "a consideration for the same."—Assem. Jour., I: 561. No law appears to have been passed to compensate or aid him.

The flour exported from New York having lost much of its reputation abroad, and its being "the staple Commodity" of the colony, the assembly orders that a bill be brought in "to prevent the Exportation of unmerchantable Flour."—Assem. Jour., I: 563. See Dec. 19, 1735. The subject came up again on July 30, 1728 (see Dec. 17), but a law to this effect was not passed until Nov. 14, 1750 (p. 6).

On this night occur "two Shocks of an Earthquake at New-York, and at Long Island the same."—N. Y. Gaz., Oct. 30-Nov. 6, 1727.

The new Dutch Church was evidently under construction by this time, for the account of the director, Van der Heul, shows transactions amounting to nearly £500.—Eccles. Rec., IV: 2356.

A letter of this date from "Whitehall" states that "His Majesty hath been pleased to appoint John Montgomery Esq; to be Governor of New-York and New-Jersey in America, in the room of William Burnett Esq; who is appointed Governor of the Massachusetts-Bay and New-Hampshire in America, in the room of Samuel Shute Esq;"—N. Y. Gaz., Jan. 29-Feb. 5, 1728. See Aug. 12. See also N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 356-58, 572-73, regarding Burnet's transfer.

Gov. Burnet permits the Jews to omit the words "upon the true faith of a Christian," in taking the abjuration oath, as when giving testimony under oath in the courts.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 560.

The constiency of the Dutch Church agrees to pay Van der Heul, "as is customary to his house as Doctor of the New York Dutch Church," £350, in three payments,—the first as soon as possible, the second when the church shall be under roof, and the third when it is completed. The finishing of the tower may be postponed for two years, in which case he shall be released from the oversight of it.—Eccles. Rec., IV: 2356. The constiency also resolves that the seats and pews "shall be of native wood," to be delivered the latter part of 1728, and paid for the early part of 1729. Van der Heul "shall also contract for 40,000 shingles, two feet long, an inch thick, and six inches broad, to be paid for on delivery, or afterward," according to the best bargain that can be made.—Ibid., IV: 2356-97, citing "New B. 7."
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

It was said to be still standing in 1865.—Disway, Earliest Churches in N. Y. (1865), 309. See also Landmark Map Rel. Key, III: 93f.

Mayor Lurtling was reimbursed, in 1734, for the expense of "Carting of Timber out of the Parade before the Fort in the year 1728."—M. C. G., IV, 228.

Harmans Rutgers comes into possession of his farm "near the Flatbush Water Hills on the East side of the Bowery Lane in the outward," which he acquires from the heirs of Hendrick Cornelissen van Shaick. This is part of the original grant to Cornelis Jacobsen Stille on March 15, 1657 (q.v.). There was an old farm-house, as well as barns and out-buildings, on this land at the time of the conversion.—Liter. Doc. 1906 (New York). As "Rutgers," the house is shown, north of the Jews burying-ground, on the manuscript map of 1755 (PL 30, Vol. 1). The new Rutgers mansion was begun in 1754 (q.v.) on ground bounded by the present Rutgers Pl., Clinton, Cherry, and Jefferson Sts.

Many people cross on the ice from New York to Long Island.—Am. Merc. (Philad.), Feb. 6, 1728. See also Jan. 6, 1726.

Trinity vestry orders that "the Church wardens do let out that part of the Churches parme opposite to Spring Garden [see Nov. 1, 1712] from the South Bounds thereof which is not Comprehended in Mr. Lake's Hansel Pl. for any of number of years not exceeding three..."—Trin. Min. (M.).

Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to lay out the Churches ground behind the Church yard into Soe many Lotts as they shall think most beneficial for the Churches Interest and that when it shall be Soe laid out into Lotts that they Lease the Lotts out for and the Number of Years not exceeding forty under full Yearly ground rents Covenants and Restrictions as they shall think most proper..."—Ibid.

The ferry to Long Island is leased to Theophilus Elsworth for five years at a rent of $539 per year.—M. C. G., III, 436-37. After ten years' experience leasing the ferry in two parts, an experience attended with much friction between the ferry-men and, indeed, with litigation (see Jan. 10, 1723), the common council reverts to its former policy of one lease and one ferry-man. For "Entertaining of this Corporation at his House on the delivery of Possession of the Ferry," Elsworth was subsequently reimbursed by the board.—Ibid., III: 462.

Cotton Mather dies in Boston.—Winston, op. cit., 129.

The common council appoints a committee, who, with the city surveyor, are "to lay out and survey on the West Side of Inclam-bergh [see Landmark Map Rel. Key, III: 966] two Acres of Land for A Brick Kiln &c," which are to be leased to Wesselin van Norden at 20 shillings a year.—M. C. G., III, 454.

The consistory of the Dutch Church resolves "That the movable ashes [of the new church] shall be made with iron frames, and a broad grooves, that will close well, and the panes shall be five years broad and seven long: and that the inner ceiling shall be bipped, as well the East and West [sides]; that on the West side shall be two open windows at the end; that on the South and North sides shall be as many can be: that on the East side, on either side of the pulpit shall be two loose ashes in each window."—Ecles. Rec., IV, 2496. On April 15, it was resolved "That the glass windows above the South door, shall begin four feet above the door, be three panes wide, and run up two and twenty feet by... [sic] and above shall be another glass... of six feet long, then, in the high place above, a round glass in the middle."—Ibid., IV: 339.

The new governor, John Montegomery, arrives "with his Majesty's Letters Patents."—Assem. Jour., I, 753; N. Y. Col. Docs., V, 855. He lands "near Whitehall... about one A Clock afternoon." Soon after, he "Published his Commission in Council in his Majesty's Name and to the Oaths, then swore the Council," and then "Published his Commission at the City Hall the Corporation waiting on his Excellency and the Garrison Militia Horse and foot being under Arms and making A Double Guard from the Landing to the Fort and from the Fort to the City Hall."—M. C. G., III, 476-77. The seals were delivered to Gov. Montegomery by the retiring governor, Burnet, and a council order was issued for a proclamation to be published continuing officers in their places.—Cal. Coun. Min., 569.

The common council orders, prepares, and delivers an address to Gov. Montgomery expressing their felicitations on his side arrival, their fealty, and their submission to his patronage and pro-

1727 amount needed to complete the barracks ought to be taken from Nov. the $1000 which the colony has annually appropriated for the repair Jour., I: 576 of the barracks had not been fully repaired, and an act was passed to raise the sum required for that purpose.—*See under Aug. 23, and Sept. 20, 1728.

The assembly resolves "That the torturing or exercising in this Dec. 7, 1727 Colony a Court of Equity or Chancery, (however it may be termed) without Consent in General Assembly, is unwarrantable, and con- trary to the Constitution of this State, a manifest oppression and Grievance to the Subjects, and of pernicous Consequence to their Liberties and Properties."—Assem. Jour., I, 571.

A new ferry act is passed by the general assembly modifying the ferry rates established ten years before, and making them payable in English currency.—Cf. Nov. 2, 1717. For transporting any person one way across the East River, to or from Nassau Island, the rate prescribed is "Ten Grains of Sivill Pillar or Mexico Plate or two Pennys in Bills of Credit made Current in this Colony," and double that after sunset (unless the ferry-man neglects or refuses to transport the person soon).—Amber. Jour., II: 20, 57.

CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664-1763

May 1726. The "Minister, Elders, and other Members of the French Church in this City" present an address to Gov. Montegomery, expressing their joy at his safe arrival, and asserting: "We promise ourselves all the Favour and Protection that our hearts can wish from a Person of your Excellency's Birth and Character, who hath so long attended on a Prince, now with Universal Acclamations, at the head of the Protestant Interest..."—N. Y. Gaz., May 15-20, 1728.

The court of general sessions having proposed to the grand jury, etc., to join with them in an address "to his Excellency Governor Smith, on his safe arrival to this his Government, this being "readily accepted," such an address is drawn, approved, and ordered to be engrossed and signed "by this Court his Majesties Attorney General the High Sheriff, Clerk of the Peace Coroner Grand Juries and the Attorneys at Law then attending this Court." They wait upon "his Excellency with the said Address at his Majesties Fort George," It is presented by Robert Lauring, and read by Francis Harison. —Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 499-501. They express to this address their "great and very just Joy" at his "Safe Arrival." They state that, "Upon these Occasions, it has been usual for those who had the Honour to Address their Governors, to join their Prayers for the Preservation of their Rights, Liberties and Properties, with their solemn Assurances of Undertaking to deserve great a Blessing;" but add: "your Excellency has anticipated even our Wishes, and by your publick Declarations of your Noble and most Generous Intensions towards this Province, left us nothing to Petition for, except it be, that Your Excellency will believe, that you have filled our Hearts with Esteem and Gratitude..." They close by asserting their loyalty to the king and crown of Great Britain. Montegomery acknowledges this with thanks, promising to support them in their "Rights and Interests," and hoping that, as may be the case, they might themselves "in putting the Laws in Execution for his Majestys Service, and the good of the People of this City and Country."—Ibid 2 also.

N. Y. Gaz., May 6-13, 1728.

June 1726. Until this time, there has been spent in building the new Lutheran church (see May 22, 1723), £9,971 74. —Lutheran Church records (MS.).

Montegomery recommends to the lords of trade that James de Lancy be made a member of the council.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 856-57.

June 1726. There has recently arrived at New York, from Dublin, a shipload of men and women "Servants." Many of the men "are Tradesmen, as Black Smiths, Carpenters, Weavers, Tailors, Cord-Weavers, and other Trades." They remain on the vessel, "lying over against Mr. Reads Wharfl," and are to be "dispos'd of by Join & Joseph Read, on reasonable Terms."—N. Y. Gaz., June 7, 1726, and April 22, 1727.

The tavern on the north-west corner of Wall and Water Streets, later famous as the Merchants Coffee House, an institution which helped to mould the future commercial character of Wall St., was, at this period, and probably earlier, in possession of John Dunk, whose name is given in the "Jour. of Projects," April 24, 1717.

The tavern was described as the "Corner-House by the Meal-Market." The building was offered for sale in July, 1716, and again on Jan. 10, 1716, the advertisement stating that it had been a "well frequented Tavern for several Years past," July 25, 1716, and Jan. 10, 1718. Daniel Bloom purchased the house in June, 1715; (Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., I: 125; and changed its name to the "Merchants Coffee House."—N. Y. Post.}

Bay, Jan. 16, 1742. After the death of Bloom, the tavern was kept by Capt. James Ackland, and later by Luke Roome, who sold it to Charles Arding in 1758.—Bayles, op. cit., 130, 134. In 1771, when Arding offered the house for sale, it was in the possession of Mrs. Mary Ferrara, a widow. —N. Y. Merch., June 10, 1771. By April 27, 1773 (vol. 2), N. Y. Ferrara, Jr., is purchasing from the old building and "open'd the spacious elegant new Coffee-house on the opposite cross corner." After Mrs. Ferrara's departure, the old coffee-house was evidently given up as a tavern; for, under date of April 26, 1773, we find an advertisement of bars manufactured by Newshott Deale, who "resides in the old Coffee-House, facing the new built one."—N. Y. Merch., Apr. 26, 1773. It was still a hat store in 1790, when the building was offered for sale: "That corner house which makes the corner of Wall and Water Street, with the adjoining tenement, in Water Street, commonly called the old Coffee House, occupied at present by Mr. Cusick, the Hatter."—Daily Adv., Feb. 5, 1790. On Jan. 31, 1792, the Tontine Association, which had already purchased adjoining property, bought the old coffee-house of Dr. Charles Arding and Abigail, his wife, for £1,970, and later added to their holdings by the purchase of the estate of Moordecal Gomes.—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 518-59. The old buildings were at once torn down and the Tontine House was erected on this site. See April 14, 1792.

A number of indentured Irish servants arrive on the ship "George," commanded by John Anthony Adamson. Persons desirous to purchase the "times" of these servants (a term of service to pay their passage-money) are directed to apply to the ship, or to the super-cargo, Samul Moore, "at Mr John Dunks at the Sign of the Jamaica-Pilot upon the Dock."—N. Y. Gaz., June 24-July 1, 1725. For other instances of this character, see Nov. 14, 1725; April 23, 1735; June 9, 1746; Aug. 19, 1731; 1739; June 5, 1746.

The governor's council makes record of the fact that George Clarke is confirmed by the king in his office of provincial secretary.—Col. Coun., Min., 306.

The consistory of the Dutch Church appoints Jan. Bogardus and Peter Brouwer master-masons of the new church in place of Cornelius Turl, who has died, and they are to divide his pay.—Eccles. Rec., IV: 245.

The common council resolves "that A Powder House be Erected," and a committee is appointed to find a convenient location.—M. C. C., III: 442. They reported, on July 30, that a piece of ground, 100 or 120 feet square, "upon the Common near the place where the Gallows now Stands," was the proper place.—Ibid, III: 445. On Aug. 23, it was resolved that it be "forty foot long and twenty foot broad within the Walls thereof, that the same be built of the best stone and Lime with the best workmanship and a Good Roof Covered with P Mantles."—Ibid, III: 496. The location was changed by resolution of the common council on Sept. 5, 1728, to "a little Island in the fresh water," which was considered "a proper piece of Ground and the most Convenient place."—Ibid, III: 449. Instead of building the house entirely of stone, it was found, on Sept. 10, that enough stone could not easily be procured, and it was decided to use both brick and stone,—Ibid, III: 450. For date of completion, see Nov. 21. The erection of this powder-house had been contemplated 11 years earlier (see Oct. 22, 1717). For subsequent action concerning it in common council and assembly, see June 1, 1724, and June 5, 1725; see also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 521; Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 600; and Addenda. A committee of the common council, appointed the day before to inspect the great dock, long bridge, and common sewer, promptly reports that the dock is so "Choked up with sand and mud at its mouth as to be rendered useless." They find that both ends of the dock should be raised with "Stockdocks," or "new Wall Plates" laid thereon, and the ground behind levelled so as to prevent the water of violent rains running into the dock; also that the bridge and sewer need a good deal of repair. They recommend that Anthony Harlow, the dock-master, or "Pilot Major," Jan. 14, 1725, be removed, and that Capt. Andrew Law be appointed to succeed him. Harlow is immediately discharged, and required to account for the profits of the crane, dock, and slips during his continuance in office, and pay the balance to the treasurer. Law is appointed, his duties being to keep the accounts and collect the rents and tolls of the dock and slips, taking care that the orders and regulations of these properties be executed effectually. His salary is to be £50 a year from Aug. 1. —M. C. C., III: 441, 443-45.
1728: Joseph Murray and John Chambers, attorneys at law, were voted the freedom of the city, each being "a zealous Assertor of the Rights and Privileges of this Corporation."—M. G. C., III: 455-456. See also the report the same letter containing the declaration of his will that a bell be procured at his expense from Holland for the new Dutch Church, on Nassau St. The bell which was made in Amsterdam in 1711, was inscribed: "Me fecerunt De Grave et N. Muller, Amsterdam, Anno 1711. Abraham De Peyster, gekooren den 8 July, 1657, gestorven den 8 November, M.C. 9."—Een leegstaat van de Nederduytsche Kerke Nieuw York." (A legacy to the Low Dutch Church at New York.)

A Discourse, by Rev. Thomas De Witt, D.D., 57: Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 562, 575. This bell now hangs in the tower of the Collegiate Reformed Church, at the northwest corner of Fifth Ave. and 46th St, having first hung in the Middle Dutch Church on Nassau St, and later in other Dutch churches "in the march northward."—A Brief Account of an Historic Church (pub. by the consistory, 1823), 36.

The first instance of improvement of the cemetery meets every Thursday evening at the "House of John d'Humeur."—Assembly J.our., 1: 579. See also ibid., 1: 605.

The Dutch church consistory contracts with H. Van der Spiegel to make the windows of the new church.—Estates. Rev., IV: 2438.

John Mayne informs the assembly that he has "carefully inspected the Fort here, where the Fortifications, the Carriages of the Cannon, the Barracks and the Magazines are all in a bad Condition." The house orders that Col. Myndert Schuyler, Capt. Rutgers, and Major Philipse inspect and report an estimate of the expense of the needed repairs.—Assembly Jour., 1: 585. For the committee's report, see Sept. 13.

A petition is read in the common council from the "Principal Inhabitants of this City of the Hcbrew Nation,: stating that some years before they purchased "A Small piece of Land beyond the fresh water for A Burying place for the Said Inhabitants;" but that the "Said-Burying place being now full," the petitioners "would have purchased some more Land Adjoining thereto, but it being in dispute they could not have A Title to the same." Whereupon, they "were Obliged to purchase two Lots of Land lying near the Cripple Bush or Swamp being the Numbers 84 & 85 which Contain fifty foot in breadth and one hundred and twelve foot in length;" but they "would not presume to make A burying place thereof without the leave and License of this Corporation," and this they now ask. The petition is granted with the understanding that the burying-ground will be kept "very well Isolated and Fenced, and not suffer in anywise."—Ibid., 11: 460.

The author is informed by Mr. Samuel Oppenheim that the land near the Cripple Bush or Swamp was on Gold St., between Beekman and Ferry Sts; and that, "though the petition was granted this land was not used, as the land adjacent to the then existing burying-ground became available through the purchase from Roy Willey [see Dec. 17, 1724] of his land, which had been in litigation." See Liber Deel., XXXII: 319 (New York), which included the old burying-ground there.—From Mr. Oppenheim's letter to the author. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927; Ps. 1745; cf. Feb. 22, 1656; 1682; and see Dec. 17, 1729; 1731; 1795; 1818.

Sept. 14: Obadiah Hunt, the tavern-keeper (see oct. 20, 1718), is permitted to lay a drain "through the Street Commonly Called Custom House [Penn] Street into the Common Sewer in the Broad Street," no other person being allowed to use the drain without his permission.—Ibid., 179-180.

The common council orders that "Mr Jacobus Roosevelfl have Liberty to Open the Slip fronting the East River Commonly Called Hardenbrookes Slip and to Carry away the Soil incumbering the same to such Vacant place or places as he Shall think fit without detriment to the Norris Slip.'"—M. G. C., III: 449.

The common council resolves that "ten Lotts of Land lying in the Swamp or Cripple Bush in the Rear of Beekmans Land on the North East side thereof" be granted in fee simple to Jacobus Roosevelt for $500.—M. G. C., III: 449. In the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (in box 1 of MSS, labelled "New York") is a package containing papers regarding the land at Beekman's Swamp (the "Cripple Bush"). One of these is a survey of the ten lots laid out, by order of the common council on this date, by Robert Crooke, the surveyor, and it is a lays claim from James Roosevelt in regard to a street to his ten lots in the Cripple Bush, and the resolution by the common council. The grant of Sept. 5 was succeeded by a grant of the entire swamp, July 20, 1734 (q. v.). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 967.

On Sept. 20, the board ordered that "Mr Jacobus Roosevelt pay the Consideration Money to the Treasurer of this City for the use of this Corporation, for the ten Lots of Land lately Granted unto him in the Cripple Bush and that the said Treasurer Receipt shall be unto him A sufficient discharge for the same, and that those Moneys be Applied to the use of Building the Powder House of this Corporation [see Sept. 21] and to no other use whatsoever, whereof the said Treasurer is to take Notice." At the same time, the treasurer is directed to keep account of the money received from Roosevelt, and of the payments from this fund to the powder-house committee, so the expenses may be paid as soon as the house is finished.—M. G. C., III: 451.

Col. Schuyler, one of the committee appointed on Aug. 23 (q. v.) to inspect the fort, reports that "for repairing the Soldiers Barracks, the Timber, Nails, Boards, and other Materials belonging to Carpenters Work [this labour included]" the cost will be £146:16:8; and that they "have not enough Materials, but the Glaziers Work will amount to, for completing the said Barracks." It is resolved to raise £200 by taxation for repairing the barracks in Fort George.—Assembly Jour., 1: 585. A law to this effect was passed on Sept. 20, 1728 (q. v.).

The legislature passes a law to raise £200 by an "Extraordinary Levy" to purchase the barracks in the fort. The quota of the city and county of New York is 555. Daniel Goutier is named in the act to be the "Manager" for buying materials and employing workmen; he is to report his expenditures to the governor.—Col. Laws N. Y., II: 498; N. Y. Col. Docs., V 874. See Nov. 24, 1727.

The inhabitants, living near the "Malltet House at the slip on Near Burgers Path" (Old Slip), are given permission by the common council to repair the market-house at their own expense.—M. G. C., III: 455.

Capt. Corin Mayne, commander of the king's ship "Bildestond," is given the freedom of the city for dispersing the horses of a Spanish privater which had made barbarous havoc and depredation upon the Coasts of this Province."—M. G. C., III: 458. The seal was enclosed in a silver box, made by Le Rous, costing £128:9:¢.—Ibid., III: 460.

The new meeting-place (see 1721) "for the Congregation of Dissenting Christians Called Baptists to perform Religious Worship" is recorded at the court of general sessions, on the petition of Nicholas Eyres, Richard Stillwell and Cornelius Stephens. It is described as "A House Erected upon a Lott of Ground in the East Ward, Commonly called upon the Golden Hill fronting to Orange Street."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 592. This is one of the earliest references found to both Golden Hill and Orange Street.—Col. Landmark Map. Ref. Key, III: 966 and 1007.

An advertisement states that the ship "Thomaz," from London, has arrived in New York with "several Men, Women and Boys, Servants, amongst whom there are several Tradesmen, as Bakers, Weavers, Bricklayers, Carpenters, Shoemakers, Glaziers, Coopers, &c. Whoever inclines to purchase the Time of any of them, may apply to Peter Vattle at his House in New York; the Master and Mate of said Ship having made Oarth before the Mayor of this City, That the said servants, nor any of them, are not convicted Criminals, but that they are Persons that freely and voluntarily engaged themselves by indentures, to serve a certain time for their Passage.—N. Y. Gen. Mun., Nov. 11-18, 1728. See June 19.

The consistory of the Dutch Church agrees to report £25 to the carpenter for completing the arched ceiling and the floor above the ceiling of the new church; and £1:6: to the masons for every 15 feet "of the timber which they split and nail in the ceiling."—Estates. Rev., IV: 2440-41.

View of the commons on the north of the spacious Governor's Lots—The common council appointed, on July 6, for building a powder-house reports that it has built it "on the Island Adjoining the fresh water pond," at an expense of £244:17:9. This account is paid immediately.—M. G. C., III: 462-63. See July 6. For a quarter century prior to this date, the only place recorded as a repository for powder was a vault within the fort. See May 25, 1702.

"The Boston & Philadelphia Posts will set out to Morrow 2 morning at 9 O'Clock, to perform the Stage, but once a fortnight till March next, and during the said 3 Months this Gazette is to come out at no other Times."—N. Y. Gaz., Nov. 25, 1728.
The house is to be used for 3 religious services, with wish to have it a Meeting House for the City, though it is not yet finished. It will be ready in March next, and the meeting will be held there on the first Monday in every month. The inhabitants are asked to contribute to the cost of the building, and to take care that it is kept in good repair.

Cornelius Clopper and wife sell the plot of ground where Evert Duycking's house stood to the trustees of the Jewish congregation, Lewis and Mordecai Gomes, Jacob Franks, and Rodrigo Panche.—Lutheran Edicts, XXXII: 265. Here was erected, in 1729–30, the first synagogue built especially for Jewish worship.

The second Lutheran Church, begun in 1727, was completed early this year at a cost of $611:4:5. Lutheran Church records (MS). See also under 1765; and May 23, 1727. The present historian of the church, Rev. Mr. Karl Kretzmann, writes of its "spiritual and practical" history. The church was located in the north-west corner of the town, and was dedicated on May 30, 1729, by the rev. Mr. John S. Kennedy, minister of the church at New York in 1729. This church was dedicated June 29, 1729, and named Trinity Church. It served the congregation as a place of worship until destroyed by the great fire of Sept. 5, 1766.—The Oldest Lutheran Church in Am. (1914), 51. For view of the church (redraft), see ibid., 54.

On the lot purchased from Cornelius Clopper on Dec. 19, 1728 (p.v.), was built, in 1729 (see the Castello Plan, P. L. 82e, and p. 300, Vol. II), the first synagogue constructed for Jewish worship, this congregation having previously rented the house of John Harpending (see 1665). This lot was 40 feet front on the north side of Mill Street, 40 feet in the rear, 110 feet in length on the western side (adjoining the property of J. Innes Alexander), and 93 feet in length on its eastern side.—Liber Deeds, XXXI: 265. Its "south-western corner was about 175 feet from the corner of Broad street. The building extended east from the lot (46 feet) to the line of the house of Peter Goelet, at the corner of South William St., and to the north the line of Princess street in the middle of the present Beaver street."—Dyer, "Points in N. Y. Jewish Hist." in Am. Jewish Hist. Soc. Publications, III: 1. The building was dedicated on May 30, 1729, by the rev. Mr. John S. Kennedy, minister of the church at New York in 1729. This church was dedicated June 29, 1729, and named Trinity Church. It served the congregation as a place of worship until destroyed by the great fire of Sept. 5, 1766.—The Oldest Lutheran Church in Am. (1914), 51. For view of the church (redraft), see ibid., 54.

James Alexander, writing from New York to Cadwallader Colden, says: "There was never So great a mortality here Since I came to this place as now, thereof no day but what... that has... been pitched... for the other of these Distempers, Some have a half Score at a time four of our children have had the Measles... So you may easily think the town is not in a little Distress. Our Supreme Court was adjourned for... for six weeks because of the Sickness..."

The Exchange Coffee House is mentioned in an advertisement—N. Y. Gaz., March 18–25, 1729. It stood at the present north-east corner of Broad and Water Sts., and was the property of Philip van Cortlandt.—See Sept. 22, 1729. As the "Coffy House," this tavern is shown and named on the MS. Map of 1735 (Pl. 30, Vol. I). It is also depicted in the Burgis View of 1717–17 (Pl. 25, Vol. I). In 1749, Andrew Ramsey succeeded David Cox as proprietor and moved the tavern into the house next door, formerly Wm. Todd's tavern. See May 7, 1717.

James Alexander again writes to Colden regarding the epidemic: "To all my days I never saw so general a Sickness in a place or a greater mortality."—From Box 2 of the Golden Papers, in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Robert Crooke, the city surgeon, is paid £31.13s. by the common council "for Surveying the Harlem Line the last year and for laying out ten Lots in the Swamp behind Beekman's Land to be Granted by this Corporation to Mr. Jacobus Roosevelt."—M. C. C., III: 350. See A. E. G., Feb. 11, 1718.

"Langer & Read advertise that a load of merchant goods has been received from Dublin.—N. Y. Gaz., April 21–28, 1729. See also June 10, 1729. An advertisement offers for sale "the House commonly called "The Dancing School, which has a large Oven for a Baker, a good Yard and a Pump with Very good Water in said Yard; it is situate in the Broad Way near the Fort in the City of New-York."
The governor's council rejected the idea of a common council room being placed on the ground floor of the New York City Hall building. However, in May 1729, a committee was appointed to place them in a more convenient place. —Ibid., IV: 10-11. On June 2, 1730, this committee reported that they had opened the cases, taken the books out, and placed them in the assembly-room, and were of the opinion that the room opposite the common council room would be a proper place for depositing them. It was ordered that the committee have this room fitted up for them, accordingly, "with Convenient Shelves and Desks Necessary thereunto." —Ibid., IV: 12-13. On July 22, 1730, the committee was required to have a catalogue (see June 8, 1729) of the books made, to clean them, and to place them in the room, and also to write a letter of thanks to the society. A draft of such a letter was submitted by the recorder, acknowledging receipt of the books "By the hand of the Reverend Mr William Vesey," and stating that "a handsome room" had been fitted for them; and this was signed by the mayor. —Ibid., IV: 17-18. The books were placed on a shelf of Augustan height and breadth: 18 inches from the wall, shall be moveable windows. And the oval there, on either side, in place of glass, shall be masoned up and wainscoted outside, with wood painted like glass. But the highest oval, in the midst of the top [near the peak] shall be of glass. 6. That lead color, for a priming, shall be laid on the frame of the ceiling." The committee also resolved that "the work of the Tower shall not be made until a model of the same has been shown to the Consistory." —Eccle. Rec., IV: 2456-57.

A public, municipal, circulating library is founded. The mayor informs the common council that he has received a message from the general assembly (Assemb. Jour., I: 601-2) that the governor has written a letter to Judge David Humphreys, secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts, dated in London, Sept. 23, 1728, stating that the society has received a request of a library of 1,000 volumes from the late Rev. Dr. Millington, rector of Newington, and that the society has decided to place the library in New York, "in being their Intention it should be Established A Library from which the Clergy and Gentlemen of June 1729 to 27 has written to the large number of the clergy and gentlemen of this Government and Jersey Pennsylvania and Connecticut that it might free to lie open for any who would read to the preservation of the books before they are sent over. The common council replies at once to the message, with thanks, and states that a large room will be provided. —M. C. G., III: 474-75. On April 22, 1729, it was recorded in the , the society had made a present to this corporation of twenty three cases of Books Containing One thousand Six hundred and forty Two Volumes for a Public Library for this City which are lately Imported into the same in the Ship Alexander. [Dennis Downing Master and are now ready to be landed and delivered to this Corporation."

The committee was appointed to place them in the city hall on a convenient place be made for them. —Ibid., IV: 10-11. On June 2, 1730, this committee reported that they had opened the cases, taken the books out, and placed them in the assembly-room, and were of the opinion that the room opposite the common council room would be a proper place for depositing them. It was ordered that the committee have this room fitted up for them, accordingly, "with Convenient Shelves and Desks Necessary thereunto." —Ibid., IV: 12-13. 280 The two streets here provided for are the lower parts of Greenwich and Washington Streets of the present day. Goode Street is the present Morris Street, formerly known as Beaver Lane. "The Alley that leads to Oyster Party" is the present Exchange Alley, and the "narrow street which runs from the Broadway to the south side of the English Church to the Low Street." ran somewhat to the north of the present line of Rector Street, which, at first under the name of Robinson Street, took the place of the lane in 1729.—See April 4, 1729. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, under names of streets mentioned.

281 Several recent lawyers of New York City form a close corporation by articles of agreement bearing this date. The discovery of this important document in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. adds a most interesting original record, hitherto unnoticed, to the sources of colonial history in this city and province. The full text of the manuscript, which is in the handwriting of William Smith, the first signer of the agreement, is as follows:

"Agreement made among Lawyers

We the Subscribers taking into Consideration the great number of persons who lately have obtained Licences to practise the Law, and many others who are endeavouring, or propose to obtain them, Several of whom are not sufficiently qualified for that business, and as they depend thereon for their Subsistence they naturally must as in fact they do, use low and undue methods for acquiring business to themselves which does & must tend to stir up litigious Suits and by their want of Credibility the Subjects are deceived abused and mislead, and their undue practices will not be confined only to them who use them but will reflect a general Olioim on the profession of the Law which renders it highly our Duty as much as in Us lies to prevent & remedy the Evils that do & may arise from such abuses in order whereo we have come to the following Articles of Agreement to wit

1. That every practitioner who has obtained his Licence since the last day of June 1725 is employed in any Cause We or either of Us shall not directly or indirectly be concerned on that Side, by advice or otherwise and if any such practitioner or his Client or any other person shall apply to either of us to be concern'd, such of us who be so to applied, shall absolutely refuse to be concern'd with such practitioner & immediately send word thereof to the rest of us.

2. If any when person does actually employ any such practi- tioner as aforesaid in their common & eanie business, but upon difficult matters comes to employ any of us we will desire him to apply to, or demand upon such practitioner usually employed by them and acquaint such person we resolve not to undertake any such cause for them while such practitioner is usually employ'd in their common business for them, and (unless such person shall declare or promise that he will not continue such practitioner in his common business) wholly to decline & refuse to undertake such Cause, and shall immediately send word thereof to the rest of us.

3. We will even give no Advice to such person[illegible] who usually employ any such practitioner as aforesaid while they do employ them nor draw nor give them any Copies of Entries or proceedings or any ways assist in the doing thereof, but will wholly refuse so to do, and immediately send notice of such refusal to the rest of Us.

4. That by all other reasonable ways & means we shall endeavour to undeceive the people by exposing the ignorance and Inabilities of such practitioner's as aforesaid.

5. That we meet on the first Wednesday in every month at the house of Thomas Scourlock, or such other house as shall be agreed on by the major part of us the better to keep up to those articles and to concert such further measures as may be proper to remedy the growing miscarriages aforesaid Dated this 28th July 1729

282 William Smith, who wrote this "Agreement," was the father of that Wm. Smith who wrote the History of the Province of New York (N. Y., 1773). He was born in 1697, was admitted to the bar of New York on May 20, 1724, and died in 1769.

July 28

Thomas Scourlock, at whose house the lawyers agreed to hold their monthly meetings, was a "reformer in the lawyers' lodge," that of New York City, whose will, dated March 11, 1727, was proved May 14, 1727.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1805), 146. Prior to the discovery of this "Agreement made among Lawyers," our knowledge was quite incomplete regarding the require-ments for admission to the bar in the first half of the eighteenth century. In the Hist. of the Bench and Bar of New York, ed. by David McAdam and others, Vol. I (N. Y., 1879), 175, H. W. Jessup says: "Thus early [1725] do we find recorded, and much earlier doubts there existed, a dissatisfaction in regard to the prepara-tion of the members of the profession, than was the case at present.

"There is no reason to believe that prior to the Revolution any particular scheme of legal education existed in the Colony of New York." W. H. Peckham states (ibid., 191): "As early as 1744 the lawyers of New York entered into an association to free the judiciary from the exercise of the lawyer's preroga-tive. Mr. H. B. Dawson, in his tract on the Sons of Liberty, traces the inception of that society in New York to the formation of this primitive 'bar association.' None of the records of the association (so-called) have come down to us; and, indeed, it probably never presented a public character as a formally officed body, but operated quite spontaneously, the bar as a whole readily following the leadership of a few active spirits." The efforts made by a group of lawyers, in 1744, to free the judiciary from the king's prerogative, may have been the inception of the Society of the Sons of Liberty, but it was not the earliest association of the bar in New York. That, we see from the foregoing "Agreement," dates from 1729, and had for its aim the maintenance of a high standard of legal education and efficiency.

The consistory of the Dutch Church resolves "that in the Tower, above the roof of the Church, a door shall be made in an opening about 8 feet high and about 4 feet broad, with or without glass; also, at the same height, on the other three sides of the Tower, shall be made a light, about 8 feet high and three broad, with small boards running down slant, or a sash, as may be judged necessary; and that the cross, the ball and the weathercock on the Tower, be made proportional to one another."—Eccles. Rec., IV: 2476.

283 William Burnet, former governor of New York, died at Boston, Sept. aged 42. An Elegy Upon His Excellency William Burnet, Esq: was the title of a broadside, printed in Boston, in praise of his wisdom, his learning, and other virtues. One of these broadsides is in the N. Y. Pub. Library. An inventory of his personal effects included a "Prospect of New York/ Ditto of Boston/"—See description of the Burgis View, I: 241-42. The account of Henry Beekman, the high sheriff, dated Aug. 17, 1729 (p. 25), is paid by the common council, it being "for Require [sic] to the Prison of this City (when it was burnt)."—M. C. C., III: 453.

Charles Sleigh and Annatie, his wife, mortgage to Abraham de Peyster the property subsequently known as No. 1 Broadway; on May 31, 1734, they conveyed the property to him.—Liber Deed, XXXIV: 242-46. See Aug. 26, 1756, and dates cited thereunder for the history of plot No. 1 Broadway, the Kennedy House, &c. See May 25, 1644, for the ground-brief of this plot, received from Director Kieft by Thomas Boven.

284 The estate of "Mr Stephen De Lanecy of the City of New York Merchant, at his Country House at Bloomsall in the Out Ward" is mentioned in a court record.—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace, 517.

285 The "Narrow Street which runs through the land of Adolph Philipse Esq: Commonly Called Godets Street" is mentioned in the M. C. C., III: 457. This was called also "the American of Morris Street, called on Pl. 64, Vol. I, Beaver Lane." It was regulated in 1728 (M. C. C., MS., IX: 249; and was called Morris Street before 1736, as shown on Colton's Topographical Map, Pl. 124, Vol. III. Attorney-General Bradley makes a representation against the colonial assemblies, pointing out their tendency to act contrary to the interest of the crown. He recommended, in behalf of the crown, to be present in the assembly when business is transacted.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 901-3.

286 The city is debtor under the Dongan Charter for 16 years' quit-rent per annum (originally a beaver skin), ten shillings being allowed for each skin.—Journals of the City Chamberlain, II: 175. On Dec. 11, "the Treasurer paid to Archibald Kennedy Esq: his Majesties Collector and Receiver General of this Province Sixteen Bever Nov. 29, 1729 Skins in full of the Quitt Rent of the Charter of this Corporation to the 25th of April last as Appears by his Receipt upon the said Charter Dated the Eleventh day of December, 1729 and at the same time paid unto the Said Archibald Kennedy Sixteen years Quitt Rent (being four pounds Proclamation Money) for the Patent at the Ferry in Kings County as Appears by his Receipt upon the same day,

Richard Davis (surgeon of a war vessel on New York station), acting under power of attorney from Roy Willey, of London, conveys to Luis Gomez and his three sons, Mordecai, Daniel, and David, for £50, a piece of ground described as beginning "at the south-east corner of the Jewish burial-place" and extending to the "Highway...the present line of Chatham Square."—Liber Deeds, XXXI: 109, 319, 406. This transfer included the old Jewish burial-ground.—See also survey in Cong. Shearith Israel archives. For history of the plot, with references to the litigation involved, see Daly, Settlement of the Jews in N.Y. Am., 15, 39-44. On Nov. 23, 1730, Gomez and his sons executed a bond, reciting the conveyance to them, by purchase, "for a burial place for the use of the Jewish nation in general;" acknowledging that they held the land in trust, and promising that it should so remain.—Liber Deeds, XXXI: 174.

In this connection, Mr. Samuel Oppenheim informs the author that "These instruments show that the Willey land adjoined the then Jewish burying-ground. That this adjoining land was used as far back as 1685 is shown by the extant tombstone of Benjamin Bueno de Mesquita, who died that year.—See Pubs. Am. Jewish Hist. Soc. 1 (1891), 91-92; and ibid., No. 18 (1909), 91-122. References are made in the latter work to many burials between 1683 and 1729 in this burying-ground.

"The old burying-ground, adjoining the Willey tract was acquired from William Merritt and Margaret, his wife, by a deed dated in 1690 (Pubs. No. 5, 141). This deed was never recorded and no copy has thus far been found. It is referred to in ibid., No. 27, p. 39, as in existence in 1784. It is also mentioned in 1772, in an opinion of the congregation's counsel, as before him at that time, with a confirmatory deed of 1701 [see John Talbot Kempe's opinion, MS. in Cong. Shearith Israel archives].

"Daly's statements [p. ci.] about the location of the burying-ground are nearly all from Valentine's Manual (1860), 547, 555-57; and ibid. (1866), 614-15. He did not know of the Merritt deed, and assumed that the land adjoining the Willey property was the 1669 grant by the Dutch. I have never been able to verify the statement that the Dutch grant related to this neighborhood, though both it and the Willey land were "outside of the city." The Dutch grant was of the free land of the company, and could not have been at this location, which was all in the hands of private owners.—See Hoffman, Estate and Rights, II: 246-50. The Jews' petition for the deed (1726), and Kempe opinion (1772) make no reference to a Dutch grant.

"There is no record of a burial there prior to 1685, except an unauthenticated one of 1669, referred to in the article, supra, in Pubs. No. 18, where, in a list of names, that of Abraham De Lucena is given as of 1669, that man being among the early arrivals in 1660 but I am skeptical as to that date, as I found in a MS. a reference to him as alive later (N. Y. Col. MSS., XXXV: 180, Albany), and I am sure this name refers to the Jewish minister who died about 1726.

"As to the power of the congregation to sell (Daly notwithstanding), see Pubs., No. 21, 185-190, and Gomez vs. The Tradesmen's Bank, 4 Sandford's (N. Y. Superior Court) Reports, 102. The congregation to quiet its title, purchased the claims of the surviving trustee's heirs—a joint tenancy, under the old law, giving them the right under which they could acquire all claims against the property. Also, the congregation, by its act of incorporation of 1784, held the title of the Willey New York in these lands (see Chancellor Kent's opinion in archives, supra)."—Letter from Mr. Oppenheim to the author. Cf. Feb. 22, 1676.

For the later history of the burial-ground, see 1753; and Landmark Map, Ref. Key, III: 927. See also Pubs., No. 15, p. 94; No. 27, pp. 262-74.

The consistory of the Dutch Church passes resolutions regarding the shape of the seats in the new church. They also decide that "Men and women shall sit separate, men by themselves, and women by themselves in the same manner as hitherto in our Old Church; and as is used in all the Dutch Churches in Holland." Seats are to be sold to the highest bidder, and to belong to the purchaser for life, then to revert to the church and be sold again "according to the plan now pursued in the Old Church."—Eccles. Rec., IV: 249.

The following year, in their regulations, were passed having reference to "family pews, for men and women separately." These were to be sold in perpetuity, on payment of a yearly quitrent; or they might be sold for a life-time; or each one might sit separately and buy a sitting for life. In every case, payment must be made for the minister.—Ibid., IV: 2516. Further regulations on this subject were passed on Oct. 5 and 12, 1759, and April 14, 1761.—Ibid., IV: 2517, 2518-19, 2537.

In this year was made the Lyon Survey, or Bradford Map, the most important early engraved plan of the city, which it shows, in much detail, at the time of the granting of the Montgomerie Charter (see summary under March 23). The plan is reproduced and described in Vol. I, p. 27. See also pl. 26.

Although all likely available sources have been searched, no contemporary reference has been found to the making of this survey, or to the engraving of the plan, which was undoubtedly done in America. This silence is difficult to explain, as it seems highly probable that the plan, issued at this time, bore some official relation to the Montgomerie Charter. It is also strange that it should not have been advertised by Bradford in his own paper.

Observe on this map that Markfield St. is so named, instead of Petticoat Lane as it was on the Miller Plan of 1695 (pl. 23-24). See July 6, 1658.

Before this date, the laying out of Cherry St. was begun, and it had received its name, probably from the Cherry Garden of Richard Sackett, on Cherry St. just beyond what is now Franklin Square.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 996. See also May 28, 1790.

Before this date, Frankfort St. also was laid out. This street was named after the birthplace of Jacob Leisler. It was surveyed and regulated in 1761 (M. C. G., VII: 256); and was extended to Pearl St. in 1792 (Law of N. Y., 1792, Chap. 49); and, further, to Skinner's St. (present Chif St.) in 1793 (M. C. G., MS., No. 322, 333).—See pl. 74, Vol. III.

The former Van Cliff's Slip (see Aug. 9, 1629) is called Lyon's Slip on the Bradford Map. It was the subsequent Bungling Slip. See also May 5, 1736; March 2, 1744.

Before this date, Fletcher St. (between Maiden Lane and Lyon Slip) was laid out; although shown, it is unnamed on the Bradford Maps. It was first mentioned as Fletcher St. in the records in 1736.—M. C. G., IV: 527. See pl. 74, Vol. III.

For some time before this year, the Bowling Green Garden and tavern was a place of resort, refreshment, and entertainment, near the North River, in the western part of the block now bounded by Greenwich, Chambers, and Warren Sts., and West Broadway.—See pl. 36, Vol. I. See also March 29, 1735; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981 and 1760.

Before this year, the Countee Key Market had become known as the Fly Market.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 958, 960, citing Bradford Maps; see also Sept. 6, 1699; Oct. 21, 1736.

The Carrihth View, published c. 1735, also shows the appearance of the city at about this time, with all its streets and principal buildings, to a point north of the Collect Pond. See pl. 27-A, Vol. I.

The first stone-ware kiln or furnace in the United States was built in this year in the city. Clarkson Crolius wrote of it in 1842: "The lower part or arches are under the foundation of the house on the 5th lot from the corner of Centre and Beade Streets; the house is 17 feet wide. It was first called Cosersius' Pottery, afterwards Crolius' Pottery; what was called Potters Pump, celebrated for the purity of its water, was taken into the large well now used by the Manhattan Company for City purposes; it was at the foot of the hill called Potter's Hill."—Man. Com. Com. (1854), opp. p. 542, with sketch of the kiln.

In this year, or possibly a little earlier, Anthony Rutgers built his well-known mansion on the East River.—See Feb. 3, 1725.

Baltimore, Md., was laid out in this year by act of Assembly. Improvements commence, and continue for nearly a year, to procure a new charter for the city. The common council appoints...

a committee to consider provisions for a petition to Gov. Montgomerie “for his Majesties Grant of Confirmation of the Charter of Corporation in the Royal Stile and of all their Ancient Rights and Priviledges thereunto belonging and for such Additional Grants Emoluments and Priviledges as Can be obtained for the Advantage good Rule & Government of the Inhabitants of this City.”—

M. C. C., IV: 4. This committee reported on March 28 its recommendation and by a letter dated March 28 it was thereupon ordered that Mayor Robert Luttig and Alderman Frederick Philippe “wait upon” the governor to ask “his Excellence’s Pleasure if this Corporation shall Petition him for the same.”— Ibid., IV: 5-8. On April 6, 1730, they reported “that his Excellency is resolved to take that when the Privileges and Con-sentions mentioned in the Articles delivered unto him were Petition’d for, he should Refer the Petition to his Majesties Council for their Advice which he was Obliged to do by his Instructions.” The common council ordered that the recorder (Francis Hatters) prepare the draft of a petition accordingly. After amendments, it was ordered to be engrossed and “signed by the Court” the following day. For full text, see Land Papers (Albany), pub. in Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 591-59. The recorder was also required to “prepare the Draft of A New Charter,” etc., for the court’s consideration. On signing the petition (presumably the next day), a committee was appointed to consider further proceedings.—

M. C. C., IV: 8-9. This committee reported, on April 22, 1730, that “by Reason of his Excellency’s Indisposition and Resolution speedily to Remove to his Government of New Jersey,” the “Obtaining of the said East river Grand Chart and other Petition Cannot be Effect’d” until his return. It was the unanimous opinion that £5,000 would “be Needful to be provided by this Corporation for Obtaining the Said Charter,” and it was ordered that the committee “Continue their Applications.”—

Ibid., IV: 11.

On July 22, 1730, the recorder informed the “Court” that, pursuant to the order of April 6, he had drafted the new charter.—

Ibid., IV: 18.

On Aug. 3, 1730, it was resolved that the corporation should borrow £1,000 “on interest for one year towards defraying the Expense of procuring A New Charter & Confirmation,” etc.; and a committee was given power “to Mortgage any of the Lands belonging to this Corporation on this Island Manhattans for the Repayment thereof,” the mayor to execute such mortgage under the public seal. At the same meeting, the petition to the governor was read, approved, and entered in full in the Minutes; it was ordered that the committee just named to raise the £5,000 present it. Also, at this meeting, the recorder presented his draft of the charter. This was read, and the committee appointed, on April 7, to consider measures for obtaining the charter was given the draft to examine, with the advice of Corporation Counsel Joseph Murray, or some other counsel as they should think needful.—

Ibid., IV: 18-22.

The city’s petition was referred to the council by the governor on Aug. 6 (Col. Coun. Min. 310), and a committee, of which James Alexander was chairman, took it immediately into consideration, and prepared a report the next day (for text of which see Man. Com. Coun., 1856, 596-597, citing Land Papers, Albany). It approved the petition, article by article, with a few interpretative and explanatory observations. It was agreed, among other things, that the city should have “the soil as prayed from Bestavers Killitle to the limits of the fort of New York upon the North River. From thence leaving out for the use of the fort all the west side of the street that leads down to Whitehall. Again, it’s agreed that they may have the soil from the west side of the said street eastward along the East river to the north side of Corlaser hook. Provided allways as much as shall be granted & intituled to them or intitule them to wharf out before any persons who have prior grantees from the Crown of keys or wharfs beyond low water mark, without the actual agreement of such persons, their heirs or assigns, owners of such keys or wharfs.” It was also resolved: “That the whole of such additional land shall be granted & intituled to the greatest extent practicable for the greater convenience of Trade as to plant Batteryes upon in case of any necessity appearing for so doing, to do which power is hereby reserved.”

This report (dated Aug. 7), which was rendered to the council on Aug. 13 (Cal. Com. Coun., 310), resulted in a resolution to grant the Board of Aldermen to unanimously advise His Excellence to grant His Majesty’s Royal Charter to the petitioners ac-

Accordingly.”—From the original MS. entry in the Council Minutes, State Library, Albany.

Mortgagors accordingly issued two important warrants or orders. The first was to Attorney-General Richard Bradley, “to prepare Lijettes patent for a Charter to the Mayor Aldermen and Comonality of the City of New York, pursuant to the petition of the said Corporation and the report of his Maties Council thereto made, and approved of, a copy of which said petition and report is heretofore annexed.”—

The other warrant was to Cadwallader Colden “to survey, for the corporation of New York, 400 feet below low water mark, on Hudson’s River from the Killitle to the limits of the fort, from thence (leaving out, for the use of the fort, all the west side of the street that leads down to Whitehall) eastward along the East river, to the north side of Corlaser’s hook.”—Col. Land Papers, 194. This warrant is printed in full in Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 599, from the original in Albany.

Colden reported, on Sept. 2, that he had made the survey, beginning “at a certain place near High Water Mark on the South end of a piece of Upland which lies between the said River and a piece of Meadow Ground or Marsh being the first piece of Meadow Ground or Marsh near Hudson’s River to the Southward of Greenwich and from whence the said Bestavers Killitle runs into Hudson’s River. From which place of Beginning to the South side of the said Street from before the Fort running South eighteen degrees thirty minutes west on a Straight line the Distance is One hundred and Twelve miles, and from thence the perpendicular breadth of four hundred foot from Low Water Mark on the river contains eighty two acres and one half acre.” He also surveyed “The soil of the East River from the North side of Corlaser’s Hook to Whitehall,” and found it contained 127 acres.—

Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 598, citing Land Papers (Albany). See also Gerard, Treatise on the Title of the Corporation and Others to the Streets, Wharves, Parks, Pieres, etc. (1752), 72-73. For Colden’s payment for this service, see Sept. 15.

The above described territory is substantially that covered by the Lyne Survey or Bradford Map (Fl. 17, Vol. I).

On Oct. 15, 1730, “A Draft of the New Charter and Confirmation to this Corporation was read and Approved” by the common council, and the committee which had the management of it was instructed to have it “Engrossed finished & Compleated and the seal Affixed with all Expedition.”—

M. C. C., IV: 28.

On Jan. 14, 1731, the common council resolved to borrow £2,000 on interest for one year “towards defraying the Expense of procuring a New Charter,” and a committee was appointed to procure it. At the same session the corporation resolved to “Address his Excellency the Governor for his great favours and Goodness shown to this Corporation in granting their Petition Ordering & directing his Majesties Letters Patent for a New Charter.”—

Ibid., IV: 35. The recorder was directed to prepare a draft of this address, and, at a meeting of the common council on Feb. 8, 1731, it was read and approved, and an order was made to deliver it “to his Excellency on the Receipt of the New Charter.” It was entered in full in the minutes of that date.—

M. C. C., IV: 37-38. Meanwhile, Gov. Montgomery signed the charter on Jan. 15, 1731.—

See Feb. 11, 1731.

The day chosen for the formal presentation of the charter by the governor, and the address of thanks from the city magistrates, was Feb. 11, 1731 (5.5.), under which date, in the Chronology, will also be found a digest of the contents of the charter itself.

The committee appointed on Aug. 3, 1730, to borrow £1,000 for use in procuring the charter reported on March 31, 1731, that this sum had been borrowed of James de Lacey on Oct. 1, 1730, and May which was to be paid to him in monthly instalments; and granting the petitioners assurance of the city to mortgage to him “the Lotts of Land Lying on the West Side of the Dock between the Weigh House Street [the present Moore St.] and the Broad Way, from the Custom House Street [the present Pearl St.] four hundred foot into the East River beyond low Water Mark, and also the Street land in the Bowery Division of the Out Ward, for one year from Oct. 1, 1730. It was therefore ordered that the mayor execute the mortgage, “the Lease to bear date this day and Release tomorrow.”—

M. C. C., IV: 45-46. On the same day (March 31, 1731 p.m.), the committee which was appointed on Mar. 14 to borrow £2,000 for defraying the expenses of procuring the charter reported that they had obtained this amount from John Chambers, “at the usual Interest of Eight pounds £8 Centum

The common council appoints a committee to "Employ Workmen & Labourers and Agree for Materials for making A Peer on the West side of the Moutth of the Dock in such Convenient place as they shall see Necessary to prevent the further filling up [see July 17, 1728] of the said Dock." — M. C. C., IV: 11. On June 2, this committee reported that they had agreed with John Peek, a boatman, "to provide good and sufficient Wood of twenty foot long and to lay A Dock or Peerhead from the West part of the Great Dock into the River of forty foot long and twenty foot broad and twelve foot high in such A Convenient place as he shall be directed by the Corporation, the Said Peek to find all the Workmen and Materials to compleat the whole work at his own Charge." The specifications provided that the wharf was "to be well laid and of good and sufficient Timber of about fourteen Inches wide all of twenty foot long and to be well braced with Cedar Braces with good and sufficient Wall Plates upon the same at the Peer to be good and strong pieces for Tenders [fenders] at two foot distance all Round the Peer." At the other part of the dock the fenders were "to Stand at six foot distance," and Peek was required "to load the same sufficient Cope of Ballast." The work was to be finished by July 15, 1730, and the Corporation was to pay Peek $815 on completion. The report was approved and the committee ordered to "direct where the said Peer head shall be laid and see the same Completed according to the said Agreement." — Ibid., IV: 14-15. Peek's bill was $1,719.90. Governor Montgomerie took the oath as chancellor. — Col. Gov. Min., May 309.

A subscription paper of this date aims to raise funds for the support of Quinot and Alexander Malcolm, as schoolmasters. The text is as follows:

"Whereas there is a Gentleman well recommended to his Excellency for his Knowledge in all parts of the Mathematicks as also his Brother who Teaches Greek and Latin and both Together Philosophy and the Languages the want of which in the Education of our Youth of this place is too Evident, and its to feared will be more and more, so if some private hands (till the publick take it into their Care) do not Interpose It is Therefore hoped that this opportunity will be embraced by all those whose Sentiments are, that Letters are the greatest distinguishing mark between us and Savages, & who desire that their Children and posterity should not be deprived of Letters.

A petition of Augustus Jay is laid before the common council, requesting that on the West side of the Broadway in the West Ward of this City the Petitioner is the lawfull Owner and Proprietor of several Lots of Land lying between the houses of Mr William Smith and that late of Charles Phillips who recently Stood several Old Tenements (formerly the Estate of Balthazar Bayard deceased), which the Petitioner has Caused to be pulled down in Order to Erect several Houses thereon which when finished will be A Beauty and Ornament to the said Street, and for as much as the foundation of the Old Buildings for about Sixty seven feet in length were Beveling and not upon A Straight Line with the Other Buildings to the Said Street which Rended the Said Street uneven and Ugly. The Petitioner therefore Humbly prays that this Court will direct the surveyor of this City to Survey and lay out the said Street where unto the aforesaid Lots frometh upon A Straight Line, Contiguous to the Petitioner may lay the foundations of the Building hethforthwith Intends to Erect for the Beauty and uniformity of the said Street as the said surveyor Shall direct and Appoint." It is ordered "that the said Street . . . be laid out upon A Straight Line," according to a survey laid before the common council.— M. C. C., IV: 12. Mr. Jay's house was known as No. 9 and 11 Broadway. They became the Atlantic Garden subsequent to 1786. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 976. This building was never Burns' coffee-house, as stated by Valentine in Man. Com. Coun. (1845), 242-45; Ibid. (1858), opp. p. 535; Ibid. (1865), 515-14. See also 1866, and April 30, 1745.

Valentine states that an order was given in 1734 (apparently in the foregoing connection) for levelling or straightening Broadway above the Parade. No such order at this time, that above mentioned, is recorded in the Minutes. He states that, on the west side of Broadway above Morris St. stood four old buildings, adjoining each other, with steep roofs, or Government tiles facing Broadway, a sketch of which was attached to the order to show the straightening or levelling necessary at this point, and the consequent need of demolishing the buildings. The sketch is reproduced and the neighborhood described in Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 53. Our "Compleating the Plan" order does not now appear to be in the city archives.

There is advertised for sale "a lot of land lying on the South side of Queen Street, part of the ground at the old Slaughter-house." — N. Y. Gaz., June 18, 1730. This was the slaughter-house order removed by the common council in 1721.— M. C. C., III: 250-51. See Oct. 11, 1720.

Montgomerie issues an order to the attorney-general to prepare Aug. letters patent for the new city charter; and an order to the surveyor-general (Colden) to survey the ground under water around the lower part of the island. — See summary under March 23.

Nicholas Bayard announces that he has erected a sugar refinery, letters patent for the new city charter; and an order to the surveyor-general (Colden) to survey the ground under water around the lower part of the island. — See summary under March 23.

A letter from New York, dated Sept. 27 (error for Aug. 27), 22 states: "On Friday last [Aug. 21], our Garrison and Militia, Horse and Foot, were under Arms till after 6 at Night, in order to receive Governor Gordon of Pennsylvania, who came not till the next Day [Aug. 22] and then was received by his Excellency our Gover- nor (attended with the Corporation and principal Gentlemen) at his Landing. The Ladies were put into his Excellency's Coach drawn by 6 Horses, and the Governor walked up to the Fort, attended in above, and at the Entering the Fort Gate were saluted by a Number of Guns. Governor Gordon gave red caps to the Ladies at Col. Gilbert's at the Bowery, in the pretty House which Mr. Bickle built." — Penn. Gaz. (Phila.), Sept. 3-10, 1730.

Colden reports the particulars of his survey of the ground under water around the lower part of the island. — See summary under Sept. 23.

A house and lot, advertised for sale, are described as extending from Hanover Square "to the East side of the Drain-Ditch and now called The Sloat." — N. Y. Gaz., Sept. 7, 1730. For loca- tion of Sloat Lane, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1009.

An advertisement states that on this day, "at the custom-House, in this City (where a convenient Room is fitted up), James Lyne Designs to Teach in the Evening (during the Winter) Arithmetic. in all its parts, Geometry, Trigonometry, Navigation, Surveying, Sept. Gauging, Algebra, and sundry other parts of Mathematical Learning. Whoever inclines to be instructed in any of the said Parts of Mathematical Knowledge, may agree with the said James Lyne at the House of William Bradford in the City of New York. —N.Y. Gen., Aug. 5—Sept., 1729. James Lyne was the surveyor whose name (Daniel Lyne) is recorded to the Survey or Record Book made during this year.—See Pl. 27, Vol. I. In addition to the account of this engraver given in I: 257, mention should be made of his will, dated March 1, 1753, which was recorded at Trenton, N. J., Dec. 10, 1761, in Liber WILL, II: 46.

The accounts in the central book ordered the treasurer to "pay to John Cruger Esq. or Order the sum of forty pounds Curri! Money of New York it being the like sum by him disbursed and paid to Cadwallerden Colden Esq! his Majesties Surveyor General of this Province as a Reward for and his fees and service for the Return of his Book or Certificate therefor, for the New harmony, and Grant to this Corporation."—M. C. C., IV: 24. This survey was undoubtedly that referred to in the Minutes under date of Jan. 13, 1731, to determine "The Boundaries of the City from Bestviers Killite to the Fort and from Whitchall to Corlears hook" (ibid., IV: 34), a combination of which was desired by the Montgomerian Council. See March 23...

A "Large Dwelling House and Lot, with Stable, Coach-house, &c., in the Broad-way, being the House where Gabriel Ludlow now lives, to be sold. It extends from the Broad-way back so far as High-water Mark in Hudson River."—N.Y. Gen., Sept. 14—21, 1732. This was the coach house by this time in general use in New York, and of the same jntury of the period. Houghton thus describes it: "The 'Colonial' coach had a body not unlike the coach of to-day [1898], but larger, suspended much higher, and hung on thoroughbreds. The transfer coaches now used by the Fifth Avenue Hotel, in this city, are the best modern representatives of the Colonial prototypes."—Church of Colonial N.Y., 21.

Frederick Morris is sworn in as deputy secretary of the province.

John van Arsheim is appointed "clerk and foreinger in the New York City," and Adam van Hook is to be requested to be door-keeper and bell-ringer.—Ecles. Rec., IV: 2518, 2562.

By date this service was being held in the new Dutch Church (in Nassau St.), the minutes of the consistory stating that "the ministers preach twice, regularly, on Sundays in each church," that is, in the Garden St. and Nassau St. churches.—Ecles. Rec., IV: 2518. The ministers preached in rotation in these two churches.

—Convin's Manual, 996. The date of the first service held in the new church does not appear definitely in the records. Greenleaf, in Hist. of the Churches, 11, gives the date of opening as 1739; so does De Witt in his Diversions, 28, 49. The church was "under roof" on March 17, 1739, and the last request of the consistory on Dec. 18, 1729 (p. 9). It is therefore possible that seats, at least temporary ones, were used in 1729, very near the end of the year, or early in 1730. The church was not completed until 1732. See inscription on Pl. 28, Vol. I. "At its first erection it had no gallery, and the ceiling was one entire arch without pillars. The pulpit was in the middle of the east wall, and the entrance was by two doors in front, on the west (Nassau side)."—De Witt, op. cit., 28. In 1764, alterations in the interior were made.—See Dec. 7, 1763: June 29, 1764. The church was last used as a place of worship, Aug. 11, 1844 (p. 9), and was finally demolished Nov. 19, 26, 1882 (p. 9). See also Landmark Map Ref. Keys, III: 953.

The city's annual receipts and disbursements for selected years between 1715 and 1750, compiled from reports in the Minutes of the Common Council (the fiscal year ending Oct. 14), were as follows:

According to an advertisement, the Boston and Philadelphia Dec. 6 posts are to start on this day "to perform their Stages once a Fort night during the three Winter Months." Also "this Gazette will be Published every Tuesday Morning during that Time," N. Y. Gaz., Nov. 30-Dec. 5, 1750. On March 8, 1751, a weekly service was replaced the fortnightly.—Ibid., March 1-8, 1751.

Montgomerie reports to the lords of trade that he has received 21 a new seal for the province, and is returning the old one.—N. Y. Col. Doc. V, 909.

In this year, the French completed their fortress at Crowne Point — Lake Champlain. See Dec. 3, 1750.

"The City of New-York hath in it nearly as many Inhabitants as Philadelphia, and is a more delightful Place. The Gentlemen here are exceeded by none in Kindness and Civility to Strangers; the Countrie one of the pleasanest [sic] in the Universe; the Chime temperate, the Air serene; for except about the latter End of August and September, they have no drizly, foggy or thick Weather; one of their Showers of Rain is generally over in two Hours, then are they blessed with a clear Sky. Here are no Phitics or Consumptions, and so very few Physicians and Apothecaries that People live to a very great Age. They have very few Clergy, and are signal for their Morals and Beneficences."—The Importance of the British Plantations in America to this Kingdom, London, 1751 (attributed by Sabin to F. Hall). From this year, or the following, dates the engraved view of the New Dutch Church, and its immediate surroundings, on the corner of Nassau and Liberty Sts., drawn by Wm. Burgin, and reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 28. This is the earliest view we have, made within the city.

"A View of Fort George with the City of New York from the S. W.," drawn at about this period was engraved by I. Carwitham some years later. It is reproduced and described in Vol. II, pl. 31.

The population of the city and province of New York, for the year 1751, is found in two contemporary records. One of these, entitled "Abstract of the Accounts of the number of Inhabitants of the several Cities and Counties in the Province of New Yorke. 2 Nov. 1751," and signed by Rip van Dam, gives the following figures: For the city, 7,945 whites, 1,577 blacks, total 8,522; for the province, 45,090 whites, 7,202 blacks, total 52,292.—N. Y. Col. Docs. V, 929. These same figures are found in an old MS. now preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (in box labelled "New York, 1700-1760"). This shows the "Number of souls on the Island of New York, as taken by the constables in May, 1751.

The other source of authority is a MS. bound with a volume of the printed Laws, Statutes, Ordinances... of the City of New York (N. Y., 1749), now in the N. Y. Pub. Library. It is called an "Act of the Number of Inhabitants in the Province of New York Taken by order of The Honble Rip Van Dam Esq. President &c—finished the 27th October 1751." The figures of this record are: For the city, 7,925 whites, 1,577 blacks, total 8,622; for the province, 43,058 whites, 7,251 blacks, total 50,309. This account was printed by O'Callaghan in Doc. Hist. N. Y., I, 471 (where an obvious typographical error occurs in the figures for the total number of whites in the province, but which has been corrected here).

The number of houses in New York City is estimated at about 1,400.—From old MS. bound with copy of the Laws, Statutes, Ordinances... of the City of New York" (pubd Jan. 27 and Feb. 1, 1748; and printed by Parker, 1749), in N. Y. Pub. Library (hav- ing the signature of Brandt Schuyler on title-page). In 1751 and 1752, the broad plaza known as Whitehall (see Marchvelt, in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1005), was diminished by the laying out of a block bounded by the present Whitehall, Pearl, Moore, and Water Sts.—Life (in comptroller's office). For a view of Whitehall before it was thus diminished, see Pl. 25, Vol. I.

In this year, Adrian Bucker, silversmith, was admitted as a freeman of New York. He continued his trade for about 30 years. Several specimens of his work are described in Mr. Museum of Art Cat. of Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J. and the South (1911), 9-11. Two silver tankards, made by Peter Quintard, who was admitted as a freeman of New York in this year, are described in Ibid, 32-33.

William Huerin, silversmith, was admitted as a freeman of New York in this year. He had taken an active part in the controversy which arose among the congregation of the French Church, in 1724, when the consistory dismissed the pastor, Rev. Mr. Row. For a short sketch of his life and a description of a portrait made by him, see ibid., xxxvi., 34.

— Philip Goelet, admitted as a freeman of New York in this year, was one of the early American silversmiths. For a short history of his life, and a description of some of his work, see ibid., 25-26.

Jan. de la Montagne is appointed doer-doorkeeper, bell-ringer, gavroger, and watchman of the Dutch Church in Garden St., in place of his father, who has just died. His duties are prescribed in detail. Among these is the following: "You shall keep the bier in the shed made for it in the churchyard, and send it in due time to the house of the deceased." Changes are prescribed for the various expenses of a burial. He signed his appointment on Oct. 12, 1730.

Eccles. Rec., II., 2490-95.

The treasurer is ordered to pay John Cure for expenses of the corporation at his house "at the time of surveying the Boundaries of this City from Bestiviers Killitie to the Fort and from Whitehall to Clerke hook."

— M. C. G., IV., 34. Cure was proprietor of a tavern in Fur (Foul) St., see May, 1731.

The common council appoints a committee to inspect the city hall and cupola, to see what repairs are needed, to employ workmen, procure materials, and see that the repairs are made as soon as possible. —M. C. G., IV., 35.

Gov. Montgomerie issues the new charter for the city, and it is attested by the attorney-general. —See summary of the proceedings to obtain the charter, under March 23, 1730; and digest of its contents, under Feb. 11, 1731.

Feb. 11

Gov. John Montgomerie formally conveys to the mayor and other city officials the so-called Montgomerie Charter (see PL. 50, Vol. IV.); this was the third English charter of the city of New York, the first being the Nicolls Charter of 1665, and the second the Dongan Charter of 1686. The so-called Cornbury or Queen Anne Charter, of 1703, which referred only to ferries, is not included separately in this enumeration. The following account of the ceremonies is recorded in the Minutes of the Council:

"Mr. Mayor read by Mr. Recorder the Aldermen Assistants High Sheriff, Chamberlain, Town Clerk, Coroner, High Constable: Petty Constables & Other Officers of this Corporation at the hour of ten in the Forenoon . . . went in their formalities from the City Hall to his Majestys Garrison Fort George and there waited upon his Excellency John Montgomerie Esq. Captain General and Governor in Chief of this Province in Council who then was pleased in the presence of this Court (the Representatives of this Corporation) to deliver unto Robert Robert Esq. the Mayor of this Corporation his Majestys Royal and most Gracious Charter to the Mayor Aldermen and Commonalty of this City under the Great Seal of this Province and thereupon the Oathes Appointed by Act of Parliament to be taken instead of the Oathes of Allegiance and supremacy the Test and Abjuracion oath were Administered to the Said Robert Luring Esq as Mayor, Clerk of the Market and Water Baylliff of the City of New York and one of his Majestys Justices of the Peace of the City & County of New York and also the usual Oaths of Office of Mayor Clerk of the Market and Water Baylliff and Justice of the Peace in the Presence of his Excellency the Governor and Council and in the Presence of all the Aldermen and Members of this Court."

This "Court" then presents to the governor the address, which was read and recorded in the Minutes on Feb. 8, and which is again entered in the Minutes in full at this time. The governor replies: "I am Very glad that it has been in my power to promote the Prosperity and interest of the City of New York which I believe I have Effectually done by now delivering to your Mayor the Kings Royal and most Gracious Charter. It gives me great satisfaction, my being fully Assured that the Officers Named in the Charter, shall perform their respective Offices and will do their duty, with a strict regard for his Majestys service and the good of the City."

The mayor informs the governor that, pursuant to the authority granted to him under the charter he has appointed Aldermen, Assistants, High Sheriff, Coroner, Clerk, and Recorder, and will do their duty, with a strict regard for his Majesties service and the good of the City."

The mayor resumes the chair, and, as required by the new charter, administers the stated oaths appointed by parliament, "instead of the Oaths of Allegiance and supremacy the Test and Abjuration Oath," to the various new city officials named in the charter, for the faithful execution of their offices; and soon after the Court went down to the Entrance of the City Hall and after the Ringing of three Bells and Proclamation made for Silence Caused the said Charter to be published."

On returning to the council chamber, it is ordered that the board return thanks to "Joseph Murray Esq. Attorney at Law" for amending and completing the draft of the charter, "in which he has given us a lasting Instance of his great Learning Ability and Integrity in his Profession as well as for his Regard to this Corporation." Thanks are also extended to Assistant Alderman John Chambers. attorney at law, "for his Great Care Diligence and solicitation be last but at in Assisting the Procuring Expeditious and finishing the Said Charter for the City." A resolution is passed, also, to "Compliment" James de Lancy, Peter Warren (commander of H. M. S. "Soberly"), James Alexander, William Jamison, William Smith (attorneys at law), and John Avery with "the Freedom of this Corporation." —M. C. G., IV., 39-44.

THE MONTGOMERIE CHARTER

Description and digest of contents.

The text of the Montgomerie Charter was not entered in the Minutes of the Common Council, as was that of the earlier charters. The original document, consisting of 37 paragraphs, with a large provincial seal attached, is still owned by the city, having been deposited for safe-keeping in the N. Y. Public Library by Comptroller Bird S. Coler in 1839, together with the Dongan Charter and several other public documents belonging to the city. The seal is to that of the Stede Chartered from England in 1706. —See Dec. 24, 1701 and Doc. Hist. N. Y., Vol. IV. For reproduction of the Charter, see PL. 50, Vol. IV.

On April 15, 1721, an entry in the Minutes shows that William Sharpes, the city clerk, was paid £5, "by him dish'd & paid to Mr. Abraham Lodge for Entering fair in A Book of the Charter of this City for the use of the Corporation with Marginal Notes as Appears by his Accr which was Audited by this Court and Allowed." —M. C. G., IV., 50. On July 15, 1711, Lodge was also paid £291 10s. 6d., "in full of his Accr for writing and fair Copying a Petition to his Excellency, Engrossing the New Charter, thirty-five Skins of large parchment, Silk Laces and for fair Writing an Address to his Excellency as Appears by his Accr which is Audited & allowed." On the same day John Roosevelt was paid "for a Tin Box for the New Charter." —Ibid., IV., 62-61. The charter was printed for the first time by John Zenger in 1735 (see Oct. 25, 1734), on 16 leaves, folio.

The Montgomerie Charter not only grants additional privileges, rights, and estate to the city, but it is in its terms confirmatory of prior grants, and of the Dongan and Cornbury charters. It recites in full these earlier charters, concerning the validity and force of which questions had been raised by reason of the diversity of the names of the grantees, and because prior grants and charters had been made in the names of the grantees instead of the sovereign, respectively. There was, therefore, question, as appears from the text of the charter, whether the city had been hitherto legally incorpated.

The charter recites the fact that since the granting of the Dongan Charter, in 1686 (p. 85), the citizens of New York have built at their own expense the "City Hall, and Goals, Rooms, and Places for the sitting of the Courts of Justice, and Chambers adjoining; five market-houses; the crane and bridge; the common sewer leading through the great dock; a magazine of 37 parchments containing Water; several other public buildings and conveniences; and the new ferry-house on Nassau Island, with barn and pound adjoining. It states that by the increase in buildings and population the city had become "a considerable seat-port, and exceedingly necessary and useful to Great Britain, and the Crown of Great Britain, in supplying the Government in the West Indies with Bread, Flour, and other Provisions." On this account the charter establishes the city as a body politic and corporate, under its former name of "The Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the City of New York," with the right of personal successorship, appointment, purchase, sell, hold, and demise of such lands, etc., in fee or otherwise.

It makes New York "a free City of itself," with power "to sue and be sued," etc., in all courts, "in as full and ample Manner and Form, as any of our other liege Subjects of our said Province; with power also to purchase and hold lands, tenements, goods, and chattels; and to use a common seal, or "break, change and newmake another common Seal, when, and as often as to them it shall seem convenient."

The boundaries of the city are specially fixed by the charter, as follows: "To begin at the River Creek, or Run of Water called Spyt den Durval, over which King's-Bridge is built, where the said River and Creek join to alter and run into the South Side thereof, at Low-Water-Mark, and so to run along the said River, Creek, or Run, on Westchester Side, at Low-Water Mark, unto the East-River or Sound, and from thence to cross over to Nassau Island, to Low-Water-Mark there, including Great-Barn-Island and the Saybrook, and from the Thence, going along all Nassau Island Shore, at Low-Water-Mark, unto the South Side of Red-Hook; and from thence to run a Line across the North-River, so as to include Nutten-Island, Bedlow's-Island, Buckingham Island and the Oyster-Island, to Low-Water-Mark on the West Side of the North-River, or so far as the Limits of our said Province extended there, and so to run up along the West Side of the said River, at Low-Water-Mark, or along the limits of our said Province, until it comes directly opposite to the first mentioned River or Creek, and thence to the Place where the said Boundaries first begin, which Place Governor Clinton (1755), "Col. Montgomery," erected the Town of New York, in City and County, and extended their jurisdiction to the West side of Hudson's River opposite to the Town."—N. Y. Col. Docs., V1 575.

The boundaries of the seven wards are also prescribed by this charter,—the West, South, Dock, East, North, Montegomery, and Out Wards. Regarding the division of the city into wards, see Du Simitière's description of these bounds according to landmarks standing at the time he wrote, in June, 1769, and with reference to the Bradford Map (Fl. 27, Vol. 1), printed in full in I: 157-58. See also the division in 1685, prior to the Dongan Charter.—M. C. C., I: 112-13. The "Soil four Hundred Foot, beyond Low-Water-Mark, on Hudson's River, from a certain Creek or Kill called Bestiver's-Killitie, southward to the Fort, and from thence, the same Number of Feet, beyond Low-Water-Mark, round the Fort, and along the East-River, as far as to the North Side of a certain Hill, called Corlaser's Hook," is specifically included in the grants conveyed by the charter, and also embraced in the description of the boundaries of the West, South, Dock, and East Wards.—See also Hoffman, Treatise on the Estates and Rights of the Corporation, 166-266.

The city government is established; officials are named, and their duties prescribed, with the manner of appointing their successors. For example, the governor is required to appoint the mayor, sheriff, and coroner, yearly. Freemen who are inhabiting and freeholders of each ward are to elect the aldermen and assist-ants, and the King, also two trustees, and these two constables. However, in the Out Ward there are to be four assessors, two collectors, and four constables. As provided in the Dongan Charter (see Sept. 29, 1686), appointments and elections are to be held "on the Feast Day of St. Michael, the Arch-Angel," and the appointees, etc., are required to take oath of office on the 12th of October following. The common council is to consist of "the Mayor or Recorder, with four or more Aldermen, and four or more Assistants." They are given power to make "all such Laws, Statutes, Rights, Ordinances, and Constitutions, which to them or the greater Part of them" shall seem "good, useful, or necessary," but not repugnant to the laws of England or the province; and such laws are to remain in force for one year only unless confirmed by the governor and council of the province.

The following appointees are confirmed by the charter to be the position: Robert Burton, recorder; Cornelius de Peyster, chamberlain and treasurer; Richard Nicols, coroner; Edmund Peers, high constable; and Robert Cranell, marshal; John Cruger, alderman, and John Moore, assistant, for the Dock Ward; Hermanus van Gelsen, alderman, and John Cruger, assistant, for the West Ward; Col. Frederick Phillips, alderman, and Isaac de Peyster, assistant, for the South Ward; Gerardus Stuvesant, alderman, and Samuel Kip, assistant, for the Out Ward; Anthony Rutgers, alderman, and Egbert vabo Borssem (Van Borsum), assistant, for the North Ward; John Rosevelt (Roosevelt), alderman, and Petrus Rutgers, assistant, for the East Wards; Johannes Hardenbrook, alderman, and Gerardus Beckman, assistant, for Montgomery Ward; constables, assessors, and collectors are also named.

The common council is given full power to establish and operate ferries around Manhattan Island for carrying people, horses, cattle, and goods between Manhattan and opposite shores, to let or otherwise dispose of them, and receive all fees and profits arising therefrom. Power is also given to the common council to build, repair, and lay out bridges, lanes, highways, streets and alleys, and parks, and provide for the same, and to putt them to the several Markets, at the five several Places (in the said City of New York, on every Day in the Week throughout the Year, except Sunday), as follows, to wit. One Market at Counties-Dock; one other Market, at the Old-Slip, at Burgin's-Path; one other Market at County-House, of the Side, and further, and one Market at the Bridge, and one other Market by the Long-Bridge; and as many more as the corporation may think fit to establish. (Gerard states that this authority to lay out streets, etc., "is one of a public character or direction, and not of private interest, involving ownership or franchise, and it has always been considered subject to legislative modification or control."—A Treatise on the Title of the Corporation, 37.)

The charter confirms to "all and every the respective Inhabitants and Freeholders," and to "their several and respective Heirs, Executors, Administrators, Assigns forever residvial" lands, estates, and hereditaments granted to them by former governors, lieutenant-governors, or commanders-in-chief of the province, or by any of the former mayors, etc., or by others having title under such grants, saving the quit-rents reserved by their grants. (These quit-rents, which were usually a merely nominal consideration in the early grants, have been discontinued, and where there has been any commutation or by the operation of the statute of limitations, which commenced to run against quit-rents on Jan. 1, 1820."

The charter further gives full power to the corporation to purchase and hold, in fee simple, any manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in or out of the city, not exceeding "the clear yearly rent or value of £5000," and this is to be without further letters patent or power from England's sovereign. But see Chancellor Kent, The Charter of the City of New York, with Notes thereon (1854).

Finally, the charter gives and confirms to the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of New York, and their successors forever, all public buildings and improvements, which the charter names in full; all the lands, ferries, docks, water-courses, etc., on Manhattan Island, including the soil under water 100 feet beyond low-water mark, between Beestiver's-Killitie and the fort on the Hudson River, and between Corlear's Hook and Whitehall on the East River, as well as all the grants contained in former charters: exceptions being made, however, of silver and gold mines, Fort George and its grounds, the Governor's Garden near the English Custom-House, and of the Commander-in-chief's residence, or of any grant or conveyance thereon; and certain rights reserved to other persons. About 823 acres are added to the city property by the 400-foot strip beyond low-water on the Hudson, and about 127 acres on the East River. The charter provides that the corporation shall not exercise its right to build wharves beyond low-water mark without the consent of persons who have prior grants of wharf-space. Space is reserved for exterior streets 40 feet wide, for the convenience of trade, and "to plant Batteries thereon, in Case of any Necessities."

All of these grants are made at an annual quit-rent of 50 shillings, "Proclamation Money, besides and over, and above the yearly Quit-Rent of one Beaver Skin, or the Value thereof," as provided by the Dongan Charter, and also the yearly quit-rent of five shillings provided by the Combury (or Queen Anne) Charter.

This charter, which begins with the name of "George The Second," as grantor, closes with this paragraph: "It is further provided, that we have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed, and the same to be entered of Record in our Secretary's Office of our said Province in one of the Books of Patents there remaining. Witness our trusty and well beloved John Montgomery, Esq. our Captain General and Governor of the Province of New York, and the Province of New Jersey, and Territories depending thereon in America, and Vice Admiral of the same, &c. at our Fort George in New York, the fifteenth Day of January, in the fourth Year of our Reign." It is endorsed by a certificate of examination, Jan. 15, 1731, signed by R. Bradley, attorney-general, who states that it was
CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664-1703

February 1664-1732

The Montgomerie Charter was confirmed by the general assembly on October 14, 1732 (p. v.). This charter had been the basis of all subsequent charters of New York City. It was specifically confirmed in the first constitution (of 1777) by the state government after the Revolution, and again by the constitutions of 1824, 1846, 1868, and 1901. The privilege of the Dome and County of the Common Council has been definitely recognized by the city charters of 1825, 1870, etc.—See Gerard, op. cit., 40. See also Kent, The Charter of the City of New York. Any question as to the charter's validity, because it did not receive the confirmation of the king at the time it was granted (see N. Y. Municipal Government, 1841, 1: 28; and Chron., Dec. 15, 1733), Hoffman answers with the statement that the royal sanction was not necessary for charters and patents any more than for statutes. "They were valid until the king disaffirmed them."—Hoffmann, op. cit., II: 31. See also Lincoln, Constitutional Hist. of N. Y.

In accordance with the directions of the new charter, minor city officials—i.e., constables for all the wards, assessors for the Montgomery and Out Wards, and a collector for Montgomerie Ward—having been elected, in obedience to warrants issued by the mayor to the aldermen, returns are made to the town clerk, and those names of the members of the Common Council are recorded in the minutes of the Common Council. Such officials are to serve until Oct. 14, or longer, until successors are elected, in accordance with the provisions of the new charter.—M. G. C., IV: 44.

A public vendue is advertised to be held on March 24, at the Exchange Coffee House.—N. Y. Gen., March 1-8, 1733. This taverne stood at Broad and Water Sts. (see March 25, 1735). Numerous public vendues were held there in succeeding years.

"The Boston and Philadelphia Posts set out this day, in order to perform their Stations once a Week till the first of December next; and this Paper will come forth every Monday Morning during that time."—N. Y. Gen., March 1-8, 1731. Subsequently the same advertisement made its appearance nearly every year at this season.

A Philadelphia writer says that inoculation for small-pox is beginning to be much favoured. The report is favourably received by the Board of Trade. It is cited to show "how groundless all those extravagant Reports are, that have been spread through the Province [of New York] to the contrary."—N. Y. Gen., March 15-22, 1731. Inoculation was not favoured in New York in 1747.—See Aug. 20, 1731, and June 9, 1747.

The common council orders that a committee, appointed for various stated purposes, "find out A proper place for the Erecting of a Warehouse for the use of this Corporation."—M. C. C., IV: 48. No further reference to this warehouse appears in the Minutes. Up to 1750, the old market-house had been in use partly as a warehouse.

See May 24, 1686.

The council appoints a committee to "Revise the Laws of this Corporation," and "Report what Laws Ought to be Continued and Amended, and what New Laws are needful to be made and Established." The committee is required to meet at the city hall on April 5, and at least once a week thereafter, "until they have Complished the same."—M. G. C., IV: 47. These laws were finally approved as amended, Nov. 18, 1731 (p. v.).

The city issues its first municipal bonds. A committee appointed by the common council on Jan. 14, 1731 (M. C. C., IV: 35), to procure a loan of £500 to be applied on the expense of procuring the new charter and its confirmation, reports that it has obtained the amount of John Chambers (assistant alderman of the West Ward, and one of the principal lawyers of the city: see ibid., III: 406-7; 479; and July 28, 1729). This was done "at the usual Interest of Eight pounds Crown per Annum for one Year." The committee expresses the opinion that the corporation "Ought to Execute A Bond or Bonds for the Repayment of the same with the Interest." The report is approved, and it is ordered that the mayor execute two bonds; these are therefore executed, "in Common Council," each bond being conditioned to pay Chambers £108 on or before March 31, 1732, under penalty of £416. John Chambers thus became the first holder of New York City bonds.—Ibid., IV: 46-47. Regarding the discharge of these bonds, see ibid., IV: 142, 222. For a summary of all the business involved in procuring the Montgomery Charter, see March 23, 1730.

Not until Nov. 5, 1750 (p. v.), did the city again issue bonds in paper money, which were borrowed for municipal improvements. See also April 26, 1750.

Gov. Montgomery communicates to the council his additional instructions concerning the ecclesiastical jurisdiction to be exercised by the Bishop of London.—Cal. Com. Min., 11.

The barracks in the fort are reported as in need of repair and Daniel Gautier is appointed to perform the work, a warrant for paying him being issued.—Cal. Com. Min., 31. See former orders of Oct. 16, 1730.

If the common council passes a more searching ordinance to prevent strangers from becoming a charge upon the corporation. For former ordinances, see Jan. 20, 1706; March 15, 1704; April 22, 1701. Now, all housekeepers and inhabitants who entertain them for more than two days are required, before the third day, to report to the constable of the street or division where they are lodged, the name of their respective stranger, trade, place of business, and 'for what Cause he She or they Come to Reste.'—M. C. C., IV: 52-53.

"The Post-Office will be Removed to Morrow to the uppermost of the two New Houses in the Bond-Way opposite to the end of Bever street."—N. Y. Gen., Apr. 26-May 3, 1731.

The court of general sessions, after being convinced by "seeing the Marks upon the head arm and body" of Alexander Magge, an apprentice, of his having suffered an 'Immoderate Correction' at the hands of his masters, Thomas and John Tork, a cordwainer, discharge Magge from his apprenticeship.—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (M.S.), 355. See also Feb. 4, 1718.

The common council resolves to procure 'two Complete fire Engines with Suction and Materials thereunto belonging, for the Publick service,' and 'That the Sizes thereof be, of the fourth and sixth sizes of Mt Newamhs's Fire Engine.' Also that the committee appointed "to Agree with some proper Merchant or Merchants to send to London for the same."—M. C. C., IV: 55. The complete account of procuring these engines is as follows: On June 12, the committee reported that they had proposed "to Messrs. Stephen De Lancy and John Moore Merchts" to send for two fire Engines to London by the Ship Beaver of Mt Newamhs's New Invention of the fourth and Sixth Sizes with auctions, Leather Pipes and Caps and Other Materials thereofunto belonging; and that De Lancy and Moore would obtain them "at the Rate of one hundred and twenty £39 10s. 0d. for each Engine, and a further sum of £45 10s. for the two Engines in the same manner for payment to be made in nine months after delivery. The terms were accepted by the common council, and the committee was directed to give the order.—Ibid., IV: 56. See also an assessment levied May 25, 1731, for raising £100 for this purpose, showing the assessed valuation of the several wards.—Tax Book (1723-31), 515, in comptroller's office. The engines arrived Nov. 25 (p. v.), and on Dec. 1 a committee was appointed "to Employ Workmen to fit up A Convenient Room in the City Hall . . . for securing the Fire Engines."—M. C. C., IV: 122. On Aug. 17, 1731, De Lancy and Moore were paid £40, and £20 was given "in lieu of Delivery to this Corporation," and a bricklayer and a carpenter were paid for labour and materials "for Repairs lately done to the City Hall," evidently to receive the fire-engines.—Ibid., IV: 149-50. Costello's statement in Our Firemen, 23-24, that these engines were housed in two sheds in the rear of the city hall appears impossible of proof. See, on the general subject of fire protection, the "Sketch of the Origin of the Fire Department, of the City of New York, as at present organized," in Min. Com. Coun. (1856), 524-29.

Elizabeth Delamontagne, a widow, is paid £4 by the common council "for the Rent of her House and damages done to it, lately hired of her for a Watch House."—M. C. C., IV: 55. On July 9, 1731 (p. v.), it was proposed to build a watch-house, and this was done.—Ibid., IV: 57. See also July 26, 1707.

A tax assessment shows the valuation of the different classes of land for the year 1731 as follows: East Ward, £12,740; Dockyard, £2,795; South Ward, £5,145; West Ward, £2,960; North Ward, £3,060; Montgomery Ward, £2,070; Bowery, £1,425; Harlem, £685.—TAX BOOK (1721-31), 515, in comptroller's office. For the purpose of this assessment, see May 6.

Anthony Duanne, of New York, merchant, and Adeline, his wife, June hereby a marriage to Peter Warren, commander of H. M. S. "Solebay," for £200, a parcel of land bounded, according to the modern city plan, as follows: northerly by a line from the corner of West 14th St. near Tenth Ave. to a point on 15th St. east of Eighth Ave; westerly by the original line of the Hudson River (now diagonally south from 14th St. and Tenth Ave. to Little Washington St.); southerly and easterly by the old road which ran irregularly from the latter point to the north side of 14th St. east of Eighth Ave.— 1731 See original deed in possession of N. Y. Hist. Soc.; see also June 4, 1737, and Aug. 18, 1741; and the Estate of Sir Peter Warren under Farm Tithes, Vol. 1.

At the House of George Browne, near the Custom-House, are two taverns, Rising Sun, Fighting, Men-of-merit, Merchants Acompts, Latin, Greeks, etc., also Dancing, Plain-work, Flourishing, Embroidery, and various Sorts of Works. Any Person may be taught as private as they please."—N. Y. Gaz., June 14–21, 1731.

July 4 Gov. John Montgomery dies.—Assemb. Journ., 1: 625. Correspondence with York, on the 6th, refers to Fryday the 4th, and death occurred at Fort George, on Thursday, July 1, and he was "interred in the King's Chappel on the evening of the Fryday following" (July 5).—N. E. Weekly Journ. (Boston), July 12, 1731; Boston News-Letter, July 8–15, 1731. James Alexander mentioned Montgomery's death in a letter of July 5 to Cadwallader Colden.—See Colden Papers (M.S.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. No other particulars were published. See also "The City under Gov. John Montgomery," in Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 179.

Rip van Dam presides at the meeting of the council. The commissioner and instructions of the late Gov. Montgomery are read; it is ordered that a proclamation be issued announcing his death, and confirming all officers in their places. The council members present are called to attend. The seal of the province, etc., are delivered to Rip van Dam, and he thereat acts as governor until Cosby, the new governor arrives. George Clarke, Archibald Kennedy, James De Lancy and Charles Henry, are directed to take an inventory of the governor's estate.—Col. Coun. Min., 312; N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 921. See July 10, and Oct. 12. For the original manuscript catalogue of his effects, which were sold at auction, see July 26, also Pl. 31, Vol. IV.

Rip van Dam is sworn in as president of the council. James de Lancy as second justice, and Frederick Phillips as third justice, of the supreme court.—Col. Coun. Min., 312.

The common council resolves to build a watch-house (see May 6) "on the South side of the Cage is the Broad Streets;" and a committee is appointed to determine the proper size, materials, and the expense of erection.—M. C. C., IV: 57. This committee reported, on Aug. 26, that they were of the opinion that the building should be 25 feet long and 18 feet wide, with two rooms, one 18 feet and the other 20 feet, with a fireplace in each, with two doors at the southeast corner, one on the north, and one to the east side of the corner, and with three lights in the large room and one small one in the small room. The materials required were listed, and the total estimate expanded to $660. The committee was ordered to buy the materials, and employ workmen to build promptly "at the upper end of the street near the City Hall."—Ibid., IV: 57–58. On Nov. 18, it was paid for.—Ibid., IV: 76–77. For the exact location of this watch-house, see N. T. Post-Bay, Jan. 3, 1757, in which are advertised for sale two dwelling-houses belonging to the estate of the late Tennis Tiebout, "in Broad-Street, opposite the Watch-House;" see also the map of David Grim (Plate 32, Vol. I), showing the city as it was in 1742; also De Voe's Market Book, 160, showing that the watch-house stood above the Flatten Barrack Market, which was next to the Lushby dwelling on the corner of Flatten Barrack St. (Exchange Pl.). A new watch-house was built, in 1759, at the southeast corner of Wall and Broad Sts. (No. 2 Broad St.), and the old one was taken down.—See June 1, 1793 City Directory, 1796; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 973.
